

4.26.07.

Library of the Theological Seminary,

PRINCETON, N. J.

Division

BS2555

Section

D928

THE FOUR GOSPELS,

AS INTERPRETED BY

THE EARLY CHURCH:

A Commentary on the Authorized English Version of the Gospel

ACCORDING TO

§. MATTHEW, §. MARK, §. LUKE, & §. JOHN, COMPARED WITH

THE SINAITIC, THE VATICAN, AND ALEXANDRINE MSS., AND ALSO WITH THE VULGATE.

BY

FRANCIS HENRY DUNWELL, B.A.,

VICAR OF HENSALL.

"I have, and always shall have, a religious scruple in interpreting the Holy Scriptures against the stream of all the fathers and eminent doctors, except when the most evident proofs compel me to do so; this, however, I do not believe will ever happen. For certainly the consentient judgment of antiquity, especially of primitive antiquity, ought to outweigh the force of many probabilities and reasonings from likelihood."—BISHOP BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' l. 1, 3, vol. i. p. 19.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY WILLIAM CLOWES & SONS, STAMFORD STREET AND CHARING CROSS.

1876.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY WILLIAM CLOWES AND SONS, STAMFORD STREET AND CHARING CROSS.

PREFACE.

THE object aimed at in this Commentary has been so fully set forth in the title that it will be sufficient to observe here, that, besides the works of the Fathers and Early writers of the Church, constant references have also been given to the Commentaries of Erasmus, Jansenius (Bishop of Ghent), Maldonatus, Cornelius a Lapide, Grotius, and Bengel. I have selected these commentators for reference, partly because they were all endued with a large share of the critical faculty, and were representatives of various schools of thought, which are fast disappearing from amongst us; and partly because, in forming their opinion on any passage of Scripture, they were all disposed to give due weight to the interpretation of the Early Church, and never lightly set it aside.

On the many questions that arise concerning the chronology and the order of events in the Gospel history, I have also cited the authority of several of the most distinguished modern Harmonists. For to this portion of Scriptural exegesis the early commentators devoted less of their attention than many who have written later.

Copious illustrations of the meaning of the Evangelists, based on the Rabbinical traditions, have also been given from the works of the learned Dr. John Lightfoot.

To give two or more distinct comments on the same parable, or on the same event, because it has been recorded by more than one of the Evangelists, is, as it appears to me, too piecemeal and disjointed an arrangement to convey to the reader a sufficiently strong impression of their oneness in object and in all that is essential or important, and, at the same time, of their numberless differences in expression and in circumstantial detail. To remedy this, in commenting on any paragraph or event, I have placed the various relations of it side by side, and thus have first shown their agreement or variation, down to their verbal differences, and have then endeavoured to explain it. By this method even a careless reader can scarcely fail to observe how wonderfully minute and natural the differences in the several relations of the Evangelists often are.

In commenting on the Synoptical Gospels, I have adopted the following arrangement as the most convenient. In those passages that are common to S. Matthew and to both, or to either, of the other two Evangelists, the comment is given under S. Matthew; the comment is given under S. Mark, in those passages only, which are either peculiar to S. Mark, or which are common to S. Mark and to S. Luke; the comment is given under S. Luke, in those passages only which are peculiar to S. Luke.

My thanks are gratefully offered to a wide circle of friends for the loan of books required in the preparation of this Commentary; and more especially to the Dean and Chapter of York, for the most liberal use of their valuable library.

FRANCIS HENRY DUNWELL.

Hensall, July 17, 1876.

A LIST OF THE AUTHORS AND EDITIONS QUOTED OR REFERRED TO IN THIS COMMENTARY.

I. CENTURY.

- Philo Judæus, op. 8 vols. Leipsic, 1828.
Josephus, Flavius, op. 2 vols. Hudson's ed. Oxon. 1720.
——— Whiston's Translation. Nelson, London, 1866.

II. CENTURY.

- Ignatius, S., Epistolæ. (Patres Apostol.) Hefele, 1842.
Polycarpus, S., Epistole ———— Justinus Martyr, Apolog. et Dialog. Thirlby, London, 1722.
Irenæus, S., op. 1 vol. Migne.
Clemens Romanus, S., Recognitiones. Leipsic, 1838.

III. CENTURY.

- Clemens Alexandrinus, op. 2 vols. Migne.
Origenes, op. 8 vols. Migne.
Tertullianus, op. 3 vols. Migne.
Minucius Felix, op. Patrolog. vol. iii. Migne.
Cyprianus, S., op. 1 vol. Migne.

IV. CENTURY.

- Eusebius Pamphil., op. 6 vols. Migne.
Eusebius Emesenus, op. 1 vol. Elberfeld, 1829.
Athanasius, S., op. 4 vols. Migne.
Basilus Magnus, S., op. 4 vols. Migne.
Cyrillus Hierosolymitanus, S., op. 1 vol. Migne.
Theodorus Nazianzenus, S., op. 4 vols. Migne.
Chrysostomus Joannes, S., Homil. in S. Matt. 3 vols. Oxon. 1839.
——— Homil. in S. Joan.
——— Homil. in Epist. S. Paul. 7 vols. Oxon. 1849-1862.

- Hilarius Pictaviensis, S., op. 2 vols. Migne.
Pacianus, S., op. Patrolog. vol. xiii. Migne.
Ambrosius, S., op. 4 vols. Migne.
Hieronymus, S., op. 11 vols. Migne.
Augustinus, S., op. 11 vols. Migne.

V. CENTURY.

- Epiphanius, S., op. 3 vols. Migne.
Nonnus Panopolitanus, in S. Joann. Leipsic, 1834.
Gregorius Nyssenus, S., op. 3 vols. Migne.
Theodorus Mopsuestensis, op. 1 vol. Migne.
Cyrillus Alexandrinus, S., op. 10 vols. Migne.
Theodoret, op. 5 vols. Magdeburg.
Rufinus, op. 1 vol. Migne.
Dexter Lucius, Chronicon. Patrolog. vol. xxxi. Migne.
Orosius Paulus, op. Patrolog. vol. xxxi. Migne.
Prosperus Aquitanus, S., op. 1 vol. Migne.
Leo Magnus, S., op. 3 vols. Migne.

VI. CENTURY.

- Fulgentius, S., op. Patrolog. vol. lxxv. Migne.
Cassiodorus, op. 2 vols. Migne.
Gregorius Magnus, S., op. 5 vols. Migne.

VIII. CENTURY.

- Beda Venerabilis, op. 6 vols. Migne.

XI. CENTURY.

- Theophylact, in Evangelia IV. 4 vols. Venice, 1754.
Euthymius Zigabenus, in Evangelia IV. 4 vols. Leipsic, 1792.

XII. CENTURY.

- Petrus Lombardus, Sententiarum Libri. 1 vol. Migne.
Rupertus. R.D.D. 3 vols. Migne.

XIII. CENTURY.

- Aquinas, Thomas, S., Summa Theologiæ. 4 vols. Migne.
——— Aurea Catena. 3 vols. Paris, 1869.

XVI. CENTURY.

- Concilii Trident. Canones, &c. (A.D. 1546-1563). Tauchnitz, 1835.
Fulke, Wm., New Testament, with notes. 1589.
Hooker, Richd., works. 3 vols. ed. Keble, 1841.
Jansenius, Cornelius (Bishop of Ghent), Concord. Evangel. Louvain, 1571.
Maldonatus, Joannes, in IV. Evangel. 2 vols. Moguntiae, 1862.
Lucas Franciscus, in Evangelia IV. 5 vols. Antwerp.

XVII. CENTURY.

- A Lapide, Cornelius, in Script. Sacr. 10 vols. Lyons, 1865.
Critici Sacri. 9 vols. London, 1660.
Pearson, Bp., on the Creed. 2 vols. Oxford, 1843.
Gunning, Bp., Lent Fast. Oxford, 1845.
Hammond, Dr. H., Commentary on N. T. 1671.
Lightfoot, Dr. John, works. 2 vols. fol. London, 1684.
Suicer, John Casper, Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus. 2 vols. 1746.
Jackson, Dr. Thomas, works. 12 vols. Oxford, 1844.

XVIII. CENTURY.

- Bengel, Gnomon N. T. Ed. Stendel. London, 1862.
Beveridge, Bp., on 39 Articles. Oxford, 1846.
Bingham, J., Antiquities. 2 vols. Bohn, 1852.
Bull, Bp., Defence of Nicene Creed, &c. 3 vols. Oxford, 1851.
——— Sermons on Primitive Christianity. 3 vols. 2nd ed. 1711.

Gibbon, Ed., Roman Empire. 8 vols. Smith's ed.
 Johnson, Dr. S., Dictionary. Ed. 1767.
 Johnson, John, Unbloody Sacrifice. Oxford, 1847.
 Lardner, Dr. Nath., works. 10 vols. London, 1838.
 Prideaux, Dr. H., works. 2 vols. Oxford, 1838.
 Townson, J., Discourses on the Four Gospels. 1778.

NIX. CENTURY.

Alford, Dean, Greek Testament. 1868.
 Blunt, J. J., The Early Church. 1856.
 Burton, Dean, Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark. 1871.
 Burton, Dr. Ed., Lectures on Early Church. 5th ed. 1860.
 Cureton, Canon, Corpus Ignatianum. London, 1849.
 Etheridge, J. W., Hebrew Literature. London, 1856.
 Foulkes, E. S., Manual of Eccles. History. 1851.
 Gratry, Père, Letters. Paris, 1870.
 Grinfield, E. G., Greek Testament. 4 vols. 1843.
 Hammond, C. E., Outlines of Textual Criticism. 1872.
Harmonies of the Gospels—Greswell, Ed., Harmonia Evangelica. 3rd ed. 1840.
 Lightfoot, Dr. J., Harmony. Vol. i. of his works. 1684.
 Robinson, Dr. Ed., Harmony in Greek. Boston, U.S. 1872.
 Stroud, Dr. William, Harmony of the Four Gospels. 1853.
 Tischendorf, C., Synopsis Evangel. 3rd ed. Leipsic, 1871.
 Wieseler, K., Chronol. Synopsis. Transl. by Venables. 1864.
 Hervey, Lord A. (Bishop of Bath and Wells), Genealogies of Our Lord. 1853.
 Holy Land, the—
 Adricomius, Theatrum Terræ Sanctæ. 1 vol. fol. Cologne, 1590.
 Arculf, Bp., Travels (7th cent.). Bohn's Early Travels. 1848.
 Beaufort (Lady Strangford), Travels in Syria. 2 vols. 1861.
 Besant and Palmer, History of Jerusalem. 1871.
 Burton, R. F., Unexplored Syria. 2 vols. 1872.
 Dixon, Hepworth, Letters. 1865.
 Eothen, Tauchnitz ed. 1846.
 Irby and Mangles, Travels. 1844.
 Lindsay, Lord, Letters on. 1839.
 Lynch, Lieut. W. F., Expedition to the Jordan. 2nd ed. 1850.
 Macgregor, Capt., The Rob Roy on the Jordan. 1869.
 Macleod, Dr., Eastward.
 Mission to the Jews from Scotland. 1839.
 Palestine Exploration Fund, Our Work in Palestine. 1873.
 ——— Quarterly Statement for April, 1875.
 Pococke, Bp. Richard, Travels. 2 vols. 1745.
 Porter, J. L., Giant Cities of Bashan. 1847.
 ——— Handbook for Syria and Palestine. 1868.
 ——— Five Years in Damascus. 1870.
 Recovery of Jerusalem. Wilson and Warren. 1871.

Holy Land, the—
 Reland, Hadrian, Palestine. 2 vols. 1714.
 Ritter, Carl, Comparative Geography of. Trans. by Gage. 1866.
 Robinson, Dr. Ed., Biblical Researches. 3 vols. 1841.
 ——— Later Bib. Res. 1856.
 Rogers, Miss, Domestic Life in Palestine. 1862.
 Sawulf, Travels (12th cent.). Bohn's Early Travels. 1848.
 Stanley, Dean, Sinai and Palestine. 3rd ed. 1856.
 Thomson, Dr. W. M., The Land and the Book. 1863.
 Thrupp, J. F., Ancient Jerusalem. Cambridge, 1855.
 Tristram, Canon, The Land of Israel. 2nd ed. 1866.
 Williams, Dr. W., The Holy City. 2nd ed. 1849.
 Willibald, Travels (8th cent.). Bohn's Early Travels. 1848.
 Wilson, Dr. J., Lands of the Bible. 2 vols. 1847.
 Hort, Dr. F. J. A., Dissertations on S. John i. 18. Macmillan, 1876.
 Hussey, R., The Rise of the Papal Power. Oxford, 1851.
 Keble, John, Eucharistic Adoration. Oxford, 1867.
 Landon, E. H., Manual of Councils. 1846.
 Lias, J. J., Doctrinal System of S. John. London, 1875.
 Liddon, Canon, Bampton Lectures for 1866. 5th ed. 1871.
 Lightfoot, Canon, Revision of the English New Testament. 1871.
 ——— On the Epistle to the Galatians.
 McClellan, J. B., New Testament. Vol. i. 1875.
 Mill, Dr. J., Sermons as Christian Advocate. 1840-44.
 Neale, Dr. J. M., The Primitive Liturgies. 1859.
 ——— The Primitive Liturgies translated. 1859.
 Newman, Dr. J. H., The Arias of 4th Cent. 3rd ed. 1871.
 ——— Notes on S. Athanasius. Library of the Fathers.
 ——— Theological Tracts. 1874.
 Pusey, Dr. E. B., Holy Baptism. 4th ed. Oxford, 1842.
 ——— The Real Presence. 1857.
 Routh, Dr., Rell. Sacrae. 5 vols. Oxford, 1846.
 Sadler, M. F., The Lost Gospel, &c. London, 1876.
 Sanday, W., Authorship of the Fourth Gospel. 1872.
 ——— The Gospels in the Second Century. 1876.
 Scrivener, Dr., Introduction to Criticism of N. T. 1861.
 ——— Collation of Sinaitic MS. 2nd ed. 1867.
 Smith, Dr. W., Concise Dictionary of the Bible. 1871.
 ——— Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. 1876.
 Tischendorf, Carl, Sinaitic MS. of the N. T.
 ——— New Testament A. V. compared with S. V. A. MSS.
 ——— When were our Gospels written? London, 1870.
 Trench, Archbp., Authorized Version.
 ——— Synonyms of the N. T. 1865.
 Vulgate, The. Turin, 1851.
 Westcott, Prof., On the Canon of N. T. 1875.
 Wilberforce, R. I., The Incarnation. 1848.
 ——— Holy Baptism. 1849.
 ——— The Holy Eucharist. 1853.
 Winer, Dr. G. B., Grammar of N. T. Diction. Trans. 1866.
 Wordsworth, C. (Bishop of Lincoln), Greek Testament. 1863.

MANUSCRIPTS OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

I SHALL not enter on the subject of the manuscripts of the Gospels further than to explain the references made to them in this Commentary. The particulars contained in this account are taken chiefly from Dr. Scrivener's 'Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament,' and from Professor Tischendorf's Introduction to his edition of the English New Testament.

Copies of the New Testament yet existing in manuscript, and dating from the fourth century downward, such as have been discovered and set down in catalogues, are hardly fewer than two thousand. There are little short of one thousand manuscripts proper or Lectionaries of the Gospels, and about another thousand of all the other books put together.

Manuscripts of the New Testament have been divided into UNCIAL and CURSIVE.

I. The former, called Uncial from uncia (an inch), referring to the size of the characters, are those manuscripts that are written in what are now called capital letters, formed separately, having no connection with each other, and (in the earlier specimens) without any space between the words, the marks of punctuation being few. Uncial letters prevailed in Greek manuscripts of the New Testament from the fourth to the tenth century, and in the case of liturgical books to the eleventh century.

II. Cursive, or running-hand, manuscripts are those written in letters more easily and rapidly made, those in the same word being usually joined together, with a complete system of punctuation, not widely removed from that of printed books. Cursive letters were employed as early as the ninth or tenth century, and continued in use until the invention of printing.

The Uncial Manuscripts are few: in the Gospels about thirty-four, but the greater part of these are fragments.

The following are the principal Uncial Manuscripts:—

- ✠ Codex Sinaiticus, discovered in the Convent of S. Catherine, on Mount Sinai, by Prof. Tischendorf, in 1844 and 1859. Middle of fourth century.
- B. Codex Vaticanus, in the Vatican Library at Rome. Middle of fourth century.
- A. Codex Alexandrinus, in the British Museum, presented to Charles I. by Cyril Lucar, Patriarch of Constantinople, 1623. Fifth century.
- C. Codex Ephraemi. No. 9 in the Imperial Library of Paris. Fifth century.
- D. Codex Bezae—Græco-Latino. University Library, Cambridge; presented in 1581, by Theodore Beza.

The version of the Gospels, commonly called "The Vulgate," is in Latin, and is that which was formed by S. Jerome. Taking the old Latin, or Italic, translation as his foundation, he compared this with ancient Greek MSS., and by means of them he revised it, and corrected it in certain places, but sparingly and never unnecessarily. This version has been sanctioned by the unvarying use of the Western Church up to the sixteenth century, and, since that time, by all the churches in communion with the See of Rome.

In the following pages—

The letter S. means the Sinaitic Manuscript.

„ V. „ the Vatican.

„ A. „ the Alexandrine.

S* V* A* point out any reading of S. V. A. which has been altered by some later hand; though the original, and not the altered reading, is given in such cases. When an altered reading is given, it is marked S². V². A².

VULG. means the Vulgate version.

INTRODUCTION TO THE FOUR GOSPELS.

IN this our nineteenth century we possess, among other documents, four, called Gospels: the Gospel according to S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John, which we look upon as containing a history of the Incarnation, i.e., a history of the Founder of the Christian Church, of His birth, His instructions to His disciples, His miracles, life, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension into heaven. We find these Gospels received as such, by the great mass of mankind, or by countless multitudes of those who inhabit our globe, north, east, south, and west. These four Gospels have been translated into more than two hundred different languages and dialects; and all these translations have been made from the same original text, or from the same original text with such variations as do not interfere with their having had one common origin. The question naturally arises, how has this been brought about? what explanation can be given of it?

In the following pages I propose to show, from the writings of those who from time to time have been the acknowledged representatives of the Church, that these same four Gospels have been received by the Church and accredited as hers from the very first; that, though others put forth similar histories, they were never acknowledged by the Church as hers, on the ground that the writers of them were not moved and aided by the Holy Spirit for this work; that these four, two of whom had been eye-witnesses of the facts which they relate, were acknowledged by the Church Catholic throughout the world as inspired by the Holy Spirit to their office; that, though there were heretics* in very early days who rejected one or other of these four Gospels, as bearing too severely on their peculiar tenets, yet that the Church Catholic from the beginning has received the work of S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John, and only these, as its Gospels, or as a divinely inspired account of the Christian Church, its doctrine, and its Founder.

If from the nineteenth century we go back to the sixteenth, to the time when the Western Church, which had been hitherto externally united, became divided into what for convenience' sake we may call the Church of Rome, on the one side, and the Church of England, and the various Protestant communions, on the other side, we shall find that, great as was this disruption, it was not brought about by any disagreement as to the authority of the four Gospels. That was never made a subject of their disputes. All the communions into which the Western Church was then divided agreed in this, that they received the same four Gospels, that of S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John, among their canonical books. For the proof of this the reader is referred to the Council of Trent, Sess. 4, on the one side; and on the other to the sixth of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion,¹ and to the Protestant Confessions and Books of Ritual. Among the many sects or parties in the Church which claim to set forth some truth more prominently than the rest, not one justifies its existence on the ground that it possesses better or other Gospels than these four, of S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke and S. John.

If, from the division in the Western Church, we turn to the several disagreements which took place between the Eastern and the Western Church until their final separation, we find these same four Gospels all and always received by both sides.

If we ascend the stream of time higher still, we find that by the fourth century the Christian religion had overspread the continents of Europe, Asia, and Africa.

THE FOURTH CENTURY.

FROM A.D. 400 TO A.D. 350.

I will now ask the reader to transport himself, so far as is possible, back to the fourth century that we may together examine what was the belief of the Church at that time; whether she received the same four Gospels as ourselves, and with the same respect and reverence that we do in the nineteenth century; and if so, on what grounds she did this. In

¹ Canones et Acta Concil. Trident. Tauchnitz, 1853, p. 11.

* Heretics.—Heretics were those persons who would draw conclusions for themselves in religious matters, and not be governed by the precepts of the Church. Heretics, whatever affront people may now feel at the name, being simply pickers and choosers of their own creed and discipline, irrespectively of the Church's traditional teaching (Tertullian, de Præscript. 6, vol. ii. p. 18, Migne; S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, v. 20, i. p. 1177). The very existence of such persons in the most primitive times was enough of itself to show (what has been already shown by direct evidence) that the character of the Church was even then restrictive; that it had creeds which were dogmatical, and therefore offensive; discipline and rites that laid a restraint on the licence of self-will, and therefore resented.—J. J. BLUNT, 'History of the Christian Church,' p. 163.

order to this we must first ascertain who were the men who may be taken as the representatives of the Church in the fourth century, either because they held high office in the Church or on account of their great labours or success in her service, or because from their intellectual gifts they had a share in moulding the Church's expression of her belief.

Lardner ('Credibility,' vol. iv.) gives the following list of men who were prominent in the Church during the latter half of the fourth century, and who may fairly be taken as her representatives during that period.

	A.D.
Eusebius, Bishop of Vercelli	354
Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari in Sardinia ..
Gregory, Bishop of Elvira	355
Phœbadius, Bishop of Agen
Caius Marius Victorinus Afer
Aerius	360
Apollinarius, Bishop of Laodicea	362
Damasus, Bishop of Rome
Epiphanius, Bishop in Cyprus	368
Basil, Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia ..	370
Gregory Nazianzen
Amphilochius, Bishop of Iconium
Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa in Cappadocia ..	371
Didymus of Alexandria	370
Ephrem the Syrian
Facian, Bishop of Barcelona	374
Ogylatus of Mileri
Ambrose, Bishop of Milan
Diodorus, Bishop of Tarsus
Philaster, Bishop of Brescia
Gaudentius, Bishop of Brescia
Sophronius	390
Theodore, Bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia ..	394
Jerome	392
Rufinus	397
Augustine, Bishop of Hippo Regius in Africa ..	395
John Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople ..	398

To examine the extant writings of all in the above list of names would be tedious; and it is unnecessary, as it would only yield similar results. The following, who were the most distinguished, will serve as specimens of the rest, S. Epiphanius, S. Basil, S. Gregory Nazianzen, S. Gregory Nyssen, S. Ambrose, Theodore, S. Jerome, Rufinus, S. Augustine, and S. John Chrysostom.

It will save the trouble of constant reference to say here, that, when not otherwise expressed, most of the information contained in the following examination, and all the translations, after having been compared with the original and found to be substantially correct, are taken from Lardner's invaluable work, 'The Credibility of the Gospel History.'

Ascending from the end of the fourth century upwards, the first on our list is

S. John Chrysostom (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 534).—Born at Antioch about A.D. 347, where he was ordained deacon, A.D. 380 or 381, and priest A.D. 386, he became Bishop of Constantinople A.D. 398, and died in exile A.D. 407.

Besides many homilies on detached texts in the four Gospels, S. Chrysostom has left continuous commentaries on S. Matthew's Gospel, and also on S. John; the former in ninety homilies, and the latter in eighty-eight. He treats his subject so fully and minutely that his commentary on S. Matthew fills, in Mr. Field's edition ('Bibliotheca Patrum,' Oxon., 1839), two octavo volumes, containing together more than 1100 pages. His commentary on S. John is on a corresponding scale. With a few unimportant variations, Chrysostom's text of these Gospels may be fairly described as the same as that from which the Authorized Version is translated. Not to mention other points, one great value of Chrysostom's commentaries consists in their being written in Greek, the same language as the Gospel itself, and Chrysostom's native tongue.

Chrysostom was the Bishop of Constantinople, at that time the most important city in the world, the seat of the Emperor Theodosius and his court; and he was the great preacher of his age. His commentaries on Scripture were not the theories of a recluse, written in private and published for the eye of a few scholars. They were popular explanations, delivered to the people at large, assembled in church, and were listened to with such delight that, at times, he had a difficulty in repressing the expression of their admiration. It cannot be questioned that Chrysostom's belief in the Gospel narrative, and in the traditions which he records respecting the Evangelists, was shared by the great bulk of the people at Antioch and Constantinople.

In his first homily on S. Matthew, after stating the names of the four Evangelists, the object they each had in writing, and various remarks about the nature of their Gospels, he concludes with these memorable words: "The general reception of the Gospels is a proof that their history is true and consistent; even the enemies of the truth receive them; for since the writing of the Gospels many heresies have arisen, holding opinions contrary to what is contained in them, yet receiving the Gospels either entire or in part."¹

S. Chrysostom believed that the Evangelists were specially inspired by the Holy Spirit for their office.

Of S. Matthew he says: "Matthew, filled with the Spirit, wrote what he wrote."² Again: "This the publican, led by the eyes of the Spirit, will teach us."³

In a homily on S. John, he says: "It is not John who speaks, but God, who speaks to us by him."⁴ Again: "There is nothing vain or insignificant in the divine Scriptures, for they are the dictates of the Holy Spirit."⁵ Elsewhere he says: "I exhort all of you to procure for yourselves the books [Bibles] which are the medicine of the soul; if you have nothing else, take care to have the New Testament, particularly the Acts of the Apostles, and the Gospels, for your constant instructors, that in all trial you may have recourse to them for proper remedies. . . . ignorance of the Scriptures is the cause of all manner of evils."⁶

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. i. vol. i. p. 6.

² Ibid. p. 3.

³ Ibid. p. 14.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. Homil. ii. in initio. ⁵ Ibid. i. in init.

⁶ S. Chrysostom, in Epist. ad Coloss. Homil. ix. p. 278.

S. Chrysostom recognised, as fully as any modern sceptic, the apparent discrepancies in the accounts of the Evangelists, and argued that these differences were a proof of their truth, and of their agreement in the main. He says: "If there had been an exact agreement about every thing, in time, place, and expression, few would have believed them; the agreement would have been ascribed to human contrivance, and because they had concerted matters together beforehand. But the differences in lesser things, which is observable in them, prevents all suspicion of this kind, and is a proof of their sincerity; but in important things there is no difference between them. They all relate the same doctrine—that Jesus was made man, that He wrought miracles, that He was crucified, buried, and rose again, and that He will come again to judgment; that He delivered salutary precepts, and did not promulgate a law contrary to the old; about all these things there is a full agreement. But if all do not relate the same miracles, or with the same circumstances, a difference about these, and such like things, need not cause any uneasiness; yea, it is the greatest proof of their sincerity, and establisheth the truth of their history."¹

He incidentally bears witness that it was a common custom among Christians to wash their hands before handling the Gospels, and to omit no mark of reverence for them.² Such was the veneration in which the Gospels were held, amounting even to a superstitious veneration, that women and children not unfrequently wore them suspended from their necks, as a preservative against evil, as the Jews did their phylacteries.³

S. Augustine (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 489), son of Patricius and Monica, was born at Tagasta, a small town of Africa, in the inland part of Numidia, in the year A.D. 354. He was ordained presbyter at Hippo Regius, a seaport in the same country, about a hundred miles from Cirta, the metropolis of Numidia, and more than two hundred miles from Carthage, in the year A.D. 391; and bishop of the same city in A.D. 395. He died in the year A.D. 430, in the thirty-fifth year of his episcopate, and the seventy-sixth of his age. The number of the works, which he wrote in the service of the Church, is almost incredible. The mere drudgery of transcribing them would be something appalling, according to modern notions of work.

In S. Augustine's time there was not any Canon of Scripture, settled by any authority, that was universally acknowledged by Christians; and he gives rules to be observed in judging of Canonical Scriptures, namely, the consent of the Church, thus: "In receiving Canonical Scriptures, let him who desires carefully to study them, follow the judgment of the greater number of Catholic Churches; among which they certainly ought to be reckoned, which are Apostolical Sees, and have had letters of Apostles sent to them. This rule, therefore, he will observe with regard to Canonical Scriptures; he will prefer such as are received by all Catholic Churches, to those which some do not receive; and with regard to such as are not received by all, he will prefer those which are received by many and eminent Churches, to those which are received by few Churches, and of less authority. But if he should find some received by the greatest number of Churches, others by the more eminent (which, however, will scarce happen), I think such Scriptures ought to be held by him as of equal authority."⁴

He shows that the Canon of Scripture, as settled according to the rule given above, comprised the four books of the Gospel, according to Matthew, according to Mark, according to Luke, according to John.⁵

In one of his sermons he says: "There are four Evangelists, Matthew, John, Mark and Luke. Of these, Matthew and John were of the number of the twelve Apostles. Mark and Luke were not Apostles, but only companions of Apostles."⁶

Sometimes he gives fanciful reasons why there should be only four Gospels, as earlier writers had done before him.⁷

He speaks of the four Gospels as having the highest authority of all the writings in the New Testament, indeed of all the Scriptures: "In the Old Testament the five books of Moses have the highest authority; in the New Testament, the four Gospels."⁸

"The book of the Gospels is the most excellent part of all the divine Scriptures."⁹

S. Augustine regarded the relations of the Evangelists as different, but not contradictory.

In a sermon on John he says: "To-day has been read the account of our Saviour's Resurrection in John; and in that we have heard what was omitted in the other Gospels. It is all one history of the truth; they all drink from the same fountain; but, as we have often observed to you, my brethren, some things are related by all, some by three, some by two, some by one only."¹⁰

In another sermon he says: "At this season, according to custom, are read the accounts of our Lord's Resurrection. None of the Evangelists could omit to give the history of His Passion and Resurrection; and though there are some differences in their accounts, they are not contrary to each other. Our Lord's acts are very numerous, and could not be all related. Some, therefore, are related by one, some by another, but all with complete harmony, agreeably to the truth. Those things were done which were proper to be

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. i. vol. i. p. 4.

² S. Chrysostom, ad Pop. Antioch. Homil. vii. 5.

³ S. Chrysostom, ad Pop. Antioch. xix. 4.

⁴ — in Matt. Homil. lxxii. vol. ii. p. 341.

⁵ S. Augustine, de Doctrina Christ. ii. 8, sect. 12, vol. iii. p. 40.

⁶ Ibid. ii. 8, sect. 13, vol. iii. p. 41.

⁶ S. Augustine, Sermo cccxix. (alias 146) 1, vol. v. p. 1127.

⁷ S. Augustine, in Psal. ciii. Enar. Serm. 3, sect. 2, vol. iv. p. 1359.

⁸ S. Augustine, de Peccator. Merit. ii. 35, vol. x. p. 184.

⁹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. i. 1, vol. iii. p. 1042.

¹⁰ S. Augustine, Sermo cclxv. 1, vol. v. p. 1151.

done then; so many were written as are proper to be read now."¹

"The first preachers of the Gospel," he says, "were the Apostles, who had conversed with the Lord; who have related to the world not only what they themselves saw Him do, or heard Him say, but likewise divers other things which happened before they were called to follow Him, concerning His nativity, infancy, and youth, which things they might know from Himself, or from His parents, or His friends and acquaintances, who were to be depended upon; and two of the Evangelists were Apostles, Matthew and John. Nevertheless it was wisely ordained by Divine Providence that not only Apostles, but some others besides, should not only preach the Lord Jesus, but likewise write Gospels; these are Mark and Luke, who were disciples of the Apostles. And though many have attempted to write, or have actually published, histories of the actions of Christ and His Apostles, their writings have not been received."²

"These four Evangelists, therefore, are well known all over the world; and perhaps they are four, because there are so many parts of the world, in the whole of which extent the Church of Christ was to be planted. They are said to have written in this order: first Matthew, next Mark, then Luke, and last of all John. . . .

"Of these four, Matthew only is said to have written in Hebrew, the rest in Greek; and though all have an order of narration peculiar to themselves, they do not write as if they were totally ignorant of each other's labours. Matthew writes of our Lord's nativity, and the history of his life as a man. Mark follows him close as his abridger; for he has nothing which is in John alone; he has very few things peculiar to himself; not many things peculiar to Luke; but many things which are in Matthew, and almost in the same words. . . . Luke had no abridger, as Matthew had in Mark.

"Moreover those three Evangelists relate those things which were done by Christ here on earth in His human nature. But John speaks of the Lord's divinity, by which He is equal to the Father; therefore He riseth higher than the rest, and seems to ascend to heaven itself, and the throne of God, where he learned what is included in these words, 'In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God.'"

S. Augustine often points out the superiority, so to speak, of S. John and his Gospel.

"The Apostle John is the most eminent of all the four Evangelists."³

"John also excels, or differs from, the other three Evangelists, in that he dwells more on our Lord's discourses than on His miracles."⁴

Of the four Gospels, or rather of the one Gospel in four books, he ascribes the preference to John's, because he has more fully declared our Lord's divinity than the other Evangelists.⁵

He gives the preference to John, not only over the other Evangelists, but over Peter also, because John had written more of Christ's divinity than Peter had.⁶

Besides many other works, S. Augustine wrote a most elaborate treatise in four books to explain and to reconcile the apparent discrepancies in the Gospels; and also a commentary on S. John's Gospel in 124 chapters; the former filling in Migne's royal octavo edition, with double columns, about 100 pages, and the latter about 300.

Rufinus (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 482) was a presbyter of Aquileia, and contemporary with S. Jerome. According to Cave, he flourished about the year A.D. 390. He died A.D. 410.

Rufinus was a learned man, well acquainted with both the Greek and Latin writers of the Church, and had travelled. He was born in the western part of the empire; but he was also acquainted with the Churches in Egypt and Palestine, where he had resided a good while.

In his exposition of the Apostles' Creed, a work which has been highly commended, he says: "This then is the Holy Spirit, who in the Old Testament inspired the law and the prophets, and in the New the Gospels and Apostles."⁷

He ranks the Gospels with the Prophets and the Apostles. After giving a catalogue of the books of the Old Testament, he says: "Of the New there are the four Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; the Acts of the Apostles, by Luke; fourteen Epistles of the Apostle Paul, two Epistles of the Apostle Peter; one of James, the brother of the Lord, and Apostle; one of Jude; three of John; the Revelation of John. These are the books which the fathers have included in the Canon, and out of which they would have us prove the doctrines of our faith."⁸

He makes a clear distinction between Canonical, Ecclesiastical, and Apocryphal books.

"However, it ought to be observed, that there are also other books, which are not canonical, but have been called by our forefathers ecclesiastical, as the Wisdom of Solomon; and another which is called the Wisdom of the Son of Sirach, and among the Latins is called by the general name of Ecclesiasticus, by which title is denoted not the author of the book, but the quality of the writing. In the same rank is the book of Tobit, and Judith, and the books of the Maccabees. In the New Testament is the book of the Shepherd, or of Hermas, which is called the Two Ways, or the Judgment of Peter. All which they would have to be read in the churches, but not to be alleged by way of authority, for proving articles of faith. Other scriptures they

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo ccc. vol. v. p. 1130.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. i. 1-4, vol. iii. p. 1043-1044.

³ Ibid. ii. 6, 18, vol. iii. p. 1085.

⁴ Ibid. ii. 45, 94, vol. iii. p. 1124.

⁵ S. Augustine, in Joan. Tract. xxxvi. 1, vol. iii. p. 1662.

⁶ S. Augustine, Sermo ccliii. 4, vol. v. p. 1181.

⁷ Rufinus, in Symbol. Apostol. sect. 36, p. 373.

⁸ Ibid. sect. 37, p. 374.

called Apocryphal, which they would not have to be read in the churches. These things I have thought proper to put down here, as received from our ancestors, for the information of those who are learning the first elements of the Church, and the faith; that they may know from what fountains they ought to fetch the word of God.¹

S. Eusebius Hieronymus, or S. Jerome (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 403).—Some uncertainty appears to exist as to the time of his birth; but this is most generally placed about A.D. 342. He was ordained presbyter at Antioch A.D. 378. After residing in various parts of the world, in the year A.D. 386 he settled at Bethlehem, where, with the exception of an occasional excursion, he resided the rest of his life, engaged in the study of the Scriptures. S. Jerome was one of the most learned among the ancient writers; and his skill in all that belonged to the Scriptures, either of the Old or New Testament, has been generally acknowledged.

Notices of the four Gospels occur again and again in his voluminous works, besides the formal catalogues which he has given of the canonical books, and which always includes the four Gospels. In a letter to Paulinus on the study of the Scriptures, when speaking of the New Testament, he says: "The first are the four Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, the chariot (quadriga) of the Lord, and the true cherubim, who go wherever the Spirit leads them."²

"That there were many who wrote Gospels, even Luke the Evangelist witnesseth. But the Church, which according to the word of the Lord, is built upon a rock, pours out only the four rivers of Paradise; and has four corners and four rings, by which the ark of the covenant and guardian of the law of God is safely carried on immovable staves."³

"The first is Matthew the publican, surnamed Levi, who wrote his Gospel in Judea, in the Hebrew language, chiefly for the sake of the Jews that believed in Jesus, and did not join the shadow of the law with the truth of the Gospel. The second is Mark, interpreter of the Apostle Peter, and the first Bishop of Alexandria; who never saw the Lord himself, but related things as he had heard them from his master, very truly, but not in the exact order in which they were done. The third is Luke the physician, a Syrian of Antioch, whose praise is in the Gospel; who was a disciple of the Apostle Paul, and published his Gospel in the countries of Achaia and Bœotia; who likewise, as he also intimates in his preface, writes rather as a hearer than as an eye-witness. The last is John the Apostle and Evangelist, whom Jesus loved most, who leaned on his Lord's breast, and from thence derived the purest doctrine; to whom alone it was said by the Lord, when on the cross, 'Behold thy Mother' (John xix. 27). When he was in Asia, and the seeds sown by the heretics, Cerinthus, Ebion, and others, who denied Christ to have come in the flesh, were now springing up (whom also in his epistle he calls antichrists, and the Apostle Paul often reprehends), he was compelled by almost all the bishops of Asia, and by deputations from many Churches, to write more fully of our Saviour's divinity; and ecclesiastical history informs us, that when he was thus requested by the brethren to write, he answered that he would, provided they would all join in fasting and prayer for him. Which being done, and he being fully inspired, he broke forth into that poem coming down from heaven: 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.' These four Gospels were foretold, and prefigured in the vision of Ezekiel (i. 5-10). The first living creature, having the face of a man, denotes Matthew, who writes as of a man, beginning thus: 'The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.' The second denotes Mark, in whom is heard the voice of the lion roaring in the desert. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight.' The third face of a calf [or ox] prefigures the Evangelist Luke, who begins his Gospel with the history of Zachariah the priest. The fourth denotes the Evangelist John, who taking the wings of an eagle, ascends on high, and discourses of the word of God . . . By all which it appears that four Gospels only ought to be received, and that all the trash of apocryphal gospels (omnes apocryphorum nœnias) ought to be left to dead heretics, and not to be minded by the living members of the Church."

Among such apocryphal writings he mentions the Gospels according to the Egyptians, and Thomas, and Matthias, and Bartholomew, and the Twelve Apostles, and also of Basilides, and Apelles, and others whom he does not name; he says they were the occasions of many heresies, and intimates that they were some of them then in being.⁴

In a letter to Læta on the education of her daughter, having recommended the reading of the Scriptures, and shown the proper order and method of so doing, he says "that all apocryphal books should be shunned; but if at any time she looks into them for her entertainment, and not for proving any doctrine, she should remember that they were not written by those whose names they bear; and that it requires great prudence to separate gold where it is mixed with dirt."⁵

S. Jerome sums up the reasons usually given for the different line taken by S. John and the Synoptists thus: "John the Apostle, whom Jesus loved most, son of Zebedee, brother of the Apostle James, whom Herod beheaded after the Lord's passion, last of all wrote a Gospel at the desire of the bishops of Asia, against Cerinthus and other heretics,

¹ Rufinus, in Symbol. Apostol. sect. 38, p. 374.

² S. Jerome, ad Paulin. de Studio Script. Epist. liiii. (alias 103) S. vol. i. p. 348.

³ S. Jerome, Comment. in Matt. Prolog. vol. vii. p. 18.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. Prolog. vol. vii. p. 17.

⁵ S. Jerome, Epist. ad Lætiam. ciii. (alias 7) 12. vol. i. p. 877.

and especially against the doctrine of the Ebionites,* then springing up, who affirm that Christ did not exist before his birth of Mary; for which reason he was obliged to declare His Divine Nativity. Another reason of his writing is also mentioned; which is, that, after having read the volumes of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, he expressed his approbation of their history as true; but observed that they had recorded an account of but one year of our Lord's ministry, even the last, after the imprisonment of John, in which year also he suffered. Omitting, therefore, [very much] that year, the history of which had been written by the other three, he related the acts of the preceding time, before John was shut up in prison, as may appear to those who read the volumes of the four Evangelists, which may serve to account for the seeming difference between John and the rest. He also wrote one Epistle, the beginning of which is: 'That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes—and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life,' which is received by all learned and Catholic men in general, without exception."¹

Passing over S. Jerome's other works, it may be stated here that he revised the Italic or old Latin version of the New Testament, comparing it, or at least the Gospels, with ancient Græc MSS., and by means of them correcting it in certain places, but sparingly and never unnecessarily; he revised the old Latin version of the Old Testament, which had been made from the Septuagint; he made an entirely new translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew.

¹ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. ix. vol. ii. p. 623.

² S. Jerome, Præfat. in IV. Evangelia, vol. x. p. 526.

——— Præfat. in Job, vol. ix. p. 1079.

³ S. Jerome, in Isaiah xxix. 9, vol. iv. p. 332.

* The Ebionites.—The Ebionites were a much larger and more important body than the Nazarenes. They were not confined to the neighbourhood of Pella or even to Palestine and the surrounding countries, but were found in Rome, and probably also in all the great centres of the dispersion (Epiphanius, Hæres. xxx. 18). Not content with observing the Mosaic ordinances themselves, they maintained that the law was binding on all Christians alike, and regarded Gentile believers as impure because they refused to conform. As a necessary consequence, they rejected the authority and the writings of St. Paul, branding him as an apostate, and pursuing his memory with bitter reproaches. In their theology also they were far removed from the Catholic Church, holding our Lord to be a mere man, the son of Joseph and Mary, who was justified, as any of themselves might be justified, by His rigorous performance of the law.

"If the Nazarenes might have claimed some affinity to the apostles of the Circumcision, the Ebionites were the direct spiritual descendants of those false brethren, the Judaizers of the apostolic age, who first disturbed the peace of the Antiochene Church and then dogged St. Paul's footsteps from city to city, everywhere thwarting his efforts and undermining his authority. If Ebionism was not primitive Christianity, neither was it a creation of the second century. As an organization, a distinct sect, it first made itself known, we may suppose, in the reign of Trajan; but as a sentiment, it had been harboured within the Church from the very earliest days. Moderated by the personal influence of the Apostles, soothed by the general practice of their Church, not yet forced into declaring themselves by the turn of events, though scarcely tolerant of others, these Judaizers were tolerated for a time themselves.

Thus roughly speaking, it may be said that S. Jerome's translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew, with his revised translation of the Psalms from the Septuagint, and his revised translation of the New Testament form what is now called "The Vulgate."²

The value which S. Jerome set upon the Scriptures may be learnt not only from the labour which he expended in making various editions and translations of them, and from his commentaries on them, but also from the advice which he gives to others respecting the diligent study of them.

He says: "The Scriptures, being all written by one Spirit, are one book."³

— His advice to Nepotian on the clerical, or monastic, life is: "Be much in reading the divine Scriptures, or rather let them never be out of your hands."⁴

He makes a difference between the Apostles, and the rest of the writers of the sacred Scriptures, and other writers. "The former always speak truth; the latter, as men, may err."⁵

He says that "nothing is so likely to enable a wise man to bear with moderation the troubles of this life as the meditation and study of the Scriptures."⁶

But, with all St. Jerome's reverence for the Scriptures, he disapproved of the superstitious use of them, or at least of the superstitious use of them to the neglect of the right use, and censures the practice of some women, who wore about them pieces of the wood of the Cross, and small Gospels, or passages of them. He says it may be a zeal of God, but ⁴ S. Jerome, Epist. ad Nepotian. lii. (alias 2), 7, vol. i. p. 533.

⁵ S. Jerome, Epist. ad Theoph. lxxii. (alias 62), 7, vol. i. p. 740.

⁶ S. Jerome, in Epist. ad Ephes. Prolog. vol. vii. p. 439.

The beginning of the second century was a winnowing season in the Church of the Circumcision.

"The form of Ebionism, which is most prominent in early writers and which I have hitherto had in view, is purely Pharisaic; but we meet also with another type, agreeing with the former up to a certain point but introducing at the same time a new element, half ascetic, half mystical. . . .

"The following opinions were shared by all Ebionites alike: (1) The recognition of Jesus as Messiah; (2) The denial of His divinity; (3) The universality of the law; (4) The rejection and hatred of St. Paul.

"Their differences consisted in: (1) Their view of what constituted the law; and (2) Their conception of the Person of Christ; e.g., whether He was born of a virgin or in the course of nature; what spiritual endowments He had, and at what time they were bestowed on Him, whether at His birth or at His baptism.

"The Ebionites of earlier writers, as Irenæus and Hippolytus, belong to the Pharisaic type; while those of Epiphanius are strongly Essene (p. 301).

"At the close of the fourth century, the Ebionites seem to have mustered in considerable numbers in the east of Palestine, and were scattered through the great cities of the empire. But their existence was not prolonged much later. About the middle of the fifth century they had almost disappeared. They would gradually be absorbed either into the Catholic Church or into the Jewish synagogue; into the latter probably, for their attachment to the law seems all along to have been stronger than their attachment to Christ" (p. 321).—CANON LIGHTFOOT "On the Epistle to the Galatians."

not according to knowledge; and that the faults of the Pharisees, who made broad their phylacteries, had descended to Christians.¹

Theodore, Bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 392), was descended of an honourable family, and in all probability was a native of the city of Antioch. He was an intimate friend and fellow-disciple of John Chrysostom under Libanius the sophist, &c.

Theodoret calls him the doctor of the whole Church,² and says he was bishop six and thirty years, and wrote against all heresies, particularly those of Arius, Eunomius, and Apollinarius.

According to Theodoret, Theodore died A.D. 429, and was probably made Bishop of Mopsuestia, A.D. 392.

Most of Theodore's works are lost, only fragments remain. The following is taken from his Commentary on S. John's Gospel:

"After the Lord's Ascension to heaven, the disciples stayed a good while at Jerusalem, visiting the cities in its neighbourhood, preaching chiefly to the Jews; until the great Paul, called by the divine grace, was appointed to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles openly. And in process of time Divine Providence, not allowing them to be confined to any one particular part of the earth, made way for conducting them to remote countries. Peter went to Rome, the others elsewhere. John in particular, took up his abode at Ephesus, visiting, however, at seasons the several parts of Asia, and doing much good to the people of that country by his discourses.

"About this time the other Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, published their Gospels, which were soon spread all over the world, and were received by all the faithful in general with great regard. Nevertheless, the Christians of Asia, having a great opinion of the abilities and faithfulness of John, and considering that he had been with Jesus from the beginning, even before Matthew, and that he had been greatly favoured by the Lord, brought to him the other books of the Gospels, desiring to know his opinion concerning them. And he declared his approbation of them, saying that what they had written was agreeable to truth; but that some miracles, which might be of great use if recorded, were omitted. He said, moreover, that whereas they had written of the coming of Christ in the flesh, it was fit that the things concerning His divinity also should be recorded.

"The brethren thereupon earnestly desired him to write, those things which he esteemed needful to be known, and which he saw to have been omitted by the rest, with which request he complied. And he was induced to begin immediately with the doctrine of Christ's deity. After which he proceeded to the account of the things said and done by the Lord in the flesh."³

S. Ambrose (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 330), born about A.D. 340, and became Bishop of Milan A.D. 374. The share which he had in the public transactions of his time, and the force of his own character, rendered S. Ambrose one of the most prominent men of his age.

Among other works written by S. Ambrose, which have come down to us, is a Commentary on the Gospel according to S. Luke, in ten books. He is said to have been the first who wrote a Commentary on this Gospel in Latin. He names, in order to reject, the Gospel according to the Twelve, the Gospels according to Basilides, according to Thomas, and according to Matthias. He says the Church has one Gospel in four books, spread all over the world, and written by Matthew, Mark, John, and Luke, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit.⁴

Elsewhere also, he says, there is "one Gospel, and four books."⁵

He mentions the symbols of the Evangelists, as supposed to be represented by the four living creatures in Rev. iv. 7.⁶

In his prologue to his exposition of S. Luke's Gospel, like many others, S. Ambrose admires the transcendent sublimity of the beginning of S. John's Gospel; and on that account seems to give him the preference above the other three Evangelists, though he ascribes also great wisdom to each one of them.⁷ In another place, he says, that the beginning of S. John's Gospel confuted all heresies, particularly Arianism, Sabellianism, and Manicheism.⁸

S. Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa in Cappadocia (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 295), the younger brother of S. Basil, was ordained Bishop of Nyssa in Cappadocia about the year A.D. 370. Being a zealous Homoïusian, he felt the heavy hands of the Arian administration under Valens; and for some time after his ordination he was obliged to live in exile, in an unsettled condition, till, upon the death of Valens, he and others were restored to their sees by an edict of Gratian, A.D. 378.

He gives the title of "the Great John" to the Evangelist, quoting the beginning of his first Epistle, soon after he had quoted the beginning of his Gospel.⁹ He also calls him "the Great Apostle." When writing against Apollinarius, he says: "Where did Apollinarius learn that the Spirit became incarnate? What scripture says this? We have not learnt any such thing from the Gospels, but that the Word became Flesh, as the great Apostle says."¹⁰

S. Gregory Nyssen is said to have been among the first who pointed out the various reading in the last chapter of

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiii. 6, vol. vii. p. 168.

² Theodoret, Hist. Eccles. v. c. ult., vol. iii. p. 538.

³ Theodorus Mopsuesten. in Joan. Proem., Migne's Patrol. vol. lxxi. p. 728.

⁴ S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 1, vol. ii. p. 1534.

⁵ S. Ambrose, in Psalm xl. sect. 38, vol. i. p. 1085.

⁶ S. Ambrose, Exposit. in Luc. Prolog. sect. 7, vol. ii. p. 1532.

⁷ Ibid. sect. 3, vol. ii. p. 1530.

⁸ S. Ambrose, de Fide, l. 8, sect. 57, vol. iii. p. 541.

⁹ S. Gregory Nyssen, in Contre. Homil. xiii. vol. i. p. 1049.

¹⁰ S. Gregory Nyssen, adv. Apollin. 12, vol. ii. p. 1145.

S. Mark's Gospel.¹ In his oration on the Resurrection of Christ, he observes that some things in S. Mark's Gospel appear to be different from the accounts given of our Lord's Resurrection by the other Evangelists. He, therefore, reconciles them, and compares together all the four Evangelists, Matthew, John, Luke and Mark, which shows that, so far as he knew, there were no other authentic histories of Christ, except these four: and that there were no other for which the Church had any regard.

S. Gregory Nazianzen (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 284).—S. Jerome celebrates Gregory's eloquence, and calls him his master, whom he had heard interpreting the Scriptures. He also mentions several of his works, and says that he had died about three years before.² It is generally allowed that S. Gregory Nazianzen flourished about A.D. 370 and afterwards. But learned men are not agreed as to the time of his birth, and the age at which he died. Cave says that he was born about the time of the Nicene Council at Nazianzum in Cappadocia, and died A.D. 389 and about the 65th year of his age having been elected Bishop of Constantinople A.D. 378.

Among the poems of S. Gregory Nazianzen, there is one which contains a catalogue of the books of the Old and New Testament. He says: "The books of the New Testament are as follows: Matthew wrote for the Hebrews, Mark for the Italians, Luke for the Greeks, for all that great herald John, enlightened by the heavenly mysteries."³

The following are the titles of some of his poems:—On the Twelve Apostles; On Christ's Genealogy [as in Matthew and Luke]; The Miracles of Christ according to Matthew; Christ's Parables and Similitudes according to Matthew; Christ's Miracles according to John; Christ's Miracles according to Luke; Christ's Parables according to Luke; Christ's Miracles according to Mark; The Parables of the four Evangelists.⁴

S. Basil (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 278).—It is generally supposed that Basil, commonly called "the Great," was born in Cappadocia, in the year A.D. 328 or 329; that he was ordained Bishop of Caesarea, the capital city of his native country, about A.D. 369, and died A.D. 378.

S. Basil bears witness to the respect which was all along paid by Christians to the Scriptures. In a homily, containing an exhortation to baptism, having quoted a text of Isaiah, of the Psalms, the Acts, and S. Matthew, he says: "For all these were in to-day's reading."⁵

In a letter to S. Gregory Nazianzen, he says: "The best way to know our duty is to meditate on the divinely inspired Scriptures; here are instructions concerning our conduct; and the actions of good men recorded therein, are, as it were, living patterns, set before us as for our imitation. And whatever malady any man labours under, if he acquaint himself with the Scriptures, he will there find a medicine suited to his case."⁶

In a letter to a woman of condition who was a widow, and had applied to him for counsel, he says: "If you attend to the consolations of the divine Scriptures, you will neither need my advice, nor the advice of any other, the directions of the Holy Ghost being sufficient to lead you into a right conduct."⁷ And to another he says: "And by you I salute your good daughter, and I exhort her to live in the meditation of the oracles of the Lord, that by their excellent institution her mind may be nourished, and improve more than her body does according to the course of nature."⁸

He says: "All things are to be proved by the divinely inspired Scriptures."⁹ Among other characteristics of a Christian, he reckons, a sure and unhesitating, and what may even be called, an unreasoning persuasion of the truth of the divinely inspired Scriptures.¹⁰

S. Epiphanius (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 185) was a native of Palestine, and was chosen Bishop of Constantia, formerly called Salamis, in the island of Cyprus, A.D. 367 or 368.

The works of his, which have survived to our time, are, the 'Anchorate,' written about A.D. 373; his 'Pinarium,' a large work against heresies, which was begun A.D. 374; his treatise on 'Weights and Measures,' written A.D. 392.

He gives a catalogue of the books of the New Testament in these words: "Had you, Aëtius, been born of the Spirit, and been taught by the Prophets and Apostles, you would have read the seven-and-twenty books of the Old Testament, from the creation of the world to the time of Esther, which are reckoned two and twenty; and also the four holy Gospels, and the fourteen Epistles of the holy Apostle Paul, and the Acts of the Apostles, and the Catholic Epistles of James, and Peter, and John, and Jude, and the Revelation of John, and the Wisdoms of Solomon and Sirach, and in a word all the divine Scriptures."¹¹

Of S. Matthew he says: "Matthew both preached, and wrote a Gospel in Hebrew;"¹² and he wrote first, because he had been called from the receipt of customs, and from many sins. It was therefore fit he should show, that Jesus came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.¹³

He says: "Matthew wrote first, and Mark soon after, being a companion of Peter at Rome. He also believed that Mark was one of Christ's seventy-two disciples, and likewise one of those who were offended at the words of Christ, recorded, John vi. 44, and then forsook Him, but was afterwards

¹ S. Gregory Nyssen, in Christi Resurrect. Orat. ii. vol. iii. p. 644.

² S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. cxvii. vol. ii. p. 707.

³ S. Gregory Nazianzen, Carmen de Veris Script. Libris, vol. iii. p. 474.

⁴ S. Gregory Nazianzen, Carmina, vol. iii. p. 479-495.

⁵ S. Basil, Homil. in Sanct. Baptisma, sect. 1, vol. iii. p. 425.

⁶ S. Basil, Epist. ad Gregorium, ii. sect. 3, vol. iv. p. 228.

⁷ S. Basil, Epist. cclxxxiii. (alias 284), vol. iv. p. 1020.

⁸ Ibid. cxcvii. (alias 285), vol. iv. p. 1040.

⁹ S. Basil, Moral. Reg. cxvii. vol. iii. p. 744.

¹⁰ Ibid. lxxx. c. 22, vol. iii. p. 868.

¹¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, lxxvi. 5, vol. ii. p. 560.

¹² Ibid. li. 5, vol. i. p. 896.

¹³ Ibid. li. 4, vol. i. p. 893.

recovered by Peter, and being filled with the Spirit, wrote a Gospel."¹

The third Gospel is that of Luke. He also was one of Christ's seventy-two disciples, who took offence at the same words that Mark did. He was recovered by Paul, "and was moved by the Spirit to write a Gospel."²

Of S. John he says: "At length John also, moved by the Spirit, wrote a Gospel, after he had long declined it, through humility, when he was more than ninety years of age, and when he had lived many years in Asia, after his return thither from Patmos, in the time of the Emperor Claudius."³ He also says: "that John, the fourth and last in order of time, was first in respect to the sublimity of his matter."⁴ He several times states that S. John's Gospel was occasioned by the errors of the Ebionites, the Cerinthians, the Merinthians, and Nazarenes.⁵

He says: "There are four Gospels, and in them a thousand one hundred and sixty-two sections, or chapters," which is very near the number of Eusebius's canon.⁶ Having noticed the different characters of the four Evangelists, and the beginnings of their several Gospels, and that John wrote last, and supplied some things omitted by the former; he says, "hence it has come to pass that we have from the four Evangelists a full and accurate account of all that concerned both Christ's humanity and divinity."⁷

He also says: "that S. John imparted spiritual gifts by his Gospel, his Epistles, and the Revelation;"⁸ that John's books or writings, his Gospel, and Revelation, and Epistles, are harmonious."⁹

The following passages, from numberless others, show the great respect which the Christians of that day paid to the Scriptures, and how they ranked the Evangelists and their Gospels with the Prophets and the other writers of the Old Testament: "One and the same God is preached to us in the Law, and the Prophets, and the Gospels, and the Apostles, in the Old and the New Testament."¹⁰

Speaking of S. John, he says: "The Apostle therefore speaking, or rather the Holy Ghost, speaking through him."¹¹

Arguing against the Valentinians, he says, "their fables and fancies have no countenance from Scripture, nor from Moses, nor from any of the Prophets after him, nor from our Saviour, nor from His Evangelists, or Apostles."¹²

He complains "that some men neglecting the truth of the Prophets, Evangelists, and Apostles, have introduced false and fabulous notions."¹³

He professes to have delivered "the true faith, taken from the Law, and the Prophets, and the Gospels, and the Apostles."¹⁴

FROM A.D. 350 TO A.D. 300.

The following are the men who, according to Lardner, were the most prominent in the Church during the former half of the fourth century, and who may therefore be taken as representatives of the belief of the Church during that time.

	A.D.
Arnobius	306
Lactantius	306
Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria	315
Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea in Palestine	316
Arius	320
Marcellus, Bishop of Ancyra in Galatia	326
Eustatius, Bishop of Antioch	326
Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria	326
Juvenius	326
Julius Firmicius Maternus	326
Cyril of Jerusalem	345
Hilary of Poitiers	340
Rheticus, Bishop of Autun	340
Triphyllus	341
Fortunatianus	341
Photianus	341

It will answer our purpose sufficiently to examine the extant writings of a few of these, as specimens of the rest: viz., Eusebius, S. Athanasius, S. Cyril of Jerusalem.

S. Cyril of Jerusalem (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 171).—It is computed that Cyril was born about A.D. 315, that he was ordained priest A.D. 344 or 345, bishop in A.D. 350 or 351, and died in A.D. 386. The Catechetical Discourses mentioned by S. Jerome,¹⁵ and which are still extant, were composed in A.D. 347 or 348, while he was yet priest only.

S. Cyril gives a catalogue of the books of the Old and New Testament. "The books of the New Testament," he says, "are the four Gospels only, the rest are falsely inscribed and hurtful. The Manichæans have also written a gospel according to Thomas, which, coloured over with the odour of evangelical phraseology, corrupts the souls of the more simple. Receive likewise the Acts of the Twelve Apostles; as also the seven catholic epistles of James and Peter, John and Jude, and the seal of all, and the last [work] of the disciples, the fourteen epistles of Paul. As for any beside these, let them be all held in the second, or no rank. And whatever books are not read in the churches those neither do thou read in private, as thou hast heard."¹⁶

S. Cyril notices various particulars respecting the Gospels of S. Matthew and S. Mark.¹⁷

He quotes the Prologue of S. John's Gospel, and presses on his hearers to give attention to S. John's Gospel, whom he terms the divine: 'Ἰωάννη τῷ Θεολόγῳ.'¹⁸

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 6, vol. i. p. 900.

² Ibid. li. 11, vol. i. p. 908; li. 7, vol. i. p. 900.

³ Ibid. li. 12, vol. i. p. 909.

⁴ Ibid. li. 19, vol. i. p. 924; li. 23, vol. ii. p. 240.

⁵ Ibid. li. 2, 12, vol. i. pp. 889, 909; li. 23, vol. ii. p. 237.

⁶ S. Epiphanius, Ancoratus, i. vol. iii. p. 105.

⁷ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 19, vol. i. p. 924.

⁸ Ibid. li. 35, vol. i. p. 953. ⁹ Ibid. li. 34, vol. i. p. 949.

¹⁰ S. Epiphanius, de Fide, 18, vol. ii. p. 820.

¹¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, lxxvi. 9, vol. ii. p. 532.

¹² Ibid. xxxi. 34, vol. i. p. 540.

¹³ Ibid. lxxvii. 1, vol. ii. p. 641.

¹⁴ S. Epiphanius, Ancoratus, 82, vol. iii. p. 172.

¹⁵ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. cxii. vol. ii. p. 706.

¹⁶ S. Cyril, Hierosol. Cateches. iv. 36, p. 500.

¹⁷ Ibid. xiv. 15, p. 844; xvii. 19, p. 992. ¹⁸ Ibid. xii. 1, p. 725.

He ranks the Old and New Testament, the Law and the Prophets, Gospels and Apostles together, and says: "that all these Scriptures were dictated by one and the same Spirit."¹

In numberless places he implies that the Scriptures were written by the Holy Spirit, as in the following: "Why do you curiously inquire after what the Holy Spirit has not written in the Scriptures?"²

He recommends his hearers "to nourish their souls," and "to establish themselves, by reading the divine oracles."³

He continually alleges the books of Scripture in proof of what he teaches; as, "These things we do not say of our own invention, but because they are taken from the Scriptures which are received [or read] in the Church."⁴ "Not the least article of faith ought to be taught by mere probable reason only, without the divine Scriptures."⁵ "The Christian creed is composed not of the fancies of men, but of doctrines collected out of Scripture." And he advises his hearers, "to receive and to guard that only as the faith which has been delivered by the Church, and which is confirmed and supported by Scripture."⁶

S. Athanasius (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 152).—He succeeded Alexander in the see of Alexandria, A.D. 326, and died A.D. 373, when he had been bishop forty-six years complete.

He says: "That on account of the Trinity, the heathen people of his time thought that the Christians worshipped a plurality of Gods."⁷

He says: "that Christian people never took their denomination from their own bishops, but from the Lord in whom we believe. And though the blessed Apostles are our masters and have ministered to us the Gospel of our Saviour, we are not named from them. For from Christ we are Christians, and from Him are so called."⁸

In the thirty-ninth festal letter, which is generally allowed to be a genuine work of S. Athanasius, he says:

"But since we have spoken of heretics as dead persons, and of ourselves as having the divine Scriptures for salvation; and I fear lest, as Paul wrote to the Corinthians, some few of the weaker sort should be seduced from their simplicity and purity by the cunning and craftiness of some men, and at length be induced to make use of other books called apocryphal, being deceived by the similitude of their names, resembling the true books; I therefore entreat you to bear with me, if I by writing remind you of the things which ye know already, as what may be of use for the Church. And for the vindication of my attempt I adopt the form of the Evangelist Luke, who himself says, Forasmuch as some have taken in hand to set forth writings called apocryphal, and to join them with the divinely inspired Scriptures of which we are fully assured, as they delivered them to the fathers, who were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word; it has seemed good to me also, with the advice of some true brethren, and having learned it from the beginning, to set forth in order these canonical books, which have been delivered down to us, and believed to be divine Scripture, that every one who has been deceived, may condemn those who have deceived him; and that he who remains uncorrupted may have the satisfaction to be reminded of what he is persuaded of. The books of the Old Testament, then, are all of them in number two-and-twenty." . . . "Thus far of the books of the Old Testament. Nor do I think it too much pains to declare those of the New. They are these: the four Gospels, according to Matthew, according to Mark, according to Luke, according to John. Then after them the Acts of the Apostles, and the seven epistles of the Apostles called Catholic: of James one, of Peter two, of John three, and after them of Jude one. Besides these there are the fourteen epistles of the Apostle Paul, the order of which is thus: the first to the Romans, then two to the Corinthians, after them that to the Galatians, the next to the Ephesians, then to the Philippians, to the Colossians, after them two to the Thessalonians, and the epistle to the Hebrews, then two to Timothy, to Titus one, the last to Philemon: and again the revelation of John. These are fountains of salvation, that he who thirsts may be satisfied with the oracles contained in them: in these alone the doctrine of religion is taught: let no man add to them, or take anything from them. Of these our Lord spake when he put the Sadducees to shame, saying: 'Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures.' And he exhorted the Jews: 'Search the Scriptures: for these are they which testify of me.' However, for the sake of greater accuracy, I add as follows: that there are other books beside these, without; not canonical indeed, but ordained by the fathers to be read to (or by) those who are newly come over to us, and are desirous to be instructed in the doctrine of religion. They are the Wisdom of Solomon, the Wisdom of Sirach, and Esther, Judith, Tobias: the Doctrine of the Apostles, as it is called, and the Shepherd. So that, my beloved, those being canonical, and these read, there is no mention of apocryphal books; but they are the invention of heretics, who wrote them after their own pleasure: assigning to them, and adding to them, times; that, producing them as ancient writings, they may take occasion to deceive the simple."⁹

No man ever endured such severe and continued opposition in maintenance of what he considered the doctrine of the Church as S. Athanasius. In his Orations against the Arians he maintained his assertions by numberless quotations from the four Gospels, and more especially from the Gospel of S. John.¹⁰ The correctness of his explanations of these passages, and of the inferences which he drew from

¹ S. Cyril, Hierosol. Cateches. xvii. 5, p. 976.

² Ibid. xi. 12, p. 705.

³ Ibid. i. 6, p. 377; iv. 37, p. 504.

⁴ Ibid. iv. 17, p. 476.

⁵ Ibid. xv. 13, p. 885.

⁶ Ibid. v. 12, p. 520.

⁷ S. Athanasius, Oratio contr. Arian. iii. sect. 15, vol. ii. p. 352.

⁸ Ibid. i. sect. 2, vol. ii. p. 16.

⁹ S. Athanasius, Epist. Heortast. xxxix. vol. ii. p. 1436.

¹⁰ S. Athanasius, Oratio contr. Gentes, sect. 42, vol. i. p. 84.

them, was constantly denied; his right to defend his doctrines by quotations from any one of these four Gospels was never once called in question. If there had been any hesitation in the universal reception of the four Gospels by the Church Catholic, or any flaw in the evidence of this universal reception, the disputes between Athanasius and Arius would have brought this to light. It was his use of the word ὁμοούσιος, to express the relation of the Son to the Father, and not his constant appeal to S. John's Gospel, which earned for Athanasius the unceasing opposition which he met with from Arius and his followers.

He terms S. John "the divine man," ὁ θεολόγος ἄνθρωπος; and the Apostles in general "the divines of the Saviour."¹

He often quotes the first epistle of S. John, and as John's.²

He terms S. Paul, "the blessed Paul, a man bearing or carrying Christ," and "the holy servant of Christ."³

He calls the Scriptures "sacred and divinely inspired," and says they are "sufficient to show us the truth."⁴

He frequently counsels attention to the Scriptures, and more especially those of the New Testament: "Let these be hearkened to, the determination of the Gospel, the preaching of the Apostles, the testimonies of the Prophets."⁵ Having quoted several things from the Old Testament, he says: "But do you also search the Gospels, and what the Apostles have written;"⁶ and afterwards: "Let us inquire after the ancient tradition, and doctrine, and faith of the Catholic Church, which the Lord delivered, which the Apostles preached, which the Fathers kept: for on this the Church is founded."

Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iv. p. 69), says Jerome: "a man most studious in the divine Scriptures, and together with the Martyr Pamphilus, very diligent in making a large collection of ecclesiastical writers, published innumerable volumes, some of which are these: 'The Evangelical Demonstration' in twenty books: 'The Evangelical Preparation' in fifteen books: five books of the Theophanie: ten books of Ecclesiastical History: Chronical Canons of Universal History, and an epitome of them: and of the difference between the Gospels: ten books upon Isaiah: against Porphyry, who at the same time wrote in Sicily, thirty books, as some think, though I have never met with more than twenty: 'Topics' in one book: an 'Apology for Origen' in six books: 'The Life of Pamphilus' in three books: several small pieces concerning the Martyrs: most learned Commentaries upon the 150 Psalms, and many other works. He flourished chiefly under the emperors Constantine and Constantius. On account of his friendship with the martyr Pamphilus, he received his surname from him."⁷ Eusebius was born at Cæsarea in Palestine about A.D. 270, of which place he afterwards became bishop. It is said that he had read all sorts of Greek authors, whether philosophers, historians, or divines, of Egypt, Phœnicia, Asia, Africa, and Europe.

The character of the testimony which Eusebius gives of the reception of the four Gospels by the Church is different from that of any other writer hitherto considered. They were evidence of the judgment of the Church in their own time; the testimony of Eusebius, as the historian of the Church from the beginning, has a much wider reference than to the practice of the Church when he lived. His testimony extends to the reception which the Church had given to the four Gospels from the beginning up to his time; and he speaks with the authority of a man who had full knowledge of the subject on which he writes. For, taking into account the careful investigations which he appears to have made into the history of the Church from the first, the many writings which he quotes of men whose works are now lost, and whose very names would have been unknown but for the extracts which he makes from them, the many traditions which he records respecting the early writers and their works, and the opinions which they held respecting the books of the New Testament, it is scarcely too much to say that Eusebius had read all the Christian writings which had been published before his time. He speaks with the knowledge of a man who had read all that was to be read on the subject on which he speaks. If, then, there had ever been any hesitation in the Church as to the universal reception of the four Gospels, he would have known it; and, as he states when there had been any doubt or hesitation in the Church's reception of the other books, we may fairly conclude he would have done so in this case had such ever existed.

Among other extant works of Eusebius are ten Evangelical Canons, with a letter to Carpianus, showing what things are related by four of the Evangelists, what by three of them, what by two, and what by one.⁸

It would be tedious to the reader to go through even a title of the passages where Eusebius incidentally indicates the reverence in which the Scriptures generally, and more especially the Gospels, were held by Christians in his day, and before it. In the following paragraph from his 'Evangelical Demonstration' he discusses the character of the Evangelists, and gives several reasons to account for the way in which in several places they wrote as they did: "The Apostle Matthew does not pretend to any honourable station in the former part of his life; but placeth himself among publicans, employed in heaping up money. This none of the other Evangelists have mentioned; not his fellow-disciple John, nor Luke, nor Mark. But Matthew is his own accuser, and dissembles not his former course of life. Observe,

¹ S. Athanasius, Oratio de Incarnat. sect. 19, vol. i. p. 113.

² S. Athanasius, Oratio IV. contr. Arian. sect. 26, vol. ii. p. 503.

— I. contr. Arian. sect. 1, vol. ii. p. 13.

³ S. Athanasius, Oratio contr. Gentes, sect. 5 and 26, vol. i. pp. 12 and 52.

— de Incarnat. sect. 10, vol. i. p. 113.

⁴ S. Athanasius, Oratio contr. Gentes, sect. 1, vol. i. p. 4.

— de Synodo, sect. 6, vol. ii. p. 639.

⁵ S. Athanasius, contr. Apollin. ii. sect. 4, vol. ii. p. 1137.

⁶ S. Athanasius, Epist. I. ad Serap. sect. 6 and 28, vol. ii. pp. 541 and 593.

⁷ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxxxi. vol. ii. p. 689.

⁸ Eusebius, vol. iv. p. 1276.

then, how he expressly mentions his name in the Gospel written by himself: 'And as Jesus passed forth from thence, He saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: and He saith unto him, Follow Me. And he arose and followed Him. And it came to pass as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans came and sat down with Him and His disciples' (Matt. ix. 10). And afterwards, in the course of the narrative, inserting a catalogue of Christ's disciples, he calls himself the publican. For thus he says: 'Now the names of the twelve Apostles are these: the first Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; Philip and Bartholomew; Thomas and Matthew the publican' (Ch. x. 2, 3). Thus Matthew, out of abundance of modesty, hides not his former course of life, but ingenuously owns himself to have been a publican, and likewise placeth himself after his colleague. For whereas they were joined two and two, he with Thomas, Peter with Andrew, and Philip with Bartholomew, he puts Thomas before himself, giving the preference to his fellow-Apostle as his superior; whilst the other Evangelists have used a different order. Observe therefore Luke, how he mentions Matthew; he does not call him a publican, nor subjoin him to Thomas; but, knowing him to be his superior, first mentions him and then Thomas, as does Mark likewise. The words of the former are these: 'And when it was day, He called unto Him His disciples, and of them He chose twelve, whom also He named Apostles; Simon, whom He named Peter, and Andrew his brother; James and John; Philip and Bartholomew; Matthew and Thomas' (Luke vi. 13-15). Thus did Luke prefer Matthew, 'even as they had delivered things unto him, who from the beginning were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word' (Ch. i. 2). You may observe John to be of the same mind with Matthew; for in his epistles he either nameth not himself at all, or calls himself only elder, nowhere Apostle or Evangelist. In his Gospel, when he speaks of him 'whom Jesus loved,' he does not mention himself by name. As for Peter, out of abundance of modesty, he thought not himself worthy to write a Gospel; but Mark, who was his friend and disciple, is said to have recorded Peter's relations of the acts of Jesus; who, when he comes to that part of the history where Jesus asked, 'who men said He was,' and then, what opinion they themselves, his disciples, had of Him? and Peter had replied, that they believed Him to be the Christ; he does not relate anything that Jesus said by way of answer to this, except that 'He charged them, that they should tell no man of Him' (Mark viii. 27-30). For Mark was not present to hear what Jesus said, and Peter did not think fit to bear testimony to himself, by relating what Jesus said to him, or of him. Nevertheless, what was said to him is related by Matthew in this manner: 'But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered, and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered, and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven' (Matthew xvi. 13, 16-19). Though such things were said to Peter by Jesus, Mark has taken no notice of them, because, as is probable, Peter did not relate them in his sermons. He only said: 'When Jesus put the question to them, Peter answered, and said, Thou art the Christ. And He charged them, that they should tell no man of Him' (Mark viii. 29, 30). About those things Peter thought fit to be silent; therefore Mark also has omitted them. But what concerned his denial (of Jesus) he preached to all men, because upon that account he 'wept bitterly.' You will therefore find Mark relating concerning that matter all these several particulars: 'And as Peter was in the palace, there cometh to him one of the maids of the high-priest. And when she saw Peter, she looked upon him, and said, And thou wast with Jesus of Nazareth. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest: and he went out into the porch, and the cock crew. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them, for thou art a Galilean. But he began to curse and to swear, I know not this man of whom ye speak. And the second time the cock crew' (Mark xiv. 66-72). These things writes Mark; and Peter testifies these things of himself, for all things in Mark are said to be memoirs of Peter's discourses."

Of S. John he says: "Let us observe the writings of this Apostle, which are not contradicted by any. And first of all must be mentioned, as acknowledged of all, the Gospel according to him, well known to all the Churches under heaven. And that it hath been justly placed by the ancients the fourth in order, and after the other three, may be made evident in this manner."¹ He then goes on to explain much in the same way that others have done, that John having read the accounts which the other three Evangelists had written, perceived that they had omitted many things which he was able to supply; and that it was in order to supply these omissions that he wrote his Gospel.

Speaking of the Scriptures that were universally acknowledged, and those that are not such, Eusebius says: "It will be proper to enumerate here in a summary way, the books of the New Testament which have been already mentioned; and in the first place are to be ranked the sacred four Gospels,"² using an expression, the full force of which is untranslatable into English. For the periphrasis, the four-horse chariot of the Gospels is but a poor substitute for the beauty and force of the Greek τὴν ἀρίαν τῶν Εὐαγγελίων τετρακτῶν. By this expression the writer probably meant to imply both the number of the Evangelists, and their union or agreement in action, that there were four, and that these four were in accord, pulling together to gain the same end.

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 24, vol. ii. p. 264.

² Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 25, vol. ii. p. 268.

He often applies to John titles of great dignity, calling him "the great and admirable Evangelist, John; or the most holy disciple of God and Apostle John."¹ From some of these passages it is also plain that Eusebius gives S. John these titles of respect in consequence of the Prologue of his Gospel.

The following are additional proofs of the reverence paid by the early Christians to the Gospels, and to the writings of the New Testament generally. The epithet most commonly applied to the Gospels is sacred or holy.² The Evangelists are also called holy³ (ἅγιοι), and divinely inspired⁴ (θεσπεσίαι); the testimony of the Holy Gospels is said to be without any error or mistake⁵ (κατὰ τὴν ἀψευδέστατην τῶν ἱερῶν Εὐαγγελίων μαρτυρίαν).

Up to the time of Eusebius, as is well known, certain of the Epistles, with the Apocalypse, had not been received as Scripture by all; and in order to assist in forming correct views on this point, Eusebius gives quotations from some of the most ancient writers. But it has been pointed out⁶ that he does not make any quotations from the early writers respecting the fourth Gospel, because its Apostolic authorship had never been questioned by any Church-writer from the beginning, so far as Eusebius was aware, and therefore that it was superfluous to call witnesses. This has been proved in such a way, that it never can be called in question again.

I have now made a slight examination of the extant works of thirteen writers who lived in the fourth century, in different places, and at different times; who, either from the office which they held in the Church, or from their learning and research, or from their intellect and activity, or from the controversies in which they were engaged, or from the sufferings which they endured in defence of their belief, were the most prominent men of their time; and who could not possibly be mistaken as to the mind of the Church with respect to the four Gospels. The extracts which I have given from these writers, fragmentary as they must necessarily be, are sufficient to show that in the fourth century the four Gospels, and substantially the same four Gospels, as we ourselves receive, were acknowledged by the Church throughout the world, as her authoritative Scriptures, or as a divinely inspired history of Christ and his teaching; and that the writers of these four Gospels, S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John, were believed to have been specially moved and assisted by the Holy Spirit in their work; and that others who had attempted this had failed in their task, because they were not so assisted by the Holy Spirit, and that the Church had never received their gospels as hers; that several of these apocryphal gospels were then existing, and, though avoided by Christians generally, were occasionally read by the curious, but were never used by the Church for the establishment of any doctrine; that S. John's Gospel was regarded as pre-eminent among the four Gospels, as worthily dealing with the most exalted subject, the Divine nature of Jesus, and that of his Gospel, the Prologue or beginning, was for the same reason conspicuous above the rest, exalted as the whole was.

The ground, on which the Church of the fourth century acknowledged the four Gospels and rejected all others, was not the immeasurable difference in their character, though this was fully perceived, but the fact that these four Gospels only had been handed down by the Church successively from the very beginning, or from the time they were published, as the works of the Apostles or of the companions of the Apostles.

From the number of genuine writings of the fourth century, which have survived to our time, the proofs given for the above might have been ten times greater than they are.

THE THIRD CENTURY.

FROM A.D. 300 TO A.D. 250.

When we turn from the fourth century to the third, we find that among the men who distinguished themselves in the latter half of it, either as leaders in action, or by their writings in the service of the Church, were the following; but that few of their works have come down to our time. See Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iii.

	A.D.
Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage	250
Cornelius and S. Lucius, Bishops of Rome	251
Novatus, otherwise called Novatian	251
Dionysius, Bishop of Rome	259
Commodian	270
Malchion	270
Anatolius, Bishop of Laodicea	270
Theognostus	270
Pierius, Presbyter of Alexandria	283
Theonas, Bishop of Alexandria	290
I. Dorotheus, Presbyter of Antioch
II. Dorotheus, author of the Synopsis of Lives of Prophets, &c.
Victorinus, Bishop of Pettaw	290
Methodius, Bishop of Olympus in Lycia	290
Lucian, Presbyter of Antioch	290
Hesychius, Bishop in Egypt	290
Pamphilus, Presbyter of Caesarea	294

The works, which remain to us from A.D. 300 to A.D. 250, as already stated, are not very numerous, nor are they dis-

¹ Eusebius, Demons. Evang. iv. 15, vol. iv. p. 301.

— vii. 1, vol. iv. p. 488.

— de Eccles. Theol. i. 18, vol. vi. p. 861.

— ii. 12, vol. vi. p. 925.

² Eusebius, Demons. Evang. ix. vol. iv. p. 652.

³ Eusebius, Demons. Evang. vii. 3, vol. iv. p. 556.

— x. vol. iv. p. 725.

⁴ Ibid. i. 1, vol. iv. p. 17.

⁵ Ibid. vi. 21, vol. iv. p. 477.

⁶ Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. Jan. 1875, pp. 169-184.

tinguished for the ability which marked the writings of the half-century which succeeded. But we must bear in mind that in this inquiry the testimony of a man is cited, because he is a fair exponent of the Church's belief in his day with respect to the four Gospels, and not merely because he is a man of great learning and ability, and therefore able to form a more independent, and, as some may think, a more valuable opinion on matters. The following are the writers whose testimony is examined: S. Cyprian, Novatus, S. Victorinus, S. Methodius.

S. Methodius (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iii. p. 181), Bishop of Olympus, in Lycia, and afterwards of Tyre, a man of neat and correct style, composed a work against Porphyry in several books. He also wrote a Banquet of ten Virgins; concerning the Resurrection, against Origen, an excellent book; and against him likewise on the Pythones, and on liberty [or free will]; Commentaries also upon Genesis and the Canticles; and many other works, which are in the hands of everybody. He obtained the crown of martyrdom at Chalcis, in Grece, at the end of the last persecution; or, as some say, under Decius and Valerian. So writes S. Jerome in his book of Illustrious Men.¹ Methodius expressly says: "There have been four Gospels delivered to us."² He frequently quotes the words of each of the four Gospels, and though he does not mention the name of their writers, there is no reason to doubt that he attributed them to the same authors as the Church has always done.

S. Victorinus (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iii. p. 162), Bishop of Pettaw, or Petaw upon the Drave in Germany, flourished, according to Cave, about the year A.D. 290; according to Sixtus Senensis, about the year A.D. 270. He had the honour to die a martyr for Christ under the persecution of Diocletian, and, as is supposed, in the year A.D. 303.

S. Jerome's account of him in his book of Illustrious Men³ is to this effect: Victorinus, Bishop of Pettaw, understood Greek better than Latin, hence his works are excellent for the sense, but mean as to the style. They are such as these—commentaries upon Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Habakkuk, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs, and the Revelation of John; against all heresies, and many other works. At last he was crowned with martyrdom.

Discoursing on the fourth day's work, Victorinus says that "there are four living creatures before the throne of God, four Gospels, four rivers in Paradise."⁴ S. John's Gospel is here quoted in this manner: "The Evangelist John thus speaks: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."⁵

In the commentary upon the Revelation he speaks of the Gospels in this manner: The four living creatures (Rev. iv. 6, 7) are the four Gospels. "The first," he says, "was like a lion, the second was like a calf, the third like a man, and the fourth like a flying eagle. These living creatures have different faces, which have a meaning; for the living creature like a lion denotes Mark, in whom the voice of a lion roaring in the wilderness is heard: 'A voice crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord.' Matthew, who has the resemblance of a man, shows the family of Mary, from whom Christ took flesh; and while he computes his genealogy from Abraham to David and Joseph, he speaks of Him as a man; therefore his preaching is represented by the face of a man. Luke, who relates the priesthood of Zacharias offering sacrifice for the people, and the angel that appeared to him, because of the priesthood and the mention of the sacrifice, has the resemblance of a calf. The Evangelist John, like an eagle with stretched-out wings mounting on high, speaks of the Word of God. The Evangelist Mark commences thus: 'The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as it is written in Isaiah the prophet, the voice of one crying in the wilderness;' this is the face of a lion. Matthew says: 'The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.' This is the face of a man. But Luke says: 'There was a priest, named Zacharias, of the course of Abia, and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron.' This is the form of a calf. John begins thus: 'In the beginning was the Word. The same was in the beginning with God.' This is the similitude of a flying eagle."⁶

In this passage we have the four Evangelists, and the beginnings of their several Gospels, or at least what is near the beginning of each of them. Nor is there any reason to doubt that this passage is really Victorinus's. (Lardner, vol. iii. p. 175.)

Victorinus also goes on to speak of the time and the occasion of S. John's writing his Gospel. It was written, he says, after the Evangelist had been confined in Patmos, and to confute the heresies which he saw springing up around him, such as that of the Valentinians, Cerinthians, and Ebionites.⁷

Novatus, otherwise called Novatian (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iii. p. 78).—S. Jerome says of him: "Novatus, presbyter of the city of Rome, having endeavoured to invade the sect of the Novatians, whom the Greeks call pure; not allowing apostates to be received, though they repent."⁸

Though his work on the Trinity, or the rule of faith, abounds with texts of the Old and New Testament, there are not many books of either cited by name. A great number of passages are quoted from S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke, and S. John's Gospel is frequently quoted by name,

¹ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxxxvii. vol. ii. p. 691.

² S. Methodius, Conviv. Dec. Virg. Oratio x. cap. ii.; Migne's Patrol. vol. xviii. p. 196.

³ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxxix. vol. ii. p. 683.

⁴ S. Victorinus, Fragment. de Fabrica Mund.; Migne's Patrol. vol. xv. p. 304.

⁵ S. Victorinus, Fragment. de Fabrica Mund.; Migne's Patrol. vol. xv. p. 311.

⁶ S. Victorinus, in Apoc. iv. 6, &c.; Migne's Patrol. vol. xv. p. 324.

⁷ Ibid. xi. 1; Migne's Patrol. vol. xv. p. 333.

⁸ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxx. vol. ii. p. 681.

as, "And the Word, says John, was made flesh, and dwelt among us."¹ "And so also John, describing the nativity of Jesus, says: 'The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father.'"² "For John says, 'All things were made by Him, and without Him was not any thing made.'"³ He also quotes S. John's First Epistle.⁴

S. Cyprian (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. iii. p. 3).

S. Jerome says of him: "Cyprian of Africa first taught rhetoric with great applause. Afterwards, being converted to Christianity by a presbyter named Cæcilius, whose name he also took, he gave all his estate to the poor; and after no long time he was made presbyter, and then Bishop of Carthage. It is needless to give a catalogue of his works, which are brighter than the sun. He suffered under the emperor Valerian and Galienus, in the eighth persecution, the same day that Cornelius died at Rome, but not in the same year."⁵

No man, whose life as a Christian was so short, has left behind him a more brilliant reputation than S. Cyprian. He was born a heathen, and as such passed the greatest part of his life. Bishop Pearson places his conversion in the year A.D. 246. He was soon made priest, and shortly after, against his own inclination, but at the general and earnest desire of the people of Carthage, he was elected bishop. The Emperor Valerian, who for some time had been very favourable to the Christians, afterwards became their persecutor. On August 30th, A.D. 257, Cyprian was brought before the proconsul Aspasius Paternus, and being examined by him, he owned himself to be a Christian and a bishop, declaring that he knew no other gods, beside the true God, who made the heaven and the earth, the sea, and all things therein. Being steadfast in this profession, the proconsul banished him to Curubis. His deacon, Pontius, accompanied him to the place of his exile, where he arrived the 13th or 14th of September. Cyprian had many fellow-sufferers; great numbers of Christians in the province of Numidia were apprehended, and sent to work in the mines.⁶ We have a letter of Cyprian, written in his exile, which is inscribed to nine bishops by name, and beside them to others, "presbyters, deacons, and the rest of the brethren in the mines, martyrs of God the Father Almighty, and Jesus Christ our Lord." And those, who were not all in one and the same place, but in mines at some distance from each other, answer him again in three several letters, which are still extant in S. Cyprian's works.⁷

On a change of proconsul, S. Cyprian was recalled from exile, but only to suffer martyrdom the following year. He was beheaded September 14, A.D. 258.

S. Cyprian speaks expressly of four Gospels, which he compares to the four rivers of paradise.⁸ He speaks of these Gospels as received by the Church, and as her property, within her circuit; and by which she is overflowed, and her plants are enabled to bear fruit. In his books of Testimonies, he makes many quotations from all the four Gospels. He also wrote a minute Commentary on the Lord's Prayer, which is still extant. He often expressly refers to the first Epistle of S. John, "The Apostle John, mindful of the command, writes in his Epistle; 'Hereby we perceive that we know Him, if we keep His commandments, &c.'"⁹

It is remarkable that often as S. Cyprian quotes the four Gospels, and the other canonical books of the New Testament, he never once refers to any of the spurious apocryphal Christian writings, though he often quotes the apocryphal books of the Old Testament.

The following may be noticed as indications of the estimation in which the Gospels, and the Scriptures generally, were held by the Church in S. Cyprian's time, his numerous quotations of them, his appeals to them as decisive in matters of dispute and controversy, and his divers forms of citation of them, particularly such as these: "The Lord says in the Gospel,"¹⁰ or, "The Lord says in His Gospel."¹¹

S. Cyprian earnestly exhorts all in general, but especially Christian ministers (Dei sacerdotes), in all doubtful matters to have recourse to the Gospels, and the Epistles of the Apostles, as to the fountain where may be found the true original doctrine of Christ.¹²

His discourse on the Lord's Prayer he begins in this manner: "The precepts of the Gospel, my beloved brethren, are to be considered as the lessons of God to us; as the foundations of our hope, and the supports of our faith; as spiritual consolations to us, showing us the paths of righteousness, and setting us forward in the way of salvation; for, whilst with teachable and willing minds we receive upon earth the instructions conveyed to us, we are led on insensibly to the kingdom of heaven."¹³

The great respect which they had for the Scriptures, and especially for the New Testament, appears in the public reading of them in the church. Cyprian, in two different letters, written in his retirement, gives his people an account of his having there ordained two persons, Aurelius and Celestinus, who were before confessors, or who had endured torture for the faith, to be readers. In the former of these two letters

¹ Novatian, de Trinit. x.; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 903.

² Ibid. xiii.; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 907.

³ Ibid. xvii.; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 917.

⁴ Ibid. xviii.; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 919; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 897.

⁵ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxxvii. vol. ii. p. 677.

⁶ S. Cyprian, Epist. lxxvii. (alias 76), p. 414.

⁷ Ibid. lxxviii., lxxix., lxxx., p. 420, &c.

⁸ S. Cyprian, Epist. (ad Jubanum) lxxiii. 10; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 1116.

⁹ S. Cyprian, Epist. xxv. (alias 28) 2, p. 289.

¹⁰ ——— lxxvi. (ad Magnum) 1; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 1138.

¹¹ S. Cyprian, de Lapsis, xx. p. 482.

¹² ——— de Exhort. Mart. vi. p. 660.

¹³ S. Cyprian, de Orat. Dom. vi., ix., xxi., pp. 523, 525, 531, 537.

————— de Unitate Eccles. viii., xv., p. 505, 511.

¹² S. Cyprian, Epist. lxxiv. (ad Pompeium) 10; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 1135.

¹³ S. Cyprian, de Oratore Domini. i. p. 319.

he relates the many sufferings of Aurelius, and gives him a high character, and then adds: that he had deserved, though young, a higher degree in the clergy, but he thought it best that he should begin with the office of a reader. "Nothing," he says, "can be more fit than that he, who has made a glorious confession of the Lord, should read publicly in the church; that he, who has shown himself willing to die a martyr, should read the Gospel of Christ, by which martyrs are formed; and that he should be advanced from the rack to the reading-desk."¹ Of Celerinus, he writes in the following letter: "That it was very fit and becoming that he, who was already so illustrious in the world, should be placed upon the pulpit, that is, the tribunal of the church; that being conspicuous to the people he may read the precepts and Gospel of the Lord, which he faithfully and courageously observes and maintains."²

S. Cyprian divides the Scriptures received by Christians into old and new, and recommends the study of both these as very beneficial for confirming our virtue and increasing our knowledge; and he calls them "the books of the Spirit," or "inspired writings," "the divine fountains," and "fountains of the divine fulness."³

• FROM A.D. 250 TO A.D. 200.

The following are the men whose names have come down to us as most prominent in the Church by their writings during the first half of the third century:—

	A.D.
Minucius Felix	210
Apollonius	211
Caius	212
Asterius Urbanus	232
Alexander, Bishop of Jerusalem	212
Hippolytus	220
Ammonius	220
Julius Africanus	220
Origen	230
Firmilian	233
Noetus	233
Gregory, Bishop of Neocæsarea	247
Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria	247

The writers that lived in the first half of the third century were few in number, and their writings, or at least those that have come down to us, with the exception of the works of Origen, and of his contemporary, S. Hippolytus,⁴ and of those which Tertullian wrote at this time, were of no great importance. Origen by his greatness seems to dwarf all the rest. His influence in his own day was so great, and he wrote so many works, embracing such a wide field, and he was engaged in so many controversies and on so many different subjects, that his testimony alone will be amply sufficient to show us what was the Church's belief with respect to the four Gospels during the time he lived. As Tertullian wrote at the end of the second and the beginning of the third century, he is reckoned as belonging to the former.

Origen (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 468) was born in Egypt A.D. 184 or 185, and died A.D. 253. His father, Leonidas, suffered martyrdom A.D. 202, leaving behind him a wife and seven children, of whom Origen was the eldest, but not quite 17 years of age. In the very beginning of this persecution, Origen showed great zeal for Christianity, and was ready to offer himself to martyrdom. Being detained at home by the prudent care of his mother, he sent a letter to his father in prison, earnestly entreating him to be constant. Eusebius has preserved but the following line of it: "Take heed, father, that you do not change your mind for our sake."⁵

Amongst his masters had been Clement, who then held the Catechetical chair at Alexandria, one of the most important positions of the time. At eighteen years of age, Origen himself, such was his reputation, succeeded to the same chair. This he continued to hold until he was forty-five years of age, when on some misunderstanding arising—with Demetrius, the Bishop of Alexandria—he retired to Cæsarea, in Palestine, where he was ordained priest, and where he lived most of the remaining years of his life. In consequence of certain philosophical speculations in which he indulged, and which he endeavoured to reconcile with the doctrines of the Christian religion, he was engaged in controversy with his contemporaries nearly the whole of his life, as his followers were for many years after his death.

Origen was a most voluminous writer: S. Jerome styles him the greatest doctor of the Churches since the Apostles,⁶ a remark which had been made before by S. Jerome's own master Didymus. Among the works of Origen, which have come down to our time, are large portions of a commentary which he wrote on S. Matthew, and on S. Luke, and also on S. John, the latter of which occupies in Migne's 'Patrology' about 200 pages, royal octavo, with double columns. If it could be said of any man, in either ancient or modern times, that the absorbing subject of his life was the study of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, this would be eminently true of Origen. An examination of his works shows the following results with respect to the four Gospels.

I. Origen recognises and declares that the Church recognises and had always from the very beginning recognised, only the four Gospels as her authoritative documents.

In proof of this may be quoted the following testimony

¹ S. Cyprian, Epist. xxxiii. (alias 38) 2, p. 319.

² Ibid. xxxiv. (alias 39) 4, p. 323.

³ S. Cyprian, Testimon. Prefat. p. 677.

⁴ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 2, vol. ii. p. 524.

⁵ S. Hippolytus.—"As regards Hippolytus, I have counted above fifty references to S. Matthew, and forty to S. John, in his work on the Refutation of Heresies, and Fragments."—MR. SÄBLER, 'The Lost Gospel,' p. 126.

"The undoubted writings of Hippolytus contain quotations from all the acknowledged books except the Epistle to Philemon and the first Epistle of St. John. Of the disputed books he uses the Apocalypse as an unquestionable work of the Apostle St. John, and is said to have written a Commentary upon it."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 376.

⁶ S. Jerome, Pref. in Lib. de Nom. Heb. vol. iii. p. 772.

—Prof. in Trans. Homil. Orig. in Jerem. &c., vol. v. p. 584.

from Eusebius.¹ In the first book of his Commentaries upon the Gospel of Matthew, Origen observing the ecclesiastical canon, declares that he knew only four Gospels, expressing himself thus : "As I have learned by tradition concerning the four Gospels, which alone are received without dispute by the whole Church of God under heaven. The first was written by Matthew, once a publican, afterwards an Apostle of Jesus Christ; who delivered it to the Jewish believers, composed in the Hebrew language. The second is that according to Mark, who wrote it as Peter dictated it to him, who therefore also calls him his son in his Catholic Epistle (1 Pet. v. 13), saying, 'The Church which is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you, and so doth Mark my son.' The third is that according to Luke; the Gospel commended by Paul, published for the sake of the Gentile converts (Rom. xvi. 25; 2 Tim. ii. 8). Lastly, that according to John . . . But what need I speak of John, who leaned upon the breast of Jesus? who has left us one Gospel, professing, at the same time, that he was able to write more than even the world itself could contain."

There are also very many other passages in Origen's genuine works, where he intimates that there were only four Gospels or four Evangelists.²

He often implies, and sometimes expressly asserts, that the writers of the four Gospels were inspired by the Holy Spirit for their office; and that others, who attempted this, failed in their work because they were not so inspired.³

The following may serve as proofs of this. In his Commentary on Matthew xx. 30, when discussing the apparent discrepancy in the accounts of the Evangelists respecting the blind man, whose eyes Jesus opened on His way to Jerusalem, Origen implies that it was the common belief of Christians, "That the Gospels were written exactly according to truth, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, and that the writers had made no mistakes."⁴ And afterwards, when speaking of the addition which S. Mark makes to the narrative, and which he alone relates, that the blind man, casting away his garment, leaped, and came to Jesus, Origen goes on to say : "Shall we say that the Evangelist wrote without thought when he related the man's casting away his garment, and leaping, and coming to Jesus? Shall we dare to say that these things were inserted in the Gospels in vain? For my part, I believe that not one jot or tittle of the Divine instructions is in vain."⁵ He says the Gospels were written by "the wisdom of God."⁶ He ranks the Evangelists as equals with the Prophets and Apostles. He says : "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. In order to establish this interpretation I shall bring two witnesses out of the New and the Old Testaments.

Yea, I shall bring three witnesses: from the Gospel, from the Prophet, from the Apostle."⁶

In his observations on S. Luke's introduction, he says: "As of old among the Jewish people many pretended to the gift of prophecy; and there were some false prophets, one of whom was Ananias, son of Agor; but others were prophets, and there was among the people the gift of discerning spirits, by which some were owned as prophets; others were rejected as it were by skilful money-changers. So also under the New Testament, many took in hand to write Gospels; but all have not been received. And that not four Gospels only, but very many, were written, out of which those we have were chosen and delivered to the Churches, we may perceive even from Luke's preface, which is thus: 'Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration' (Luke i. 1). His expression of their 'taking in hand' contains a tacit accusation of those who, without the gift of the Holy Spirit, took upon them to write Gospels; for Matthew and Mark, and John and Luke, did not take in hand to write, but being full of the Holy Ghost wrote Gospels. Many, therefore, took in hand to set forth in order a narration of those things which are most surely known among us. The Churches have four Gospels, heresies have very many."⁷

II. Origen mentions by name several of the apocryphal gospels, and not only makes a marked distinction between them and the four Gospels, but seldom refers to them except in order to reject them.

In his Commentary on S. Luke's introduction, Origen says : "The Churches have four Gospels, heresies have very many, of which one is entitled 'according to the Egyptians,' another 'according to the Twelve Apostles.' Basilides, likewise, had the assurance to write a gospel and call it by his own name. Many took in hand to write, many also took in hand to set forth in order. Four Gospels only have been approved, out of which the doctrines of our Saviour are to be learned. I know a certain gospel, which is called 'according to Thomas,' and 'according to Matthias;' and many others we read, that we may not seem to be ignorant of anything, for the sake of those who think they know something if they are acquainted with these gospels; but among all these we approve of none but the four Gospels received in the Church."

There is a difference between the Greek text of this passage, as it remains, and the Latin. The Greek contains no reference to the gospel of the Egyptians. On the whole paragraph, Lardner (vol. ii. p. 535) thus remarks : "If this passage be really Origen's (as I think there can be no reason to doubt but that for the main it is so), it shows us very much what was his opinion concerning the spurious apocryphal books of the New Testament, and particularly the

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 25, vol. ii. p. 580.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 29, vol. iii. p. 1441.

— in Joan. tomus i. 6, vol. iv. p. 29.

— — — — — ii. + (45), vol. iv. p. 134.

— — — — — vi. 17, p. 256.

³ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 12, vol. iii. p. 1409.

— — — — — in Luc. Homil. i. vol. iii. p. 1802.

⁴ Origen, in Matt. tomus xii. 12, vol. iii. p. 1413.

⁵ Ibid. tomus vi. 27, vol. iii. p. 1461.

⁶ Origen, in Jeremiah, Homil. i. sect. 7, vol. iii. p. 264.

⁷ Origen, in Luc. Homil. i. vol. iii. p. 1803.

gospel of the Twelve, or according to the Twelve; which is generally supposed to be the same which is also called the gospel according to the Hebrews. If the gospel according to the Egyptians was not mentioned by Origen in this place, he has nowhere taken any notice of it, that I remember, in his remaining works. But, allowing him to have mentioned it here, still this affords full proof of the obscurity of this gospel, and the vast neglect of it by Catholic Christians, that so little notice is taken of it by Origen, who lived so long at Alexandria in Egypt, and the rest of his days in Palestine, or near it."

Besides the apocryphal gospels referred to by Origen in his Commentary on S. Luke, he elsewhere refers to the gospel according to the Hebrews;¹ the gospel according to Peter, or Book of James;² the Doctrine or Preaching of Peter;³ and the Acts of Paul.⁴ But in all the places where Origen quotes any of the apocryphal gospels he uses certain expressions, which utterly condemn them, or which imply either that the book was not received by Christians generally, or that he himself rejected it, or had no great opinion of it.

THE SECOND CENTURY.

• FROM A.D. 200 TO A.D. 150.

The following are the principal writers and extant documents assigned to the latter half of the second century; but many of them are known as authors only because they are mentioned as such by Eusebius or S. Jerome:—

	A.D.
Old Latin, or Italic, version of the New Testament	c. 150
Old Syriac, or Peshito, version of the New Testament
Soter	162
Clementine Homilies	c. 160
An unknown author on the Canon of the New Testament (Muratorian Fragment)	c. 170
Dionysius of Corinth	170
Pinytus

¹ Origen, in Joan. tomus ii. 6, vol. iv. p. 132.

— in Jeremiah, Homil. xv. 4, vol. iii. p. 433.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus x. 17, vol. iii. p. 877.

* Tertullian.—"This man, who from an advocate of paganism became a powerful defender of the Christian truth, takes such a scrupulous view of the origin and worth of the four Evangelists that he will allow to Mark and Luke, as apostolic men, i.e. as companions and assistants of the Apostles, a certain subordinate place, while he upholds the full authority of John and Matthew on account of their character of real Apostles chosen by the Lord himself. In his work against Marcion (book iv. chap. v.), Tertullian lays down the principle by which we should decide on the truth of the articles of the Christian faith, and especially of that most important one of all, the authenticity of the apostolic writings. For this he makes the value of a testimony to depend on its antiquity, and decides that we are to hold that to be true for us which was held to be true in former ages. This appeal to antiquity leads us back to the Apostles' day, and in deciding what is the authenticity of any writing which claims to be apostolic, we must refer to those Churches which were planted by the Apostles. I ask, then, is it credible in any degree that this man, so sagacious, could have acted

	A.D.
Philip Palmas
Modestus
Tatian	172
Hegesippus	173
Musanus	176
Claudius Apollinaris
Melito	177
Celsus	178
The Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons
Irenæus	178
Athenagoras
Miltiades	180
Bardesanes
Theophilus	181
Apollonius	186
Rhodon
Victor
Bacchylus
Theophilus and Narcissus
Pantænus	192
Clemens Alexandrinus	194
Polycrates	196
Hermias
Serapion
Symmachus	200
Tertullian

I have selected a few of these for examination as to the Church's belief with respect to the four Gospels; and further, to indicate the value of their testimony I have also added, in the form of notes, the results arrived at after minute and patient investigation by several modern scholars, who have given special attention to this subject, and who have earned for themselves a right to speak with some authority. The witnesses selected for examination are, The Italic or Old Latin version of the Gospels, the Old Syriac or Peshito version, the Muratorian Fragment, Tatian, Claudius Apollinaris, Melito, Celsus, the Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons, S. Irenæus, S. Theophilus, S. Clement of Alexandria, S. Serapion, and Tertullian.

Tertullian * (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 267)—

² Origen, de Princip. Præf. 8, vol. i. p. 120.

³ Origen, de Princip. i. 2, 3, vol. i. p. 132.

— in Joan. tomus xx. 12, vol. iv. p. 600.

hastily and uncritically in accepting the credibility and authenticity of the four Evangelists? The passages I have referred to are taken from his celebrated reply to Marcion, who, on his own authority and in conformity with his own heretical tastes, had attacked the sacred text. Of the four Gospels, Marcion had completely rejected three, and the fourth, that of S. Luke, he had modified and mutilated according to his own caprice. Tertullian, in his reply, formally appeals to the testimony of the apostolic Churches in favour of the four Gospels. Is such a challenge as this, in the mouth of such a man as Tertullian, to be passed by as of no weight? When he wrote his reply to Marcion, the Apostle S. John had been dead only about a century. The Church of Ephesus, among whom the Apostle S. John had so long lived, and in which city he died, had surely time to decide the question once for all, whether the Gospel of St. John was authentic or not. It was not difficult to find out what was the judgment of the apostolic Church on this question. Moreover, we must not forget that in Tertullian we have not merely a man of erudition occupied in laying down learned Quintus Septimius Florens Tertullianus, or Tertullian—is generally reckoned the most ancient Latin father now remaining.

S. Jerome says of him: "Tertullian, a presbyter, is now reckoned, after Victor and Apollonius, the first of the Latins. He was born in the province of Africa, in the city of Carthage. His father was a proconsular centurion. He was a man of an eager and vehement temper: flourished chiefly in the time of the emperors Severus and Antoninus Caracalla, and wrote a great number of books, which, because they are generally known, I omit. I have seen one Paul of Concordia, which is a small town in Italy, then an old man, who said, that when he was very young he had seen the secretary of the blessed Cyprian, then of great age: and that he was wont to tell him, that not a day passed but Cyprian read something in Tertullian, and that he would often say to him, 'Bring me my master,' intending Tertullian. When he had continued a presbyter of the Church till about the middle part of his age, on account of the envy and reproaches of the clergy of the Roman Church, he went over to the sect of Montanus, and in many of his books makes mention of that new prophecy. Several books especially were composed by him against the Church, as these, on chastity, on persecution, on fasts, on monogamy [or against second marriages], on Ecstasy, in six books, to which he added a seventh, written against Apollonius. He is said to have lived to an extreme [a decrepit] old age, and to have written many books besides those now extant."¹ these, but a man of serious mind to whom a question like this was one on which his faith, and with it the salvation of his soul, depended. Is it then likely that such a man would have given easy credence to writings like these, which concern the fundamental doctrines of Christianity—writings which distinctly claimed to be apostolic, and at which the wisdom of the world in which he had been educated professed to be offended? Now, since Tertullian expressly asserts that in defending the apostolic origin of the four Evangelists, he rests his case upon the testimony of the apostolic Churches, we must be incorrigible sceptics to doubt any longer that he had not thoroughly examined for himself into the origin of these Gospels.—PROF. TISCHENDORF, 'When were our Gospels written?' p. 56.

¹ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lib. vii. c. 691.

² Tertullian, de Monogam. 2, vol. ii. p. 931.

"His numerous writings contain several hundred pages taken from the Gospels—two hundred of these, at least, taken from S. John."—Ibid. 49.

"There are perhaps more and larger quotations of the small volume of the New Testament in this one Christian author than of all the works of Cicero, though of so uncommon excellence for thought and style, in the writers of all characters for several ages. And there is a like number of quotations of the New Testament in S. Irenæus and S. Clement of Alexandria, both writers of the second century. Tertullian's testimony is considerable too for the evident tokens of that high respect which was paid to these Scriptures. Indeed, they would not have been so much quoted if they had not been greatly esteemed."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 306.

"Tertullian is still more exclusive. He not only regards the four Gospels as inspired and authoritative, but he makes no use of any extra-canonical Gospel. The Gospels indeed held for him precisely the same position that they do with orthodox Christians now. He says respecting the Gospels, 'In the first place, we lay it down that the evangelical document (evangelicum instrumentum) has for its Cave places Tertullian at the year A.D. 192. He supposes that he might be born a little before the middle of the second century, and that he embraced Christianity about the year A.D. 185, and was made presbyter of the Church of Carthage about A.D. 192. He concludes that he became a Montanist about the year A.D. 199 and died, as may be conjectured, about A.D. 220.

The principles of Montanism made so little alteration in this author, that there are several of his pieces concerning which it is not easy to determine whether they were written by Tertullian a Montanist, or Tertullian still a Catholic. To use the words of Daillé: As for Tertullian, I must confess his very turning Montanist has taken off indeed very much of the repute which he before had in the Church, both for the fervency of his piety, and also for his incomparable learning. But yet, beside that a great part of his works were written while he was yet a Catholic, we are also to take notice, that this his Montanism put no separation at all betwixt him and other Christians, save only in point of discipline; which he, according to the severity of his nature, would have to be most harsh and rigorous. For, as for his doctrine,² it is very evident that he constantly kept to the very same rule, and the same faith, that the Catholics did; whence proceeded that tart speech of his, that people rejected Montanus, Maximilla, and Priscilla, not because they had any whit departed from the rule of faith, but rather because they would have us fast oftener than to marry.³

Tertullian, nevertheless, from this time forward, believed

² Tertullian, de Jejuniis, l. vol. ii. p. 954.

authors the Apostles, to whom this office of preaching the Gospel was committed by the Lord Himself. If it has also apostolic men, yet not these alone but in company with Apostles and after Apostles' (adv. Marc. iv. 2). He grounds the authority of the Gospels upon the fact that they proceed either from Apostles or from those who held close relation to Apostles, like Mark, 'the interpreter of Peter,' and Luke, the companion of Paul (adv. Marc. iv. 5). In another passage he expressly asserts their authenticity (adv. Marc. v. 9), and he claimed to use them and them alone as his weapons in the conflict with heresy (adv. Marc. iv. 2-9).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 318.

"I will only venture to repeat the statement which I made at starting, that if the whole of the Christian literature for the first three quarters of the second century could be blotted out, and Irenæus and Tertullian alone remained, as well as the later manuscripts with which to compare them, there would still be ample proof that the latest of our Gospels cannot overstep the bounds of the first century. The abundant indications of internal evidence are thus confirmed, and the age and date of the Synoptic Gospels, I think we may say, within approximate limits, established."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 343.

"Tertullian furnishes one kind of evidence for the Gospels, which Irenæus and Clement, who wrote in Greek, could not give. We learn from him that there were in his time several Latin translations of the New Testament (adv. Marc. ii. 9) in common use. One of these versions enjoyed a special authority, so that Tertullian, in quoting the beginning of S. John's Gospel, has to explain that he is deviating from the common interpretation (adv. Prax. 5). Elsewhere, when he had deserted the Church, he attacks a particular rendering in this version for having introduced a misconception among Christians (Monog. xi.)."—DUBLIN REV. April 1875, p. 365.

the Spirit of God to have spoken in Montanus and his two prophetesses, Priscilla and Maximilla, and to have made by them some further discoveries, for the greater perfection of Christians, than had been made before. He approved of the longer, more strict, and more frequent fasts of the Montanists; condemned second marriages, as unlawful in all; and denied the power of the Church to pardon any great sins committed after baptism; that is, to receive again to communion any who had fallen into fornication, adultery, or any such like offences after their baptism. He also often arrogantly calls his own people spiritual, and the Catholics, as contemptuously, animal or carnal.

Tertullian states the number of the Gospels which were universally received, with the names of the Evangelists, and their characters whether Apostles or Apostolic men.

"In the first place we lay this down for a certain truth, that the evangelic Scriptures (Evangelicum Instrumentum) have for their authors the Apostles, to whom the work of publishing the Gospel was committed by the Lord Himself. And if also [it have for authors] apostolic men, not them alone, but with the Apostles, and after the Apostles [which was very fit]. Forasmuch as the preaching of the disciples might have been suspected as liable to the charge of a desire of glory, if not supported by the authority of the masters, yea, of Christ, who made the Apostles masters. To conclude, among the Apostles John and Matthew [first] teach us the faith; among apostolical men, Luke and Mark refresh it, going upon the same principles, as concerning the one God the Creator, and His Christ born of the Virgin, the accomplishment of the law and the prophets."¹

He shows that the ground on which the Gospels were received was the sure and credible witness of the Churches from the beginning.

"In a word, if it be certain, that is most genuine which is most ancient, that most ancient which is from the beginning, and that from the beginning which is from the Apostles; in like manner it will be also certain that has been delivered from the Apostles which is held sacred in the Churches of the Apostles. Let us then see what milk the Corinthians received from Paul; to what the Galatians were reduced; what the Philippians read; what the Thessalonians, the Ephesians, and likewise what the Romans recite, who are near to us, with whom both Peter and Paul left the Gospel sealed with their blood. We have also Churches which are the disciples of John; for though Marcion rejects his Revelation, the succession of bishops traced up to the beginning will show it to have had John for its author. We know also the original of other Churches [that is, that they are apostolical]. I say then, that with them, but not with them only which are apostolical, but with all who have fellowship with them in the same faith, is that Gospel of Luke received from its first publication, which we so zealously maintain The same authority of the apostolical Churches will support the other Gospels, which we have from them, and according to them [that is, according to their copies], I mean John's and Matthew's; although that likewise which Mark published may be said to be Peter's, whose interpreter Mark was. For Luke's Digest is often ascribed to Paul. And indeed it is easy to take that for the master's which the disciples have published."²

Tertullian often quotes the first epistle of S. John.

"John exhorts us to lay down our lives for the brethren, denying there is any fear in love, 'for perfect love casteth out fear,' &c. (1 John iii. 16; iv. 18)."³ In another place, "Lastly, let us consider whom the Apostles saw, 'That which we have seen,' says John, 'which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, and our hands have handled of the Word of life: for the Word of life was made flesh'—'and we saw His glory, as of the only begotten of the Father' (1 John i. 1; John i. 14)."⁴

Tertullian incidentally furnishes a proof of the vigilance and scrupulosity exercised by the early Christians with respect to the writings, which they received in the name of Apostles. A certain presbyter in Asia was convicted of having forged a document, which was called the Travels of Paul and Thecla, and was deposed. Tertullian's account of this is: "If they think fit to make use of writings falsely ascribed to Paul, to support the right of women to teach and baptize; let them know that the presbyter who composed that writing, as if he had been able to increase Paul's fame, being convicted of it, and having confessed that he did it out of love to Paul, was deposed."⁵ S. Jerome also refers to the same story and to Tertullian's account of it.⁶

S. Serapion (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 264) was Bishop of Antioch, the eighth in succession from the Apostles, and was bishop from about A.D. 190 to A.D. 211, or a little later.

Eusebius says⁷ that Serapion wrote many pieces, and amongst others "a treatise on the gospel, called the gospel according to Peter, in which he confutes the falsities of that gospel; which book he composed for the sake of some in the parish of Rhossus [in Cilicia], who by means of that writing were led into heterodox opinions. It cannot be improper to transcribe some short passages, in which he declares his sentiment of that book. 'We, brethren, receive Peter and the other Apostles as Christ: but, as skilful men, we reject those writings which are falsely ascribed to them; well knowing that we have received no such. When I was with you, I supposed you had all held the right faith; and, not having read the gospel offered to me under the name of Peter, I

¹ Tertullian, adv. Marc. iv. 2, vol. ii. p. 363.

² Ibid. adv. Marc. iv. 5, vol. ii. p. 366.

³ Tertullian, Scorpione 12, vol. ii. p. 147.

⁴ Tertullian, adv. Praxeum, 15, vol. ii. p. 173.

⁵ Tertullian, de Baptismo, 17, vol. i. p. 1219.

⁶ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. viii, vol. ii. p. 619.

⁷ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 12, vol. ii. p. 545.

Routh, Rel. Sacra, vol. i. p. 452.

said, if that be the only thing that causeth a difference among you, let it be read. But now, having understood by what has been told me, that their minds are secretly filled with some heresy, I will do my endeavour to come to you again: therefore, brethren, you may expect me shortly. And we, brethren, have found what was the heresy of Marcianus, and that he contradicted himself, not understanding what he said: as you may perceive from what is here written to you. For we have obtained sight of that gospel from others that make use of it; that is, from the successors of those who were the authors of that opinion, whom we call Docetæ (for the chief sentiments of it belong to that sect). Having, therefore, obtained it of them to read it over, we have found that the main part of the book is agreeable to the right doctrine of our Saviour. Nevertheless there are some other things added, which we have noted down, and sent to you."

S. Jerome says much the same with respect to Serapion, to wit, "that he wrote a book concerning the gospel that goes under the name of Peter, which he sent to the Church of Rhossus in Cilicia, which had been led into heresy by reading it."¹

Lardner's remarks on this are as follows:

1. "We see the great respect paid by Christians to the writings of the Apostles. Serapion assures us the Church received the Apostles as Christ; that is, their writings, as the very words and doctrine spoken and preached by Christ Himself.

2. "We see his method of judging of the genuineness and authority of any books of Scripture: those which had been delivered with an authentic tradition, as the Apostles', he received: others he rejected.

¹ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. lxi. vol. ii. p. 655.

^a Serapion.—"That I am not indulging in any hypothetical case when I am supposing such vigilance to be exercised with respect to the canon of Scripture, is clear, from facts which may be adduced. Thus, Serapion, a bishop of Antioch, in the second century, writes to Rhossus, a Church in Cilicia, respecting a reputed gospel of St. Peter, circulating in that Church, which he had at first regarded with favour, but which on examination he had rejected, the object of his letter being mainly to inform them of this fact, and to tell them that, though receiving Peter and the other Apostles as he would receive Christ, still that spurious writings passing under their names he repudiated, being accustomed to investigate such matters, and aware that the Church had not come into possession of such by regular tradition. (Routh, Reliq. Sacr. i. p. 471.) Indeed, all ecclesiastical documents appear to have been most rigorously examined before they were admitted by the Church; inasmuch that Cyprian (Epist. iii. p. 228, Migne), having received a letter by one Clementius, a sub-deacon, purporting to come from the presbyters and deacons at Rome, and giving an account of the circumstances of that Church, not satisfied with scrutinising the sense, the characters, and the very paper of the letter, in order to determine its authenticity and genuineness, and to convince himself that 'nothing had been added to the truth, or diminished therefrom,' returned it to the parties for their indorsement, 'it being a very grave matter,' says he, 'if the truth of a clerical epistle be corrupted by any lie or fraud'—a sentiment which had been strongly expressed, long before, by Irenæus (contr. Hæreses, v. 30, l. p. 1203, Migne), who says that 'no ordinary punishment awaits

3. "The book called the gospel of Peter was no part of canonical Scripture, nor any writing of Peter: it had not been delivered as such.

4. "We learn the obscurity of this book, called the gospel of Peter. Here is a bishop of the large and celebrated Church of Antioch, about the end of the second century, who had never read it or seen it; and who, as far as we are able to judge, was not unworthy of his high office. He seems to have been a learned man, and a diligent pastor. He wrote divers treatises and epistles. This book concerning the gospel of Peter, which he composed for the benefit of the Christians at Rhossus, is a good proof of his ability and diligence."

5. Clemens Alexandrinus (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 220).—"Titus Flavius Clemens, usually called S. Clement of Alexandria, flourished, according to Cave, from the year A.D. 192, and downwards.

The works of Clement now remaining are, an Exhortation to the Gentiles; the Pædagogus, or Instructor, in three books; and the Stromata, or Various Discourses, in eight books; and a small treatise, entitled Who is the Rich Man that may be saved? The Stromata were written after the death of Commodus, in the reign of Severus, as Eusebius² has observed from a passage of the work itself.

Alexander, Bishop of Jerusalem, contemporary with Clement, and perhaps one of his scholars, in a letter to the Antiochians, written before he was Bishop of Jerusalem, in the heat of the persecution under Severus, speaks to them of Clement in these words: "This letter I have sent unto you by Clement, a blessed presbyter, a virtuous and approved man, whom also ye know, and will know better; who, having been brought hither by the divine disposal those who either augment Scripture or reduce it.' Accordingly, so early a writer as he is, he charges the heretics repeatedly with 'adding an unutterable number of apocryphal and spurious Scriptures' (contr. Hæreses, i. 20, l. p. 653)—a phrase he could not have used without being prepared to show the genuineness of those to which the addition was made—with 'transgressing the order and series of the Scriptures' (contr. Hæreses, i. 8, l. p. 521), another expression implying the same thing; and, indeed, though all we learn from him as to the contents of the canon is incidental, we can establish our own, within a very little, even by him alone.—J. J. BLUNT, 'History of the Christian Church,' p. 166.

² Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 6, vol. ii. p. 536.

³ Irenæus, Clement, and Tertullian.—"It is very little to say that these writers quote the four Gospels as frequently, and with as firm a belief in their being the Scriptures of God, as any modern divine. They quote them far more copiously, and reproduce the history contained in them far more fully than any modern divine whom I have ever read, who is not writing specifically on the life of our Lord, or on some part of His teaching contained in the Gospels. . . .

"Clement wrote in Alexandria, Tertullian in Rome or Africa, Irenæus in Gaul. They all flourished about A.D. 190. They all speak of the Gospels, not only as well known and received, but as being the only Gospels acknowledged and received by the Church. One of them uses very 'uncritical' arguments to prove that the Gospels could only be four in number; but the very absurdity of his analogies is a witness to the universal tradition of the day."—MR. SADLER, 'The Lost Gospel,' p. 129.

and providence, established and increased the Church of the Lord."¹

The same Alexander, in a letter to Origen, written after the death of Clement, speaks thus: "For we know those blessed fathers who have gone before us, and with whom we shall shortly be; I mean Pantenus, truly blessed, and my master; and the sacred Clement, who was my master, and profitable to me."²

Eusebius calls him more than once the admirable Clement, Κλήμης ὁ θαυμαστός.³

In his Chronicle, at the year A.D. 194, Eusebius says of him: "Clement, the author of the Stromata, presbyter of Alexandria, an excellent master of the Christian philosophy, was eminent for his writings."⁴

S. Jerome says of him: He was presbyter of the Church of Alexandria, a hearer of Pantenus, and his successor in the school of Alexandria; and of his works, of which he there gives a catalogue, that they are full of erudition and eloquence, borrowed from the treasures of the divine Scriptures and secular literature.⁵

In another place he says of him: "Clement, presbyter of the Church of Alexandria, in my opinion the most learned of all men [or perhaps, of all the Christian writers whom he there names], wrote eight books of Stromata, as many of Institutions, and another against the Gentiles; the Pædagogus also, in three books. What is there in them unlearned? what not taken out of the very depths of philosophy?"⁶

Eusebius⁷ gives an extract from a lost work of S. Clement's, the Institutions, which shows that he received the four Gospels of S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John, as the Church's authoritative documents, and believed that the Evangelists were inspired by the Holy Spirit to write these; it also contains a tradition as to the order in which these four Gospels were written, which tradition Clement had received from presbyters of more ancient times.

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 11, vol. ii. p. 544.

² Ibid. vi. 14, vol. ii. p. 552.

³ Eusebius, Præp. Evang. ii. 2, vol. iii. p. 120; iv. 16, vol. iii. p. 273.

⁴ Eusebius, Chronic. ii. vol. i. p. 566.

⁵ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xxxviii. vol. ii. p. 653.

⁶ S. Jerome, Epist. lxx. (alias 83, 84) ad Magnum Orat. 4, vol. i. p. 667.

⁷ Uncanonical Gospels.—"Clement quotes several uncanonical gospels, and, if we knew him only from extracts, we might believe that he quotes the gospel according to the Hebrews as an authority with quite the same respect as the other Gospels. The fact stands thus: Clement was not, like Irenæus, in direct conflict with Gnostics, who introduced a multitude of apocryphal scriptures. He has not the same motive for caution. He quotes uncanonical gospels as sources of tradition, and one of them, at least, with the formula, 'it is written.' But he was far removed from doubt as to the paramount authority of the four Gospels. When the Gnostic Cassian alleged a passage from the 'gospel according to the Egyptians,' Clement's reply is simple and ready: 'This is not in the four Gospels which have been handed down to us' (Strom. iii. 13, p. 553, ed. Potter).—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 364.

⁸ Theophilus.—"In his extant work, addressed to Autolycus, Theophilus introduces the unmistakable language of Romans, 1 & 2 Corinthians, Ephesians, Philippians, 1 Timothy, Titus, not to

"Moreover, in the same books Clement has a tradition concerning the order of the Gospels, which he had received from presbyters of more ancient times, and which is to this purpose. He says that the Gospels containing the genealogies were first written; that the occasion of writing the Gospel according to Mark was this: Peter, having publicly preached the word at Rome, and having spoken the Gospel by the Spirit, many who were there entreated Mark to write the things that had been spoken, he having long accompanied him [Peter], and retaining what he had said; and that when he had composed the Gospel, he delivered it to them who had asked it of him; which when Peter knew, he neither forbade it nor encouraged it; and that last of all John, observing that in the other Gospels those things were related that concerned the body [of Christ], and being persuaded by his friends, and also moved by the Spirit of God, wrote a spiritual Gospel. So far Clement."

In the extant works of S. Clement of Alexandria the four Gospels are constantly quoted.⁸ In fact, the frequency with which the early fathers generally quote the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, would be scarcely credible to the mere modern reader.

S. Clement also sometimes refers to the apocryphal writings,* such as the gospel according to the Hebrews, the gospel according to the Egyptians, the Preaching of Peter, the Revelation of Peter, the Acts of Peter, and the Traditions of Matthias. But he makes a wide distinction between these and the four Gospels. He refers to the gospel according to the Egyptians in such a way as to show that he knew little or nothing about it, and had most probably never seen it.⁹ But if Clement, who lived at Alexandria, and who was so well acquainted with almost all sorts of books, knew little or nothing of this book, it must have been in consequence of its obscurity, and because it was held in so little regard by the Church.

Theophilus of Antioch^b (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii.

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 14, vol. ii. p. 551.

² S. Clement Alex., Strom. iii. 13, vol. i. p. 1193; i. 21, vol. i. p. 889; i. 21, vol. i. p. 885.

Quis Dives, sec. v. vol. ii. p. 609.

Pædag. i. 6, vol. i. p. 296.

³ S. Clemens Alex., Strom. iii. 9, vol. i. p. 1165.

mention points of resemblance with other apostolic Epistles which can hardly have been accidental. He has one or two coincidences with the Synoptic Gospels, and, what is more important, he quotes the beginning of the fourth Gospel by name, as follows:—

"Whence the Holy Scriptures and all the inspired men (πνευματοφθορά) teach us, one of whom, John, says, 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God,' showing that at the first (ἐν πρώτοις) God was alone, and the Word in Him. Then he says, 'And the Word was God; all things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made.'"

"This quotation is direct and precise; indeed, even the most suspicious and sceptical critics have not questioned the adequacy of the reference. It is, moreover, the more conspicuous, because it is the one solitary instance in which Theophilus quotes directly and by name any book of the New Testament."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.,' Jan. 1875, p. 178.

⁴ Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch (about A.D. 180), quotes the

p. 263) was originally a heathen, as he has informed us himself. His works show him to have been well acquainted with the Greek language. He succeeded Eros, in the eighth year of Marcus Antoninus, A.D. 168.

There is nothing remaining that can be depended on as his, besides three books to Autolycus, a learned and studious heathen, who had provoked Theophilus by frequent discourses, if not also by writing, to make a defence of the Christian religion. It is the general opinion that they were written by Theophilus a little before his own death, in the beginning of the reign of Commodus, A.D. 181.

Eusebius says Theophilus was the sixth bishop of Antioch after the Apostles. His order is this: Euodius, Ignatius, Heros, Cornelius, Eros, Theophilus.¹

S. Irenæus * (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 165).—His country is not certainly known; but it is probable, from his name, that he was a Greek; and from his early acquaintance with Polycarp, that he was of Asia. It is likewise probable that he was from the beginning educated in the Christian religion. When he came into Gaul is unknown. Some have supposed that he came to Rome with S. Polycarp, in the time of Anicetus, about the year A.D. 157, and from thence passed into Gaul. But concerning this we have no information in antiquity.

Learned men are not entirely agreed about the time of Irenæus himself, or of his principal work against heresies. Some suppose that he was born in the reign of Nerva, in the year A.D. 97, wrote his books against heresies in A.D. 176, and did not outlive the year A.D. 190. Others place these events rather later.

The martyrs of Lyons, in their letter to Eleutherus, make a very honourable mention of Irenæus, and give him the title of presbyter.²

Tertullian mentions him as one of the most considerable writers of the Christian Church, and says, "He was a diligent inquirer of all sorts of opinions."³ He means, it is likely, that Irenæus had well studied the sentiments of the heathen philosophers, and of heretics, as well as the principles of the Christian religion.

Eusebius says, "When Pothinus had been put to death with the martyrs in Gaul, Irenæus succeeded him in the bishopric of the Church of Lyons, who, in his youth, had been a disciple of Polycarp."⁴

S. Jerome says of him, "Irenæus, presbyter of Pothinus, who was bishop of the Church of Lyons in Gaul, carried a letter from the martyrs of that city concerning some disputes of the Church to Eleutherus, bishop of Rome, in which letter he is honourably mentioned. Afterwards, Pothinus having obtained the crown of martyrdom, when he was almost ninety years of age, he was substituted in his room. It is certain he was a disciple of Polycarp, bishop and martyr. He wrote five books against heresies. . . . He flourished chiefly under the Emperor Commodus, who succeeded M. Antoninus Verus."⁵

Though it is not in our power to determine exactly the time either of the birth or death of Irenæus, we have good reason to believe he was a disciple of S. Polycarp, and presbyter in the Church of Lyons under Pothinus, whose martyrdom happened in the year A.D. 177, and that he succeeded Pothinus in the bishopric of that Church. His antiquity is further confirmed from the frequent mention he makes of a presbyter who had conversed with the immediate successors of the Apostles.⁶ But who this was cannot be determined; whether Papias, whom he has quoted by name, or Pothinus, or some other. Eusebius, who also has taken particular notice of this, says, "Irenæus has mentioned the sayings of a certain apostolical presbyter, without telling us his name, and puts down his expositions of the divine Scriptures."⁷

There is nothing now remaining of Irenæus beside his five books against heresies, and fragments of some other pieces; and those five books, which were written by him in Greek, are extant only in an ancient Latin version, excepting some fragments preserved by Eusebius, and other Greek writers who have quoted him.

Irenæus bears most ample testimony that the Church received the four Gospels of S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John; that these were believed to have possessed a special fitness for their work; that, having been first filled with the knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospel by the Spirit, and having first preached that doctrine, they then set it down in writing.

He says, "For we have not received the knowledge of the

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 20, vol. ii. p. 377.

² Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 4, vol. ii. p. 440.

³ Tertullian, contr. Valentini, 5, vol. ii. p. 548.

⁴ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 5, vol. ii. p. 444.

⁵ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xxxv. vol. ii. p. 649.

⁶ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iv. 27, l. p. 1056.

⁷ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 8, vol. ii. p. 448.

Gospel of John, and speaks of it as inspired (Theoph. ad Autol. ii. 22, p. 120, ed. Otto), and not only so, but he classes the Gospels together and compares them with the books of the Old Testament. 'The writings,' he says, 'of the prophets and of the Gospels are found to be in harmony, because all the inspired men have spoken by one Spirit of God' (ib. iii. 12, p. 218).—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 373.

* S. Irenæus.—The following is a testimony to the value of Irenæus as a guide to the mind of the early Church, given by a very competent witness: "Any one who will take the pains to read Irenæus through carefully, endeavouring to enter into his historical position in all its bearings, striving to realise what he and his contemporaries actually thought about the writings of the New Testament, and what grounds they had for thinking it, and, above all, resisting the temptation to read in modern theories between the lines, will be in a more favourable position for judging rightly of the early history of the Canon than if he had studied all the monographs which have issued from the German press during the last half century."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' May 1875, p. 866.

way of our salvation by any others than those by whom the Gospel has been brought to us; which Gospel they first preached, and afterwards by the will of God committed to writing that it might be for time to come the foundation and pillar of our faith. For after that our Lord rose from the dead, and they (the Apostles) were endued from above with the power of the Holy Ghost coming down upon them, they received a perfect knowledge of all things. They then went forth to all the ends of the earth, declaring to men the blessing of heavenly peace, having all of them, and every one alike, the Gospel of God. Matthew, then, among the Jews, wrote a Gospel in their own language, while Peter and Paul were preaching the Gospel at Rome, and founding a church there. And after their exit (death) or departure, Mark also, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, delivered to us in writing the things that had been preached by Peter: and Luke, the companion of Paul, put down in a book the Gospel preached by him (Paul). Afterwards John, the disciple of the Lord, who also leaned upon his breast, he likewise published a Gospel while he dwelt at Ephesus in Asia. And all these have delivered to us, that there is one God, the Maker of the heaven and the earth, declared by the law and the prophets, and one Christ, the Son of God. And he who does not assent to them, despiseth, indeed, those who knew the mind of the Lord; but he despiseth also Christ Himself, the Lord, and he despiseth likewise the Father, and is self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as all heretics do."¹

That part of this passage which particularly concerns the four Evangelists severally is cited by Eusebius² in the Greek; the rest is only in the old Latin version.

S. Irenæus, like some others of the early writers, gives fanciful reasons * why there could be neither more nor fewer than four Gospels. Insufficient as the reasons given may now appear to us, the passage itself is of value, as showing how firmly the Church believed there were only four Gospels, and that the writers of these four Gospels were the same as we ourselves believe. He also gives sufficient particulars concerning the four Gospels to satisfy us that he means the very same books as we now possess.

He says, "Nor can there be more or fewer Gospels than these. For, as there are four regions of the world in which we live, and four catholic spirits, and the church is spread all over the earth, and the Gospel is the pillar and foundation of the Church, and the spirit of life; in like manner was it fit it should have four pillars breathing on all sides incorruption, and refreshing mankind. Whence it is manifest that the Word, the Former of all things, who sits upon the Cherubim, and upholds all things, having appeared to men, has given us a Gospel of a fourfold character, but joined in one spirit. The Gospel according to John declares his primary and glorious generation from the Father: 'In the beginning was the Word.' But the Gospel according to Luke, being of a priestly character, begins with Zacharias the priest offering incense to God. Matthew relates his generation, which is according to man: 'The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.' Mark begins from the prophetic Spirit which came down from above to men, saying, 'The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as it is written in Esaias the prophet.'"³

Of S. Matthew's Gospel he elsewhere says, "The Gospel according to Matthew was written to the Jews; for they earnestly desired a Messiah of the seed of David; and Matthew having also the same desire to a yet greater degree, strove by all means to give them full satisfaction, that Christ was of the seed of David, wherefore he began with His genealogy."⁴

Of S. Mark he says, "Wherefore also Mark, the interpreter and follower of Peter, makes this the beginning of his evangelic writing: 'The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, &c. And in the end of the [his] Gospel Mark says, 'So then the Lord Jesus; after he had spoken to them, was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.'"⁵

Because some of the heretics, with whom Irenæus is disputing, owned a part at least of S. Luke's Gospel, while others rejected it altogether, he says, "But if any one rejects Luke, as if he did not know the truth, he will be convicted of throwing away the Gospel of which he profeseth to be a disciple. For there are many, and those very necessary parts of the Gospel which we know by his means: as Luke i. ii. iii., the birth of John, the history of Zacharias, and the visit of the angel to Mary, and the descent of the angels to the shepherds, and the things said by them, and the testimony of Anna and Simeon to Christ, and that at the age of twelve years He was left behind at Jerusalem, and the baptism of John, and the age of our Lord when He was baptized, and that this was done in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, and that He said in His sermon to the rich, 'Woe unto you that are rich, for ye receive your consolation,' Luke vi. 24, 25, 26,—all these things we know from Luke only. And we have learned from him many actions of our Lord, which all receive; as the great multitude of fishes which they who were with Peter inclosed when at the command of the Lord they cast their nets; and the woman with the infirmity of eighteen years, who was cured on the sabbath-

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 1, p. 844.

² Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 8, vol. ii. p. 449.

³ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 11, 8, p. 885.

⁴ S. Irenæus, Fragmenta, xxix. p. 1243.

⁵ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 10, 8, p. 878.

* Fanciful Reasons.—"There is much that is foolish in Papias, in Justin Martyr, in Irenæus, in Tertullian, even in Clement of Alexandria, and Origen. Only it is frequently mixed up with the highest wisdom, which more than redeems it."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, Contemp. Rev. Feb. 1876. p. 480.

day, chap. xiii. 11; and the man with the dropsy whom the Lord healed on the sabbath-day, xiv. 2, 3; and how He defended His healing on that day; and how He taught His disciples not to covet the chief seats; and that we ought to invite the poor and infirm, who cannot recompense us again, 7-13; and of him who knocked at the door in the night time for bread, and obtained it because of his importunity, xi. 8; and that, sitting at table at the house of a pharisee, a woman that was a sinner kissed His feet, and anointed Him with ointment, vii. 36; and all that, for her sake, the Lord said concerning two debtors; and the parable of the rich man that hoarded up his increase, xii. 16, to whom also it was said, 'This night shall thy soul be required of thee: then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?' As also the parable of the rich man that was clothed in purple and fared sumptuously, and the beggar Lazarus, xvi. 19; and the answer which He made His disciples when they said to Him, 'Increase our faith,' xvii. 5; and the conversation with Zacchæus the publican, xix. 1; and concerning the pharisees and the publican who worshipped together at the temple, xviii. 10; and the ten lepers whom He healed at the same time in the way, xvii. 12; and that He commanded the lame and the blind to be brought to the wedding from the streets and the lanes, xiv. 21; and the parable of the judge who feared not God, whom the widow's importunity compelled to avenge her, xviii. 1; and of the fig-tree in the vineyard which bore no fruit, xiii. 6. And many other things there are to be found in Luke alone, which [things] Marcion and Valentinus made use of; and beside all these things, after His resurrection, what He said to the disciples in the way, and how He was made known unto them in breaking of bread, xxiv. 35."¹

Of S. John he says: "John the disciple of the Lord being desirous by declaring the gospel to root out the error that had been sown in the minds of men by Cerinthus, and a good while before by those who are called Nicolaitans—that he might confute them and satisfy all that there is one God, who made all things by His word; and not as they say, one who made the world, and another the Father of the Lord; and one the Son of the Creator, and another from the super-celestial places, even Christ, who they say also continued ever impassible, who descended upon Jesus the Son of the Creator, and fled away again into His pleroma [or fullness]—the disciple therefore of the Lord, willing at once to cut off these errors, and leave a rule of truth in the church; that there is one God Almighty, who by His Word made all things visible and invisible; declaring likewise, that by the Word by which God finished the creation, by the same also

He bestowed salvation upon those men who are in the creation; he thus begins in his doctrine which is according to the gospel: 'In the beginning was the Word,' John i. 1-5."²

The First and Second Epistles of S. John are expressly quoted by Irenæus as John's, the disciple of the Lord. Having just quoted S. John's Gospel, he adds: "Wherefore also in his Epistle he says thus to us, 'Little children, it is the last time,' 1 John ii. 18."³

A little further on in the same chapter, Irenæus says, "And in the forementioned Epistle, John the disciple of the Lord commands us to shun these persons, saying, 'Many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an Antichrist. Look to yourselves that ye lose not those things which ye have wrought.'"⁴ These are plainly the words of the Second Epistle; Irenæus seems to quote them as in the First, the same Epistle he had before quoted. This is supposed to be owing to a slip of memory.

"And John the disciple of the Lord does not so much as allow us to bid them God speed. 'For,' he says, 'he that biddeth them God speed, is partaker of their evil deeds.'"⁵

The Acts of the Apostles is a book much quoted by Irenæus as written by Luke, the disciple and companion of the Apostles.⁶ There are few things, recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, which have not been mentioned by Irenæus.

In speaking of the Scriptures Irenæus sometimes calls them "divine scriptures,"⁷ sometimes "divine oracles,"⁸ and sometimes also "Scriptures of the Lord."⁹

He speaks of the books of the New Testament as comprehended under the two divisions of Evangelic and Apostolic writings, and says: "The Valentinians endeavour to fetch arguments for their opinions, not only from the Evangelic and Apostolic writings, but also from the Law and the Prophets."¹⁰ He quotes S. Paul's Epistles more than two hundred times, and sometimes he cites them by name.

He speaks of the Gospels as having the same authority as the Old Testament, thus, "Since all the Scriptures, both Prophecies and Gospels, are open and clear, and may be heard of all."¹¹ In another place, "In the Law and the Gospel, the first and great commandment is to love the Lord with all the heart,"¹²—again, "with our assertions agree the preaching of the Apostles, the doctrine of the Lord, the declaration of the Prophets, the word of the Apostles, the ministration of the Law."¹³

Speaking of the Valentinians, he says: "They have become so audacious, as to call that which has not been long since written by them the gospel of truth, though it agree in nothing with the Gospels of the Apostles."¹⁴

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 14, 3, p. 915.

² Ibid. iii. 11, 1, p. 879.

³ Ibid. iii. 16, 8, p. 927.

⁴ Ibid. i. 23, 1, p. 670.

⁵ Ibid. i. 8, 1, p. 524.

⁶ Ibid. iii. 16, 5, p. 925.

⁷ Ibid. i. 16, 3, p. 633.

⁸ Ibid. ii. 27, 1, p. 802.

⁹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, v. 20, 2, p. 1178; ii. 35, 4, p. 842.

¹⁰ Ibid. i. 3, 6, p. 477.

¹¹ Ibid. ii. 27, 2, p. 803.

¹² Ibid. iv. 12, 3, p. 1095.

¹³ Ibid. iii. 11, 9, p. 891.

¹⁴ Ibid. ii. 35, 4, p. 841.

* Irenæus—"At Lyons, where the first Christian church in Gaul was founded, the Bishop Irenæus wrote, at the end of the second I.

century, a great work on those early Gnostic heresies, which arbitrarily attempted to overturn the doctrine of the Church; and

That Irenæus represents the belief of the Church, not only of his own time, but also of a former generation, is plain from his references to persons of an earlier generation, and to their teaching. At one time¹ he speaks of a certain presbyter or in combating those errors, he made a general use of the Gospels. The number of the passages which he refers to is about four hundred, and the direct quotations from St. John alone exceed eighty."—PROF. TISCHENDORF, 'When were our Gospels written?' p. 48.

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iv. 27, 1, p. 1056.

"From Justin to Irenæus, the Christian writings are fragmentary and few; but with Irenæus, a whole body of literature seems suddenly to start into being. Irenæus is succeeded closely by Clement of Alexandria, Clement by Tertullian, Tertullian by Hippolytus and Origen, and the testimony which these writers bear to the Gospel is marvellously abundant and unanimous. I calculate roughly that Irenæus quotes directly 193 verses of the first Gospel, and 73 of the fourth. Clement of Alexandria and Tertullian must have quoted considerably more; while in the extant writings of Origen, the greater part of the New Testament is actually quoted.

"By the time of Irenæus, the canon of the four Gospels, as we understand the word now, was practically formed; we have already seen that this was the case in the Fragment of Muratori. Irenæus is still more explicit. In the famous passage (adv. Hær. iii. 11, 8) which is so often quoted as an instance of the weakness of the Fathers, he lays it down as a necessity of things, that the Gospels should be four in number, neither less nor more.

"Irenæus also makes mention of the origin of the Gospels, claiming for their authors the gift of Divine inspiration (adv. Hær. iii. 1, 1).

"We have not now to determine the exact value of these traditions; what we have rather to notice is, the fact that the Gospels are at this time definitely assigned to their reputed authors, and that they are already regarded as containing a special knowledge divinely imparted. It is evident that Irenæus would not for a moment think of classing any other gospel by the side of the now strictly canonical four."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 815.

"By this time [the last quarter of the second century, and very probably before] the Gospels were acknowledged to be all that is now understood by the word 'canonical.' They were placed upon the same footing as the Old Testament Scriptures. They were looked up to with the same reverence, and regarded as possessing the same divine inspiration. We may trace, indeed, some of the steps by which this position was attained. The ὑπόγραπται of the Epistle of Barnabas, the public reading of the Gospels in the churches mentioned by Justin, the τὸ εἰρημύονον of Tatian, the κρίσις of Dionysius of Corinth, all prepare the way for the final culmination in the Muratorian Canon and Irenæus. So complete had the process been, that Irenæus does not seem to know of a time when the authority of the Gospels had been less than it was to him."—Ibid. p. 344.

"The theology of the Fourth Gospel is stamped on the teaching of orthodox apologists; its authority is quoted for the speculative tenets of the manifold Gnostic sects, Basilideans, Valentinians, Ophites; its narrative is employed even by a Judaizing writer like the author of the Clementines. The phenomena which confront us in the last quarter of the second century are inexplicable, except on the supposition that the Gospel had had a long previous history. How else are we to account for such facts as that the text already exhibits a number of various readings, such as the alternative of 'only begotten God' for 'the only begotten Son' in i. 18, and 'six' for 'five' in iv. 18, or the interpolation of the descent of the angel in v. 3, 4; that legends and traditions have grown up respecting its origin, such as we find in Clement of Alexandria, and in the Muratorian fragment; that perverse mystical interpretations, wholly foreign to the simple meaning of the text, have already encrusted it, such as we meet with in the commentary of Heraclion? How is it that ecclesiastical writers far and wide receive it without misgiving at this epoch,—Irenæus in Gaul, Tertullian in Africa, Clement in Alexandria, Theophilus at Antioch, the anonymous Muratorian writer perhaps in Rome? That they not only receive it, but assume its reception from the beginning? That they never betray a consciousness that any Church or churchman had even questioned it? The history of the first three-quarters of the second century is necessarily obscure, owing to the paucity of remains. A flood of light is suddenly poured in during the remaining years of the century . . . Even if it be granted that the opinion of Irenæus, as an isolated individual, is not worth much, yet the widespread and traditional belief which underlies his whole language and thoughts, is a consideration of the highest moment; and Irenæus is only one among many witnesses."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Jan. 1875, p. 184.

"S. Irenæus, who wrote the greater part of his book against heretics before 190 A.D., insists that there are but four Gospels, and appeals to the four winds, to the four regions of the world, and to the four faces of the Cherubim in support of his statement (Iren. iii. 11, 8). Now the mystical reasons which Irenæus gives for the fourfold number of the Gospels, do but serve to show how absolutely the authority of the four Gospels was to him a first principle placed beyond all possibility of dispute, at least within the Church, by an immemorial tradition. 'Nay, so certain,' he says, 'is the authority of the Gospels, that even the heretics themselves bear witness in their belief' (Iren. iii. 11, 7). He is unable to imagine a time when the Church was without four Gospels. 'It is impossible,' he tells us, 'that the number of the Gospels should be greater or less than it is,' and he finds this number 'fore-shadowed in the order of Nature, and in the covenants of grace which God has made with His creatures' (Iren. iii. 11, 8). The use which Irenæus makes of the Gospels, and the mode in which he cites them, are proof that their authority had been acknowledged time out of mind within the Church. His quotations from the Gospels amount, according to Tischendorf's estimate, to about four hundred; and of these, some eight are taken from the Gospel of S. John. ('Origin of the Gospels,' p. 35.) He attributes to them a verbal inspiration. (Iren. iii. 16, 2.) He classes them in express terms with the rest of the Scriptures. (Iren. ii. 27, 2.) It is needless to point out that this separation of the canonical Gospels from other writings must have been a work of time, for our argument is not merely that S. Irenæus witnesses to the existence of the Gospels, not even that he takes for granted their authority and their inspiration; but further, that he speaks of them as books collected and set apart as composing the one 'Gospel which is fourfold, but bound together by one Spirit' (Iren. iii. 11, 8). Further, if time was needed before the Gospels could be thus set apart and regarded as forming a single Gospel, much more was time needed before the New Testament could be looked upon as a whole, before its books could be classified, before this classification could become so familiar that S. Irenæus might refer to it without need to explain his meaning; yet all this was complete some time before 190, when S. Irenæus wrote. Just as the Jews divided their sacred writings into the Law and the Prophets, so S. Irenæus alludes to the division of the New Testament Scriptures into two parts (εὐαγγελικά καὶ ἀποστολικά) (Iren. i. 3, 6), as they relate more immediately to our Lord or to His Apostles. In short, in S. Irenæus, we find the canon of the New Testament universally recognized, and the greater number of the books which had a place in it fixed beyond dispute. It is true, that there was still doubt within the Catholic Church; not, of course, as to the authority and authenticity of the Gospels, but as to that of some among the books which form part of our New Testament. This, instead of weakening the evidence for the Gospels, supplies a strong argument in their favour. The books of the New Testament which were not, so far as we know, recognized by S. Irenæus, were still the subject of doubt in the time of Eusebius; nay, it is not till the close of the fourth century, that their place in the New Testament was fixed beyond dispute. So slow, so gradual, was the growth of the canon."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 361.

elder, who had heard from those who had seen the Apostles; at another¹ he gives the explanation of a passage in S. John's Gospel, which he had learnt from certain elders; * at another,² he calls to the recollection of a friend of his youth, and who had now wandered from the faith of the Church, how many years ago, when Irenæus was very young, they had met in the house of Polycarp, and had together listened to his discourses, especially to his discourses on the subject of S. John. His letter to Florinus has been preserved by Eusebius, and runs thus: "When I was yet a child, I saw thee at Smyrna, in Asia Minor, at Polycarp's house, where thou wast distinguished at Court, and obtained the regard of the Bishop. I can more distinctly recollect things which happened then than others more recent; for events which happened in infancy seem to grow with the mind, and to become part of ourselves, so that I can recall the very place where Polycarp used to sit and teach, his manner of speech, his mode of life, his appearance, the style of his address to the people, his frequent references to S. John, and to others who had seen our Lord; how he used to repeat from memory their discourses, which he had heard from them concerning our Lord, His miracles and mode of teaching, and how, being instructed himself by those who were eye-witnesses to the Word, there was in all that he said a strict agreement with the Scriptures."

In this letter we have Irenæus distinctly declaring that he had listened to Polycarp relating what he had heard from the lips of S. John himself.³ Thus the chain which connects Irenæus with S. John, is as short as it can well be. There are only three links in it, Irenæus, Polycarp, and S. John; only one link between Irenæus and S. John, and no break. For, as far as questions of time are concerned, Irenæus might have been the grandson of S. John.

That Irenæus acknowledged the same four Gospels that we do ourselves, is confessed by all; that Irenæus acknowledged the same four Gospels that Polycarp and his contemporaries did, is proved by all the evidence that exists. For though the extant writings of this period are few and fragmentary, their evidence, as far as it exists, tends all in the same direction. And we must bear in mind, that absence of testimony is not the same as antagonistic testimony. In this case paucity of testimony or lack of testimony only indicates the waste caused by time.

The Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 160).—In the time of Marcus Antoninus the Christians suffered extremely. "In the seventeenth year of the reign of this prince," says Eusebius, "the persecution against us raged with great violence in several parts of the world through the enmity of the people in the cities. What vast multitudes of martyrs there were throughout the whole empire, may be well concluded from what happened in one nation."⁴ He means that of Gaul. The persecution was particularly violent at Lyons and the country thereabout. At this time many of the Christians of Lyons and Vienne suffered exquisite tortures with the greatest patience. Pothinus, Bishop of Lyons, then above ninety years of age, was apprehended and carried before the governor, by whom he was examined, and before whom he made a generous confession of the Christian

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, v. 36, l. 1, p. 1222.

² S. Irenæus, Fragment, ii. p. 1226.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 20, vol. ii. p. 485.

* The Presbyters, disciples of the Apostles.—Of more importance—indeed, of high importance—is the evidence drawn from the remains of earlier writers preserved by Irenæus and Hippolytus. There is a clear reference to the Fourth Gospel in a passage for which Irenæus alleges the authority of certain 'presbyters,' who at the least belonged to an elder generation than his own. There can be little doubt, indeed, that they are the same as those whom he describes three sentences later, and with only a momentary break in the oblique narration into which the passage is thrown, as 'the presbyters, disciples of the Apostles.' . . . It is quite enough that Irenæus evidently attributes to them an antiquity considerably beyond his own; that, in fact, he looks upon them as supplying the intermediate link between his age and that of the Apostles."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 297.

"We may, without any great impropriety, speak of the school of S. John. The existence of such a body of disciples gathered about the veteran teacher is indicated by notices in various writers. The author of the Muratorian fragment, for instance, speaks of this Apostle as writing his Gospel at the request not only of his fellow-disciples, but also of his 'bishops.' Clement of Alexandria, again, among whose teachers was one from this very district, and probably of this very school (Strom. l. i, vol. i. p. 700, Migne), represents him as going about from place to place in the neighbourhood of Ephesus, appointing bishops, and providing in other ways for the government of the Churches (Quis Dives Sal. 42, vol. ii. p. 648, Migne). More especially Irenæus, who had received his earliest lessons in Christianity from an immediate disciple of S. John, appeals again and again to such a body as preserving and handing down the correct tradition of the Apostolic doctrine and practice. He describes these persons in one place as 'the elders who in Asia associated with John the disciple of the Lord' (ii. 22, 5); in another, as 'all the Churches which are in Asia,' specifying more particularly the Church in Ephesus, the true witness of the Apostolic tradition (iii. 3, 4); in a third, as 'those who saw John face to face' (v. 30, 1); or, 'the elders who saw John the disciple of the Lord' (v. 33, 3); in a fourth, as 'the elders who were before us, and who also were pupils of the Apostles' (Epist. ad Florin. i. in a fifth, as 'the elders who have their succession from the Apostles' (iv. 26, 2); in a sixth, as 'the elders, disciples of the Apostles' (v. 5, 1), with similar expressions elsewhere. The prominent members of this school in the first age were Polycarp of Smyrna, and Papias of Hierapolis, of whom the former survived beyond the middle of the century, and the latter probably died not many years before. In the next generation the most famous names are Melito of Sardis and Apollinaris of Hierapolis, who flourished in the third quarter of the century."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 471.

³ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. Proëm. vol. ii. p. 405.

⁴ Irenæus.—"Unfortunately the chronological notices are not sufficiently precise to enable us to fix the date either of this intercourse with Polycarp, or of the letter to Florinus, in which Irenæus records it. In the year 155 or 156 Polycarp died; in the year 177 Irenæus became Bishop of Lyons. Putting these two facts together, we may perhaps assume that Irenæus must have been a pupil of Polycarp somewhere between A.D. 130-150. . . . We are led to the conclusion that the letter to Florinus was one of the earliest writings of this father."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' May 1875, p. 833.

religion; and, having suffered many indignities, he was sent to prison, where he soon expired.

The time of the persecution in Gaul has been disputed. The general opinion is with Eusebius, who, in his 'Ecclesiastical History,' places it in the seventeenth year of Marcus Antoninus, A.D. 177.

The Churches of Lyons and Vienne sent a relation of the sufferings of their martyrs to the Churches of Asia and Phrygia. Eusebius placed this epistle entire in his 'Collection of the Acts of the Martyrs,'¹ and he has likewise inserted a large part of it into his 'Ecclesiastical History,' which is still extant. Lardner calls it the finest thing in all antiquity. Some think it was composed by Irenæus.*

Celsus (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. vii. p. 210) lived in the time of Adrian and afterwards; he was a heathen, and wrote a book against the Christians, entitled 'The True Word,' about 176 A.D.

Celsus was not a contemporary of Origen,² but appears to have lived about a century before him. But at the desire of his friend Ambrose, Origen wrote an answer to the work of Celsus in eight books; and it is from Origen's answer, written about A.D. 246, which is still extant, that the opinions of Celsus are chiefly to be gathered.

The value of Celsus,³ as a witness for the antiquity of our Gospels, is well expressed in the words of S. Chrysostom: "Celsus and Bataneotes (meaning Porphyry) are sufficient witnesses to the antiquity of our books. For, I presume, they did not oppose writings which have been published since their own time."³ Melito (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 157) was Bishop of Sardis in Lydia.⁴ He was a most voluminous writer; and catalogues of his works are given by both Eusebius and S. Jerome.⁵ All his books are lost, except a few fragments.

Melito addressed an 'Apology' to Marcus Antoninus in behalf of the Christians then under sufferings.⁶ This is placed by Eusebius in his 'Chronicle' in the year A.D. 171, and the tenth of that emperor.⁶

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. Proem. vol. ii. p. 408.

² Origen, contr. Cels. Prefat. 4, vol. i. p. 948.

lib. i. 8, vol. i. p. 689.

Canon Lightfoot, 'Contemp. Rev.' Dec. 1874, p. 5.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Epist. I. ad Corinth. Homil. vi. p. 64.

⁴ See also—

Prof. Westcott, on the Canon of the New Testament, p. 218.

Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. Feb. 1876, p. 475, &c.

⁵ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 26, vol. ii. p. 392.

S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xxiv. vol. ii. p. 643.

⁶ Eusebius, vol. i. p. 562.

* The Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons.—Mr. Sanday makes a rigid examination of two passages in this Epistle, in the former of which it is supposed by Lardner and others to refer to S. Luke i. 6, and in the latter, to S. John xvi. 2. His conclusion with respect to the former passage is, "This instance of a synoptic quotation may, I think, safely be depended upon" (p. 253).

In the case of the latter, he compares the supposed quotation with the Evangelist, thus:—

Epist. Vienn. et Lugd. iv.

John xvi. 2.

Thus, too, was fulfilled that which was spoken of by our Lord; that a time shall come in which every one that killeth you shall think that he offereth God service.

Yea, the hour cometh, that every one that killeth you will think he offereth God service.

Ἐλεῖσται καιρὸς ἐν ᾧ πᾶς ὁ ἀποκτείνων υἱὰς δόξει λατρεῖν προσφέρων τῷ Θεῷ. Ἄλλ' ἔρχεται ὥρα ἵνα πᾶς ὁ ἀποκτείνων υἱὰς δόξῃ λατρεῖν προσφέρων τῷ Θεῷ.

and then concludes, "It is true that there are indications of similar discourses in the Synoptics, but of none containing a trait at all closely resembling this. The chances that precisely the same combination of words (ὁ ἀποκτείνων υἱὰς δόξει λατρεῖν προσφέρειν τῷ Θεῷ) occurred in a lost Gospel must be necessarily very small indeed, especially when we remember that the original saying was probably spoken in Aramaic and not in Greek" (p. 306).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

"It [the Epistle] contains no reference by name to any book of the New Testament, but its coincidences of language with the Gospels of St. Luke and St. John, with the Acts of the Apostles, with the Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans, Corinthians (?), Ephesians, Philippians, and the First to Timothy, with the first Catholic Epistles of St. Peter and St. John, and with the Apocalypse, are unequivocal."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 335.

^b Celsus.—"Dr. Keim decides, after an elaborate examination of the internal evidence, that the Celsus of Origen wrote his work in the year 178 A.D., toward the close of the reign of Marcus Aurelius."

"At whatever date Celsus wrote, it appears to be sufficiently clear that he knew and used all the four canonical Gospels" (p. 263).

"Dr. Keim, in the elaborate monograph mentioned above, decides that Celsus made use of the fourth Gospel. He remarks upon it as curious, that more traces should indeed be found, both in Celsus and his contemporary Tatian, of John than of his two nearest predecessors." Volkmar too declares it to be "notorious that Celsus was acquainted with the fourth Gospel."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 307.

^c Melito.—"These chronological notices suggest that Melito was born in the early part of the second century, within a very few years after the death of S. John. During the greater part of his life at all events he must have been a contemporary of S. John's disciple Polycarp, who was martyred at an advanced age in the year 155 or 156; and likewise of Papias, who had conversed with personal disciples of Christ, and seems also to have survived till towards the middle of the century. As the communications between Sardis on the one hand, and Smyrna and Hierapolis on the other, were easy, a prominent man like Melito, whose religious zeal led him on one occasion to undertake a distant journey to Palestine, would be sure to cultivate the acquaintance of these older teachers even if circumstances did not throw him directly in their way.

"Thus Melito is a significant link of connection with the past. At the same time he holds an equally important position with respect to the succeeding age. It can hardly be doubted that among the Asiatic elders, whose authority Irenæus invokes so constantly, Melito must have held a prominent place. It may be suspected that he was the very Ionian whom Clement of Alexandria mentions among his earlier teachers (Strom. i., page 700, Migne). It is quite certain that his writings were widely known and appreciated in the generations next succeeding his own. He is quoted or referred to by Polycrates at Ephesus, by Clement and Origen at Alexandria, by Tertullian at Carthage, by Hippolytus at Rome."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 476.

In a letter to his friend Onesimus,¹ he mentions by name "the Old Books" (τῶν παλαιῶν βιβλίων), and "the Books of the Old Testament" (τὰ τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης βιβλία). From these expressions it has been fairly inferred that there were also books which were then recognized as the New Books, or Books of the New Testament, though the canon of the New Testament was not finally settled till some time after.*

Claudius Apollinaris (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 313) was Bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia, of whom Eusebius writes to this purport: "At the same time flourished also Melito, Bishop of Sardis, and Apollinaris, Bishop of Hierapolis, men of great reputation; each of whom severally presented apologetical discourses for the Christian religion to the fore-mentioned emperor [M. Antoninus], who reigned at that time."² In the next chapter, Eusebius speaks thus of his works: "Although there are many books of Apollinaris still extant, and in the hands of many, I am acquainted with the following only: an oration to the fore-mentioned emperor [this is his 'Apology'], five books against the Gentiles, two books on truth, two against the Jews, and the books which he afterwards wrote against the Phrygian heresy, which not long after gave great disturbance, but was then making as it were its first appearance, Montanus being as yet employed in laying the foundation of that error with his false prophecies."

S. Jerome in his catalogue says: "Apollinaris flourished in the time of Marcus Antoninus, to whom he presented an excellent book for the Christian Faith."³

Theodoret has mentioned the writings of Apollinaris against the Montanists, and says: "He was a man worthy of praise, and he had added to the knowledge of religion the study of polite literature."⁴ In another place he speaks of Apollinaris having written against those Encratites who were called Severians, from Severus, who, after Tatian, made some additions to the peculiar notions of that sect.⁵

Eusebius in his Chronicle, at the eleventh year of Marcus, A.D. 171, says, "Then flourished Apollinaris, Bishop of Hierapolis;"⁶ which is the year next after that in which he had placed the flourishing of Melito. Cave places him at the year A.D. 170.

Nothing now remains of these writings of Apollinaris. There are however two fragments ascribed to Apollinaris in the preface to the Paschal, or, as it is often called, the Alexandrian Chronicle. In the first of these it is said, "And Apollinaris, the most holy Bishop of Hierapolis in Asia, who was near the times of the Apostles, in his discourse on Easter, teaches the same things, saying: 'There are some, who through ignorance raise contentions about these things, which is a pardonable thing; for ignorance is not to be blamed, but rather needs instruction: they say, that on the fourteenth day the Lord ate the lamb with the disciples; and that on the great day of the feast of unleavened bread He Himself suffered; and that Matthew says

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 26, vol. ii. p. 396.

Routh, Rel. Sac. vol. i. p. 119.

² Cureton, Spicileg. Syriac. p. 59.

³ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 26, vol. ii. p. 392.

⁴ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xxvi. vol. ii. p. 646.

⁵ Theodoret, Hæret. Fabul. iii. 2, vol. iv. p. 171.

⁶ Ibid. i. 11, vol. iv. p. 157.

⁷ Eusebius, Chronicle, vol. i. p. 564.

* "In his preface to his extracts out of the Law and the Prophets is a short passage, which I shall put down in this place, having only first observed, that Eusebius (Hist. Eccles. iv. 26) professes there to give us the passage, he alleges, word for word. It is a letter to one Onesimus, to whom Melito says, 'When, therefore, I went into the East, and was come to the place where those things were preached and done, I procured an accurate account of the books of the Old Testament, the catalogue of which I have here subjoined and sent to you. Their names are these.'

"From this passage I would conclude that there was then also a volume or collection of books called the New Testament, containing the writings of Apostles and Apostolical men."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 160.

"Having gone, therefore, to the East," Melito says, "and reached the spot where [each thing] was preached and done, and having learned accurately the books of the Old Testament, I have sent a list of them." The mention of the Old Books, the books of the Old Testament, naturally implies a recognition of the New Books, of the books of the New Testament, a written antitype to the Old."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 218.

"It is a fact that half a century, or even more, before Melito wrote, the author of the epistle bearing the name of Barnabas quotes as 'scripture' a passage found in S. Matthew's Gospel, and not known to have existed elsewhere. It is a fact that about the same time, or earlier, Polycarp wrote a letter which is saturated with the thoughts and language of the Apostolic Epistles. It is a fact that some twenty or thirty years before Melito, Justin Martyr speaks of certain Gospels (whether our canonical Gospels or not, it is unnecessary for my present purpose to inquire) as being read together with the writings of the prophets at the religious services of the Christians on Sundays, and taken afterwards as the subject of exhortation and comment by the preacher. It is a fact that about the same time when Justin records this as the habitual practice of the Church, the heretic Marcion, himself a native of Asia Minor, constructed a Canon for himself by selecting from and mutilating the Apostolic and Evangelical writings which he found in circulation. It is a fact that Dionysius of Corinth, a contemporary of Melito, speaks of certain writings as 'the Scriptures of the Lord,' or 'the Dominiſcal Scriptures,' and denounces those who tamper with them. It is a fact that Irenæus, who had received his early education in Asia Minor, writing within some ten or twenty years after the death of Melito, quotes the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, the great majority of the Apostolic Epistles, and the Apocalypse, as Scripture, declaring more especially of the four Gospels, that they had been received by the Churches from the beginning, and treating all these writings alike with the same deference which they have received from subsequent generations of Christians ever since. The inference from these facts (and they do not stand alone) is obvious. If Melito knew nothing about books of the New Testament, he must have been the only bishop of the Church, from the banks of the Euphrates to the Pillars of Hercules, who remained in this state of dense ignorance—Melito, who could refer to the Hebrew and Syriac while interpreting a passage of Genesis, and who made careful inquiries respecting the Canon of the Old Testament Scriptures in the very land where those Scriptures had their birth."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 479.

as much, as they understand him, whence it is evident that their interpretation is contrary to the Law; and according to them the Gospels disagree."¹ Apollinaris here takes it for granted, as the acknowledged belief in his day, that there could be no real, only an apparent discrepancy between the Gospels.

Afterwards he quotes Apollinaris as saying: "The fourteenth is the day of the true passover, the Lord the great sacrifice, instead of the Lamb the Son of God, who was bound, who bound the strong man, who, though judged, is judge of the quick and dead; and who was delivered into the hands of sinners, that he might be crucified; who was exalted upon the horns of the unicorn, and whose sacred side was pierced; who also poured out of his side two cleansers, water and blood, the Word and the Spirit: and who was buried on the day of the passover, a stone being laid upon the sepulchre."²

Tatian³ (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 147) flourished

¹ Dr. Routh, Rel. Sacr. vol. i. p. 160.

² Claudius Apollinaris.—"This variance or disagreement in the Gospels evidently has reference to the apparent discrepancy between the synoptics, especially St. Matthew and St. John . . . Apollinaris would thus seem to recognize both the first and the fourth Gospels as authoritative."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 246.

³ "I am not concerned here with the question whether Apollinaris or his opponents were right. The point to be noticed is that he speaks of 'the Gospels' (under which term he includes at least St. Matthew and St. John) as any one would speak of received documents, to which the ultimate appeal lies. His language in this is such as might be used by a writer of the fourth century, or in the nineteenth, who was led by circumstances to notice a difficulty in harmonizing the accounts of the Evangelists. The second extract bears out the impression left by the first. The incident of the water and the blood is taken from the fourth Gospel; but a theological interpretation is forced upon it which cannot have been intended by the Evangelist. Some time must have elapsed before the narrative could well be made the subject of a speculative comment like this. Thus both extracts alike suggest that the fourth Gospel was already a time-honoured book when they were written."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 488.

"There seems to me nothing in these extracts to compel us to deny the authorship of Apollinaris. Nor must we refuse credit to the author of the Preface [to the 'Paschal Chronicle'] any more than to other writers of the same times on whose testimony many books of the ancients have been received, although not mentioned by Eusebius or any other of his contemporaries; especially as Eusebius declares below that it was only some select books that had come to his hands out of many that Apollinaris had written."—DR. ROUTH, 'Rel. Sacr.' i. p. 167.

"The authorship of these extracts was indeed questioned by some earlier writers, but on entirely mistaken grounds; and at the present time the consensus among critics of the most opposite schools is all but universal. 'On the genuineness of these fragments, which Neander questioned, there is now no more dispute,' writes Scholten."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 489.

⁴ Tatian.—The case of Tatian is well expressed in the following.

"After the death of Justin, between 170–175, Tatian wrote an oration against the Greeks, and in it he makes use of S. John's Gospel. Afterwards he lapsed into the heresy of the Encratites, and probably after his fall he composed a Diatesaron, or Harmony of our four Gospels.

"First, as to Tatian's use of S. John; and here our task, if irksome, is at least easy. Tatian is discoursing on the darkness of man's heart, 'and this,' he says, 'is the sense of the declaration, the darkness doth not comprehend the light' (Tatian, 'Orat.' 13, p. 60, ed. Otto). He is exhorting the Greeks to leave the service of demons for that of the true God, and he gives this reason: 'All things (have been made) by Him, and without Him nothing has been made' (Ib. 19, p. 88). This surely is plain proof; and besides these there are other phrases which we may fairly attribute to the influence of our fourth Gospel, now that we have established the fact of its use by Tatian. Thus we read, 'God is a Spirit' (Ib. 4, p. 18), (words found in S. John, and nowhere else); and again, 'God was in the beginning, but we have received it that the beginning is the power of the Word' (Ib. 5, p. 20). Our first two examples are clearer than many undoubted patristic citations . . . We are reminded that, even if Tatian quotes the fourth Gospel, there is no sign that he regarded it as authoritative. Now he quotes a verse from the first chapter of S. John with a special formula; he calls it τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. This formula occurs often, and in different parts of the New Testament, and it always serves to introduce a quotation from the Scriptures. Tatian, then, not only quotes S. John's Gospel, but he quotes it as a recognized authority."—DUBLIN REV. April 1875, p. 375.

² Ibid.

"Eusebius, the oldest authority, states (Hist. Eccles. iv. 29, 16) that Tatian, 'having made, I know not how, a certain collection and combination of the Gospels, called this the Diatesaron.' Eusebius had not seen it, and he did not know how Tatian arranged the Gospels, but he was certain that it was our Gospels which he arranged. If Eusebius had been in doubt as to the Gospels which Tatian used, he would have said that he did not know whence, i.e. from what sources (ὅθεν οὐδ' ᾔσθην, as in Hist. Eccles. iii. 36 ii.) Tatian composed his Harmony, nor would he have stated categorically that Tatian made it from 'the Gospels.' The evidence of Eusebius is confirmed by the fact, that no four Gospels except ours were ever separated from others and regarded as the four, and by the knowledge which we have, that Tatian was familiar with the Gospel of S. John. The next authority is Epiphanius. He, like Eusebius, had no personal knowledge of the Diatesaron; but his account deserves much less consideration, not only because of his inferiority to Eusebius in learning and accuracy, but also because Epiphanius does but profess to repeat a vague rumour. 'The Diatesaron,' he tells us, 'which some call the Gospel according to the Hebrews, is said to have been made by him' (S. Epiphani. Har. xlii. i.) . . . Our third authority is Theodoret (Har. Feb. i. 20), perhaps the most important of all. He was Bishop of Cyrus, in Syria. He found that the Catholics of his diocese used Tatian's Diatesaron, regarding it as a useful compendium. Theodoret, who was specially learned in the history of heresies, knew the bad reputation of Tatian; he collected two hundred copies of the book, found upon examination that it omitted the genealogies which traced our Lord's descent to David, and finally prohibited this Diatesaron, and introduced the full records of the Gospel instead. Observe, Theodoret knew the book well; he calls it the Diatesaron, and, anxious as he was to find fault, he does not say a syllable about its being compiled from apocryphal Gospels. If ever there was a strong argument from silence, it is this. And, further, Theodoret distinctly implies that Tatian's Diatesaron was made from our Gospels; for he speaks of the heretic as having 'cut out the genealogies, and all which related to our Lord's birth from the seed of David according to the flesh' . . . Thus there is every reason to believe that Tatian compiled his Harmony from the Gospels. The oldest and the most accurate authority tells us that he actually did so, and his statement is confirmed by Theodoret, who had seen and examined the Diatesaron.

"Tatian's evidence has a double value, for it shows that the Gospels were received without as well as within the Church. Nor were the Encratites the only heretics who availed themselves of the canonical Gospels."—Ibid. p. 376, &c.

"Eusebius calls it, 'of the four,' as does Theodoret. This is strong about A.D. 172. In his oration against the Gentiles, generally reckoned his only remaining work, he has informed us of several things respecting himself. That he was born in Assyria, was originally a heathen, and was converted to Christianity by reading the books of the Old Testament, and by reflecting on the corruptions and absurdities of Gentilism; and that he had been a considerable traveller, and seen the world; and afterwards came to Rome, where he farther improved himself in the arts and sciences. The oration itself shows him to be a man of reading, and well acquainted with the Greek learning; which character is also universally allowed him by the ancient writers. He mentions Justin Martyr with great respect; and by many ancient Christian writers he is said to have been his disciple; but some time after Justin's death, which happened about the year A.D. 165, he fell into a great variety of absurd opinions. He is said to be the author of the Encratites or Continents; condemned the use of wine; denied the lawfulness of marriage, the reality of Christ's sufferings, the salvation of Adam; embraced the opinion of Valentinus respecting Æons; and asserted with Marcion, that there are two gods. But whatever were his principles in the latter part of his life, he bears valuable testimony to the antiquity of the Gospels, and to the great estimation in which they were held in his time.

Irenæus says that Tatian was a follower of Justin, and mentions the heresies he taught after Justin's martyrdom.¹ Clement of Alexandria makes frequent mention of him, and confutes him.² Origen speaks of his oration to the Greeks as a learned work.³ Eusebius, in his Chronicle, dates his heresy at the 12th of the Emperor Marcus Antoninus, or the year 173 A.D.⁴ S. Epiphanius has given a minute account of his heresy.⁵

S. Jerome's account of Tatian is as follows:⁶ Tatian, who first taught rhetoric and gained a great deal of honour thereby, was a follower of Justin Martyr, and flourished in the Church as long as he adhered to him. But afterwards puffed up with the pride of eloquence, he founded a new heresy, called that of the Encratites, which was afterwards improved by Severus. Tatian wrote an infinite number of books; of which there is one written against the Gentiles, which is reckoned the most considerable of all his works. He flourished under the Emperor M. Antoninus Verus, and Lucius Aurelius Commodus.

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæres. i. 28, l. p. 690.

iii. 23, 8, p. 965.

² Clemens Alex. Strom. i. 21, vol. i. p. 820.

iii. 12, vol. i. p. 1182.

iii. 13, vol. i. p. 1191.

³ Origen, contr. Cels. i. 16, vol. i. p. 688.

proof that there were four, and but four Gospels, which were in esteem with Christians. It seems that Eusebius had not seen this Harmony or collection of Tatian. . . .

"All the fault that Theodoret, who had seen so many copies, finds with this performance, is that Tatian had left out the genealogies. . . .

"We see plainly, that the Gospels, and many of S. Paul's Epistles, were received by Tatian, and owned by him to the last; and his

Eusebius, in his 'Ecclesiastical History,' having given an account of Tatian and his opinions, from Irenæus, and then of Severus and his followers, who had made additions to some of Tatian's opinions, adds—"But their first leader, Tatian, composed I know not what harmony and collection of the Gospels, which he called [Dia Tassarou] Of the Four, which is still in the hands of some. And it is said that he had the assurance to alter [or explain] some words of the Apostle, as pretending to correct the composition and order of his style. He left a great number of books; of which his celebrated discourse against the Gentiles has been quoted by many, which seems to be the most elegant and most useful of all his writings."⁷

Theodoret speaks of this book thus, "He composed a Gospel which is called Dia Tassarou [Of the Four], leaving out the genealogies, and everything that shows the Lord to have been born of the seed of David according to the flesh; which has been used not only by those of his sect, but also by them who follow the Apostolical doctrine: they not perceiving the fraud of the composition, but simply using it as a compendious book. I have also met with above two hundred of these books which were in esteem in our churches, all which I took away and laid aside in a parcel, and placed in their room the Gospels of the Four Evangelists."⁸

Since the Oration against the Gentiles is commended by so many, we may hence conclude that it was written before the year A.D. 172, about which time Tatian deserted the Catholic opinions; and as it seems to have been written after Justin's death, we may set it down as written some time between A.D. 165 and 172.

Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 144) flourished about A.D. 170. Eusebius in his Chronicle, at the eleventh year of Marcus Antoninus, which is the A.D. 172, says, "Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, a sacred man, was then in reputation."⁹

Of the seven letters which Eusebius says Dionysius wrote to different churches, and which were extant in his time, only a few fragments remain, preserved by Eusebius. Few as these fragments are, they are interesting and valuable, as showing among other things, the title which the Scriptures of the New Testament, and more especially the Gospels, had even then received, 'the Scriptures of the Lord;' and as showing also the extreme care and jealousy with which the

⁴ Eusebius, Chronicon, vol. i. p. 563.

⁵ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xlv. vol. i. p. 836.

⁶ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xxix. vol. ii. p. 645.

⁷ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 29, vol. ii. p. 400.

⁸ Theodoret, Hæret. Fab. i. 29, vol. iv. p. 156.

⁹ Eusebius, Chronicon, vol. i. p. 563.

rejecting any of the rest is of no weight, when a man gave way to such manifest absurdities as he did in the latter part of his life."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 149, &c.

"I imagine that there can be really no doubt about Tatian. Whatever may have been the nature of the Diatessaron, the 'Address to the Greeks' contains references which it is mere paradox to dispute."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 305.

Catholic Christians guarded these Scriptures against the attempts of the heretics to corrupt them.

In his letter to the Romans, addressed to Soter, then the bishop, Dionysius says, "I have written Epistles, at the desire of the brethren, but the apostles of the devil have filled them with darnel, taking out some things and adding others, for whom there is a woe reserved. It is not to be wondered, therefore, if some have attempted to corrupt the Scriptures of the Lord (τῶν κυριακῶν γραφῶν), since they have attempted the same things in writings not comparable to them."¹

The Muratorian Fragment, or fragment on the Canon of the New Testament, was discovered in the Ambrosian Library at Milan in 1740 by Cardinal Muratori, in a manuscript of the seventh or eighth century, and is called the Muratorian Fragment, or the Muratorian Canon, from the name of the man who discovered it, and who first printed it as a specimen of corrupt Latinity. Gradually critics awoke to the importance of this fragment for the history of the Canon, and it has been re-edited, examined, and discussed by a multitude of critics.

Several copies of this fragment have been published in England.²

This fragment is generally allowed by competent scholars to have been written about A.D. 170, or a little, but not much, later.³ In the state in which we now have it, the fragment begins with the last words of a sentence, which most probably refers to S. Mark. Then follows "in the third place the Gospel according to S. Luke," of which some account is given. "The fourth of the Gospels" is that of John, "one of the disciples of the Lord." A legend is then related as to the origin of this Gospel. Then mention is made of the Acts, which are attributed to S. Luke. Then follow thirteen Epistles of S. Paul by name. Two Epistles, professing to be addressed to the Laodiceans and Alexandrines, are dismissed as forged in the interests of the heresy of Marcion. The Epistle of Jude and two that bear the superscription of John are admitted. Likewise the two Apocalypses of John and Peter.

Thus, in this fragment, we have a definite list of the books received by the Church, and a distinct separation made between these and those that are rejected.

The fourth place is given to the Gospel of S. John, "a disciple of the Lord," and the occasion of its composition is thus described: "At the entreaties of his fellow-disciples and his bishops John said, Fast with me for three days from this time, and whatever shall be revealed to each of us [whether it be favourable to my writing or not] let us relate it to one another. On the same night it was revealed to Andrew, one of the Apostles, that John should relate all things in his own name, aided by the revision of all . . . What wonder is it, then, that John brings forward each detail with so much emphasis in his epistles? saying of himself, What we have seen with our eyes, and heard with our ears, and our hands have handled, these things have we written unto you. For so he professes that he was not only an eye-witness, but also a hearer, and moreover a historian of all the wonderful works of the Lord in order."

This account of the origin of John's Gospel is valuable, not

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 23, vol. ii. p. 389.
Routh, Rel. Sac. vol. i. p. 181.

² Dr. Routh, Rel. Sac. vol. i. p. 394.
Prof. Westcott on the Canon of the New Testament, p. 527.
Dr. Tregelles, Oxford, 1867.

³ Dionysius.—"By 'Scriptures of the Lord,' he seems to mean the Scriptures of the New Testament in general, as containing the doctrine and precepts of the Lord Jesus."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 146.

"Of course it is not affirmed that the collection here called αἱ κυριακαὶ γραφαὶ was identical with our New Testament, but simply that the phrase shows that a collection of writings belonging to the New Testament existed. The whole usage of κυριακαὶ in Christian writers is decisive against the application of the word to the Scriptures of the Old Testament in this connection."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 188.

"Credner ('Beiträge,' i. p. 52) gives his judgment thus: 'Dionysius, about the year 170, gives to the Gospels the significant title of γραφὰ κυριακά, an expression of frequent occurrence in the literature of the time,' and he goes on to prove this by references to Irenæus, ii. 35, 4."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 374.

The Muratorian Fragment.—"The date of the composition of the Fragment is given by allusion made in it to Hermas. It claims to have been written by a contemporary of Pius, and cannot on that supposition be placed much later than 170 A.D. Internal evidence fully confirms its claim to this high antiquity; and it may be regarded on the whole as a summary of the opinion of the Western Church on the Canon shortly after the middle of the second century."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 209.

"I can see no sound objection to the date 170-180 A.D.; but by adding ten years to this we shall reach the extreme limit admissible.

"I do not know whether it is necessary to refer to the objection from the absence of any mention of the first two Synoptic Gospels through the mutilated state of the document. It is true that the inference that they were originally mentioned rests only 'upon conjecture,' but it is the kind of conjecture that, taking all things into consideration—the extent to which the evidence of the fragment in other respects corresponds with the Catholic tradition, the state of the canon in Irenæus, the relation of the evidence for the first Gospel in particular to that for the others—can be reckoned as very little less than ninety-nine chances out of a hundred."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 266.

"The Muratorian writer agrees with Irenæus in representing our Gospels, and these only, as the traditional inheritance of the Church; for though the fragment is mutilated at the beginning, so that the names of the first two Evangelists have disappeared, the identity cannot be seriously questioned."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' August 1875, p. 395.

"The fragment tells its own tale. It was written not long after 155, i.e. a time which we may place approximately with many eminent critics, who defend and who deny the authenticity of the Gospels, about 170 A.D. The fragment proves that our four Gospels were received within the whole Catholic Church at that date, as at once authentic and inspired. The writer may deserve little credit when he relates the circumstances under which S. John wrote his Gospel, but he has a right to be heard when he speaks of the authority of the Gospels in the Church at his own time, and on this, the one point which concerns us here, his evidence is clear and explicit."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 372.

in proportion to its correctness, but independently of that, as showing in what estimation the fourth Gospel was held at the time when this fragment was written, namely, that it was written by John, one of the Apostles, an eye-witness, and that he was inspired by the Holy Spirit for his work.

The Clementine Homilies (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 376) are nineteen homilies in Greek, published by Cotelierius, with two letters prefixed; one of them written in the name of Peter, the other in the name of Clement, to James, Bishop of Jerusalem.

The date of these Clementine Homilies is uncertain, but the most probable opinion appears to be that they were written by an Ebionite in the second century, and were falsely attributed to Clement of Rome.

That the Clementine Homilies quote our Gospels can scarcely be doubted.*

The Old Latin, or Old Italic Version of the New Testament.—The Canon of the Old Latin Version coincides with that of the Muratorian Fragment, and contains the four Gospels, the Acts, thirteen Epistles of S. Paul, the three Catholic Epistles of S. John, the First Epistle of S. Peter, the Epistle of S. Jude, and the Apocalypse. To these the Epistle to the Hebrews was added subsequently, but before the time of Tertullian, and without the author's name.^b

Critics have shown that the Old Latin Version was written about the middle of the second century, certainly before 170 A.D.; how much before has not yet been decided.

It has been pointed out that the great mass of the people in Rome, at the time of the Christian era, especially of the poorer classes, from which converts to Christianity were first drawn, were chiefly Greek, either by descent or by speech. Among the names of the fifteen bishops of Rome up to the end of the second century, four only are Latin. When S. Paul wrote to the Roman Church, he wrote in Greek; and in the long list of salutations to its members at the end of the Epistle, only four genuine Latin names occur. Shortly after, Clement wrote to the Corinthians, in Greek, in the name of the Church of Rome. For these and similar reasons, it has been concluded that Rome was not the home of the Old Latin Version of the New Testament. The late Cardinal Wiseman was the first to point out, what has since been generally accepted, that the Old Latin Version had its origin in North Africa.² By an elaborate comparison of the words, the phrases, and grammatical constructions of this version with the parallel instances by which they can be illustrated from African writers, such as Tertullian, Cyprian, and others, and from them only, he has made out a case which all, who have followed him, have accepted as irresistible.

The Syriac Version.³—The Peshito or "simple" Syriac, that is, Aramæan Version, is assigned almost universally to the most remote Christian antiquity. The Syriac Christians of Malabar even now claim for it the right to be considered as an Eastern original of the New Testament; and though their tradition is unsupported by external evidence, it is not to a certain extent destitute of all plausibility. There can be no doubt that the so-called Syro-Chaldaic (Aramæan) was the vernacular language of the Jews of Palestine in the time of our Lord, however much it may have been superseded

¹ See Scrivener's Introduction, p. 252.

² Westcott on the Canon of the New Test. p. 244.

³ Cardinal Wiseman's Essays, vol. i. 1853, Rome.

³ See—

Dr. Scrivener's Introduction, p. 229, &c.

Prof. Westcott on the Canon of Scripture, p. 233.

 Clementine Homilies.—After a very careful examination of the several passages in the 'Clementine Homilies,' in which the Gospels are supposed to be quoted, Mr. Sanday comes to the following conclusion: "Taking into account the whole extent to which the special peculiarities of the first Gospel reappear in the Clementines, I think we shall be left in little doubt that that Gospel has been actually used by the writer" (p. 177).

"We have, then, the same kind of choice set before us as in the case of Justin. Either the Clementine writer quotes our present Gospels, or else he quotes some other composition later than them, and which implies them. In other words, if he does not bear witness to our Gospels at first hand, he does so at second hand, and by the interpolation of a further intermediate stage. It is quite possible that he may have had access to such a tertiary document, and that it may be the same which is the source of his apocryphal quotations; that he did draw from apocryphal sources, partly perhaps oral, but probably in the main written, there can, I think, be little doubt. Neither is it easy to draw the line, and say exactly what quotations shall be referred to such sources, and what shall not. The facts do not permit us to claim the exclusive use of the canonical Gospels. But that they were used, mediately or immediately, and to a greater or less degree, is, I believe, beyond question" (p. 186).

"That the Clementine Homilies imply the use of the fourth Gospel may be considered to be, not indeed certain in a strict sense of the word, but as probable as most human affairs can be. The real element of doubt is in regard to their date, and their evidence must be taken subject to this uncertainty" (p. 295).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

b The Old Latin Version.—"On the unity of the Old Latin Version there is a difference of opinion among scholars, but none as to its date. Thus Dr. Tregelles writes: 'The expressions of Tertullian have been rightly rested on as showing that he knew and recognized one translation, and that this version was in several places (in his opinion) opposed to what was found "in Græco authenticum." This version must have been made a sufficiently long time before the age when Tertullian wrote, and before the Latin translator of Irenæus, for it to have got into general circulation. This leads us back towards the middle of the second century at the latest: how much earlier the version may have been, we have no proof; for we are already led back into the time when no records tell us anything respecting the North African Church.' (Horne's Introduction, p. 233.) Dr. Tregelles, it should be remembered, is speaking as a text critic, of which branch of science his works are one of the noblest monuments, and not directly of the history of the Canon. His usual opponent in text critical matters, but an equally exact and trustworthy writer, Dr. Scrivener, agrees with him here both as to the unity of the version and as to its date from the middle of the century. ('Introduction,' 2nd ed. pp. 300, 302, 450, 452.) Dr. Westcott, too, writes in Smith's Dictionary, 'Tertullian distinctly recognizes the general currency of a Latin version of the New Testament, though not necessarily of every book at present included in the Canon, which, even in his time, had been able to mould the popular language. This was characterised by a "rudeness" and "simplicity" which seems to point to the nature of its origin.'—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 321.

by Greek in the common business of life.¹ The dialect of the Peshito, even as it stands now, represents in part at least that form of Aramaic which was current in Palestine.

Tradition fixes on Edessa as the place whence the Peshito took its rise. Gregory Bar Hebræus, one of the most learned and accurate of Syrian writers, relates that the New Testament Peshito was made in the time of Thaddeus and Abgarus, King of Edessa, when, according to the universal opinion of ancient writers, the Apostle went to proclaim Christianity in Mesopotamia. It is worthy of notice that he assumes the Apostolic origin of the New Testament Peshito as certain; for while he gives three hypotheses as to the date of the Old Testament version, he speaks of this as a known and acknowledged fact.*

Ephrem Syrus, himself a deacon of Edessa, treats this version in such a manner as to prove that it was already old in the fourth century. He quotes it as a book of established authority, calling it "our Version." He speaks of the "translator" as one whose words were familiar;² and though the dialects of the East are proverbially permanent, his explanations show that its language, even in his time, had become partially obsolete.

The Peshito was universally received by the different sects into which the Syrian Church was divided in the fourth century, and so has continued current even to the present time. All the Syrian Christians,³ whether belonging to the Nestorian, Jacobite, or Roman communion, hold the Peshito authoritative, and use it in their public services. It must consequently have been established by familiar use before the first heresies arose, or it could not have remained without a rival. Numerous versions or revisions of the New Testament were indeed made afterwards; but no one ever supplanted the Peshito for ecclesiastical purposes. Like the Latin Vulgate in the Western Church, the Peshito became in the East the fixed and unalterable Rule of Scripture.

The Peshito was taken as the basis of other versions in the East. An Arabic and a Persian version were made from it. At the beginning of the fifth century (before the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431) an Armenian version was commenced from the Syrian, in the absence of Greek manuscripts.⁴

These indications of the antiquity of the Peshito do not possess any conclusive authority, but they all tend in the same direction, and there is nothing on the other side to reverse or modify them; they all go to show that there is no sufficient reason to desert the opinion which has obtained the sanction of the most competent scholars, that its formation is to be fixed within the first half of the second century. The text of the Peshito, even in its present state, like the Old Italic, exhibits remarkable agreement with the most ancient Greek manuscripts and the earliest quotations.⁵

FROM A.D. 150 TO A.D. 100.

The following are the principal writers and extant documents assigned to the first half of the second century:—

	A.D.
Hermas	100
S. Ignatius	107
S. Polycarp	108
The Epistle containing an account of Polycarp's martyrdom
Papias	116
Quadratus	123
Basilides	circa 125
Aristides	126
Acippa Castor	132
Marcion	circa 140
Aristo of Pella	140
Valentinus	140
Justin Martyr	140
The Epistle to Diognetus

S. Justin Martyr (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 125) was born in Flavia Neapolis, anciently called Sichem, a city of Samaria in Palestine.

He was early a lover of truth, and studied philosophy under several masters; first under a Stoic, next a Peripatetic, then a Pythagorean, and lastly a Platonic, whose principles and sentiments he preferred before all others, until he became acquainted with the Christian religion, which he then embraced as the only certain and useful philosophy. Of his conversion to Christianity he gives an account in his 'Dialogue with Trypho.' All these particulars we have from himself.

Justin is mentioned by many ancient Christian writers;

¹ Cardinal Wiseman, Horæ Syriacæ.

² Ibid. p. 116, &c.

³ Ibid. p. 108.

* The Syriac Version.—"A nearer approximation of date would be obtained by determining the age of the version represented by the celebrated Curetonian fragments. There is a strong tendency among critics, which seems rapidly approaching to a consensus, to regard this as bearing the same relation to the Peshito that the Old Latin does to Jerome's Vulgate, that of an older unrevised to a later revised version."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 323.

⁵ The Old Italic Version.—"The text of the old Italic version, as found in a certain class of manuscripts, was already in use as early as the second century. The text of the Old Italic is substantially that which Tertullian, about the end of the second century, and the Latin translator of Irenæus still earlier, made use of. If we had any Greek text of the second century to compare with this Old Italic version, we should then be able to arrive at the original

⁴ Dr. Tregelles, Smith's Bibl. Dict.: VERSIONS.

Greek text at that time in use. We should thus be able to approach very nearly to the original text which came from the Apostles' hands, since it is certain that the text of the second century must resemble more closely that of the first than any later text can be expected to do. Such a manuscript is before us in the Sinaitic copy, which more than any other is in closest agreement with the Old Italic version. We do not mean that there are no other versions which agree as closely with the Sinaitic copy as the Old Italic version, which the translator, who lived in North Africa, somewhere near our modern city of Algiers, had before him. For we find that the Old Syriac version, which has been recently found, is quite as closely related as the Italic. The fathers of the Egyptian Church of the second and third century, moreover, established the trustworthiness of this Sinaitic text."—PROF. TISCHENDORF, 'When were our Gospels written?' p. 115.

his disciple Tatian, by S. Irenæus, Tertullian, S. Methodius, Eusebius, S. Jerome, S. Epiphanius, Photinus, and others.

The principal works of Justin are his two 'Apologies' and his 'Dialogue' with Trypho the Jew. The first and larger 'Apology' was addressed to Titus Antoninus the Pious, Marcus Antoninus, and Lucius Verus, the Senate and people of Rome, somewhere about the year A.D. 145.^a

The larger 'Apology' is still extant entire. The beginning of the second 'Apology' is wanting, as is the conclusion of the first and beginning of the second part of the 'Dialogue with Trypho.'^b

^a S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 54.

* Justin Martyr.—Modern critics seem pretty generally to place the two Apologies in the years 147–150 A.D. and the Dialogue against Trypho a little later. Dr. Keim indeed would throw forward the date of Justin's writings as far as from 155–160 on account of the mention of Marcion, but this is decided by both Hilgenfeld and Lipsius to be too late. I see that Mr. Hort, whose opinion on such matters deserves high respect, comes to the conclusion 'that we may without fear of considerable error set down Justin's first Apology to 145, or better still to 146, and his death to 148. The Second Apology, if really separate from the first, will then fall in 146 or 147, and the Dialogue with Trypho about the same time.'—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 89.

"A flood of light would probably have been poured on the history of the Canon, if time had spared these precious documents [the lost ecclesiastical literature of the second century] of Christian antiquity. Even the extant writings of the second century, however important they may be from other points of view, give a very inadequate idea of the relation of their respective authors to the Canonical writers. In the case of Justin Martyr for instance, it is not from his Apologies or from his Dialogue with Trypho that we should expect to obtain the fullest and most direct information on this point. In works like these, addressed to heathens and Jews, who attributed no authority to the writings of Apostles and Evangelists, and for whom the names of the writers would have no meaning, we are not surprised that he refers to those writings for the most part anonymously and with reserve. On the other hand, if his treatise against Marcion (to take a single instance) had been preserved, we should probably have been placed in a position to estimate with tolerable accuracy his relation to the Canonical writings."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Jan. 1875, p. 170.

* After making a very careful summary of the passages in which Justin Martyr appears to quote our present Gospels, but also with the special object of bringing out the points in which he seems to differ from or add to the Canonical narratives, Mr. Sanday makes this important statement: "If such is the outline of Justin's Gospel, it appears to be really a question of comparatively small importance whether or not he made use of our present Gospels in their present form. If he did not use these Gospels, he used other documents which contained substantially the same matter. . . . It is antecedently quite possible that the narrative of these events may have been derived from a document other than our Gospels; but if so, that is only proof of the existence of further and independent evidence to the truth of the history. This document, supposing it to exist, is a surprising instance of the homogeneity of the evangelical tradition; it differs from the three synoptic Gospels, nay, we may say even from the four Gospels, less than they differ from each other.

"But we may go further than this. If Justin really used a separate substantive document now lost, that document, to judge from its contents, must have represented a secondary, or rather a tertiary stage of the evangelical literature; it must have implied the previous existence of our present Gospels" (p. 98).

"It seems to me that the choice lies between two alternatives and no more; either Justin used our Gospels or else he used a document later than our Gospels and presupposing them" (p. 102).

Justin has quoted the Gospels in numberless places in his 'Apologies' and 'Dialogue,' though always without expressing the names of the Evangelists. The following will serve as specimens:—

"At the same time an angel was sent to the same virgin, saying, 'Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb by the Holy Ghost, and thou shalt bring forth a Son, and He shall be called the Son of the Highest. And thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins,' as they have taught who have written the history of all things concerning our Saviour Jesus Christ. And we believe them."¹

"Taking these salient points together with the mass of the coincidences each in its place, and with the due weight assigned to it, the conviction seems forced upon us that Justin did either mediate or immediately, and most probably immediately and directly, make use of our Canonical Gospels" (p. 106).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

"We proceed to a closer comparison between the facts in Christ's life, as given by Justin, and the narrative in our Gospels. We must refer our readers who wish to examine the question thoroughly to Credner's tables of the Gospel history, as it can be extracted from Justin; and here we can only state the results of our own investigation. We have counted one hundred and thirty-six distinct statements made by Justin with regard to our Lord's life. It is, of course, a little hard to settle what is to be reckoned as a distinct statement, but we have done our best to make the calculation impartially. Further, Justin gives sixty sayings of our Lord. Of these one hundred and thirty-six facts, one hundred and sixteen occur substantially in our Gospels. Of the sixty sayings, all are found there in substance except two. Thus the proportion between the cases in which Justin agrees with our Gospels, compared with those in which he diverges from them, are as 174 to 22. These additions or divergences, moreover, are for the most part exceedingly slight. A few seem to be inferences from our text, others to be lapses of memory, the rest probably drawn from tradition."—Dublin Rev.' April 1875, p. 384.

The general tenor of Justin Martyr's teaching is well expressed in the following words: "The leading conception of this passage, which sees all theology through the medium of the Logos, and therefore identifies all the theophanies in the Old Testament with the Person of Christ, though it lingers on through the succeeding ages, is essentially characteristic of the second century. The Apologists generally exhibit this phenomenon; but in none is it more persistent than in Justin Martyr, who wrote a quarter of a century before Melito. Even the manner in which the conception is worked out by Melito, has striking parallels in Justin. Thus Justin states that this Divine Power, who was begotten by God before all creation, is called sometimes 'the glory of the Lord, sometimes Son, sometimes Wisdom, sometimes God, sometimes Lord and Word, while sometimes He calls Himself Chief Captain (ἀρχιστράτηγος), appearing in the form of man to Joshua the son of Nun (τῷ τοῦ Ναυὶ Ἰησοῦ) (Dialog. 61, p. 284). Elsewhere he states that Christ is 'King, and Priest, and God, and Lord, and Angel, and Man, and Chief Captain, and Stone,' &c., and he undertakes to show this from all the scriptures (Dialog. 34, p. 251). And again, in a third passage he says that the same Person, who is called Son of God in the memoirs of the Apostles, 'went forth from the Father before all created things through His power and counsel,' being designated 'Wisdom, and Day, and Orient, and Sword, and Stone, and Staff, and Jacob, and Israel, now in one way, and now in another, in the sayings of the prophets,' and that 'He became man through the Virgin' (Dialog. 100, p. 327). Nor do these passages stand alone. This same conception pervades the whole of Justin's Dialogue, and through it all the phenomena of the Old Testament are explained."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 484.

(Matt. i. 20, 21. Compare Luke i. 31.) Thus he writes in his first 'Apology.'

In the same 'Apology,' he says: "But lest we should seem to deceive you, it may be fit to lay before you some of the doctrines of Christ. His words were short and concise. For He was no sophist, but His word was the power of God. Of chastity He spoke in this manner: 'Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, has committed adultery with her already in his heart, in the sight of God. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out. For it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of heaven with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into eternal fire. And he who marries her that is divorced from another man, committeth adultery.'"¹ (Matt. v. 28, 29, 32.)

"And it is written in the Gospel, that He said, 'All things are delivered to me of the Father. And no man knoweth the Father but the Son; neither the Son, save the Father, and they to whom the Son will reveal Him.'"² (Matt. xi. 27.)

"And the Virgin Mary having been filled with faith and joy, when the angel Gabriel brought her good tidings, that the Spirit of the Lord should rest upon her, and the power of the Highest overshadow her, and therefore that Holy thing born of her should be the Son of God, answered, 'Be it unto me according to thy word.'"³ (Luke i. 36, 38.)

Justin chiefly quotes the Gospels of S. Matthew and S. Luke; and S. Mark only seldom. In the following passage all these three Gospels are quoted: "And in other words He says, 'Depart from me into outer darkness, which the Father has prepared for Satan and his angels' (Matt. xxv. 41). And again, He said in other words, 'I give unto you power to tread upon serpents, and scorpions, and venomous beasts, and upon all the power of the enemy' (Luke x. 19). And before He was crucified, He said, 'The Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the Scribes and Pharisees, and be crucified, and rise again the third day.'"⁴ (Mark viii. 31.)

The following passages will show that Justin had read S. John's Gospel.^b "But He is the first power next after God by

¹ S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 21.

² S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. 352.

³ Ibid. ii. p. 354.

⁴ Ibid. ii. p. 303.

^a "Let us compare Justin's language with that of the first Synoptic Gospel. Matthew alone, of all the New Testament writers, uses the expression 'kingdom of heaven' (βασιλεία των ουρανων); it recurs eleven times in Justin. He alone speaks of the 'Heavenly Father' (ὁ πατήρ ὁ οὐράνιος); the same phrase recurs three times in Justin. S. Matthew uses no less than three times a very peculiar Greek expression to describe the healing miracles of Christ. He speaks of Him as 'healing every disease and every infirmity' (θεραπεύων πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν). Of the word for 'infirmity' there is no other instance in the New Testament, while the adjective from which it is derived has in the rest of its books a meaning widely different. Even in the entire Septuagint the collocation of the three principal words (θεραπεύων μαλακίαν καὶ νόσον) does not occur; yet this peculiar phrase is repeated by Justin (Apol. i. 31, p. 80); and even Hilgenfeld, in an early work directed against the very identity of Justin's Memoirs with our Gospels, which we are trying to establish, threw down his arms when he came to this coincidence, and acknowledged that the recurrence of such a singular expression in Justin must be regarded as a reminiscence of Matthew's Gospel."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 385.

"There are nine passages in Justin which agree, some quite, all nearly word for word, with our Gospel of S. Matthew. We shall give one instance. 'Our Christ,' we read in the Dialogue, 'declared upon earth at that time to those who said that Elias must come before the Christ—Elias indeed will come, and will restore all things; but I say to you that Elias has come already and they did not know him, but they did to him whatsoever they willed. And it is written, then the disciples understood that He spoke to them about John the Baptist.' We subjoin the commentary of Credner, and, in doing so, we take a critic who has been the most powerful opponent of the position which we maintain. Discussing the last clause of this passage, which is introduced with the formula, 'and it is written,' he says, 'These words can only come from our Matthew, with whom they are in verbal agreement, for it is utterly improbable that a remark of such a special nature should have been made in identically the same way by two persons distinct from and independent of each other' (Credner, 'Beiträge,' i. p. 237). Over and above the direct coincidences between Justin and our First Gospel, there are other hardly less striking proofs that he had read our S. Matthew. It is well known that our First Gospel quotes passages from the Old Testament which are not to be found exactly as they are quoted, either in the Hebrew text or the Septuagint. In five or six instances these peculiarities of Matthew's citation reappear in Justin. As he gives them, they are not to be found in the Hebrew or the Septuagint, or in other books of the New Testament. He must therefore have taken them second-hand from S. Matthew. The most striking instances are the quotations from Micah, in Apol. i. 34, p. 86, ed. Otto, comp. Matt. ii. 6; from Zechariah (Justin has Sophonias by mistake), Apol. i. 35, p. 90, comp. Matt. xxi. 5; from Jeremiah, Dial. 78, p. 270, comp. Matt. ii. 18.—Ibid. p. 387.

^b "In regard to the much disputed question of the use of the fourth Gospel by Justin, those who maintain the affirmative have again emphatic support from Dr. Keim" (p. 278). After a minute examination of some of the passages in Justin Martyr, which, either from similarity of expression or from similarity of doctrine contained in them, appear to be quotations from the fourth Gospel, as well as the various explanations which have been given of these, Mr. Sanday thus concludes, "No other Christian writer had combined these two ideas before—the divine Logos, with the historical personality of Jesus. When, therefore, we find the ideas combined as in Justin, we are necessarily referred to the fourth Gospel for them; for the strangely inverted suggestion of Volkmar, that the author of the fourth Gospel borrowed from Justin, is on chronological, if not on other grounds certainly untenable. We shall see that the fourth Gospel was without doubt in existence at the date which Volkmar assigns to Justin's Apology, 150 A.D." (p. 287).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

"Hilgenfeld and Keim are certainly among the most celebrated advocates of the false criticism, which has striven to undermine the historical evidence for the authenticity of the Gospels; but while they hold their original position on the main point, they have been obliged to give way with respect to Justin. In 1850 Hilgenfeld, in an elaborate work, admitted that Justin used a recension of S. Matthew's Gospel, and that he made some distinct but inconsiderable use of our S. Luke, adding that his use of S. John was 'in the highest degree improbable.' In 1867 he admitted as beyond doubt that Justin used all our synoptic Gospels, a matter which was by that time regarded as a settled question, even in the Tübingen school. In 1875, in his last and most elaborate work, he assumes Justin's use of our Synoptics, and confesses that it is 'hard to deny' his use of S. John's Gospel. Keim, in 1867, considers the use of S. John in Justin absolutely certain."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 396.

"Whatever internal coincidences there are between the con-the Father and Lord of all, and Son, and the Word. And in what manner being made flesh He became man, I shall show hereafter."¹ (John i. 14.)

Speaking of John the Baptist, "They suspected him to be the Christ, to whom he said, 'I am not the Christ, but the voice of one crying, There will come One mightier than me, whose shoes' latchet I am not worthy to bear.'" (John i. 20, 23, 27.² Compare Matt. iii. 11; Luke iii. 16.)

¹ S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 52.

² S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. p. 332.

tents of St. John and those of the Synoptics, the external differences are exceedingly striking, and it is not at all to my present purpose to keep this fact out of sight. The plan of St. John's Gospel is different, the style is different, the subjects of the discourses, the scene of action, the incidents, and (with one exception) the miracles, all are different.

"Now this will greatly facilitate the investigation of the question as to whether any author had St. John before him when he wrote. There may be some uncertainty with respect to the quotations from the Synoptics, as to whether an early writer quotes one or other, or derives what he cites from some earlier source, as for instance from one of St. Luke's παραβολαί.

"But it cannot be so with St. John. A quotation of, or reference to, any words of any discourse of our Lord, or an account of any transaction as reported by St. John, can be discerned in an instant. At least it can be at once seen that it cannot have been derived from the Synoptics, or from any supposed apocryphal or traditional sources from which the Synoptics derived their information.

"The special object of this Gospel is the identification of the pre-existent nature of our Lord with the Eternal Word, and, following upon this, His relation to His Father on the one side, and to mankind on the other.

"He is the only-begotten of the Father, God being His own proper Father (θεός), and so He is equal to the Father in nature (John v. 18), and yet, as being a Son, He is subordinate, so that He represents Himself throughout as sent by the Father to do His will and speak His words.

"With reference to mankind He is, before His incarnation, the 'Light that lighteth every man.' After and through His Incarnation He is to man all in all. He is even in death the object of their faith. He is the Mediator through whose very person God sends the Spirit. He is the Life, the Light, the Living Water, the Spiritual Food.

"Justin Martyr repeatedly reproduces in various forms of expression the truth that Christ is the eternal 'Word made flesh' and revealed as the 'Only-begotten Son of God,' thus:—

"The first power after God the Father and Lord of all is the Word, who is also the Son, and of Him we will, in what follows, relate how He took flesh and became man." (Apol. i. ch. xxvii.)

"Again, 'I have already proved that He was the Only-begotten of the Father of all things, being begotten in a peculiar manner (ιδίως) Word and Power by Him, and having afterwards become man through the Virgin.' (Dial. ch. cv.)

"Now, we have in these two passages four or five characteristic expressions of St. John relating to our Lord, not to be found in any other Scripture writer. I say 'in any other,' for I believe that not only the Epistles of St. John, but also the Apocalypse, notwithstanding certain differences in style, are to be ascribed to St. John.

"We have the term 'Word' united with 'the Son,' and with 'Only-begotten,' and said to be 'properly (πρὸς ἰδίαν) begotten'; a reminiscence of John v. 18, the only place in the New Testament where the adjective ιδίως or its adverb ιδίως is applied to the relations of the Father and the Son, and we have this Word becoming flesh and man.

"Now Justin, in one of the places, writes to convince a heathen emperor; and in the other an unbelieving Jew; and so in each case

"For Christ Himself has said, 'Unless ye are born again, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven' (John iii. 3, 4, 5). But it is manifest to all, that it is impossible for those who have been once born to enter into the wombs of them that bare them."³

"For thus He said, 'He that hears me, and does the things I say, he hears Him that sent me.'" (John xiv. 24.)

Justin often speaks of the Gospels under the title of *Memoirs*⁴

³ S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 89.

⁴ Ibid. p. 25.

he reproduces the sense of John i. 1 and 14, and not the exact words. It would have been an absurdity for him to have quoted St. John exactly, for, in such a case, he must have retained the words 'we beheld His glory, the glory as,' which would have simply detracted from the force of the passage, being unintelligible without some explanation.

"Again, we have in the Dialogue (ch. lxi.) the words, 'The Word of Wisdom, who is Himself this God begotten of the Father of all things.' Now, here there seems to be a reproduction of the old and very probably original reading of John i. 18, 'The only begotten God who is in the bosom of the Father' (see note on John i. 18). Certainly this reading of John i. 18, is the only place where the idea of being begotten is associated with the term 'God' (p. 45, &c.).

"From all this it is clear that Justin had not only seen and revered St. John's Gospel, but that his mind was permeated with its peculiar teaching.

"I hesitate not to say that, if a man rejects the evidence above adduced, he rejects it because on other grounds he is determined, cost what it may, to discredit the Fourth Gospel.

"Let us briefly recapitulate.

"Justin reproduced the doctrine of the Logos, using the words of St. John. He asserted the Divine and human natures of the Son of God in the words of St. John, or in exactly similar words. He reproduced that peculiar teaching of our Lord, to be found only in St. John, whereby we are enabled to hold the true and essential Godhead of Christ, without for a moment holding that 'He is an independent God.' He reproduced the doctrine of the Logos being, even before His incarnation, in every man as the 'true light' to enlighten him.

"He reproduces the doctrine of the Sacraments in terms to be found only in the Fourth Gospel. He reproduces, or alludes to, arguments, and types, and prophecies, and historical events, only to be found in St. John's Gospel.

"It seems certain then, that if Justin was acquainted with any one of our four Gospels, that Gospel was the one according to St. John" (p. 60).—MR. SADLER, 'The Lost Gospel,' &c.

"He calls the Gospels, the Memoirs of the Apostles (ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν ἀποστόλων). This title was in all likelihood of his own devising, for it does not occur elsewhere in Christian literature. He uses it first in the Apology addressed to the Roman Emperor, and it seems to be an attempt to put the word 'gospel' into tolerable Greek, and make it intelligible to educated Pagans. These 'Memoirs' were not about the Apostles; on the contrary, Justin says that they were composed by the 'Apostles' [of Christ] and by those who followed them (Dialog. 103, p. 354, ed. Otto), and that they contained the whole history of Christ (Apol. i. 33, p. 86). Further, the common name for these Memoirs was 'Gospels,' for Justin describes them as the 'Memoirs which are called Gospels' (Apol. i. 66, p. 156). In conclusion these Gospels were read throughout the whole Church in the Christian assemblies. This appears from the first Apology, in which Justin gives the Emperor an account of Christian worship, and particularly of the celebration of the Eucharist. 'On the day called Sunday,' he says, 'all who live in cities or in the country assemble together [notice the general terms which are employed], and the Memoirs of or Commentaries, Commentaries of the Apostles, His or Christ's Memoirs, Memoirs of the Apostles and their companions, as in the following instances.

Speaking of the Eucharist, he says, "For the Apostles, in the memoirs composed by them, which are called Gospels, have thus delivered it, 'And Jesus commanded them to take bread, and give thanks.'"¹

"For in the commentaries, which, as I have said, were composed by the Apostles and their followers [or companions], it is written, that His sweat fell like drops of blood as He prayed, saying, 'If it be possible, let this cup pass from me.'" (Luke xxii. 42; Matt. xxvi. 39).²

Justin also incidentally shows in what estimation the Gospels were held by Christians in his time, that they were read in their assemblies every Lord's Day, along with, or in the place of, the Prophets, and by a person appointed for that purpose whom he calls "reader;" for, giving an account of the Christian worship to the Emperor, he says, "The memoirs of the Apostles, or the writings of the Prophets, are read according as the time allows; and when the reader has ended, the president makes a discourse, exhorting to the imitation of so excellent things."³

Trypho the Jew, in the 'Dialogue with Justin,' is made to say, "I am sensible that the precepts in your Gospel, as it is called, are so great and wonderful that I think it impossible for any man to keep them. For I have been at pains to read them."⁴

Besides the testimony to the Church's early belief in the authoritative character of the four Gospels, which is furnished by writers who adhered to the Church Catholic, there is also evidence of this in the extant remains, or in ancient quotations from the works of those who early in the second century departed from the faith of the Church, and, as teachers of deadly heresies, became the bitterest opponents of the Church. Such were Basilides, Marcion, and Valentinus.

Valentinus.⁵—Some suppose that he sprang from Egypt.⁶

¹ S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 96.

² S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. p. 361.

³ S. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 97.

⁴ S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. p. 156.

⁵ See—

Prof. Westcott on the Canon of the New Test. p. 294.

Mr. Sanday, The Gospels in the Second Century, p. 196.

⁶ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xxxi. 2, vol. i. 476.

the Apostles [that is, as we have seen, the Gospels] or the writings of the Prophets are read as long as time permits" (Apol. i. 67, p. 158). These 'Memoirs' then were called Gospels, and they were written by the Apostles and those who followed them. This description answers exactly to our Gospels; two of them are the work of the Apostles Matthew and John, and two of Apostolic men, Mark and Luke. It answers to nothing else. We have no proof that there was any one Gospel in Justin's time, except the canonical ones, which profess to be the work of an Apostle. The Gospel according to Peter is mentioned for the first time about the year 190 (Euseb. H. E. vi. 12); and Serapion, Bishop of Antioch, to whom we owe our information about it, speaks of it in terms which are perfectly consistent with a belief that the forgery was still recent. Moreover, if Justin's Gospels were not ours, we want proof that there was in his time a collection of Gospels differing from our present ones, yet attributed to the Apostles and their followers, and separated in such a way from other records of the same kind that they could be regarded as one writing, and called 'the Gospel.' For Justin's language tallies exactly with that of a later age. . . . Like Tertullian, he speaks of Gospels, 'composed by the Apostles and their followers.' Like Irenæus and Clement of Alexandria, he looks upon the Gospels as one, and calls them 'the Gospel' (Dialog. 100, p. 340).—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 380.

"We thus sum up the evidence of this writer. He has numerous quotations of our Gospels, except that of St. Mark, which he has seldom quoted. He quotes them, as containing authentic accounts of Jesus Christ and His doctrine. He speaks of 'memoirs' or records written by 'Apostles' and 'their companions,' plainly meaning the Apostles and Evangelists Matthew and John, and by companions or disciples of Apostles, Mark and Luke. These Gospels were read and expounded in the solemn assemblies of the Christians, as the books of the Old Testament were, and as they had been before in the Jewish synagogues. Whether any other books of the New Testament were so read, he does not inform us. This reading of the Gospels he mentions in his first Apology to Antoninus the Pious. He must have been well assured of the truth of what he says, and, it is likely, knew it to be the ordinary custom of the Christian churches he had visited in his travels. If it had not been a general practice, or had obtained in some few places only, he must have spoken more cautiously, and made use of some limitations and exceptions. For if there were Christian churches in which the 'memoirs' he speaks of were not read; upon inquiry made by the Emperor, or his order, he had run the hazard of being convicted of a design to impose upon all the majesty of the Roman empire; and that, not in an affair incidentally mentioned, but in the conduct and worship of his own people, concerning whom he professeth to give the justest information. The general reading of the Gospels, as a part of divine worship at that time, about the year 140, or not very long after, is not only a proof that they were well known and allowed to be genuine, but also that they were in the highest esteem. These Gospels were not concealed. Justin appeals to them in the most public manner, and they were open to all the world: read by Jews and others."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 139.

"There is no need to reason from analogy as to the amount of accuracy we may expect from Justin, when he quotes his Memoirs. He quotes the classics; he quotes the Old Testament in the Septuagint version. In the Apologies we find a citation from the 'Timeus' of Plato (Apol. ii. 10, p. 192), another from Plato's Republic (Apol. i. 3, p. 8), a third from the 'Memorabilia' of Xenophon (Apol. ii. 119, p. 41). All these quotations are clearly and evidently made from memory; for Justin alters unconsciously the sense of the authors whom he quotes, and makes a variety of marked changes in their language. As to the Old Testament, Justin quotes over and over again from one of its books words which really occur in another (Apol. i. 35, p. 90; ib. 51, p. 120; ib. 53, p. 124; Dialog. 14, p. 52; ib. 49, p. 160); he puts together and welds into a continuous quotation passages which really occur in different chapters, nay, in different books of the Old Testament (Apol. i. 52, p. 122). He quotes verses in reversed order (Apol. i. 38, p. 94), he abbreviates the sense (Apol. i. 44, p. 104), adds and changes words (Apol. i. 48, p. 114), sometimes unconsciously alters facts (Apol. i. 60, p. 140); he allows himself these liberties even when he introduces his quotations with the solemn formula 'it is written.' Inaccuracies of this kind occur even in the Dialogue where Justin is arguing with Jews, and had special motives for care in quoting the Old Testament. We have given but a few instances out of a vast number collected by Semisch, who has proved that each variety of inaccurate quotations which apologetic critics assume in Justin's quotations from our Gospels, finds an exact parallel in his quotations from the Old Testament."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 386.

Trenæus says that he went to Rome during the episcopate of Hyginus, who was the eighth bishop of that city;¹ that he was at the height of his fame in the time of Pius, and continued until the time of Anicetus. Valentinus professed to follow the teaching of Theodas, a disciple of S. Paul.*

Marcion (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. viii. p. 448) was born in Pontus. He was at first a Catholic, but afterwards fell into the most deadly heresy. It has been generally supposed that he came to Rome some time about A.D. 130, or a little later, where he disseminated his opinions. His influence was great, and he attracted many followers, who were spread over Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Arabia, and Syria,

¹ S. Irenæus, Contr. Hæc. iii. 4. 3. p. 866.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 11, vol. ii. p. 328.

* Valentinus.—"The case in regard to Valentinus, the next great Gnostic leader, who came forward about the year 140 A.D., is very similar to that of Basilides, though the balance of the argument is slightly altered. It is, on the one hand, still clearer that the greater part of the evangelical references usually quoted are really from our present actual Gospels, but, on the other hand, there is a more distinct probability that these are to be assigned rather to the school of Valentinus than to Valentinus himself" (p. 196).

After the usually severe examination of this subject, Mr. Sanday concludes, "That the Valentinians made use of unwritten sources as well as of written, and that they possessed a Gospel of their own which they called the Gospel of Truth, does not affect the question of their use of the Synoptics. For these very same Valentinians undoubtedly did use the Synoptics, and not only them but also the fourth Gospel."—"The Gospels in the Second Century," p. 202.

"S. John's Gospel was in especial esteem among the great sect of the Gnostics known as the Valentinians. Heracleon, the most illustrious member of Valentinus's school, wrote a commentary on S. John, large fragments of which have been preserved by Origen (see Grabe's Spicileg. Patr. ii. p. 85). In these fragments the authenticity of the Gospel is assumed throughout; indeed Heracleon bases his tenets on a perverted interpretation of single words spoken by Christ and recorded by S. John. The shifts to which he betakes himself in trying to elude the natural meaning of the words, and the trouble which he took in writing an exposition, are evidence enough that he admitted its Apostolic origin. Clement of Alexandria quotes an exposition by the same heresiarch of a verse in S. Luke (Strom. iv. 9). What was the date of Heracleon? Heinrich thinks he has shown that he wrote his commentary on S. John between 140 and 160. Hilgenfeld and Lipsius place the time of his greatest activity about 170."—"Dublin Rev." April 1875, p. 379.

"Valentinus was born about 100 A.D. After teaching in Egypt and Cyprus he came to Rome, about 140 A.D., and died some twenty years later. We maintain that, like his followers, Valentinus acknowledged the Four Gospels, and that, like them, he made special use of S. John. Our reasons are these. (1.) Tertullian tells us that heretics in reality reject Scripture, either openly like Marcion, by rejecting or mutilating its text, or like Valentinus secretly, by perverting its sense. Of Valentinus he speaks thus: 'If Valentinus seems to use the entire document (i.e. all the scriptural books received in the Church), (still) with a mind no less crafty than that of Marcion, he laid violent hands upon the truth. For Marcion openly and plainly used the knife, not the pen, since he mutilated the scriptures to suit his doctrine. But Valentinus spared [the sacred text], since he did not devise scriptures to fit his doctrine, but invented a doctrine which was fitted into the scriptures. And yet he took away more and added more [than Marcion], since he took away the proper meaning of the words,

Cyprus, Thebais, Persia and elsewhere.² More than one of the early writers has given an account of Marcion's teaching. These may be seen stated in Lardner at full length. An eminent living writer has summed up his opinions and character in the following words:—

"Marcion taught that the God of the New Testament was a distinct being from the God of the Old, whom he identified with the God of Nature; that these two Gods were not only distinct, but antagonistic; that there was an irreconcilable, internecine feud between them; and that Jesus Christ came from the good God to rescue men from the God of Nature and of the Jews . . . Again, Marcion rejected the autho-

² Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 43.

Tertullian, de Præscr. 30, vol. ii. p. 42.

S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xlii. i. vol. i. p. 696.

and added systems of things [phantastic æon systems] which do not appear' (Tertull. Præscript. 38). This is plain testimony, as Dr. Westcott saw, that Valentinus received the scriptures of the Church and the Gospels among them; and it is strong testimony, for Tertullian gives it against his will, since he is trying to show the enmity of heretics to Scripture. . . .

"(2.) Apart from external testimony, we have internal evidence of the most convincing kind that Valentinus used S. John's Gospel. Among his thirty æons, we find the names Father (Πατήρ), Grace (Χάρις), Only-begotten (Μονογενής), Truth (Ἀλήθεια), Word (Λόγος), Life (Ζωή), Word (Ἀνθρώπος), Paraclete (Παρακλητός); and he called his whole æon system the 'Fullness' (Πληρωμα). These words are all from S. John. All but one occur in the first few verses of his Gospel, and it is self-evident that either the writer of the Fourth Gospel took them from S. John or else vice versa. It is perfectly credible that Valentinus borrowed them from S. John; it was the way of his school to take detached words from the Gospels, and to build their phantastic doctrines upon them; and we know that S. John's was the favourite Gospel with his followers. On the other hand, the words have a plain and simple meaning, and an obvious connection in our Gospels. And when German critics have been driven to affirm that the words were due to Valentinus in the first instance, and were adopted by S. John, we can only regard this as a desperate attempt to escape the pressure of fact."—Ibid. p. 397.

³ Marcion.—"Marcion was the founder of another great Gnostic school. He was at the head of his sect not later than 144. He accused all the Apostles except S. Paul of corrupting Christianity by Judaism (Irenæus, iii. 12, 12). He knew the Gospels of Matthew and John, and he rejected them, not because he disputed their authenticity, but because he rejected the authority of their authors. This is the account Tertullian gives (Adv. Marc. i. 1-6; De Carne Christi, 2), and it is plain that Tertullian describes Marcion's procedure from a knowledge of his writings. Thus in his very rejection of the First and Fourth Gospels, he yields his witness to their authenticity. However, he retained the Gospel of S. Luke on account of its connection with S. Paul. Even that he could not afford to keep unaltered. He maintained that Judaism was the religion of a lower and an evil god; and hence he cut out the passages which did not fit this view. The Tübingen school held at one time that Marcion's Gospel was the true original, that it was not he who mutilated, but the Church which interpolated. We know with tolerable certainty the portions of our Luke retained by Marcion, and on close examination it was found that Marcion's Gospel could not represent the original text, and the Tübingen critics themselves made a formal retreat from their position. The old view, says Dr. Davidson (and we could not quote a more extreme opponent of the authenticity of the Gospels), on the nature of Marcion's Gospels, will not again be seriously disturbed."—"Dublin Rev." April 1875, p. 398.

city of the Twelve, denouncing them as false Apostles, and he confined his canon to S. Paul's Epistles and to a Pauline Gospel. Again, Marcion prohibited marriage, and even refused to baptize married persons."

"He did indeed deny the resurrection of the flesh, and the future body of the redeemed. This was a necessary tenet of all Gnostics, who held the inherent malignity of matter. In this sense he denied a resurrection; and he did not deny a judgment at all. Holding, like the Catholic Christian, that men would be rewarded or punished hereafter according to their deeds in this life, he was obliged to recognize a judgment in some form or other. His Supreme God, indeed, whom he represented as pure beneficence, could not be a judge or an avenger, but he got over the difficulty by assigning the work of judging and punishing to the Demiurge.

"The high moral character of Marcion was unimpeachable, and is recognized by the orthodox writers of the second century; the worst charge which they bring against him is disappointed ambition. He was an ascetic of the most uncompromising and rigorous type."¹

Marcion is accused of rejecting all the books of the New Testament except eleven, which he curtailed and altered. He divided these into two parts, and called the one the Gospel, and the other the Apostolicon. The former contained only one of the four Gospels, namely, that of S. Luke,² and this he is said to have mutilated and altered, and even interpolated in a great variety of places.³

Basilides (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. viii. p. 349) lived soon after the Apostles, and taught at Alexandria in the reign of Hadrian (A.D. 117-137). Nothing remains of Basilides except a few quotations from him, found in the works of Hippolytus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Epiphanius. Some have contended that these quotations may not be the words of Basilides himself, but of some one of his disciples.⁴

Origen, and most probably from him S. Ambrose and S. Jerome, mention a Gospel of Basilides.⁵ Eusebius relates that Agrippa Castor, a contemporary of Basilides, says that he wrote twenty-four books of Commentaries on the Gospels.⁶ Lardner and others held that by the Gospel of Basilides these writers probably meant his Commentaries on the Gospels.

Papias (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 116).—According to Irenæus,⁷ he was a hearer of John and a companion of Polycarp.⁸ He wrote a work in five books entitled an Exposition of the Oracles of the Lord. These are all lost with the exception of a few fragments quoted by other writers, chiefly Irenæus and Eusebius.

In a fragment cited by Eusebius,⁹ Papias refers both to

¹ Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. May 1877, p. 848, &c.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xlii. 9, vol. i. p. 708.

³ Irenæus, contr. Hæres. iii. 14, 4, p. 916.

Theodoret, Hæret. Fab. i. 14, vol. iv. p. 158.

Tertull. adv. Marc. iv. 2, vol. ii. p. 363.

⁴ Marcion.—"As in most other points relating to this period, there is some confusion in the chronological data, but these range within a comparatively limited area. The most important evidence is that of Justin, who, writing as a contemporary (about 147 A.D.), says that at that time Marcion had 'in every nation of men caused many to blaspheme' and again speaks of the wide spread of his doctrines. Taking these statements along with others in Irenæus, Tertullian, and Epiphanius, modern critics seem to be agreed that Marcion settled at Rome, and began to teach his peculiar doctrines about 139-142 A.D.

"The Church writers Irenæus, Tertullian, and Epiphanius, without exception, describe Marcion's Gospel as a mutilated or amputated version of St. Luke" (p. 205).

Mr. Sanday then says that the question in dispute in modern times is this: "Did Marcion, as the Church writers say, really mutilate our so-called St. Luke (the name is not of importance, but we may use it as standing for our third Synoptic in its present shape)? Or, is it possible that the converse may be true, and that Marcion's Gospel was the original and ours an interpolated version?" He then proceeds to sift the evidence in his usual way, carefully weighing every point that presents itself, and concludes, "I think it may be asserted with confidence that two alternatives only are possible. Either Marcion's Gospel is an abridgment of our present St. Luke, or else our present St. Luke is an expansion by interpolation of Marcion's Gospel, or of a document co-extensive with it. No third hypothesis is tenable" (p. 216).

"When every deduction has been made, there will still remain a mass of evidence that it does not seem too much to describe as overwhelming. We may assume, then, that there is definite proof that the Gospel used by Marcion presupposes our present St. Luke in its ⁵ Origen, in Luc. Homil. i. vol. iii. p. 1803.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 1, sec. 2, vol. ii. p. 1533.

S. Jerome, in Matt. Prolog. vol. vii. p. 17.

⁶ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 7, vol. ii. p. 317.

⁷ Irenæus, v. 33, 4, p. 1214.

⁸ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 39, vol. ii. p. 296.

Routh, Rel. Sacr. vol. i. p. 13.

complete form, as it has been handed down to us" (p. 230).—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

⁹ Basilides.—After a minute examination of a passage attributed to Basilides, and supposed to be quoted from S. Matthew vii. 6, Mr. Sanday says, "I have little moral doubt that the quotation was really derived from St. Matthew, and there is quite a fair probability that it was made by Basilides himself" (p. 194).

After the examination of a passage supposed to be from St. Luke i. 35, he says: "This is a body of evidence that makes it extremely difficult to deny that the Basilidian quotation has its original in the third Synoptic" (p. 196).

After the examination of two passages from S. John (i. 9, and ii. 4), he says: "We conclude then that there is a probability—not an overwhelming, but quite a substantial probability—that Basilides himself used the fourth Gospel, and used it as an authoritative record of the life of Christ. But Basilides began to teach in 125 A.D., so that his evidence, supposing it to be valid, dates from a very early period indeed; and it should be remembered that this is the only uncertainty to which it is subject. That the quotation is really from S. John cannot be doubted."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 300.

¹⁰ Papias.—In an interesting discussion on Papias and his contemporaries, Canon Lightfoot says, "If it is necessary to put the result of these incidental notices in any definite form, we may say that Papias was probably born about A.D. 60-70. But his work was evidently written at a much later date. He speaks of his personal intercourse with the elders as a thing of the remote past. He did not write till false interpretations of the Evangelical records had had time to increase and multiply. We should probably not be wrong if we deferred its publication till the years A.D. 130-140, or even later."—Contemp. Rev., August 1875, p. 383.

S. Matthew's Gospel, and also to S. Mark's. Of the former he says, "Matthew wrote the [divine] oracles in the Hebrew tongue, and every one interpreted them as he was able;"¹ of the latter, that he had not related our Lord's discourses and actions in order, as if he were drawing up a consecutive and chronological account of them.² Both of these statements have caused considerable difficulty, and many explanations of them have been offered.³

Eusebius distinctly states that Papias brought testimonies from S. John's First Epistle.⁴ It has been abundantly shown that a knowledge of S. John's First Epistle implied a knowledge of his Gospel also.⁵

S. Polycarp (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 94) was most probably the son of Christian parents. He was a disciple of the Evangelist S. John. Irenæus, who in his youth had listened with delight to Polycarp, says that he was appointed Bishop of Smyrna by Apostles, one of whom must have been S. John.⁶

There is still extant a letter addressed by Polycarp to the Philippians. This letter is referred to by Irenæus in the following words:—"There is also a most excellent epistle of Polycarp, written to the Philippians; from which they who are willing, and are concerned for their own salvation, may learn both the character of his faith and the doctrine of the truth."

This passage from Irenæus has been transcribed by Eusebius,⁷ who immediately adds, "Polycarp, in the forementioned epistle to the Philippians, which is still extant, has made use of some testimonies from the First Epistle of Peter."

Polycarp's epistle is also referred to by S. Jerome, who also says, "Polycarp, the disciple of John the Apostle, and by him ordained Bishop of Smyrna, was the prince of all Asia; forasmuch as he had seen and been taught by some of the Apostles, and those who had seen the Lord. Afterwards, in the reign of Marcus Antoninus and L. Aurelius Commodus, in the fourth persecution after Nero, he was condemned to the flames at Smyrna, the proconsul being present, and all the people in the amphitheatre demanding his death. He

¹ See—

Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. August 1875, p. 393.

Mr. Sanday, The Gospels in the Second Century, p. 146.

² See note on S. Polycarp.

³ "The words, 'each one translated as he was able,' are perfectly clear in the language of Papias. . . . No careful reader can avoid asking why Papias writes 'interpreted,' and not 'interprets.' The natural answer is that the necessity of which he speaks had already passed away. In other words, it implies the existence of a recognized Greek translation, when Papias wrote." . . .

"But, if a Greek St. Matthew existed in the time of Papias, we are forbidden by all considerations of historical probability to suppose that it was any other than our St. Matthew. As in the case of St. Mark, so here the contrary hypothesis is weighted with an accumulation of improbabilities. . . .

"The testimony of Papias therefore may be accepted as valid so far as regards the recognition of our St. Matthew in his own age. But it does not follow that his account of the origin was correct. It may or may not have been. This is just what we cannot decide, because we do not know exactly what he said. It cannot be inferred with any certainty from this fragmentary excerpt of Eusebius what Papias supposed to be the exact relation of the Greek Gospel of St. Matthew, which he had before him, to the Hebrew document of which he speaks."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemporary Rev.' August 1875, p. 397.

"Papias says that 'Matthew wrote the oracles in the Hebrew dialect [i.e., in the Aramaean], and each interpreted them as he was able.' What security have we, it may be asked, that our Greek Matthew is a genuine reproduction of the original? We cannot dwell here upon the testimony of S. Jerome, who had copied out the original Matthew, but we observe that, when Papias wrote, there must have been an authorized Greek translation; for he speaks of the time when every one interpreted it for himself as past."—DUBLIN REV., April 1875, p. 403.

"Our Synoptics differ in their arrangement. Authorities in ancient and modern times have taken, some one, some another Gospel as representing the true chronological sequence; and supposing John the Presbyter preferred Matthew's order to Mark's, this is rather slight ground for assuming that his Mark was other than ours. But, indeed, we need not betake ourselves even to a supposition as permissible as this. Matthew and Luke begin Christ's history with His birth. Luke lays particular stress on the fact that he has 'followed all things from the beginning,' and set them 'in order.' Mark, on the contrary, omits all the early history of Christ and all His longer discourses. This exactly fits in with the statement of Papias, that Mark did not write 'in order' (ἐν ῥάσει), and with his explanation of his own words, that Mark wrote some things [ἑνῶς] out of all that our Lord had said and done."—DUBLIN REV., April 1875, p. 401.

³ S. Irenæus, contr. Hær. iii. 3, 4, p. 852.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 14, vol. ii. p. 340.

"Professor Lightfoot, in the January number of the 'Contemporary,' has demolished the fallacy that Papias cannot have used S. John's Gospel because Eusebius does not say he did. It did not fall in with the plan of that historian to collect testimonies for any one of the canonical Gospels. He regarded their authority as fixed and certain from the first; and with respect to them he quotes early writers only when they relate facts of historical interest about the circumstances under which our Gospels were composed. However, Eusebius did not regard the whole canon of the New Testament as fixed beyond dispute, and he collects ancient evidence for the Catholic Epistles, for the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the Apocalypse. Now he tells us that Papias acknowledged the first Epistles of S. John and of S. Peter (Euseb. iii. 39, 16), and we know from another source that he made use of the Apocalypse (see Fragm. viii. of Papias in Routh's 'Rel. Sacr.' i. p. 15). These facts are important for the origin of the Gospels in two ways. First, because there are, notoriously, the strongest grounds of internal evidence for assigning the First Epistle and the Gospel of S. John to the same author. They agree in doctrine and phraseology; so that if Papias knew and received the one, we may conclude with the highest probability that he knew and received the other. Next, the abler critics of the destructive school have striven to divide the Christians at the time of Papias into a Pauline party, a Petrine party, &c. They represent the different books of the New Testament as fabricated in the interest of these parties, and they insist that all our four Gospels could not be received till these differences were softened down and forgotten, and the opposing parties merged in the Catholic Church. This theory is necessary to the negative position, for unless there is positive reason to the contrary, we have evident right to take the fuller statements of Irenæus, e.g., on the authority of the Gospels, as completing the fragmentary notices of an earlier age. But it is shattered to pieces by the knowledge we have of Papias; for he received the Epistles of S. John, of S. Peter, and of the Apocalypse, each of which, on the hypothesis of our opponents, was the manifesto of three conflicting sects."—DUBLIN REVIEW, April 1875, p. 402.

wrote to the Philippians a very useful epistle, which to this day is read in the assembly of Asia."¹

From this it is plain that antiquity, as represented by S. Irenæus, Eusebius, and S. Jerome, believed in the genuineness of the Epistle attributed to S. Polycarp; and it has been shown that modern criticism has been unable to disprove this.² It has been concluded on good grounds, that Polycarp was at least forty years of age when he wrote his Epistle to the Philippians, and may have been close upon fifty.³

¹ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xvii. vol. ii. p. 635.

² Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. May 1875, p. 838, &c.

Mr. Sanday, The Gospels in the Second Century, p. 82.

* S. Polycarp.—"Polycarp was born more than thirty years before the close of the first century, and he survived to the latter half of the second. The date of his birth may be fixed with some degree of certainty as A.D. 69 or 70. At all events it cannot have been later than this. At the time of his martyrdom, which is now ascertained to have taken place A.D. 155 or 156, he declared that he had served Christ eighty-six years; and if this expression be explained as referring to the whole period of his life (which is the more probable supposition), we are carried back to the date which I have just given.

"Irenæus (iii. 3, 4) reports (and there is no reason for doubting the truth of his statement) that St. John survived to the reign of Trajan, who ascended the imperial throne A.D. 98. Thus Polycarp would be about thirty years old at the time of St. John's death. When therefore Irenæus relates that he was appointed bishop in Smyrna by Apostles, the statement involves no chronological difficulty, even though we interpret the term 'bishop' in its more restricted sense, and not as a synonyme for presbyter, according to its earlier meaning. Later writers (Tertull. de Præscr. 32) say distinctly that he was appointed to the episcopal office by St. John. At all events, he appears as Bishop of Smyrna in the early years of the second century."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' May 1875, p. 828.

"Polycarp was martyred during the proconsulship of Statius Quadratus. The commonly received date of his death is A.D. 166 or 167, as given in the Chronicon of Eusebius. Quite recently, however, M. Waddington has subjected the proconsular fasti of Asia Minor to a fresh and rigorous scrutiny. This Statius Quadratus is mentioned by the orator Aristides; and by an investigation of the chronology of Aristides' life, with the aid of newly-discovered inscriptions, M. Waddington arrives at the result that Quadratus was proconsul in 154-155; and, as Polycarp was martyred in the early months of the year, his martyrdom must be dated A.D. 155. This result is accepted by M. Renan, and substantially also by Hilgenfeld and Lipsius, who, however (for reasons into which it is unnecessary to enter here), postpones the martyrdom to the following year, A.D. 156. M. Waddington's arguments seem conclusive, and this rectification of date removes some stumbling-blocks. The relations between St. John and Polycarp, for instance, as reported by Irenæus and others, no longer present any difficulty, when the period during which the lives of the two overlap each other is thus extended."—Ibid., p. 838.

"Notwithstanding its brevity, Polycarp's Epistle contains decisive coincidences with or references to between thirty and forty passages in the New Testament."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' May 1875, p. 831.

"In answer to an objection that the passages in which Polycarp seems to quote our present Gospels may have been quoted from some collections other than our actual Gospels, and after a careful examination of every such passage, Mr. Sanday says, 'It ought to be borne in mind that if such collections did exist, and if Polycarp's allusions or quotations are to be referred to them, they are to the same extent evidence that these hypothetical collections Recent investigation has also shown that S. Polycarp was born in the year A.D. 69 or 70, and that he suffered martyrdom in the year A.D. 155 or 156."

S. Polycarp uses the words of the New Testament in many passages without giving the name of the writer to whom he is referring.^b Among other instances, he represents our Lord as uttering certain words, which words are found in one case in S. Matthew,^c and in another in S. Luke.^d He also refers to the First Epistle of S. John.^e did not materially differ from our present Gospels, but rather bore to them very much the same relation that they bear to each other."—"The Gospels in the Second Century," p. 87.

^a Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. May 1875, p. 851.

^b Polycarp, Epist. ad Philip. sec. ii. p. 117.

^c Ibid. sec. vii. p. 120.

"The knowledge of the First Epistle of St. John almost necessarily carries with it the knowledge of the Gospel. The identity of authorship in the two books, though not undisputed, is accepted with such a degree of unanimity that it may be placed in the category of acknowledged facts.

"But, if I mistake not, their relation is much closer than this. There is not only an identity of authorship, but also an organic connection between the two. The First Epistle has sometimes been regarded as a preface to the Gospel. It should rather be described, I think, as a commendatory postscript. This connection will make itself felt, if the two books are read continuously. The Gospel seems to have been written or (more properly speaking) dictated for an immediate circle of disciples. This fact appears from special notices of time and circumstance, inserted here and there, evidently for the purpose of correcting the misapprehensions and solving the difficulties of the Evangelist's hearers. It is made still more clear by the sudden transition to the second person when the narrator breaks off, and looking up (as it were) addresses his hearers: 'He that saw it hath borne record . . . that ye might believe.'—'These things are written that ye might believe.' There were gathered about the Apostle, we may suppose, certain older members of the Church, like Aristion and the Presbyter John, who, as eye-witnesses of Christ's earthly life, could guarantee the correctness of the narrative. The twenty-fourth verse of the last chapter is, as it were, the endorsement of these elders: 'This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things, and we know that his testimony is true.' After the narrative is thus ended, comes the hortatory postscript which we call the First Epistle, and which was intended (we may suppose) to be circulated with the narrative. It has no opening salutation, like the two Epistles proper—the second and third—which bear the same Apostle's name. It begins at once with a reference to the Gospel narrative which (on this hypothesis) has preceded—'That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we beheld and our hands handled, of the Word of life . . . that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you.' The use of the plural here links on the opening of the Epistle with the close of the Gospel. The Apostle begins by associating with himself the elders who have certified to the authorship and authenticity of the narrative. Having done this, he changes to the singular, and speaks in his own name—I write.' The opening phrase of the Epistle, 'That which was from the beginning,' is explained by the opening phrase of the Gospel, 'In the beginning was the Word.' The whole Epistle is a devotional and moral application of the main ideas which are evolved historically in the sayings and doings of Christ recorded in the Gospel. The most perplexing saying in the Epistle, 'He that came by water and by blood,' illustrates itself, and itself is illustrated by the most perplexing incident in the Gospel, 'There came forth water and blood.' We understand at length why in the Gospel so much stress is laid on the veracity of the eye-witness just

The Relation of S. Polycarp's Martyrdom (Lardner, vol. ii. p. 110).—After the martyrdom of S. Polycarp, the church at Smyrna sent an account of it, in a letter, to the church at Philomelum, a city of Phrygia, and intended for the information of the Church Catholic throughout the world. This letter is still extant; part of it is cited by Eusebius. In all the circumstances connected with the martyrdom of S. Polycarp, even down to the smallest matters, they see a resemblance to the circumstances in the Apprehension and Crucifixion of Jesus; and they intimate that this resemblance was not accidental, but purposely brought about by Jesus Himself. Though we may be disposed to consider that this resemblance often exists more in the imagination of the narrators than in actual reality, it will be impossible to deny that the picture to which they saw this resemblance was the description of the Apprehension and Crucifixion of Jesus, as given by the four Evangelists, part of it by the first three Evangelists, and the rest by S. John alone.*

In this account they twice use the expression "the Gospel," as denoting the history of Jesus Christ and His doctrine.†

S. Ignatius (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 73) was Bishop of Antioch in Syria, the latter part of the first and the beginning of the second century.

Eusebius, in his Ecclesiastical History, says that, Enodius having been the first Bishop of Antioch, Ignatius succeeded him, with whom S. Jerome agrees.‡ In his Chronicle,§ Eusebius

* Martyrium S. Polycarpi, secs. i. and iv. pp. 124, 126.

† Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 22, vol. iv. p. 256.

‡ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xvi. vol. ii. p. 633.

at this point, when we see from the Epistle what significance the writer would attach to the incident, as symbolizing Christ's healing power.

"This view of the composition of the Gospel and its connection with the Epistle has been suggested by internal considerations; but it is strongly confirmed by the earliest tradition which has been preserved. The Muratorian Fragment on the Canon must have been written about A.D. 170 . . . The writer detaches the first Epistle of St. John from the second and third, and connects it with the Gospel. Either he himself, or some earlier authority whom he copied, would appear to have used a manuscript in which it occupied this position."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Oct. 1875, p. 834.

"The Epistle of Polycarp to the Philippians, which goes very much with the Ignatian Epistles and the external evidence for which it is so hard to resist, testifies to the fourth Gospel through the so-called first Epistle. That this Epistle is really by the same author as the Gospel is not indeed absolutely undoubted, but I imagine that it is as certain as any fact of literature can be. The evidence of style and diction is overwhelming."—p. 276.

"There is naturally a certain hesitation in using evidence for the Epistle as available also for the Gospel, but I have little doubt that it may justly so be used, and with no real diminution of its force. The chance that the Epistle had a separate author is too small to be practically worth considering."—p. 278.

"This, then, will apply to the case of Papias, of whose relations to the fourth Gospel we have no record, but of whom Eusebius expressly says that he made use of testimonies from the First Epistle of John. There is the less reason to doubt this statement, as in every instance in which a similar assertion of Eusebius can be verified it is found to hold good."—p. 278. MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

S. Polycarp's Martyrdom.—"In this letter the brethren of Smyrna draw a parallel between the sufferings of their martyred friend and the Passion of our Lord, which is suggested by some remarkable coincidences. 'Nearly all the incidents,' we are told at the outset, 'which preceded (his death) came to pass that the Lord might exhibit anew to us a martyrdom after the pattern of the Gospel; for Polycarp remained that he might be betrayed, as did also the Lord.' This account is thus the earliest instance of a favourite type of hagiology which sees the sufferings of Christ visibly reflected and imaged in detail in the servants of Christ, and of which ancient and mediæval biography furnishes numerous examples. This idea of literal conformity to the life and passion of Christ runs through the document. Some of the coincidences are really striking, but in other cases the parallelism is highly artificial. The name of the convicting magistrate is Herod, and special stress is naturally laid on this fact. The time of the martyrdom is the Passover—"the great Sabbath," as it is here called. Polycarp's place of refuge is ascertained from information elicited by torture from a youth, apparently a slave in his employ. This poor boy, much more sinned against than sinning, is cruelly compared to Judas; and we are told accordingly that Polycarp, like our Lord, was 'betrayed by them of his own household.' When apprehended, he is put upon an ass, and thus taken back to the city; and this is of course intended as a parallel to the triumphal entry into Jerusalem. His pursuers come on horseback, and in arms 'as against a robber.' When he is apprehended, he prays, 'The will of God be done,' and so forth. These parallels, at the same time that they show the idea dominant in the mind of the narrators, are a valuable testimony to the truth of the narrative itself, when so much violent treatment is necessary to produce the desired effect.

§ Eusebius, Chronicon, vol. i. p. 545.

"Most of the incidents have their counterparts in the circumstances of the Passion, as recorded by the Synoptic Evangelists alone or in common with St. John. This is natural, for they refer to external events in which the Synoptic narrative is rich. But there are exceptions where the writers obviously have the account of the fourth Evangelist in their mind. Thus we are told that at the crisis of Polycarp's fate a voice came from heaven, saying, 'Be strong, and play the man, Polycarp.'—'And the speaker,' it is added, 'no man saw; but the voice those of our company that were present heard.' This corresponds to the voice which St. John records as addressing our Lord from heaven, and as imperfectly apprehended by the bystanders. Again, Polycarp, in consequence of a vision, predicts that he shall be burnt alive, though at the time the intention obviously is to throw him to the wild beasts, as the games are going on. A fortuitous circumstance frustrates this intention, and brings about a fulfilment of his prophecy as to the manner of his death. Just in the same way in the fourth Gospel Jesus is represented as 'signifying by what death He should die.' Death by crucifixion seemed altogether unlikely at the time, for His enemies were the Jews, and this was not a Jewish mode of punishment; but by an accidental turn of circumstances He was transferred from the Jews to Pilate, and so His prediction was fulfilled. Again, it is related that when the fire would not consume the body of the saint, his persecutors 'ordered an executioner to go up to him, and thrust a small sword into him. When he had done this,' we are told, 'there came forth (a dove and) a quantity of blood.' The parallel to the incident recorded in St. John's account of the Crucifixion is obvious; and just as the Evangelist lays stress on his own presence as an eye-witness of the scene, so also do these hagiologists when relating a strange occurrence at his martyrdom. 'We saw a great marvel,' they say, 'we to whom it was given to see; and we have been saved that we might relate to the rest what happened.' And, lastly, as St. John emphasizes the fact, that every thing was accomplished in the death of Jesus, so also they declare of Polycarp, that 'every word which he uttered out of his mouth hath been, and shall be accomplished.' To these facts it should be added that the dying prayer of Polycarp contains two coincidences with the phraseology of the fourth Gospel—'the resurrection of life,' 'the true God.'"—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.' Feb. 1876, p. 473.

places the ordination of Ignatius in the year 69, after the death of S. Peter and S. Paul at Rome. Nevertheless some think that Ignatius was ordained by S. Peter, and suppose that Eudodius and Ignatius were both bishops of Antioch at one and the same time; the one of the Jewish, and the other of the Gentile Christians, but that after the death of Eudodius they all came to be under Ignatius as their bishop. If Ignatius only succeed Eudodius about the year of our Lord 70, it may be reasonably concluded that he was acquainted with several of the Apostles. S. Chrysostom says that he conversed familiarly with them, and was perfectly acquainted with their doctrine, and had the hands of the Apostles laid on him.¹

S. Ignatius was condemned at Antioch, and was sent to Rome to suffer death in the amphitheatre by exposure to wild beasts. There is a little uncertainty as to the year of his martyrdom; some authors placing it in A.D. 107, and others 116. On his way from Antioch to Rome, S. Ignatius wrote several letters. These are addressed, some to different Churches in Asia Minor, one to Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, and one to the Church at Rome.

It has been pointed out that the incidents described in these Epistles are strikingly in accord with what is known of the treatment of Roman prisoners in other cases.²

These letters of Ignatius exist in three forms. The Long Recension, in Greek and in Latin, is generally condemned, as being much interpolated.

The other two forms in which the Ignatian letters exist, are, (1) Seven letters to the Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, Romans, Philadelphians, Smyrnæans, and Polycarp. These are extant in Latin and also in Greek, and are sometimes called the Short Greek Recension, and sometimes the Vossian, from Isaac Voss, who, in the middle of the seventeenth century, discovered the original Greek.

(2) The second is extant only in a Syriac version, and contains three of the Epistles alone—to Polycarp, to the Ephesians, and to the Romans—in a still shorter form. These Syriac Epistles were discovered among the Nitrian MSS. in the British Museum, and published by Cureton in 1845, and are therefore called the Curetonian Epistles.

All the three versions of the Ignatian letters are given in Cureton's 'Corpus Ignatianum.'

The question as to the genuineness, &c., lies between the two last versions; and Canon Lightfoot, after a most lucid and interesting discussion on this subject, comes to the following conclusion:—"For the reasons given, I shall, unless I am shown to be wrong, treat the Curetonian letters as the work of the genuine Ignatius, while the Vossian letters may be accepted as valid testimony at all events for the middle of the second century. The question of the genuineness of the latter will be waived. . . . I am obliged to confess that I have grave and increasing doubts whether, after all, they are not the genuine utterances of Ignatius himself."³

The letters of Ignatius were quoted or referred to by several of the ancient writers, by S. Irenæus, Origen, Eusebius, S. Jerome, and by others. The two latter evidently refer to these letters as they are now extant in the Vossian version.⁴

There is every reason to believe that, in the Ignatian letters, even as they exist in the Syriac or Curetonian version, there is at least one quotation from S. John's Gospel,⁵

¹ S. Chrysostom, Homil. in Ignatium, sec. 1, &c.

² Canon Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev. Feb. 1875, p. 349.

³ Ibid. Feb. 1875, pp. 357, 358.

⁴ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæc. v. 28, 4, p. 1200.

Origen, in Canticum Cantic. Proleg. vol. iii. p. 70.

— in Luc. Homil. vi. vol. iii. p. 1815. [Eusebius, Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 36, vol. ii. p. 288.

— v. 8, vol. ii. p. 449.

— Quæstiones ad Stephanum, l. vol. iv. p. 881.

S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. xvi. vol. ii. p. 633.

See also—

Cureton's Corpus Ignatianum, p. 158, &c.

⁵ S. Ignatius.—"A parallel is alleged to a passage in the Epistle to the Romans which is found both in the Syriac and in the shorter Greek or Vossian version. 'I take no relish in corruptible food or in the pleasures of this life. I desire bread of God, heavenly bread, bread of life, which is the flesh of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was born in the latter days of the seed of David and Abraham; and I desire drink of God, His blood, which is love imperishable and ever abiding life' (Epist. ad Rom. sec. vii.). This is compared with the discourse in the synagogue at Capernaum in the sixth chapter of St. John. . . . The ideas are so remarkable that it seems difficult to suppose either an accidental coincidence or quotation from another writer. I suspect that Ignatius or the author of the Epistle really had the fourth Gospel in his mind, though not quite vividly, and by a train of comparatively remote suggestions."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 275.

"First, we find in the Epistles marked resemblances to the language and theology of S. John, which prove little one by one, but which are striking when found together in letters which are very brief, abrupt, and without connected theology of their own. Thus S. Ignatius speaks of our Lord as the 'eternal Word' (Λόγος), as 'the only Son of God' (like the Μονογενής of S. John); of the devil as 'the ruler of this age' (ἀρχὴν τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, like the ἀρχὴν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου in S. John); of the water which is living and speaks in him—in indirect allusion to Christ's words in S. John, 'He would have given thee living water,'—'the water which I will give him will be in him a fountain of water springing up to life eternal.' Next, there are two places where the connection with the fourth Gospel is much more definite. 'The Spirit,' S. Ignatius says, 'is not deceived, being from God, for he knows whence he comes and whither he goes.' In the Greek the verbal coincidence with John iii. 8, viii. 14, puts the source of the sentence in S. Ignatius beyond reasonable doubt. Again, S. Ignatius exclaims, 'I take no pleasure in food of corruption. . . . I wish the bread of God, which is the flesh (σὰρξ) of Jesus Christ. . . . and the drink of God, His blood, which is love incorruptible and perennial life' (Ad Rom. 7). This short sentence touches the sixth chapter of S. John in no less than three points. It contrasts the 'bread of God' with the 'food of corruption,' answering to the 'food which perishes' in S. John. Next, he declares that the bread of God is the flesh (σὰρξ) of Christ, a most remarkable coincidence; for while S. Paul and the Synoptics speak of bread as the 'body' (σῶμα) of Christ, S. John alone calls it His flesh (chap. vi. 51). Lastly, S. Ignatius, like S. John, says this flesh of Christ is eternal life. . . . In conclusion, we must add that this use of the fourth Gospel in S. Ignatius is and most probably several; and that, in the Vossian version, there are both references to the Gospel of S. Matthew and S. John, and also terms importing a collection of the Gospels, and of the Epistles of the Apostles, and of the books of the New Testament in general.

In the Epistle to the Philadelphians,¹ he says, "Fleeing to the Gospel, as the flesh of Jesus, and to the Apostles, as to the presbytery of the Church, let us also love the Prophets, because that they also spoke of the Gospel, and hoped in Him and expected Him."² Again, "But the Gospel has somewhat in it more excellent, the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, His Passion and Resurrection. For the beloved Prophets referred to Him, but the Gospel is the perfection of incorruption."³ Again, "Ye ought to hearken to the Prophets, but especially to the Gospel, in which the Passion has been manifested to us, and the Resurrection perfected."³ Again, "whom neither the prophecies nor the law of Moses have persuaded; nor yet the Gospel even to this day, nor the sufferings of every one of us."⁴

Of the writers which flourished during the second century, I have adduced about twenty, and from every part of the world, as witnesses to the Church's belief in the authoritative character of the four Gospels. Some give their testimony to this incidentally, others of set purpose. Some were writers known to fame, others were men of little note.

In answer to the objection that some of these witnesses were men of little mark in their own day, either for learning or ability, I reply that what is required to render them trustworthy witnesses in this matter, is not exalted intellect or great strength of judgment, but simply such connection with the Church Catholic, either as members or as opponents, as gave them the opportunity of knowing the fact to which they bear witness.

A writer may have been little known in his own time or country, and his arguments may sound to us trifling and frivolous, and his single testimony may appear but a slender thread to rest a conclusion on. But we must bear in mind that the strongest cords are formed of threads, which taken singly are weak enough; and that in like manner, though a testimony, when given by one witness, may be set aside on the ground of the insignificance of his character, or the obscurity of his station, yet when the same testimony is repeated by more than twenty independent witnesses, it becomes impossible to do this. We may therefore conclude that it has been proved beyond all possibility of cavil, that the Church in the second century received the four Gospels as written by Apostles and their companions, and appealed to them as her authoritative documents.

¹ S. Ignatius, Epist. ad Philad. v. p. 98 (Hefele).
v. p. 93 (Cureton, Corpus Ignat.).

² Ibid. ix. p. 101 (Hefele).
Ibid. ix. p. 99 (Cureton, Corpus Ignatianum).

³ S. Ignatius, Epist. ad Smyrn. vii. p. 105 (Hefele).
vii. p. 109 (Cureton).

⁴ Ibid. v. p. 104 (Hefele).
Ibid. v. p. 107 (Cureton).

confirmed by the fact that Polycarp, who wrote but a few months later, shows his knowledge of S. John's first Epistle, the authorship of which is bound up inseparably with that of the Gospel . . . We will quote three recent critics of great celebrity who ought to be impartial, for they deny the authenticity both of the Gospels and the Epistles. 'The whole theology of the Ignatian Epistles,' says Hilgenfeld, 'is founded upon the fourth Gospel.' Lipsius and Keim say the same thing.

"This evidence for S. John's Gospel comes to us from the country in which he lived and wrote; it comes to us from the circle of his disciples, and it dates from a few years after his death. We may fairly take it as the completion and the confirmation of later testimony."—Dublin Rev. April 1875, p. 405.

"The Ignatian writings, as might be expected, are not without traces of the influence of St. John . . . Love is the 'stamp of the Christian' (Ad Magn. v.); 'Faith is the beginning, and love the end of life' (Ad Ephes. xiv.); 'Faith is our guide upward (ἀναγνώρις), but love is the road that leads to God' (Ad Ephes. ix.); 'The eternal (αἰῶνος) Word is the manifestation of God' (Ad Magn. viii.); 'the door (θύρα) by which we come to the Father' (Ad Philad. ix.); 'and without Him we have not the principle of true life' (Ad Trall. ix.). 'The Spirit (πνεῦμα) is not led astray, as being from God. For it knoweth whence it cometh and whither it goeth, and testeth (ἐλέγχει) that which is hidden' (Ad Philad. vii.). 'The true meat of the Christian is the "bread of God, the bread of heaven, the bread of life, which is the flesh of Jesus Christ," and his drink is Christ's blood, which is love incorruptible' (Ad Rom. vii.). 'He has no love of this life; his love has been crucified, and he has in him no burning passion for the world, but living water [as the spring of a new life] speaking within him, and bidding him come to his Father' (Ad Rom. vii.). Meanwhile his enemy is the enemy of his Master, even 'the ruler of this age' (Ad Rom. vii.).

"These passages, it must be repeated, are not brought forward as proofs of the use of the writings of St. John, but as proofs of the currency of the modes of thought of St. John. They indicate at least that phraseology and lines of reflection which are preserved for us in the characteristic teaching of the fourth Gospel were familiar to the writer of the Ignatian Epistles."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'The Canon of the New Testament,' p. 35.

"In this place Grabe and Mill understand by 'the Gospel' the book or volume of the Gospels; by 'the Apostles,' the book or volume of their Epistles; as by 'the Prophets,' the volume, or whole canon of the Old Testament. And Le Clerc, who assents to the truth of the observation of these learned men, has farther commented upon this passage in this manner: 'Which words,' says he, 'as it seems, are to be understood of the Evangelic and Apostolic writings. So that what Ignatius intends is this, that in order to understand the will of God, he fled to the Gospels, which he believed no less than if Christ Himself, in the flesh, that is, in the condition He was in on earth, present and still living among men, delivered with His own mouth those discourses which are contained in the Gospels. As also he fled to the writings of the Apostles whom he esteemed as the presbytery of the whole Christian Church, under Christ the universal Bishop, which [presbytery] taught all Christian societies what they ought to believe . . .'"—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 89.

"In the two last places, Mill supposes to be meant the book of the Gospels. And in the following passage by 'Gospel,' he supposes to be meant the canon of the New Testament in general."—Ibid., vol. ii. p. 90.

THE FIRST CENTURY.

THE APOSTOLICAL FATHERS, S. CLEMENT AND S. BARNABAS.

S. Barnabas (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 17) was a Levite, of the country of Cyprus, and one of those Christians who, soon after the Resurrection of Jesus, sold their goods and lands, and brought the money and laid it at the Apostles' feet (Acts iv. 36, 37). He afterwards preached the Gospel in many places, together with the Apostle Paul (Acts xv. 36).

There is still extant an Epistle ascribed to S. Barnabas. It consists of two parts: the first is an exhortation and argument to constancy in the belief and profession of the Christian doctrine, particularly the simplicity of it without the rites of the Jewish law. The second part contains moral instructions.

This Epistle was held by the early writers to be rightly ascribed to S. Barnabas, the companion of S. Paul.

S. Clement of Alexandria quotes this Epistle seven different times,¹ and in four of these he calls it the Epistle of Barnabas the Apostle. Most of these quotations are from the first part of the Epistle, but one of them is from a passage which is found in the last chapter, which shows that the second part, containing the moral instructions, was supposed to be his, as well as the former.

Origen, in his answer to Celsus, quotes it with the title of the Catholic Epistle of Barnabas.² In another work he quotes a passage, which is now found in the second part of the Epistle, as the other was from the first.³

Eusebius says, "That Clement [of Alexandria] in his Institutions has written short commentaries on the books of Scripture, not omitting those that are contradicted, I mean the Epistle of Jude, and the other Catholic Epistles, and that of Barnabas, and the Revelation of Peter."⁴ In another place Eusebius reckons this Epistle among the books that are spurious, meaning, as is most likely from the context, contradicted.⁵

S. Jerome says, "Barnabas of Cyprus, called Joseph, a Levite, ordained an Apostle of the Gentiles with Paul, wrote an Epistle for the edification of the Church, which is read among the apocryphal Scriptures."⁶

But in spite of the apparent agreement of antiquity on this point, modern critics are much divided in their opinions as to the writer of this Epistle. Some, among whom may be reckoned Lardner, no mean authority, thought that it was written by Barnabas the Apostle. Others, and among them Hefele and Professor Westcott, conclude that it was not written by Barnabas the Apostle. From several incidental notices in S. Paul's Epistles, they conjecture that Barnabas the Apostle had died about 62 A.D.; and as this Epistle (cap. xvi.) alludes to the destruction of Jerusalem, it could not have been written by him. But those who hold that this Epistle was not written by Barnabas the Apostle,⁷ still maintain that it must have been written some time about, or a little before, 120 A.D.⁸

Whether, therefore, written by an Apostle or not, this Epistle is still a very ancient witness to the Church's belief in the Gospels, and to her custom of appealing to them as books of authority and regarding them as Scripture. For, beside several apparent but not exact quotations, there is one which is generally allowed to be a reference to S. Matthew's Gospel and is made in that form of quotation which was used by the Jews when they cited their sacred books, namely (ch. iv.), "It is written." Let us therefore beware lest it should happen to us as it is written, 'There are many called, few chosen.'⁹

S. Clement (Lardner, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 29) was Bishop of Rome. Ancient writers, without any doubt or scruple, assert that he was the same Clement whom S. Paul mentions among his "fellow-labourers whose names are in the book of life" (Philipp. iv. 3).

A very great number of writings have been ascribed to

¹ S. Clemens Alex. Strom. ii. 6, 7, 20, vol. i. pp. 965, 969, 1060; Epist. cap. i. iv. xvi.

_____ v. 10, vol. ii. p. 96; Epist. cap. vi.

_____ ii. 15, 18, vol. i. pp. 1005, 1024; Epist. cap. x. ult.

_____ v. 8, vol. ii. p. 81; Epist. cap. x.

² Origen contr. Cels. i. 63, vol. i. p. 777; Epist. cap. v.

³ Origen, de Princip. iii. 2, 4, vol. i. p. 309; Epist. cap. xviii.

⁴ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 14, vol. ii. p. 549.

⁵ _____ iii. 25, vol. ii. p. 269.

⁶ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. vi. vol. ii. p. 619.

⁷ Hefele, Patres Apost., Proleg. p. viii.

⁸ Ibid. p. xii.

⁹ S. Barnabas, Epist. sec. iv. p. 6.

¹⁰ The Epistle of Barnabas.—"The Epistle of Barnabas cannot be placed later than 120 A.D., while the majority of critics place it much earlier. It contains three distinct allusions to words or facts which occur in our text of S. Matthew. And, in a fourth place, it quotes the words of our Gospel with the formula, 'it is written' (chap. v.). The last passage in the Epistle stands thus: 'Let us take heed, lest we should be found, as it is written, many called, but few chosen.' Hilgenfeld admitted that the allusions to our first Gospel made its use by the author of the Epistle probable; but the original Greek of the last passage, where words, found in S. Matthew, and in him alone, are distinctly and formally quoted as Scripture, had perished; and Hilgenfeld, with a multitude of other critics, suggested that the formula, 'as it is written,' was an interpolation. Some years after, Tischendorf discovered the original Greek of the whole Epistle, and not only so, but the Greek text, which he found, was contained in the Sinaitic codex, one of the two most ancient and valuable MSS. in existence. There in the original Greek stood the very formula in dispute, viz., 'as it is written;' and Hilgenfeld has had to print it in his own edition of Barnabas. Thus the cause is finished at last, and we have the certainty that as early as 120 our first Gospel ranked as 'Scripture.'—"Dublin Rev." April 1875, p. 403.

S. Clement, but the first Greek epistle alone can be confidently pronounced genuine.

The Epistle is written in the name of the whole Church of Rome to the Church of Corinth. The main design of it evidently is to compose some dissensions which had arisen in the Church of Corinth about their spiritual guides and governors. These differences appear to have been raised by a few turbulent and selfish men among them. In the Epistle Clement recommends not only concord and harmony, but love in general, humility and all the virtues of a good life, and many of the great articles and principles of religion.

Several of the ancient writers refer to S. Clement's letter to the Corinthians.

Some think that S. Polycarp has in several places transferred the thoughts and also the expression from the letter of Clement to the Corinthians to his own letter to the Philippians.¹

S. Irenæus says, "When the blessed Apostles [Peter and Paul] had founded and established the Church [at Rome], they delivered the office of the bishopric in it to Linus. Of this Linus Paul makes mention in his epistles to Timothy [2 Tim. iv. 21]. To him succeeded Anacletus. After whom, in the third place after the Apostles, Clement obtained that bishopric, who had seen the blessed Apostles, and conversed with them: who had the preaching of the Apostles still sounding in his ears, and their traditions before his eyes. Nor he alone, for there were then still many alive, who had been taught by the Apostles. In the time therefore of this Clement, when there was no small dissension among the brethren at Corinth, the Church at Rome sent a most excellent letter to the Corinthians, persuading them to peace among themselves," &c.²

S. Clement of Alexandria³ quotes the Epistle of S. Clement of Rome to the Corinthians in several places; so also do Origen⁴ and Eusebius,⁵ as well as others of the early writers.

Some modern critics place this Epistle of Clement as early as 70 A.D., at the close of the persecution of Nero⁶ (68-70). But the more general opinion is that it was written later, about 95 or 96 A.D.⁷

In this Epistle, Clement makes use of the following words, "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, for He said, 'Woe to that man [by whom offences come]. It was better for him that he had not been born than that he should offend one of My elect. It was better for him that a millstone should be tied about his neck and that he should be drowned in the sea than that he should offend one of My little ones.'"⁸

A difference of opinion has arisen as to whether Clement is here referring to words of Christ written and recorded, or whether he is reminding the Corinthians of words of Christ which he and they might have heard from the Apostles, or other eye and ear witnesses of our Lord.⁹

¹ Hefele, Patres Apost., Proleg. p. xxi.

² S. Irenæus, cont. Hær. iii. 3, 3, p. 849.

³ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 6, vol. ii. p. 445.

⁴ S. Clemens Alex. Strom. i. 7, iv. 17, vol. i. pp. 736, 1312.
v. 12, vi. 8, vol. ii. pp. 117, 288.

⁵ Origen, de Princip. ii. 3, 6, vol. i. p. 194.

— in Ezekiel, cap. viii. vol. iii. p. 796.

⁶ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 16, 38; vol. ii. pp. 249, 293.

⁷ Hefele, Patres Apost., Proleg. xxx.

⁸ S. Clement, ad Corin. xlv. p. 57 (Hefele).

p. 143 (Lightfoot).

⁹ S. Clement.—"Upon the whole, I think this Epistle was written by Clement, when bishop, at the end of Domitian's persecution, in the year 96 A.D."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 34.

"The latter date (circ. 95) seems more probable."—PROF. WESTCOTT, 'On the Canon of the New Testament,' p. 24.

"It may fairly be said that very few writings of classical or Christian antiquity are so well authenticated as this letter."—p. 4.

Then, after reviewing all the points that relate to the date of the letter, Canon Lightfoot thus concludes, "This date, moreover, is confirmed by the fact that the most trustworthy accounts place the episcopate of Clement late in the century, making him third in the succession of Roman bishops. Thus the letter will have been written about the year 95."—p. 5. 'The Epistles of S. Clement of Rome,' by CANON LIGHTFOOT.

"Between the date of S. John's Gospel and that of the earliest of sub-apostolic writings, the interval is probably at the most not greater than fifteen years. S. Clement of Rome was a contemporary of S. John, and, if we may believe Eusebius, barely survived the death of the Apostles. Compare Eusebius iii., 34 with 23."—H. B. SWETE, 'History of the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit,' p. 11.

"Le Clerc, in his Dissertation of the Four Gospels, is of opinion that Clement refers to written words of our Lord which were in the hands of the Corinthians, and well known to them. On the other hand, I find, Bishop Pearson thought that Clement speaks of words which he had heard from the Apostles themselves or their disciples.

"I certainly make no question that the first three Gospels were written before this time. And I am well satisfied, that Clement might refer to our written Gospels, though he does not exactly agree with them in expression. But whether he does refer to them is not easy to determine, concerning a man who very probably knew these things before they were committed to writing, and, even after they were so, might continue to speak of them in the same manner he had been wont to do, as things he was well informed of, without appealing to the Scriptures themselves. However, either way he by these passages greatly confirms the truth of our Gospels. If he be supposed to refer to them, the case is clear. If the words are spoken of as what he had received from the Apostles or others, he confirms our Gospels, so far as these words are agreeable to those which are there recorded; and he speaks of them as certain and well known, both to himself and the Corinthians of that time. We are therefore assured by Clement, that our Evangelists have truly and justly recorded the words of Christ, 'which He spake, teaching gentleness and long suffering, and that they are worthy to be remembered with the highest respect.'—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. ii. p. 38.

"After a very minute examination of this passage, and after making every possible allowance, that any fair mind can desire, if not even more, Mr. Sanday says, 'The hypothesis that Clement's quotation is made memoriter from our Gospel is very far from being inadmissible. . . . It seems not at all too much to say that Clement does not differ from the Synoptics more than they differ from each other.'—p. 67.

On another passage in this Epistle, which is a quotation from Isaiah, and which is common to it with the first two Synoptics, he says, "This passage seems to carry the presumption, that Clement did use the Synoptic Gospels up to a considerable degree of probability. . . . The whole evidence, which on a single instance Different opinions have been held as to whether S. Barnabas or S. Clement referred to S. John's Gospel.*

Imperfect as this examination may be, I think it will be allowed by all fair-minded men that sufficient evidence has been adduced to show that as the Church received the four Gospels in the nineteenth and sixteenth centuries, so also it received them in the fourth century, and in the third, and in the second, and during the lives of the contemporaries of the Apostles up to the time that they came from the hands of the Apostles themselves.

Considering the number of works that were in existence in the time of S. Irenæus, Eusebius, and S. Jerome, which have since perished, and the great use which they made of these works, it would have been amply sufficient to prove the continuous reception by the Church of the four Gospels, if the writings of these three Fathers alone had remained. Evidence such as theirs would have been more than sufficient to testify to the authorship, or the date, of any classical work. But far different is the case here. Testimonies to the continuous reception by the Church of the four Gospels, up to the time they were written, are so many that the attention becomes distracted and the full force of their accumulated and combining evidence is never felt.

I may now, without presumption, I think, state the belief of the Church Catholic—that is, the unvarying belief of the Church from the nineteenth century, without any interruption, up to the days of the Apostles—to be this: after Jesus had founded His Church, He Himself ascended into heaven, and sent the Holy Spirit upon His Apostles, to whom He had committed the rule in His newly-constituted society. Up to this time, His Apostles and disciples had acted entirely on the oral instructions which Jesus had Himself given them. After the day of Pentecost they were guided partly by the oral instructions which they had received from Him, and partly by the direct influence of the Holy Spirit upon their hearts. One result of the descent of the Holy Spirit was the committing to writing a history of the Incarnation; that is, an account of the birth of Jesus, His instructions to the people, His miracles, life, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension. Four were aided by the Holy Spirit for this work—S. Matthew, S. Mark, S. Luke, and S. John; and their Gospels were received by the Church from the first, and stamped with her authority and accredited as her Gospels. But besides these four, others took upon themselves this office, and because they were not aided by the Holy Spirit, they failed in it, and their works were never acknowledged by the Church or accredited as hers. It was not that other writings besides these four were accepted by the Church as her Gospels at first, and then in a later and more critical age rejected. All but the four were disowned by the Church from the beginning.

In the first age the four were accepted by the Church as her Gospels on the ground that they were written by men inspired by the Holy Spirit for their work, by Apostles or by those who wrote under their direction; and the others were rejected on the ground that they were not written by Apostles or their companions. In the next and in all succeeding ages the four were received and believed in because the Church bore witness that they are the same four, substantially the same four, which were at first received as the works of Apostles or their companions.

One or two reflections which naturally arise during this examination will aptly conclude the subject.

First, though this inquiry has been in a great measure confined to the four Gospels, and has seldom taken into consideration the Epistles, we may fairly conclude that the formight seem to incline the other way, does appear to favour the conclusion that Clement used our present Canonical Gospels.—p. 70. MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

Apostolic Fathers.—"The Apostolic Fathers wrote with the living words of the Apostles 'ringing in their ears' (Irenæus, iii. 3, 3), and they had little motive for reference to their writings. Their evidence for the authority of the Gospels is neither full nor complete; still, if we examine it carefully, if we consider it as history compels us to do, in its inseparable connection with the later tradition, we shall find that this evidence does not fail to be sufficient, because it is fragmentary and indirect."—'Dublin Rev.' April 1875, p. 360.

"I do not know that we can better sum up the case in regard to the Apostolic Fathers than thus; we have two alternatives to choose between, either they made use of our present Gospels, or else of writings so closely resembling our Gospels and so nearly akin to them that their existence only proves the essential unity and homogeneity of the evangelical tradition."—MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century,' p. 87.

"We have the express statement of Irenæus (adv. Hæreses, ii. 22, 5; iii. 3, 4)—who, if he was born, as is commonly supposed, at Smyrna about 140 A.D. must be a good authority—that the Apostle St. John lived on till the times of Trajan (98–117 A.D.). If so, it is very possible that the Gospel was not yet published, or barely published, when Clement of Rome wrote his Epistle to the Corinthians. Neither, considering its almost esoteric character and the slow rate at which such a work would travel at first, should we be very much surprised if it was not in the hands of Barnabas (probably in Alexandria) and Hermas (at Rome). In no case indeed could the silence of these two writers be of much moment, as in the Epistle of Barnabas the allusions to the New Testament literature are extremely few and slight, while in the Shepherd of Hermas there are no clear and certain references either to the Old Testament or the New Testament at all.

"And yet there is a lively controversy round these two names as to whether or not they contain evidence for the fourth Gospel; and that they do is maintained, not only by Apologists, but also by writers of quite unquestionable impartiality like Dr. Keim," &c. &c.—p. 269.

"The opinion of Dr. Keim must be of weight, but on the whole I think it will be safest and fairest to say that, while the round assertion that the author of the Epistle was ignorant of our [fourth] Gospel is not justified, the positive evidence that he made use of it is not sufficiently clear to be pressed controversially.

"A similar condition of things may be predicated of the Shepherd of Hermas, though with a more decided leaning to the negative side. Here again Dr. Keim, as well as Canon Westcott (On the Canon, p. 182, &c.), thinks that we can trace an acquaintance with the Gospel, but the indications are too general and uncertain to be relied upon."—p. 273. MR. SANDAY, 'The Gospels in the Second Century.'

mation of the Canon of the New Testament generally, or the reception of some books as authoritative, and the rejection of others, was not the result of a divine revelation, so to speak, from God to man, as to the character of each particular book ; but that it arose from the deliberate determination of a divinely directed body, the Church of Christ, and on the evidence which it had before it with respect to each book separately ; the question in each case simply being, whether such a book was written by an Apostle or under the direction of an Apostle. The inspiration of the Apostles being granted as proved in some other satisfactory manner, the question in the formation of the Canon of the New Testament was, whether a Gospel or an Epistle was written by an Apostle or under the direction of an Apostle.

Secondly, that the Church of Christ, at the time when it settled the Canon of the New Testament, was not a body possessing only one centre of action, or many centres united under one visible head, but that it consisted of many Churches in every part of the world, in Europe, in Asia, and in Africa, each in a manner, so far as internal arrangements were concerned, independent of the other ; and that the agreement of these several Churches, especially of those that were Apostolic seats, which had been founded by an Apostle, or which had received a letter from an Apostle, was necessary for the full reception of any book into the Canon.

Lastly, that the history of the formation of the Canon of the New Testament lends no countenance to the modern doctrine, that the See of Rome is the divinely appointed centre and source of all authority. It must be conceded, as I take it, even by those who hold this doctrine to be true, that the Church did not act on it in the formation of the Canon of the New Testament.

S. MATTHEW.

S. MATTHEW, the Apostle and Evangelist, is the same person elsewhere called Levi (Luke v. 27-29), the son of Alphaeus (Mark ii. 14). His call to be an Apostle is related by all the three Evangelists in the same words, except that S. Matthew (ix. 9) gives the former name, and S. Mark (ii. 14) and S. Luke (v. 27) the latter.

The publicans, properly so called, were persons who farmed the Roman taxes, and they were usually, in later times, Roman knights, and men of wealth and credit. They employed under them inferior officers, natives of the province where the taxes were collected, to which class Matthew most probably belonged.

Eusebius says that, after our Lord's Ascension, S. Matthew preached to the Jews, and then to some other nations.¹ In an early tradition he is represented as using a very sparing diet, eating vegetables only but no flesh.² Later writers relate that he died by martyrdom; but some of the earliest, who mention him, speak as if he had died a natural death.³

When did S. Matthew write his Gospel, and in what language? These are questions which have been frequently discussed, and to which men of unquestioned learning and impartiality have, on the same evidence, returned different answers. It will be sufficient here to indicate what these answers have been, and on what grounds.

I. At what time did S. Matthew write his Gospel?

Some late authors,⁴ writing in the twelfth century, say that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel about eight years after the Ascension, and others, writing in the fourteenth century, say that he wrote his Gospel about fifteen years after the Ascension.⁵ But this exactness of date is lacking in the earlier writers. The first who states the time when S. Matthew wrote his Gospel is S. Irenæus, who was born in Asia, and who had listened to S. Polycarp, and who was Bishop of

Lyons about 178 A.D.: he says, "Matthew, then among the Jews, wrote a Gospel in their own language, while Peter and Paul were preaching the Gospel at Rome and founding [or establishing] the Church there."⁶ Eusebius has quoted this passage, but has made no remark on the time indicated.⁷ Elsewhere he says, "Matthew, having first preached to the Hebrews, when he was about to go to other people, delivered to them in their own language the Gospel according to him, by that writing supplying the want of his presence with those whom he was leaving."⁸

S. Epiphanius says, "Matthew wrote first, and Mark soon after him, being a follower of Peter at Rome."⁹

Theodore of Mopsuestia says, that "for a good while the Apostles preached chiefly to Jews in Judæa. Afterwards Providence made way for conducting them to remote countries. Peter went to Rome, the rest elsewhere; John, in particular, took up his abode at Ephesus. About this time the other Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, published their Gospels, which were soon spread all over the world."¹⁰

The passages adduced are all the notices that are to be found within the first five centuries which help to fix the date of S. Matthew's Gospel. Of these, S. Irenæus alone points to any definite time; and the rest do not contradict but are consistent with his statement, that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel when S. Peter and S. Paul were at Rome preaching the Gospel and establishing the Church there. Irenæus does not say whether it was on S. Paul's first or second visit to Rome that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel. The presumption is that it was on his second visit.

If these inferences be correct, S. Matthew's Gospel was written somewhere about the year 60 A.D., or about 30 years after the Crucifixion; but nothing can be positively settled with respect to the exact date.*

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 24, vol. ii. p. 265.

² S. Clemens Alex. Prolog. ii. 1, vol. i. p. 405.

³ — Strom. iv. 9, vol. i. p. 1281.

⁴ Theophylact, Prefat. in Matt. vol. i. p. 2.

⁵ Euthymius, Prefat. in Matt. vol. i. p. 15.

⁶ Nicephorus Callist. Hist. Eccles. ii. 4, 5.

⁶ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæres. iii. i. p. 844.

⁷ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v. 8, vol. ii. p. 449.

⁸ Ibid. iii. 24, vol. ii. p. 265.

⁹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 6, vol. i. p. 897.

¹⁰ Theodorus Mopsuest. in Joan. Proem. Patrol. vol. lxi. p. 728, Migne.

* S. Matthew's Gospel. — Irenæus, who is the earliest writer upon the subject, says expressly, that Matthew wrote his Gospel while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome and founding the Church there, and I have shown that this expression, if taken literally, cannot be applied to an earlier period than the year 58. Most of the ancient authorities support this date, rather than the earlier one, which modern critics have assigned to St. Matthew's Gospel; and if he did not publish it till the beginning of the reign of Nero, we may account for his recording in such detail the predictions of our Saviour concerning the siege and destruction of Jerusalem. The inspired Evangelist could discern the signs of the times; and he wished to remind his Christian countrymen that they were to save themselves by a timely flight. The interest with which St. Matthew's Gospel was read will appear much greater, if we suppose it to have been written when wars and rumours of wars, when famines and pestilences and earthquakes,

All the early writers who refer to the subject agree that S. Matthew's Gospel was written the first of the four.¹

II. In what language did S. Matthew write his Gospel? It is more difficult to give an answer to this, at least a satisfactory answer, than it is to state at what time he wrote his Gospel.

Papias is the first who says that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel in Hebrew.² But after him all who mention the subject say the same.³

Two explanations may be given of this: (1) these writers may not be stating what they know of their own knowledge, but may be taking it from Papias's report, that there was such an early tradition, and on his authority; or, (2) they may be so many independent witnesses to the fact, or to the general belief, that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel in Hebrew.

Many considerations appear to render the former the more probable solution. Lardner points out that, of all the writers who state that S. Matthew wrote his Gospel in Hebrew, not one ever quotes S. Matthew from the Hebrew, but all from the Greek, though some of them must have been acquainted with the dialect of Palestine, or with the language here called Hebrew. In one place Origen laments the many variations to be found in the several copies of the Gospels in Greek; and he mentions what he had done to correct the errors which had crept into the Greek edition of the Old Testament then in use: how he had compared the several Greek versions with the Hebrew original, and had thus been enabled to detect and to correct many errors; and he seems to imply that he had no such helps towards attaining the right readings in the Gospels. But if S. Matthew's Gospel had been written in Hebrew, the original would doubtless have been of very great use for revising and correcting the Greek copies. It seems difficult to believe, then, that, conscious as Origen was of the many differences and errors in the readings of the Greek Gospels, he would not desire to possess a copy of the original Hebrew, with which he could compare and thus correct them, if such had been in existence; or that, with all his diligence and research, he should not be able to obtain one. But he never expresses any such desire, or alludes to any such search after a Hebrew copy of the Gospels.

The later S. Matthew committed his Gospel to writing, the less is the probability that he wrote it in Hebrew. For by Hebrew is here meant, not the language in which the Old Testament was written, but the language which the Jews then used in Palestine, i.e. Syro-Chaldaic or Aramaic. S. James, residing at Jerusalem, writes an epistle about the year 60 A.D., addressed to the twelve tribes scattered abroad, and he writes it in Greek, as is allowed by all. Why then, it is urged, should not S. Matthew, writing for the same people, and at the same time, use the same language?

It is also urged that S. Matthew's Greek Gospel has about it many marks of an original, rather than of a translation.

Neither can any time be alleged when the Gospel of S. Matthew was translated from the Hebrew into Greek, nor is there any unanimous or consistent tradition as to the name of the translator.

These and similar considerations have led many modern critics to conclude that the statement, that S. Matthew's Gospel was originally written in Hebrew, rests entirely on the report of an early tradition to that effect, which Papias had heard; and that the later writers who follow him, such as S. Irenæus and others, are merely repeating his statement, but do not add any confirmation to it from their own knowledge.

The Hebrew copy of S. Matthew's Gospel, which S. Jerome saw in the library collected by Pamphilus,⁴ may have been a translation of S. Matthew into Hebrew from the original Greek. It has been also supposed that the Gospel of S. Matthew, which the Nazarenes are said to have used,⁵ was a translation of S. Matthew into Hebrew from the original Greek, with the addition of some other things taken from the other Gospels and also from tradition.

This was Lardner's opinion, and few men had a more impartial judgment, or a more thorough acquaintance with the writings of antiquity.⁶

It has already been shown that there is every reason to believe that S. Matthew's Gospel was referred to by S. Clement of Rome, S. Barnabas, S. Ignatius, S. Polycarp, S. Justin Martyr, and that all these refer to the Gospel in Greek, and that none of them gives any sign that he is using merely a translation from the original.

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæres. iii. 1, p. 844.

Origen, in Joan. tomus vi. vol. iv. p. 256.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. vi. 25, vol. ii. p. 581.

S. Athanasius, Epist. ad Amun. Monach. vol. ii. p. 1177.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. li. 17, Homil. iv. vol. i. p. 38.

S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 4, vol. i. p. 893.

S. Jerome, Prolog. in Matt. vol. vii. p. 18.

S. Augustine, de Consensu Evangel. i. 2, vol. iii. p. 1043.

² Papias, ap. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. iii. 39, vol. ii. p. 300.

Routh, Rel. Sacr. vol. i. p. 14.

³ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 1, p. 844.

Origen, in Matt. tomus i. vol. iii. p. 829.

S. Athanasius, Synopsis, 76, vol. iv. p. 432 (inter dubia).

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Prolog. Homil. i. 3, vol. i. p. 6.

S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 5, vol. i. p. 896.

S. Jerome, in Matt. Prolog. vol. vii. p. 18.

S. Augustine, de Consensu Evangel. i. 2, vol. iii. p. 1044.

⁴ S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. iii. vol. ii. p. 613.

⁵ S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 13, vol. vii. p. 78.

⁶ ———— adv. Pelag. iii. 2, vol. ii. p. 570.

Lardner, Credibility, vol. v. p. 312.

which were to be the beginning of sorrows, were already actually felt; and those impressive words, whoso readeth let him understand, were well calculated to persuade every believer in Christ that the evil was near, even at the doors. We know from history that the salutary warning was not thrown away."—DR. BURTON, Lectures on Eccles. Hist. p. 229.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The Talmud.—The word Talmud is used in different senses: sometimes it denotes the Mishna, which is the text; at other times it is used for the commentaries upon the Mishna.

"After the death of Simon the Just there arose a sort of men whom they call the Tannaim, or the Mishnaic doctors, that made it their business to study and descant upon those traditions which had been received and allowed by Ezra and the men of the great synagogue, and to draw inferences and consequences from them, all which they ingrafted into the body of these ancient traditions as if they had been as authentic as the other And thus it went on to the middle of the second century after Christ, when Antoninus Pius governed the Roman empire, by which time they found it necessary to put all these traditions into writing. For they were then grown to so great a number, and enlarged to so huge a heap, as to exceed the possibility of being any longer preserved by the memory of men And therefore, there being danger that under these disadvantages they might be all forgotten and lost, for the preventing hereof it was resolved that they should be all collected together and put into a book; and Rabbi Judah, the son of Simeon, who from the reputed sanctity of his life was called Hakkadosh, that is, the holy, and was then rector of the school which they had at Tiberias in Galilee, and president of the Sanhedrim that there sat, undertook the work, and compiled it in six books, each consisting of several tracts, which all together make up the number of sixty-three: in which, under their proper heads, he methodically digested all that hitherto had been delivered to them of their law and their religion by the tradition of their ancestors. And this is the book called the Mishnah, which book was forthwith received by the Jews with great veneration throughout all their dispersions, and hath ever since been held in high esteem among them And therefore, as soon as it was published, it became the subject of the studies of all their learned men; and the chiefest of them, both in Judæa and Babylonia, employed themselves to make comments on it, and these, with the Mishnah, make up both their Talmuds, that is, the Jerusalem Talmud and the Babylonish Talmud. These comments they call the Gemara, i.e. the complement, because by them the Mishnah is fully explained, and the whole traditionary doctrine of their law and their religion completed. For the Mishnah is the text and the Gemara the comment, and both together is what they call the Talmud. That made by the Jews of Judæa is called the Jerusalem Talmud, and that made by the Jews of Babylonia is called the Babylonish Talmud. The former was completed about the year of our Lord three hundred, and is published in one large folio; the latter was published about two hundred years after, in the beginning of the sixth century, and hath had several editions since the invention of printing; the last, published at Amsterdam, is in twelve folios The Babylonish Talmud is that which they chiefly follow. For the other, that is, the Jerusalem Talmud, being obscure and hard to be understood, is not now much regarded by them. But this and the Mishnah being the ancientest books which they have (except the Chaldee paraphrases of Onkelos and Jonathan), and both written in the language and style of the Jews of Judæa; our countryman, Dr. Lightfoot, hath made very good use of them in explaining several places of the New Testament by parallel phrases and sayings out of them. For the one being composed about the one hundred and fiftieth year of our Lord, and the other about the three hundredth, the idioms, proverbial sayings, and phraseologies used in our Saviour's time, might very well be preserved in them."—PRIDEAUX'S 'Connection,' B.C. 446, vol. i. p. 364.

"The Mishna was published by Surenbusius in six vols. folio, Amsterdam 1698, 1703, with a Latin translation of the text. There is no reasonable doubt that, although it may include a few passages of a later date, the Mishnah was composed, as a whole, in the second century, and represents the traditions which were current amongst the Pharisees at the time of Christ."—SMITH'S 'Dictionary of the Bible,' art. 'Talmud.' See also 'Quarterly Review,' Oct. 1867, p. 417; 'Edinburgh Review,' July 1873, p. 28.

THE SUM OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

"THE story hereof is written by four; who in Ezekiel (i.) and in the Apocalypse (iv.) are likened to four living creatures, every one according as his book beginneth; S. Matthew to a man, because he beginneth with the pedigree of Christ as He is man; S. Mark to a lion, because he beginneth with the preaching of S. John Baptist, as it were the roaring of a lion in the wilderness; S. Luke to a calf, because he beginneth with a priest of the Old Testament (to wit, Zachariah, the father of S. John Baptist), which priesthood was to sacrifice calves to God; S. John to an eagle, because he beginneth with the divinity of Christ, flying so high as more is not possible.

"The first three do report at large what Christ did in Galilee after the imprisonment of S. John Baptist. Wherefore S. John the Evangelist, writing after them all, doth omit His doings in Galilee, save only one, which they had not written of, the wonderful bread which He told the Capharnaïtes that He could and would give (John vi.), and reporteth, first, what He did whiles John Baptist as yet was preaching and baptizing; then, after John's imprisoning, what He did in Jury every year about Easter. But of His Passion all four do write at large.

"Where it is to be noted that from his baptizing (which is thought to have been upon Twelfth Day, what time He was beginning to be about thirty years old, Luke iii.) unto His passion are numbered three months and three years, in which there were also four Easters.

"S. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL.

"S. Matthew's Gospel may be divided into five parts.

"The first part, as touching the infancy of our Lord Jesus: chaps. i. and ii.

"The second, of the preparation that was made to His manifestation: chap. iii., and a piece of the fourth.

"The third, of His manifesting of Himself by preaching and miracles, and that in Galilee: the other piece of the fourth chapter unto the nineteenth.

"The fourth, of His coming into Jury, toward His Passion: chaps. xix. and xx.

"The fifth, of the Holy week of His Passion in Jerusalem: chap. xxi. unto the end of the book."—FULKE'S 'New Testament.'

COMMENTARY ON S. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW.

S.V. After Matthew.

Vulg.^a Sanctum Jesu Christi Evangelium secundum Mattheum.

CHAPTER I.

[1. The Genealogy of Christ from Abraham to Joseph. 18. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary when she was espoused to Joseph. 19. The angel satiateth the misdeeming thoughts of Joseph, and interpreteth the names of Christ.]

[Vulg. A quibus majoribus Christus secundum carnem descenderit: angelus instruit Joseph de Maria sue conceptione, partuque futuro.]

It is most probable that the titles were not prefixed to the Gospels by the Evangelists themselves, but by the Church at a very early period.¹ The similarity which exists in all the titles rather goes to prove this. The division of the Gospels into chapters and verses, and the analysis of the contents of each chapter, may also be explained in the same way.² Euthalius, bishop of Sulca, in Egypt, in the fifth century, is the first who is known to have prefixed a prologue or preface to portions of the New Testament, such as to S. Paul's Epistles, the Acts, and the Catholic Epistles. It was probably after this that the practice arose of preparing an analysis of the contents to each chapter.

This is the first time that the word εὐαγγέλιον, translated Gospel,³ is used in Scripture in its specific sense, as the history of the Incarnation, or the salvation offered to man through the Incarnation; and there is evidence to show that the term εὐαγγέλιον was in this sense applied to the writings of the Apostles from a very early time.⁴ The word does not occur in the singular in the Septuagint, but it is used four times in the plural, once as a reward to the bringer of good tidings (2 Sam. iv. 10), and three times as good tidings or good tidings of victory over an enemy (2 Sam. xviii. 20, 22, 25). The corresponding verb (εὐαγγελίζομαι) is often used in the Old Testament, sometimes with a prophetic reference to the Incarnation, as Isaiah lxi. 1. It is observable that the Hebrew word בְּשָׂרָה (besorah), which is rendered εὐαγγέλιον by the Septuagint translators, means "flesh." Thus the very derivation of the word may point out that the good news which the Evangelists had to declare, was the Incarnation, or the coming of God in the flesh.⁵

The word κατά, "according to," or "as delivered by," prefixed to each of the Evangelists, contains no expression of the Church's mind, either as to the share which the Holy Spirit had in the composition of each Gospel, or as to how much was left to their own natural temperament and ability. At the same time it leaves room for any amount of diversity among them, in the selection of the portions which they should each relate, and also in the degree of fulness with which they should relate them, as well as in the style and manner in which they should compose their relations.⁶

I. The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.^b

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Epist. ad Rom. Homil. ii. p. 7.

Maldonat, in Matt. i. vol. i. p. 10.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Argument. Matt. vol. viii. p. 40.

² Lardner, Credibility, vol. v. p. 68.

³ S. Augustine, cont. Faust. lib. ii. cap. ii. vol. viii. p. 210.

⁴ S. Ignatius, Epist. ad Philad. v. p. 98 (Hefele).

v. p. 93 (Cureton, Corpus Ignat.).

Martyrium S. Polycarpi, i. and iv. pp. 124, 126.

S. Justin Martyr, Apol. i. sec. 98, p. 99.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Argument. S. Matt. vol. viii. p. 39.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, Ibid.

^a The Vulgate.—I have compared the A. V. with the Vulgate on the ground that the Vulgate translation, as left by S. Jerome, was most probably older than the oldest of our existing MSS. of the New Testament; and also that it represented the text which was in use certainly in the middle of the second century, and probably before that time. For S. Jerome says (Præf. in iv. Evangelia, vol. x. p. 526; Præf. in Job, vol. ix. p. 1079), that his revision was substantially the text of the Old Latin Version, with the errors which had crept into it in the course of time, corrected from the Greek MSS. of that day.

^b The Son of David.—That is, the true Messiah. For by no more ordinary and more proper name did the Jewish nation point out the Messiah, than by the Son of David. See Matt. xii. 23; xxi. 9; xxii. 42; Luke xviii. 38, and everywhere in the Talmudic

In answer to some, who charged him with being of ignoble birth, in his autobiography he traces back his descent from the Asamonean princes, and says, that he extracted this pedigree from the public registers, which were still extant. In a long and interesting passage in his work against Apion, he shows that so long as the priesthood continued, this care would be observed in the preservation of their genealogies. For it was necessary for the priests before ministration to prove their descent from a mother of unquestionably pure Jewish origin, free from all admixture with heathen blood. He states that these genealogical tables were kept not only at Jerusalem, but wherever the Jews were wont to congregate, whether in Egypt or Babylon. The testimony of Josephus is a sufficient refutation of the report that Herod the Great caused all the Jewish genealogical tables to be destroyed. But these public registers probably did not survive the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, or at least that by Hadrian.

Lightfoot also proves from the Talmudic writers that genealogical tables were kept at Jerusalem after our Saviour's birth.

S. Matthew's plan of arranging and numbering the genealogy which he gives, is exceedingly artificial, but one in entire agreement with the spirit and practice of the age and nation in which he lived. He divides his genealogy into three great periods,—from Abraham to David—from David to the Captivity—and from the Captivity to Joseph the husband of the Blessed Virgin. From Abraham to David there were found to be fourteen generations. As seven was regarded by the Jews as a sacred number, any multiple of that number was held in the same veneration. The first period from Abraham to David contained exactly fourteen generations, and in order to bring the other two periods into apparent uniformity with these, he mentions by name only fourteen in each of the others, omitting the surplus names, in order to reduce them to fourteen. It is confessed on all hands, that in the second period he omits the names of at least three men who were kings. Strange and unpractical as this custom of reducing to an apparent similarity things that were not really alike may seem to us, with our modern notions, it is clear from the Talmud that this practice was very common at the time in which S. Matthew wrote. None but a Jew could have reckoned up genealogies in such a way as this. But the usage was a very common one among the Jews, and it was intended partly to aid the memory in estimating the distances of remarkable persons and events, and was frequently connected with the idea of peculiar excellence either in the denary or septenary numbers.

2. Abraham begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren;^a

The brethren of Judah were no more ancestors of Jesus than Esau was, but the former are mentioned and the latter is omitted. The reason for this probably is, that Esau had no connection with the children of Israel at all, while the brethren of Judah were each of them father of a tribe, and the heads of the Jewish nation.¹ It has also been supposed that "his brethren" were added from Gen. xlix. 8, to comfort the dispersed tribes who had not yet returned out of their captivity as Judah had, by reminding them of their equal interest in Christ with him, as Hosea i. 11.²

3. And Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar; and Phares begat Esrom; and Esrom begat Aram;

V. Zare.

Thamar is the first of the four women mentioned in this genealogy, all of whom, either from their conduct or their condition, were regarded as infamous; Thamar for incest, Rahab for being a harlot, Ruth for being a heathen, and Bathsheba for adultery. Why these women, and these alone, are mentioned by S. Matthew, it is difficult to say. One reason given for this is, that it was to show that the Son of God, in taking upon Him human nature, took upon Himself certain and undoubted rolls of ancestors."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' i. vol. ii. p. 96.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. iii. vol. i. p. 29.

Africanus, who flourished early in the third century, in his letter to Aristides, preserved by Eusebius in his Ecclesiastical History (lib. i. 7, vol. ii. p. 89), also says that public genealogical tables were preserved long after the Captivity. The following is the summary of his letter on this point by Lord A. Hervey: "Africanus, reporting the pretended tradition of the Desposyni tells us, that before the time of Herod the Great the genealogies of all Hebrew families, as well as of those descended from proselytes, were preserved in the public archives (τὰ ἀρχεῖα, and a little after, δημόσιος συγγραφὴ); but that Herod the Great, jealous of a distinction which made his own ignoble birth apparent, caused all these public genealogies to be burnt (ἐπέπρησεν αὐτῶν τὰς ἀναγραφὰς τῶν γενεῶν). But that a few who took pains about the matter had private tables (ἀπογραφὰς) of their own, which they had either transcribed from memory, or had before possessed copies of, and so preserved the record of their noble birth; among whom, it is added, were the Desposyni, our Lord's kinsmen

² Lightfoot, Harmony of the Four Evangelists, sec. iii. vol. i. p. 417.

according to the flesh. Now, although I do not conceive the tradition relating to the genealogy of our Lord which follows this preamble, and professes to have been derived from the Desposyni, to be of the slightest authority, (Africanus himself admits that the whole story of the destruction of the genealogies, and all that follows, is quite unsupported by the Greek historians,) yet we may take it for granted, that whoever invented the story would adopt details known to be in accordance with Jewish customs."—LORD A. HERVEY, 'On our Lord's Genealogies,' p. 24.

^a Judah.—"In Hebrew יְהוּדָה. Which word not only the Greeks for want of the letter h in the middle of a word, but the Jews themselves do contract into יוּדָה, Judah, which occurs infinite times in the Jerusalem Talmud. The same person who is called R. Jose Bi R. Jehudah (Demai, vol. xxi. 3), in the next line is called R. Jose Bi R. Judah (Demai, xxi. 3). So also Shabb (fol. 4.4). And this is done elsewhere (Iom. toph. fol. 62-3) in the very same line."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' i. 2, vol. ii. p. 97.

all the shame that belongs to it; and that He did so to heal and to remove it.¹ Another reason given is, that the other women are not mentioned, because they were of the Jewish race, and the lawful wives of the men, who were the fathers of the children that are named, and that it was not so with these four, and therefore to prevent any suspicion arising, that their children were not the descendants of Abraham, their names are mentioned, and thus allusion is made to their history, as related elsewhere in the Old Testament.²

4. And Aram begat Aminadab; and Aminadab begat Naason; and Naason begat Salmon;

5. And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab;^a and Booz begat Obed of Ruth; and Obed begat Jesse;

S.V. Boaz; S.V. Iobed.

The Old Testament contains no mention of the marriage between Salmon and Rahab. But there are sufficient proofs that they were contemporary. S. Matthew probably extracted this marriage from some public genealogical table.³

6. And Jesse begat David the king; and David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;

S.V. and David (omit the king) begat.
Vulg. David autem rex genuit.

Thus from Abraham to David, both inclusive, there are fourteen generations. And the names correspond exactly with those recorded in the Old Testament. Gen. xxv. 19-26; xxix. xxx. xxxv. 22-26. Gen. xxxviii. Ruth iv. 18-22.

The last two verses contain one of the greatest difficulties to be found in the Scriptures. For if the chronology which is commonly received be correct, and if the genealogy from Salmon to David, as contained in the book of Ruth (iv. 18-22), and as repeated by S. Matthew and S. Luke, be complete, it will be impossible to reconcile the chronology and the genealogy together. The interval between the entrance of the children of Israel into Canaan and the time of David is usually reckoned as 400 years, or from 400 to 500 years. But between Salmon, one of Joshua's contemporaries, and David, only three names occur according to the genealogy, Boaz, Obed, and Jesse. Evidently there is a mistake, either in the received chronology or in the genealogy.⁴

Some have suggested that the genealogy, as given in the book of Ruth (iv. 18-22), and as repeated by S. Matthew and S. Luke, was not intended to be a full and complete list of all the names, that were in direct succession from Salmon to David, but contained only the principal ones; and that the missing links occur before Boaz rather than after.⁴ But it has been shown with great clearness, that there is reason to believe that the genealogy from Salmon to David is full and complete, while there is ground for believing the chronology, which assigns 400 years or more to the interval between the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan and the time of David, to be wrong by at least 200 years. This would bring the genealogy and the chronology into harmony with each other.⁵

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. lib. iii. 17, &c., vol. ii. p. 1595.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 3, vol. vii. p. 21.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. iii. vol. i. p. 29.

Euthymius, in Matt. i. 3, vol. i. p. 27.

² Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 3, vol. i. p. 13.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 3, vol. viii. p. 45.

^a Salmon begat Booz of Rachab.—“As to the source from which St. Matthew derived his knowledge that Salmon married Rahab, the most probable appears to be the genealogical table, in which this circumstance was recorded, and for the truth of which we now have St. Matthew's Apostolic and inspired authority.”—BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS (LORD A. HERVEY), ‘On the Genealogies,’ p. 65.

“It can be little doubted that he meant her, mentioned Joshua 2. Now the Jews, belike to deface the truth of Matthew, who from ancient records, averreth her for the wife of Salmon, have bronched this tenet, that she was married unto Joshua. Vid. Kiuchi in loc.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the Four Gospels,’ vol. i. p. 417.

“So far the Jewish writers agree with Matthew, that they confess Rachab was married to some prince of Israel, but mistaking concerning the person; whether they do this out of ignorance or wilfully, let themselves look to that. Concerning this matter, the Babylonian Gemara (Megil. fol. xiv. 2) hath these words: ‘Eight prophets, and those priests sprang from Rachab, and they are these: Neriah, Baruch, Seraiah, Maaseiah, Jeremiah, Hilkiah, Hanameel, and Shallum.’ R. Judah saith, ‘Huldah also was of the posterity of Rachab.’ And a little after, ‘There is a tradition that she being made a proselyte, was married to Josua’ (which Kimchi also produceth in Jos. vi.) Here the gloss casts in a scruple. ‘It sounds somewhat harshly,’ saith it, ‘that Josua married one that was made a proselyte; when it was not lawful to contract marriage with the Canaanites, though they became proselytes. Therefore we must say, that she was not of the seven nations of the Canaanites, but of some other nation, and sojourned there. But others say, ‘That that prohibition took not place before the entrance into the promised land.’—LIGHTFOOT, ‘On S. Matthew,’ i. 5, vol. ii. p. 97.

³ Dr. Mill's Sermons, pp. 161-163.
⁴ Dr. Mill's Sermons, p. 165, &c.
⁵ Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey), on the Genealogies, ch. ix. p. 204, &c.; also his article in Smith's Bible Dictionary.

harshly,’ saith it, ‘that Josua married one that was made a proselyte; when it was not lawful to contract marriage with the Canaanites, though they became proselytes. Therefore we must say, that she was not of the seven nations of the Canaanites, but of some other nation, and sojourned there. But others say, ‘That that prohibition took not place before the entrance into the promised land.’—LIGHTFOOT, ‘On S. Matthew,’ i. 5, vol. ii. p. 97.

^b Salmon begat Booz.—“In both the genealogies (St. Matthew's and St. Luke's) there are but three names between Salmon and David—Booz, Obed, Jesse. But according to the common chronology, from the entrance into Canaan (when Salmon was come to man's estate) to the birth of David was 405 years, or from that to 500 years and upwards. Now for about an equal period, from Solomon to Jehoichin, St. Luke's genealogy contains 20 names. Obviously, therefore, either the chronology or the genealogy is wrong. It must suffice here to assert that the shortening the interval between the Exodus and David by about 200 years, which brings it to the length indicated by the genealogies, does in the most remarkable manner bring Israelitish history into harmony with Egyptian, with the traditional Jewish date of the Exodus, with the fragment of Edomitish history preserved in Gen. xxxvi. 31-39, and with the internal evidence of the Israelitish history itself.”—BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS (LORD A. HERVEY), ‘On the Genealogies’ in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.

7. And Solomon begat Roboam; and Roboam begat Abia; and Abia begat Asa;

S.V. Asaph.
Vulg. Asa.

8. And Asa begat Josaphat: and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias;

S.V. Asaph.
Vulg. Asa.

It is clear from 1 Chron. iii. 10, 11, that Ozias, i. e. Uzziab, was neither the son nor the immediate successor of Joram. For Joram begat Ahaziah, and Ahaziah begat Joash, and Joash begat Amaziah, and Amaziah begat Azariah or Ozias.

Joram.
|
Ahaziah.
|
Joash.
|
Amaziah.
|
Azariah or Ozias.

Thus the names of the three kings, Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah are omitted between Joram and Ozias.

The question arises, were these names really omitted by S. Matthew? and if so, why did he omit them? or did this happen through some mistake of the copyist of S. Matthew's manuscript? As no manuscript of S. Matthew's Gospel has ever been known that contained the names of these three kings, it has been generally concluded that they were omitted by S. Matthew himself. The reason why three names should be omitted, most probably was to make this period correspond with the first, and so to contain only fourteen names. Why these three names in particular should be omitted rather than three others, it is difficult to say. The reason given by several of the Fathers was, that God had threatened to cut off all the posterity of Ahab, and as Joram had married Ahab's daughter Athaliah, the first name omitted was their son Ahaziah; and as posterity was counted to the fourth generation, his two successors in a direct line were both omitted.¹

That S. Matthew himself omitted these three names has been rendered extremely probable by the publication of several instances of a similar handling of the numbers of generations, in order to bring them to a symmetrical or mystical shape by Philo, and also by the author of an ancient Samaritan poem.² The natural conclusion in both these cases, as well as in that of S. Matthew, is that there could be no question either of ignorance or deception, but merely an adoption of a national mode of thought in dealing with numbers. Several instances of similar omissions in the genealogical tables given in the Old Testament have also been pointed out.

9. And Ozias begat Joatham; and Joatham begat Achaz; and Achaz begat Ezekias;

10. And Ezekias begat Manasses; and Manasses begat Amon; and Amon begat Josias;

S.V. Amos.
Vulg. Amos.

11. And Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon:

Margin. Some read, Josias begat Jakim, and Jakim begat Jechonias.

¹ S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. i. 8, vol. i. p. 920.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 8, vol. vii. p. 22.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. xxxi. art. iii. vol. iv. p. 284.

[Jansenius.

* And Joram begat Ozias.—The names of Ahazias, Joash and Amazias are struck out. See the history in the books of the Kings, and 1 Chron. iii. 11, 12.

* The promise, that the throne of David should not be empty, passed over after a manner for some time into the family of Jehu, the overthrower of Joram's family. For when he had razed the house of Ahab, and had slain Ahaziah, sprung on the mother's side of the family of Ahab; the Lord promised him, that his sons should reign unto the fourth generation, 2 Kings x. 30. Therefore, however, the mean time the throne of David was not empty; and that Joash and Amazias sat during the space between, yet their names are not unfrequently omitted by our Evangelist, both because they were sometimes not very unlike Joram in their manners, and because their kingdom was very much eclipsed by the kingdom of Israel, when Ahazias was slain by Jehu, and his cousin Amazias taken and basely subdued by his cousin Josiah, 2 Chron. xxv.

* "Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, &c. For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation, Exod. xx. 5.

* Joram walked in the idolatrous ways of the kings of Israel, according to the manner of the family of Ahab, 2 Kings viii. 18. Which horrid violation of the second command God visits upon his Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. vi. p. 47.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 8, vol. i. p. 15.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 8, vol. viii. p. 46.

² Dr. Mill's Sermons, pp. 153-158.

posterity, according to the threatening of that command, and therefore the names of his sons are dashed out unto the fourth generation.

* The Old Testament also stigmatizeth that idolatry of Joram in a way not unlike this of the New, and shews that family unworthy to be numbered among David's progeny, 2 Chron. xxii. 2. 'Ahazias the son of two and forty years,' that is, not of his age (for he was not above two and twenty, 2 Kings viii. 26), but of the duration of the family of Omri, of which stock Ahazias was on the mother's side, as will sufficiently appear to him that computes the years. A fatal thing surely! that the years of a king of Judah should be reckoned by the account of the house of Omri.

* Let a genealogical stile not much different be observed 1 Chron. iv. 1, where Shobab, born in the fifth or sixth generation from Judah, is reckoned as if he were an immediate son of Judah. Compare chap. ii. 50.

* In like manner Ezra vii. in the genealogy of Ezra five or six generations are erased.—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' i. 8, vol. ii. p. 97.

* About the time they were carried away to Babylon.—The captivity of the Jews into Babel was but μετωικισμα, a hitting of their families (as Aristæus saith of Ptolemy Lagus his capturing them, τοὺς ἀπὸ μετακίσειν, τοὺς δὲ ἡμελωτικῶς) for they returned ere long to their own home again. But the Ten tribes captivated

12. And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel;^a and Salathiel begat Zorobabel:^b

V. Salathiel.
Vulg. Salathiel.

In verse 17, S. Matthew says, that from David until the carrying away unto Babylon, are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations. Now if we begin the second period or tessara-decade with Solomon, and end it with Jechoniah, there will be fourteen generations, and if we begin the third period or tessara-decade with Salathiel, and end it with Jesus, there will be only thirteen generations. Two ways of solving this difficulty have been proposed.

One of these is to reckon David twice, as the last of the first tessara-decade, and as the first of the second, and then to reckon Jechoniah as the first of the third. The reasons that can be urged for this are given in the note.^c

The second explanation is to reckon David once, and Jechoniah twice, or rather to reckon two Jechoniah's. For it has been conjectured that the person indicated by Jechonias in verse 11, "Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren," and the person indicated by Jechonias in verse 12, "And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel," are not one and the same, but two persons. An examination into the family of Josiah will show that they were probably father and son.

In 1 Chron. iii. 15, 16, we read that Josiah had four sons, Johanan, Jehoiaquim, Zedekiah, and Shallum, and that Jehoiaquim had also a son called Jehoiachin or Jechoniah. From 2 Kings xxiii. xxiv, we learn that, on the death of Josiah, Shallum succeeded to the throne, and that Pharaoh, king of Egypt, dethroned him, and made his brother Jehoiaquim king, and that Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, put him to death, and made his son Jehoiachin king, and that he afterwards deposed Jehoiachin, and made Zedekiah his uncle, king; and that he then deposed Zedekiah, put out his eyes, and carried him away captive to Babylon. Thus Zedekiah was the last descendant of David, that actually reigned on his throne.

The difference between Jehoiaquim (Ἰωακίμ), and Jehoiachin (Ἰωαχίμ), is so trifling, being merely that between κ and χ, or k and ch, that it could excite no surprise, if they were occasionally confounded. Several instances have been given, where these two names have been confounded by writers.^d

But if the conjecture, that the Jechonias in verse 11, and the Jechonias in verse 12, refer not to the same person, but to two men, father and son, be correct, it is also probable that the similarity in the two names may have caused a part of the text of S. Matthew to have been, by some oversight, omitted. For in every other case, every name in this list is written twice, first as son and then as father. Nor does there appear to be any reason, why this should not be the case here. Thus the full expression, to be in conformity with the others, would be of this kind, "Josiah begat Jehoiaquim and his brethren, and Jehoiaquim begat Jehoiachin, about the time they were carried away into Babylon: And after they were brought to Babylon, Jehoiachin begat Salathiel." When the words Jehoiachim and Jehoiachin were confounded, Jechoniah, the name by which the latter was also called, would stand for both.^e

This second explanation of the difficulty is approved by some commentators, who have given very careful attention to

¹ Dr. Mill's Sermons, p. 151.
Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey), On the Genealogies, p. 72.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, viii. 7, vol. i. p. 217.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 12, vol. vii. p. 23. [S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, de Consen. Evang. ii. cap. iv. 10; vol. iii. p. 1076.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 12, vol. viii. p. 46.

Grotius, in Matt. i. 17; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 45.

Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey), On the Genealogies, p. 70, &c.

by Shalmanezar, are said to be ἐν ἀποκρίᾳ in the LXX. 2 Kings xviii. 11, in a perpetual departure from their own houses. And they and all the rest of the nation, are at this day ἐν διασπορᾷ, in a dispersion, without any home of their own at all, John vi. 35; James i. 1; 1 Peter i. 1.—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' vol. i. p. 415.

^a Jechonias.—'Called Conias, Jer. xxii. 24. For God by taking away the first syllable of his name, sheweth that He will not establish the throne or race of Solomon any more upon it: as his father Jehoiaquim belike in so naming him had presumed. The Jews delighted to join the name Jehovah to their own names, but somewhat shortened. For in the beginning of the name it was but Jeho, as Jeho-shaphat, Jeho-ram, &c. And in the end it was Jahu, as Mica-jahu, Eli-jahu. And sometimes in the very same name it was set before or after indifferently, as Jeho-achaz, 2 Chron. xxi. 17, is Ahaz-jahu, 2 Chron. xxii. 1. So Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxiv. 8, is Jechon-jahu, 1 Chron. iii. 16.'—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' vol. i. p. 415.

^b Salathiel begat Zorobabel.—'I have not thought it necessary to enter into any argument to prove that the Salathiel and Zerubbabel of the author of Chronicles, of the Gospel of St. Matthew, and of the Gospel of St. Luke, are the same individuals, though the opposite view has the sanction of some great names. The occurrence of two such names (both ἀπασί λεγόμενα) at exactly the same period, and in the same genealogical sequence, in the genealogy of the same person, is to my mind conclusive; and any scheme which requires us to consider two distinct Zerubbabels, sons of Salathiel, must by that circumstance fall to the ground. It may however be well just to note that the identification of a third and fourth generation makes assurance on this point trebly and quadruply sure.'—BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS (LORD A. HERVEY), 'On the Genealogies,' p. 126.

^c 'There is some diversity among commentators in making out the three divisions, each of fourteen generations, v. 17. It is however, obvious, that the first division begins with Abraham and ends with David. But does the second begin with David, or with Solomon? Assuredly with the former; because, just as the first begins ἀπὸ Ἀβραάμ, so the second also is said to begin ἀπὸ Δαυὶδ. The first extends ἕως Δαυὶδ, and includes him; the second extends ἕως τῆς μετοικεσίας, i.e. to an epoch and not to a person; and therefore the persons, who are mentioned as coeval with this epoch ἐν τῇ μετοικεσίᾳ, v. 11), are not reckoned before it. After the epoch the enumeration begins again with Jechoniah, and ends with Jesus.'—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 183.

the subject, in ancient as well as in modern times; but there are others, whom it does not satisfy.¹ If we accept this explanation, the three tessa-decades will be:

1. Abraham.	1. Solomon.	1. Jehoiachin, or Jechonias.
2. Isaac.	2. Roboam.	2. Salathiel.
3. Jacob.	3. Abiah.	3. Zorobabel.
4. Judah.	4. Asa.	4. Abiud.
5. Phares.	5. Josaphat.	5. Eliakim.
6. Esrom.	6. Joram.	6. Azor.
7. Aram.	7. Uzziah (Ozias).	7. Sadoc.
8. Aminadab.	8. Jotham.	8. Achim.
9. Nasson.	9. Ahaz.	9. Eliud.
10. Salmon.	10. Hezekiah.	10. Eleazar.
11. Boaz.	11. Manasseh.	11. Matthan.
12. Obed.	12. Amon.	12. Jacob.
13. Jesse.	13. Josiah.	13. Joseph.
14. David.	14. Jehoiakim.	14. Jesus.

It is urged that what renders this explanation more probable is,² that it could scarcely be said of Josiah, that he begat a son about the time the tribe of Judah and the other tribes, that adhered to it, were carried away to Babylon. Some of these were carried to Babylon after the reign of Jehoiakim, others after the reign of Jehoiachin, and the remainder after the reign of Zedekiah. But Josiah must have been dead some years before even the first of the three removals of the kingdom of Judah to Babylon. But it could be said with much greater appearance of historical accuracy, that Jehoiakim begat a son about the time they were carried away to Babylon. Also, the expression "his brethren" might apply to Jechonias in verse 11, because he had three brothers; but not to Jechonias in verse 12, because he had only one.

It was of this Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah, or Coniah, son of Jehoiakim, and grandson of Josiah, that God, by the prophet Jeremiah (xxii. 30) said, "Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days; for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah."

Two very different interpretations have been given of verse 12, mainly depending on the meaning of the word "childless" in Jeremiah xxii. 30, and of the word "begat" in S. Matthew, chapter i.

Some interpret the word "childless" in its literal sense, and as meaning that Coniah or Jechoniah should have no children, at least, none that should survive him. They also explain the word "begat" as not confined to natural procreation, but as including also legal succession. They maintain that the throne of David had been hitherto filled by none but the descendants of David through his son Solomon, and that this line now failed; that Jechoniah was the last survivor of all the descendants of David through Solomon, and that he was literally childless, with no descendant who survived him; that, though the kingly dignity had been suppressed by Nebuchadnezzar, the kingly rights, or the right of succession to David's throne, would naturally devolve on a lineal descendant of David through another of his sons, if such existed; that S. Luke shows that there was another line from David, through his son Nathan, the brother of Solomon by the same mother; that Salathiel, the son of Neri, a lineal descendant of David, through his son Nathan, was the contemporary and survivor of Jechoniah, and that on him the succession to David's throne devolved; and that when S. Matthew says that "Jechonias begat Salathiel," he does not use the term "begat" in the sense that he gave life to him by natural generation; but that he bequeathed to him the right, which he had himself inherited, that is, the right of succession to the throne of David. This explanation has been maintained by commentators of reputation for learning and ability in the seventeenth, as well as in the nineteenth century.³

Others understand the sentence against Coniah or Jechoniah (Jeremiah xxii. 30) differently. They suppose that the first part of the verse is explained by the latter, and that "childless" means in this case, that he should have none to sit upon his throne; that none of his children should succeed to his throne. They also hold that the word "begat" in S. Matthew, chapter i., expresses sometimes the relation of a father to his son, and sometimes that of a father to a lineal descendant more or less remote; but that it always implies descent by natural procreation, and not by legal succession only. They therefore maintain that when S. Matthew says, "Jechonias begat Salathiel," he meant that Salathiel was the actual son of Jechonias, and not merely that he was legally his successor.⁴

Of those, who hold that Salathiel was the actual son of Jechoniah, some⁵ think that the Salathiel and Zorobabel of S. Matthew (i. 12), were not the same as the Salathiel and Zorobabel of S. Luke (iii. 27); that Zorobabel, son of Salathiel, of S. Matthew, was the same as the Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, indicated by Ezra (iii. 2), Nehemiah (xii. 1), and Haggai (i. 1), as the leader of the Jews who returned from captivity; and that the Salathiel and Zorobabel of S. Luke were probably so called, after the other and more famous Salathiel and Zorobabel; others⁶ maintain that the Salathiel and Zorobabel of S. Matthew were the same as the Salathiel and Zorobabel of S. Luke; but that the Salathiel of S. Matthew was the son of Jechoniah naturally or by birth, and the son of Neri legally only.

¹ Bengel, in Matt. i. 11, p. 6.

² Mr. McClellan, New Test. vol. i. p. 409.

³ Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey). On the Genealogies, p. 71.

⁴ Grotius on Luke iii. 23, Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 1230.

⁵ Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey). On the Genealogies, ch. iv.

Id., Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Aggæum, i. 1, vol. vii. p. 613.

Mr. McClellan, New Testament, vol. i. p. 410.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Aggæum, i. 1, vol. vii. p. 613.

⁶ Mr. McClellan, New Testament, vol. i. p. 410.

13. And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14. And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

S*. Sadoch.
Vulg. Sadoc.

15. And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16. And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ;

The question may be raised, What was S. Matthew's object in his genealogy? Was it mainly to show, that Jesus was descended from Abraham, and from David through his mother; and incidentally to show, that He was the rightful heir to the throne of David through Joseph, the husband of Mary? Or was S. Matthew's principal object to prove, that Jesus was the rightful heir to the throne of David through Joseph, and only by inference to show, that He was the descendant of David and Abraham through His mother?

Those, who hold the latter of these two opinions, say that S. Matthew brings his genealogy from Abraham, the father of the Jewish nation, to whom the Messiah had been promised, to David the king, to whom He had also been promised, as a descendant and successor to his throne. Some think that S. Matthew then traces the successors to David's throne through his son Solomon as far as Jechoniah, who, in their opinion, was the last survivor of David's descendants through his son Solomon, and that he then traces the heirs to David's throne from Salathiel, the heir of Jechoniah and a descendant of David through his son Nathan, down to Joseph. Others hold that S. Matthew traces the successors to David's throne through his son Solomon only, and not at all through his son Nathan: namely, from David to Jechoniah, and from Salathiel, Jechoniah's son, to Joseph the husband of Mary: that whatever legal rights Joseph could confer as a father, these he conferred on Jesus, because, in the eye of the law, and in the estimation of the people, Joseph was the father of Jesus. When therefore S. Matthew shows, that Joseph was the legal heir to the throne of David, he proves also that Jesus, as his heir, was likewise heir to David's throne.

But in proving to the Jews, that Joseph was the lawful successor to David's throne, S. Matthew necessarily shows, that he was David's descendant. But Joseph and Mary were, in all probability, and as is generally admitted, cousins. Therefore, in proving that Joseph was the descendant of David, S. Matthew by implication proves that Mary was, and therefore that Jesus was. Such is the reasoning of those, who hold that S. Matthew's chief object was to show that Jesus was heir to the throne of David through Joseph, the husband of His mother.

But S. Matthew himself gives no intimation, that his object in the genealogy was to show the legal right to the throne of David, which Jesus acquired through Joseph, the husband of His mother. The title which he gives to his genealogy, "the book of the generation of Jesus Christ," seems rather to imply, that his main purpose was to trace the actual descent of Jesus from David, and not his legal right to his throne, or at least, only incidentally so. If, as many think, Mary's mother was the sister of Joseph's father, Joseph and Mary would have a common ancestor in their grandfather Matthan.

Had Jesus been the son of Joseph and Mary, the names of Joseph and of Jacob his father would have correctly stood in the genealogy, as showing the descent of Jesus from Matthan, and so from David. But as the case was, these two names appear to us in these days, to be out of place in the genealogy. Nevertheless, S. Matthew puts them in, because it was not according to the Jewish custom for the names of any women to stand, as in modern times, as a separate independent link in a genealogy.¹ In all the genealogies in the Old Testament, not a single instance of this can be found. Instead of the names of Mary and her mother up to Matthan, as we in modern times should have expressed it, S. Matthew according to the Jewish custom inserts those of Joseph and his father up to Matthan, and then immediately goes on to guard against the conclusion, which in ordinary cases would have been drawn from this, namely, that Joseph was the father of Jesus. The remainder of the chapter is taken up with showing, that Joseph, though the husband of Mary, was not the father of Jesus.

Mary's maternal, and Joseph's paternal descent would coalesce in their grandfather Matthan, and beyond that would be identical. If the preceding explanation be correct, S. Matthew's genealogy will show the Blessed Virgin's maternal descent from David, as S. Luke shows her paternal.²

The Fathers of the second century,³ that is, the earliest writers, who refer to the genealogies—S. Justin Martyr, S. Irenaeus, S. Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian—all interpret S. Matthew, as tracing the descent of Jesus through His mother up to David and Abraham. The testimony of S. Justin Martyr is important for two reasons. (1.) Because what he says, applies to one of the genealogies, as much as to the other. He is speaking of that part of the genealogy, which is common to S. Matthew and to S. Luke, namely, from Abraham to David; and he says, "From them Mary derives her descent." (2.) Because he gives the key which explains how, in spite of the omission of Mary's name, and of the insertion of Joseph's, the genealogy really in-

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. ii., vol. i. p. 22.

Euthymius in Matt. i. 2, vol. i. p. 23.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 16, vol. viii. p. 47.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iii. 23, vol. viii. p. 701.

³ S. Justin Martyr, Dial. sec. 327, p. 353.

S. Irenaeus, Fragment. xxix. p. 1244.

S. Clemens Alex. Strom. i. 21, vol. i. p. 889.

Tertullian, de Carne Christi, 22, vol. ii. p. 789.

tended was that of Mary, and only incidentally that of her husband Joseph. Having been born a Jew, Justin Martyr knew that no woman's name could stand, as a separate and independent link, in a genealogy; and also that Mary, having, as seems probable, no brother, and being an heiress, would, according to the law of Moses, be married to a man of the same family, namely, to her cousin, and that from their grandfather upwards, the genealogy would be identical.

The charge which Theodoret makes against Tatian, the pupil of S. Justin Martyr, shows that, in Tatian's opinion also, the natural interpretation of the genealogies was, that they traced the descent of Jesus through His mother, up to David. Theodoret says, that when Tatian became a heretic, he composed his "Diatessaron" from the four Gospels, "leaving out the genealogies and everything that shows the Lord to have been born of the seed of David according to the flesh."¹

This part of the subject is discussed at greater length, and S. Matthew's genealogy compared with S. Luke's, and their points of agreement and of difference shown, under S. Luke, ch. iii.

17. So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations;^a and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

S. Matthew divides his genealogy into three great periods, from Abraham to David, and from David to the Captivity, and from the Captivity to Jesus. Because the first period contained exactly fourteen generations, he makes the other two periods to correspond with this; at least so far, as to mention the names of only fourteen in each. The men, whom he omits, may have been in themselves unworthy of mention; but they were probably omitted, rather to make the two latter periods correspond with the first. The precise object in this is probably unknown. It may have been to assist the memory, or from some reference to the number seven, which with the Jews was sacred, and full of deep significance.

18. Now the birth of Jesus Christ^b was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused

¹ Theodoret, Har. fab. i. 20, vol. iv. p. 156.

^a Fourteen Generations.—"In every one of these several fourteen, they were under a several and distinct manner of government, and the end of each fourteen produced some alteration in their state. In the first they were under prophets; in the second, under kings; and in the third, under Hasmonean priests. The first fourteen brought their state to glory in the kingdom of David; the second, to misery in the Captivity of Babylon; and the third, to glory again in the kingdom of Christ.

"The first begins with Abraham that received the promise, and ends in David, that received it again with greater clearness. The second begins with the building of the Temple, and ends in the destruction of it. The third begins with their peeping out of misery in Babel, and ends in the accomplished delivery by Christ.

"The second, that terminateth in the peoples captivity into Babel, fixeth not on Jehoiaquin, in whom the captivity began; nor in Zedekiah, in whom it was consummate; but in Jeconiah, who was in the middle space between. And from the same date doth Ezekiel come and reckon the captivity through all his book. Caps. viii. 1; xi. 1; xvi. 1; xviii. 1; xxi. 1; xxv. 1; and xl. 1.

"The whole sum of the three fourteens is the renowned number of two and forty; the number of the knops and flowers, and branches of the candlestick; of the journeys and stations of Israel betwixt Egypt and Canaan, Numb. xxxiii. Of the children of Bethel, 2 Kings ii. 24. And see Rev. xi. 2, and xiii. 5."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' vol. i. p. 418.

^b Of Jesus Christ.—"The point to be determined, is whether Ἰησοῦ should stand in the text before Χριστοῦ or not. It is found in the text of perhaps every existing Greek manuscript; on the other hand, S. Irenæus expressly asserts that it should not be there, and gives a reason for his statement. His words are as given by his Latin translator (for the Greek original does not exist), scilicet potius debere Mathæum Jesu vero generatio sic erat, sed probabilius Spiritus S. deposuisse, et promissionem contra transmissam tantum coram, per Mattheum aut Christi autem generatio sic erat. (S. Irenæus, cont. Hæc. iii. 16, 2.) . . .

"For the reading Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ there are all existing Greek MSS. (except possibly No. 71, which, according to Tischendorf, reads Χριστοῦ; Cod. B. which has Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ; and probably D; for though the Greek Text is wanting at this place, the Latin version, which is generally a slavish interpretation of the Greek, reads Christi). With them are the two Egyptian versions, the Peshito and Harclean Syriac, the Armenian and the Æthiopic; and of Patristic writers Origen, Eusebius, and others of later date.

"On the other side, for the reading Χριστοῦ are all the Latin versions, including the Vetus Latina; the Curretian Syriac; and S. Irenæus expressly, as we have seen, with later Fathers.

"At first sight, no doubt, there seems an overwhelming array of evidence for the reading Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ; but our estimate of it will probably be modified when we take the following considerations into account, viz.:

"1. According to S. Irenæus' express statement, Greek MSS. were known to him with the reading Χριστοῦ.

"2. All the evidence for this reading is undoubtedly of the second century; while the opposing witnesses, except perhaps the Thebaic version, are all later. At any rate, it is clear that Χριστοῦ was the current reading through so wide an area as Syria, North Africa, and Gaul, in the second century, though it may have been supplanted by the other in the third.

"3. In no other genuine place of the New Testament is the collocation of words ὁ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ found. It is found in three places of the Textus Receptus, viz. Acts viii. 37, 1 S. John iv. 3, and Apoc. xii. 17; but every one of these places is undoubtedly spurious, in fact the collocation belongs to a later time, when the distinction between Ἰησοῦς as the proper name, and Χριστός as the official title had been lost, and the two were merged in one common appellation. There is a peculiar force in the use of ὁ Χριστός in the passage under discussion, by S. Matthew, writing for Jews.

"4. It is more in accordance with the laws of the variation of MSS., that the short reading should have been changed into the longer one, than conversely.

"... Considerations 2, 3, and 4, are of great weight. Perhaps the best conclusion is to place Ἰησοῦ in the margin, as a reading supported by great authority, but as having too strong arguments against it to place it in the text. . . ."—C. E. HAMMOND, 'Textual Criticism,' p. 61, &c.

to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

Vulg. Christi autem generatio.

The meaning of this passage is not to be gathered from one word, but from several. The usual meaning of μνηστεύομαι is, to be betrothed to a man, or to be affianced, to become his wife at some future time. The ceremony of betrothal took place among the Jews months before the actual marriage; and it was a formal, and a legally recognised custom among the Jews.

But there are several reasons, which lead to the conclusion, that μνηστεύομαι is not used here in its usual sense; that, for instance, a virgin espoused (μεμνηστευμένην) to a man whose name was "Joseph" (Luke i. 27), does not simply mean, that the Virgin Mary was affianced to Joseph to become his wife at a future time; but that she was then by this act, and thus before her Conception, made his legal wife;¹ only that there was no more marital intercourse between them, than if she had been merely his betrothed, i.e. promised to become his future wife. For after this act of betrothal, Joseph is called her husband (ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς), v. 19, and Mary is called his wife (τὴν γυναῖκα σου), v. 20; and this act of betrothal or marriage is expressly spoken of, as conferring on him the right of marital intercourse. For Joseph's difficulty is said to have arisen from the fact, that after Mary had been espoused or married to him (μεμνηστευμένην), but before they came together, that is, before they had marital intercourse, she was found with child. Again, months after this, and after Joseph had been bidden by the angel to take unto him Mary his wife (παράλαβεῖν Μαρίαν τὴν γυναῖκα σου), or rather, to retain Mary whom he had taken for his wife, S. Luke (ii. 5) still calls her his espoused wife (Μαρίαν τῇ μεμνηστευμένῃ αὐτῷ γυναῖκι). That Mary was already Joseph's wife is also implied in the intimation, that he was minded to put her away (ἀπολῦσαι αὐτήν), v. 19.

That the Jews regarded Joseph and Mary as legally married by the act here spoken of as betrothal is plain. Anxious as they were to cast reproach upon Jesus, they never object to Him illegitimacy or spuriousness of birth. All that they can find to object to Him is the meanness of His birth, that He was the son of Joseph the carpenter. Nor do they anywhere cast a slander on His mother, as having given birth to Jesus, before she was married; or before she had been married a sufficient length of time.

From all this, it is abundantly clear, that μνηστεύομαι implies in this case more than to betroth, and that it means that Mary was by that act made Joseph's wife; but that there was no more marital intercourse between them, than if she had been only betrothed to him to become his wife at a future time. Legally, by the act here called betrothal, Joseph had become the husband of Mary; practically he was only her guardian, the protector of herself and her Child; of herself from the possibility of calumny and reproach, and of her Child from the machinations of Herod.

Thus, before her Conception, Joseph and Mary were legally married, but were living a life of holy continence. In leading this life, they were probably following a supernatural impulse, and were unconsciously influenced by God to lead the life, which best fitted them to become His instruments in the stupendous work of the Incarnation; Mary to become the mother of God, and Joseph to become the guardian of the Holy Child, and His mother. The conduct of Joseph and Mary, in living such a life, would be far above the common standard of life among men, and it would be little less than angelic. But such were the lives of all, who were intimately connected with the Incarnation, as far as we have any means of ascertaining it. Such certainly were the lives of Simeon and of Anna. (Luke i. 25, 36.)

The marriage of Joseph and Mary was necessary for several reasons. For had the Virgin given birth to Jesus, without being married, there would have been no one to protect her Child from the designs of Herod, or to shield herself from an evil reputation among men. Even the devout Jews, sincerely anxious to learn, would have had an additional difficulty in believing that Jesus, born of a mother who was unmarried, and therefore born in a condition that was esteemed base both by God and man, was the Messiah foretold by the prophets. In addition to this, it has also been said, that one object in this marriage, was to deceive Satan, and thus for a time to avoid his devices. Aware from the prophets, that the Messiah should be born of a Virgin, Satan interpreted the Virgin to mean an unmarried woman, and was on the look out for the birth of the Messiah of an unmarried woman; and thus for a long time he was left in doubt, whether Jesus were the Christ, even up to the Temptation and after it.²

19. Then Joseph her husband being a just man, and not wishing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily.

20. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy

¹ Eusebius, Questiones ad Stephanum, i. 1, vol. iv. p. 881.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. iv., vol. i. p. 39, &c.

Theophylact, in Matt. i. 18, vol. i. p. 7.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. lib. ii., vol. ii. p. 1553, &c.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 18, vol. vii. p. 24.

S. Augustin, de Nupt. et Concupiscentiæ, i. 11, vol. x. p. 420.

—, cont. Julian, Pelag. v. 12, vol. x. p. 810, &c.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Summ. iii. quest. xxix. art. 2, vol. iv. p. 268.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. vii. p. 50.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 18, vol. i. p. 25.

Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. i. 18, vol. i. p. 10.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 18, vol. viii. p. 53.

² S. Ignatius, Epist. ad Ephes. sec. 19, p. 79 (Hefele).

—, Corpus Ignatianum, Cureton, p. 36.

Origen, in Luc. Homil. vi., vol. iii. p. 1815.

Eusebius, Questiones ad Stephanum, i. 1, vol. iv. p. 881.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. lib. ii., vol. ii. p. 1553.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 18, vol. vii. p. 24.

wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

Margin, begotten.
Vulg. apparuit in somnis ei—quod enim in ea natum est.

21. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for He shall save His people from their sins.

Margin, Saviour.

Though willing to do whatever was right, for he was a good and conscientious man (δίκαιος), Joseph was sadly perplexed by the condition of Mary. For though she was his wife, there had been no marital intercourse between them, and yet she was evidently with child. In such cases, the law would allow him to inflict condign punishment on her, and to put her away; but this was not to be thought of in the case of the saintly Mary. For inexplicable as her condition was to him, her conduct had been holy and beyond all reproach. While considering what was the right course to pursue, whether this was not to put her away with as little publicity as possible, an angel of the Lord appeared unto him, and bid him not to fear to take unto him Mary his wife, or rather to retain (παρὰλαβεῖν) Mary, whom he had already taken to wife;¹ for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

An angel of the Lord appeared to Mary as well as to Joseph, but at a different time, and in a different manner, but each suited to their purpose. These are also related by different Evangelists; S. Luke relating the appearance of the angel unto Mary (i. 26, &c.), and S. Matthew that to Joseph. The angel Gabriel appeared to Mary to announce her Conception, but he appeared not in a dream, for this required her previous faith and concurrence. Some time after Mary's Conception, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, to command him to keep Mary his wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost, and to perform to the Child the duty of a legal father, and to give Him the name which was descriptive of his office and character, Jesus, the Saviour.

Some, chiefly the Greek commentators, have supposed, that the two following verses are the words of the angel, who goes on to direct Joseph's attention to the fact, that in the Virgin, and in her Conception, is the fulfilment of Isaiah's (vii. 14) prophecy.² Others have held, that these are the words of the Evangelist.³ This would only be in keeping with S. Matthew's practice, who frequently calls attention to the fulfilment of the prophets by the Incarnation.

22. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

Vulg. quod dictum est a Domino per prophetam.

23.

"Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son,
and they shall call his name Emmanuel,"

which being interpreted is,

"God with us."

Margin, his name shall be called.
Vulg. et vocabunt nomen ejus.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. vii. p. 52.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 20, vol. i. p. 28.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 20, vol. viii. p. 32.

² S. Irenaeus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 21, p. 950.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. v. vol. i. p. 62. [Theophylact,

³ Behold, a virgin shall be with child.—That the word

עֵלְמָוֹה in the prophet denotes an untouched virgin, sufficiently appears from the sense of the place (Isaiah vii.). King Achaz there was afraid lest the enemies that were now upon him, might destroy Jerusalem, and utterly consume the house of David. The Lord meets with this fear by a signal and most remarkable promise, namely, that sooner should a pure Virgin bring forth a child, than the family of David perish. And the promise yields a double comfort: namely, of Christ hereafter to be born of a Virgin, and of their security from the imminent danger of the city and house of David. So that, although that prophecy of a Virgin's bringing forth a son should not be fulfilled till many hundreds of years after, yet at that present time, when the prophecy was made, Ahaz had a certain and notable sign, that the house of David should be safe and secure from the danger that hung over it. As much as if the prophet had said, Be not so troubled, O Achaz, does it not seem an impossible thing to thee, and that never will happen, that a pure Virgin should become a mother? But I tell thee, a pure Virgin shall bring forth a Son, before the house of David perish.—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew, i. 23; vol. ii. p. 101.

"The early Christians (Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. page 319 Thirly), urged against the unbelieving Jews, that the miraculous conception of the Saviour was to be expected from the famous passage in Isaiah (vii. 14), the reading of which, and the interpretation of the reading, could not be disputed, inasmuch as παρθένας, and not παῖδες, was the translation of the term in question in the Septuagint version, made some hundreds of years before Christ

Theophylact, in Matt. i. 22, vol. i. p. 9.

Euthymius, in Matt. i. 22, vol. i. p. 45.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. vii. p. 54.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 22, vol. i. p. 29.

Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. i. 22, vol. i. p. 14.

was born, inasmuch as there would have been no 'sign' or 'wonder' (which was promised) had παῖδες been the true rendering; and inasmuch as other texts point to the same conclusion, as for instance, 'who shall tell His generation?'—p. 128.

"The Fathers in using the Septuagint as the weapon of their warfare, used the same which the Apostles did, and one the legitimacy of which was acknowledged by the party they were contending against. Moreover, as this translation was made some two hundred and fifty years before Christ was born, it was impossible to object that those texts which bore testimony to Jesus could have been unduly treated by the Christians, and a meaning assigned to them which they were never intended to bear. Indeed, in this respect the translation, perhaps, had greater force even than the original, for it furnished an argument that the plain, unperverted sense of the Hebrew was what that version represented it: and that though the Hebrew, when strained for a purpose, might be made to speak somewhat less favourably for the Christian, still this could not be done with impunity so long as the Septuagint remained to rebuke the novelties of later translations, and stood as a monument of the sense assigned to Scripture by scholars necessarily impartial, and who lived when the original language was well understood. The attempts to wrest the Hebrew from the cause of the Gospel, made by Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, in their translations, only served to show what a tower of strength the Septuagint was found to be."—p. 134. J. B. BLUNT, 'History of the Christian Church.'

In answer to the Jews,¹ who objected that the proper word for a virgin was כְּתוּלָה, and that Isaiah in his prophecy (vii. 14) had not used this word, but הַעַלְמָה, the ancient commentators show, that while both these words refer to a virgin or unmarried girl, the latter carries with it the additional notion of youthful; and that the Septuagint translators have accordingly rendered it by παρθένος, which always means a virgin; and that such is the use of the word in the Old Testament. For both these words are applied to Rebecca, to describe her condition before any man had known her (Gen. xxiv. 16 and 43), and the word used by the Septuagint translators in both these passages to express these two Hebrew words is the same, namely, παρθένος. The latter word is also applied to Miriam, the sister of Moses, soon after his birth (Exod. ii. 8) to express that she was a very young girl, scarcely marriageable. It was also pointed out that neither Isaiah nor S. Matthew said "a virgin," but "the virgin" (Isaiah הַעַלְמָה, ἡ παρθένος Septuag.; S. Matthew, ἡ παρθένος).²

These words do not mean, that the translation of Emmanuel from one language into any other, would be Jesus, but that the Emmanuel of Isaiah is equivalent, in its meaning, to the Jesus of the Gospels. Emmanuel means "God with us," and Jesus means Saviour. Therefore, literally understood, and as to the meaning of their component parts, they are not the same. But they are the same in the meaning, which they are intended to convey to man. For by these two words we are taught that "God with us," "God Incarnate," is the only Saviour, and that Jesus, the Son of Mary, is the God Incarnate, the Saviour of mankind.³

24. Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

—25. And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn Son: ^a and he called His name JESUS.

S.V. had brought forth a son.

Vulg. dñe p p rnt filium suum primogenitum.

S. Matthew is careful to record the fact, with all the authority which he, as an Evangelist possessed, that there had been no marital intercourse between Joseph and Mary before the birth of Jesus. His language on this point admits of no doubt. Whether there was such marital intercourse between them afterwards was a subject of discussion towards the end

¹ S. Jerome, cont. Jovin. lib. ii. 32, vol. ii. p. 254.

² S. Chrysostom, in Isaiah, vii. 14.

^a Her first-born Son.—The prominent idea conveyed by the term 'first-born' to a Jew would not be the birth of other children, but the special consecration of this one. The typical reference in fact is foremost in the mind of St. Luke, as he himself explains it, 'Every male that cometh of the womb shall be called holy to the Lord' (ii. 23). Thus 'first-born' does not necessarily suggest 'later-born,' any more than 'son' suggests 'daughter.' The two words together describe the condition under which in obedience to the law a child was consecrated to God. The 'first-born son' is in fact with the Evangelists equivalent for the 'male that cometh of the womb.'—τὸν πρωτότοκον ought to be rejected from St. Matthew's text, having been interpolated from Luke ii. 7.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Epistle to the Galatians,' p. 257.

Mary Ever-Virgin (ἀειπαρθένη).—This title, which is commonly applied to S. Mary by later writers, is found in Epiphanius Heres. 78, 5; Didym. Iren. i. 27, p. 84; Rufin. Fid. i. 43; Lepor ap. Cassian. Incarn. i. 5; Leon. Ep. 28, 2; Cæsarius has ἀειπάρης, qu. 20. On the doctrine itself, vide a letter of S. Ambrose and his brethren to Siricius, and the Pope's letter in response (Const. Ep. Pont. pp. 669–682). As we are taught by the predictions of the prophets that a Virgin was to be Mother of the promised Messiah, so we are assured by the infallible relation of the Evangelists, that this Mary "was a Virgin when she bare Him." . . . Bishop Pearson adds that 'many have taken the boldness to deny this truth, because not recorded in the sacred writ,' but 'with no success.' He replies to the argument from 'untill' in Matt. i. 25, by referring to Gen. 28, 15; Deut. 34, 6; 1 Sam. 15, 35; 2 Sam. 6, 23; Matt. 28, 20. He might also have referred to Psalm 110, 1; 1 Cor. 15, 25, which are the more remarkable, because they were urged by the School of Marcellus as a proof that our Lord's kingdom would have an end, and are explained by Euseb. Eccl. Theol. iii. 13, 14. Vide also Cyr. Cat. 15, 29, where the true meaning of 'untill' (which may be transferred to Matt. i. 25) is well brought out. 'He who is King before He subdued His enemies, how shall He not the rather be King, after He has got the mastery over them?' Vide also note on S. Thomas's Catena, Old Test. in loc.; vide also Suicer de Symb. Niceno-Const. p. 231; Spanheim, Dub. Evang. 28, 11.—DR. J. H. NEWMAN, 'On S. Athanasius,' Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 381.

³ Tertullian, adv. Judæos, cap. ix. vol. ii. p. 617.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. v. vol. i. p. 63.

'Helvidius, against whom St. Jerome (de Perpetua Virgin. B. Marie, 5; vol. ii. p. 188, Migne) writeth, abused greatly those words of Matthew concerning Joseph and the mother of our Saviour Christ, 'He knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born,' thereby gathering against the honour of the blessed Virgin, that a thing denied with special circumstance doth import an opposite affirmation when once that circumstance is expired.'—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Pol.' v. xlv. 2; vol. ii. p. 194.

'To be persuaded that the blessed Virgin did not continue so pure a virgin (all her lifetime) after our Saviour's birth as she was before, is certainly an error ex specie, very dangerous; yet nothing so deadly as the error of Eutyches, which held that our Saviour Christ did not, after His resurrection and glorification, continue as truly man as He was before.'—DR. THOMAS JACKSON, vol. xii. p. 97.

'We believe the Mother of our Lord to have been not only before and after His nativity, but also for ever, the most immaculate and blessed Virgin. For although it may be thought sufficient as to the mystery of the Incarnation, that when our Saviour was conceived and born, His Mother was a Virgin; though whatsoever should have followed after could have no reflexive operation upon the first-fruit of her womb; though there be no farther mention in the Creed, than that he was born of the Virgin Mary; yet the peculiar eminence and unparalleled privilege of that Mother, the special honour and reverence due unto that Son, and ever paid by her, the regard of that Holy Ghost who came upon her, and the power of the Highest which overshadowed her, the singular goodness and piety of Joseph, to whom she was espoused, have persuaded the Church of God in all ages to believe that she still continued in the same virginity, and therefore is to be acknowledged the ever Virgin Mary' (see also the notes).—BISHOP PEARSON, 'On the Creed,' art. iii.; vol. i. p. 213.

'Now, the necessary consequence of this dignity of the Blessed Virgin, is, that she remained for ever a Virgin, as the Catholic Church hath always held and maintained. For it cannot with decency be imagined, that the most holy vessel, which was thus once consecrated to be a receptacle of the Deity, should afterwards be desecrated and profaned by human use.'—BISHOP BULL, 'Sermon on Luke,' i. 48, 49: vol. i. p. 156.

of the fourth century. The Church Catholic, having regard to the uniform language of Scripture, and to the reverence which naturally belongs to such an awful mystery as the Incarnation, held that there was not, but that Joseph and Mary lived the same life of holy continence, after the birth of Jesus, as they had before; and that the Blessed Virgin remained ever a virgin, as was probably intimated in many passages in the Old Testament, such as Cant. iv. 12; Ezek. xiv. 2. This doctrine is affirmed by a succession of representative writers in both the Eastern and Western Church from the earliest times down to the 16th century.¹

On the other hand, men like Jovinian, Helvidius, the Ebionites, and others, whose faith on other points, to say the very least, was defective, maintained that there was such intercourse; and that the language of S. Matthew in this passage implied as much. The two expressions on which they relied as showing this were (1), "And knew her not till she had brought forth." They maintained that the word "till" (ἕως οὗ) implied that he knew her afterwards. (2.) "Her first-born Son," found in some MSS. here, and in all in S. Luke ii. 7. This, they urged, meant that others were born after, and thus that our Lord's brethren, who are mentioned in several places in the Gospels, were the sons of Joseph and Mary.

With respect to the expression "until," the great Doctors of the Church showed that the common use of it both in Scripture and in profane authors, was to assert or deny a fact up to a certain time, but with no reference to any time beyond that, as in the following instances, "He sent forth a raven, which went to and fro, until (ἕως οὗ, Septuagint) the waters were dried up from off the earth" (Gen. viii. 7). But this does not mean that the raven returned to him when the waters were dried up. "Therefore Michal, the daughter of Saul, had no child unto the day (ἕως τῆς ἡμέρας, Septuagint) of her death" (2 Sam. vi. 23). This of course means that she never had any child. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on my right hand until (ἕως ἄν) I make Thine enemies Thy footstool" (Ps. cx. 1). "Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till (ἕως ἄν) thou hast paid the uttermost farthing" (Matt. v. 26). But this does not imply that he should ever be able to pay the uttermost farthing, and should then come out. Such, too, is the use of the word in numberless other passages.

With respect to the expression "first-born" (πρωτότοκος) they replied that it meant that none was born before, and that it did not imply that others were born after. This is the constant use of the word, thus "At midnight the Lord smote all the first-born (πάν πρωτότοκον, Septuagint)," Exod. xii. 29. Here it evidently means that the Lord slew the first-born, whether it were the first-born of many, or was the only-begotten. "Sanctify unto me all the first-born (πάν πρωτότοκον), whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine" (Exod. xiii. 2). Here the meaning of first-born is fixed, as that which openeth the womb. It may be the first-born among many, or it may be the only-born, the only-begotten.

With respect to the Lord's brethren, James and Joses, and Simon and Judas, and His sisters (Matt. xiii. 55), whether they are the children of Joseph and Mary, it may be said that the early writers maintain that the constant tradition of the Church is against this; and that it is not necessary to understand these words in that sense, as there are other explanations of these terms sufficiently satisfactory. (See 'Comment. on S. Matt.' xii. 46.)

The Evangelists nowhere state the year, or the month, or the day of the month on which Jesus was born. Nor do any data now exist that will enable us to determine the day on which He was born. For that we have nothing but the tradition of the Church. But the year and the month we can still determine, at least by probable calculations.²

Four events are recorded in the Gospels which have been used as data to fix the year in which Jesus was born.* These in Luc. Homil. vi. vol. iii. p. 1818.

¹ Origen, in Joann. tomus i. c. vol. iv. p. 31.

S. Athanasius, Fragment in Luc. vol. iii. p. 1393.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. v. vol. i. p. 64.

S. Epiphanius, Her. lxxviii. 9, vol. ii. p. 711.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. ii. 7, vol. v. p. 485.

Theophylact, in Matt. i. 25, vol. i. p. 10.

Euthymius, in Matt. i. 25, vol. i. p. 47.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. i. vol. i. p. 921.

S. Ambrose, de Causa Bonosi, 3, vol. iii. p. 1173.

S. Jerome, de Perpet. Virginit. B. M. 9, &c., vol. ii. p. 192.

S. Augustine, de Nupt. et Concup. i. 11, vol. x. p. 420.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo in Nativit. Dom. ii. 2, vol. i. p. 195.

Venerable Bede, in Matt. i. 25, vol. iii. p. 12.

S. Bernard, Homilies on the Annunciation.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Summ. iii. quest. 28, art. 3, vol. iv. p. 262.

Erasmus, in Matt. i. 18, Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 9.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. vii. p. 55.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 25, vol. i. p. 25.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. i. 25, vol. vii. p. 57.

² See Wieseler's Chronological Synopsis of the Four Gospels, ch. ii. p. 45, &c.

* "Proceeding to compare the general results of our investigation of the four chronological data given in the Gospels, by the help of which we propose to determine the year of our Lord's Birth, we shall discover the following surprising agreement: (1.) If Jesus was born in the lifetime of Herod the Great, He must have been born before April 750 A.C., since Herod died at the beginning of that month. This is the extreme latest possible date of the Birth of Jesus. (2.) The star which led the wise men from the East to Jerusalem to see the Messiah, appeared during the months of February, March and April 750 A.C. (3.) The census which was the cause of our Lord's Birth taking place at Bethlehem, must have been held at the close of the reign of Herod the Great, probably a short time before the 12th of March, 750 A.C., on which day the insurgent Matthias, the Theudas of the New Testament, was executed. (4.) About thirty years, reckoned back from the Baptism of Jesus, i.e., the summer of 780 A.C., brings us back again to a date somewhat earlier than April, 750 A.C., but scarcely earlier than the beginning of that year.

"These four chronological data lead us to the same year 750 A.C., and, what is more, the same period of the year, viz., its are (1), the reign of Herod, the father of Archelaus; (2), the appearance of the Star to the wise men; (3), the census of Judæa under Augustus; and (4), the fact that Jesus was about thirty years of age when He began His Ministry.

From a comparison of various passages in Josephus and other authors, it is clear that the death of Herod took place seven days before the Passover of 750 A.U.C., and therefore in the first eight days of the month Nisan, 750 A.U.C. Since Jesus was born in the reign of Herod, His birth must have taken place before the month Nisan, 750 A.U.C., that is, four years before the common era, or the era of Dionysius.*

This date, for the birth of Jesus is further confirmed by an examination into the time indicated by the appearance of the Star to the wise men; that is, on the supposition that this Star was a real Star, and not a meteor of extraordinary nature, supernaturally created for a temporary purpose—(see 'Comment. on Matt. ch. ii.)—also by the census, which was the cause of His birth taking place at Bethlehem—(see 'Comment. on Luke,' ch. ii.)—and by reckoning about thirty years back from the baptism of Jesus to His birth.

Even the month in which Jesus was born can be calculated approximately, and on fairly probable grounds. By a series of ingenious calculations it has been ascertained that the course of Abia, to which Zacharias (Luke i. 5) belonged, was in office in the temple service in the year 748 A.U.C., from the 3rd to the 9th of October. Zacharias, who would leave the Temple on the evening of the 9th of October, might therefore have reached his home in the hill country of Judæa on the 10th. If we assume nine months from that date for the pregnancy of Elizabeth, and add to it the six months mentioned Luke i. 26, we shall obtain the 10th of January as the date of the birth of Jesus.

It was necessary that new-born infants should be presented in the Temple forty days after their birth. If, as some have considered probable, the presentation of Jesus in the Temple preceded the visit of the Magi to the infant Jesus at Bethlehem, it would follow that He must have been born more than forty days before the death of Herod, which brings us to February, 750 A.U.C., as the latest date for the birth of Jesus.

Nor, taking into consideration the climate of Palestine at the present time, and the changes which it may have undergone in the lapse of 1800 years, will there be found anything in the fact that the shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks in the open field, to militate against the supposition that Jesus was born as early in the year as the month of January or February.

The following interesting table is taken from Wieseler's 'Chronological Synopsis of the Four Gospels,' p. 436:—

A COMPARATIVE VIEW OF THE DATES ASSIGNED BY ANCIENT AND MODERN CHRONOLOGERS TO THE BIRTH, BAPTISM, AND DEATH OF CHRIST.

	BIRTH.	BAPTISM.	DEATH.
Eusebius ..	2 B.C., 6 Jan. ..	29 A.D. ..	33 A.D. ..
Jerome ..	3 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	29 A.D. ..	32 A.D. ..
Baronius ..	3 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	29 A.D., 6 Jan. ..	32 A.D., March.
Scaliger ..	2 B.C., end of Feb. or beginning of March ..	29 A.D., 6 Jan. ..	33 A.D., 3 April.
Lamy ..	4 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	30 A.D., 8 Nov. ..	33 A.D., 3 April.
Usher ..	5 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	30 A.D. ..	33 A.D., 3 April.
Petavius ..	5 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	29 A.D. ..	31 A.D., 23 April.
Calvisius ..	3 B.C., beginning of Oct. ..	29 A.D. ..	33 A.D., 3 April.
Pearson ..	1 B.C.	33 A.D. ..
Bengel ..	4 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	27 A.D., 8 Nov. ..	30 A.D., 7 April.
Vogel ..	3 B.C. ..	28 A.D. ..	31 A.D. ..
Siskind ..	3 B.C., end of Feb. or beginning of March ..	29 A.D., end of Feb. or beginning of March ..	32 A.D. ..
Hug ..	1 B.C., Feb. ..	29 A.D., Feb.
Sanctemante ..	7 B.C., 25 Dec. ..	25 A.D., close. ..	29 A.D., 25 March.
Ideler ..	7 B.C., before the close of the year ..	25 A.D., close or beginning of 26 A.D. ..	29 A.D., 15 April.
Paulus ..	3 B.C., Feb. ..	29 A.D., end of Feb. or beginning of March ..	31 A.D., 26 April.
Schrader	35 A.D. ..
Anger ..	Before April, 4 B.C. ..	29 A.D., beginning ..	31 A.D., 27 April.
Wieseler ..	4 B.C., Feb. ..	27 A.D., spring of summer ..	30 A.D., 7 April.

Whether we call this difference of opinion as to the month and the day when Jesus was born, a great diversity if drawn from the same data, or a singular agreement if drawn from different data, it will tend to show that the tradition of the Church, which assigns December 25 as the day of Christ's birth, is true, or not far from the truth.

beginning. While then we consider it not impossible that Jesus was born towards the end of 749 A.U.C., 5 B.C., yet we must on these grounds hold it to be far more probable that He was born in one of the early months of 750 A.U.C. = 4 B.C.

* Early ecclesiastical tradition hesitates between the years 750, 751, 752, A.U.C., as the date of our Lord's Birth. It is not till a somewhat later period, that it seems to have adopted the view of Dionysius, that Jesus was born in 754 A.U.C.—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 114.

* Dionysian Era.—Dionysius Exiguus was a monk of Scythian extraction, who flourished at Rome A.D. 533, and died before A.D. 556. He was intimate with Cassiodorus; who gives him a high character for intelligence and virtue. Being familiar with Greek, he collected and translated a body of canons, including the first 50

Apostolic Canons, and those of the Council of Nice, Constantinople, Chalcedon, Sardica, and some in Africa; he also made a collection of the decrees of the Roman Pontiffs, from Siricius to Anastasius II.; and he is extant in Jastell's Biblioth. Juris Canonici, tom. i. He likewise translated a synodic epistle of Cyril of Alexandria, a paschal Epistle of Proterius, the life of S. Pachomius, an Oration of Proclus, Gregory Nyssen de Officio Hominis; and composed a Paschal Cycle of 97 years, commencing A.D. 527, of which only a fragment remains. In the last work, he proposed that Christians should use the time of Christ's birth as their era; which proposal was soon followed universally. Hence the Christian era is called the Dionysian era. But Dionysius miscalculated the time of Christ's birth, placing it four years, as most writers suppose, too late.—See CAVE, 'Hist. Literaria.'

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Chief Priests.—"And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together' (Matt. ii. 4). That is, he assembled the Sanhedrin. Herod is said by very many authors to have slain the Sanhedrin, but this is neither to be understood of the whole Sanhedrin, nor, if it were to be understood of the whole, would it denote the total subversion of the Sanhedrin. . . .

"Herod was to overcome two difficulties, that he might, with the peace and favour of the Jews, become their king. For although he had been raised unto the kingdom by the Romans, nevertheless that he might establish his throne, the people remaining quiet and accepting him, first, it seemed necessary to him that the Asmonean family should be removed out of the way, which formerly governing the people, they had some affection and love for, and which still remaining, he suspected he could scarce be secure. Secondly, that law of setting no king over them, but of their brethren, debarred him, since he himself was of the stock of Edom. Therefore he took away all those Rabbins, who, adhering stiffly to this law, opposed what they could, his coming to the kingdom. But all the Rabbins he slew not (Bava Bathra, fol. 3, 2), for the sons of Betira were left alive, who held the chair, when Hillel came out of Egypt.

"Therefore, he slew not all the Elders of the Sanhedrin, but those only, who taking occasion from that law, opposed his access to the kingdom. Out of that slaughter the two sons of Betira escaped, who held the first place in the Sanhedrin after the death of Shemaiah and Abtalion. Shammai also escaped, who according as Josephus relates, foretold this slaughter. Hillel escaped likewise, if he were then present, and Menahem, who certainly was there, and who therefore sat second in the chair. Bava ben Buta escaped also, as the Gemara relates, who afterwards persuaded Herod, that he should repair the Temple, to expiate this bloody impiety. And others escaped.

"The Chief Priests (ἀρχιερείς). When the Sanhedrin consisted of Priests, Levites, and Israelites (as Maimonides teacheth in Sanhedr. cap. 2) under the word ἀρχιερείς, chief priests, are comprehended the two former, namely, whoever of the clergy were members of the Sanhedrin; under 'the scribes of the people' are comprehended all those of the Sanhedrin, who were not of the Clergy.

"Among the priests were divers differences.

"1. Of the priests some were called, as if you would say, the Plebeian priests, namely such who indeed were not of the common people, but wanted school education, and were not reckoned among the learned, nor among such as were devoted to religion. For seeing the whole seed of Aaron was sacerdotal, and priests were not so much made as born, no wonder, if some ignorant and poor were found among them."

This is then proved by quotations from Hierosol. Trumoth. fol. 44, 1 and 2; Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 90, 2.

"However ignorant and illiterate these were, yet they had their courses at the altar according to their lot, being instructed at that time by certain rules for performing their office appointed them by lot. You would stand amazed to read (Joma, cap. i.), those things which are supposed concerning the ignorance and rudeness even of the High Priest himself.

"2. There were others who were called Idiot or private priests; who although they both were learned, and performed the public office at the altar, yet were called private, because they were priests of a lower, and not of a worthier, order.

"3. The worthier degree of priests were fourfold, besides the degree of the High priest, and of the Sagan his substitute. For 1. There were the heads of the Ephemeries, or courses; in number twenty-four. 2. There were the heads of the families in every course. Of both see the Jerusalem Talmud (Ta'anith, fol. 68, 1). 3. The presidents over the various offices in the Temple. Of them see Shekalim, cap. 5. 4. Any priests or Levites, indeed, although not of these orders, that were chosen into the chief Sanhedrin. Ἀρχιερείς chief priests therefore, here and elsewhere, where the discourse is of the Sanhedrin, were they, who being of the priestly or Levitical stock, were chosen into that chief Senate.

"'Scribes of the people.' A 'scribe' denotes more generally any man learned, and is opposed to the word rude or clownish. . . .

"More particularly scribes denote such, who being learned, and of scholastic education, addicted themselves especially in handling the pen and in writing. Such were the public Notaries in the Sanhedrins, Registers in the Synagogues, Amanuenses, who employed themselves in transcribing the law, phylacteries, short sentences to be fixed upon the door posts, bills of contracts, or divorce, &c. . . .

"But above all others the Fathers of the tradition are called Scribes, who were indeed the Elders of the Sanhedrin. . . .

"These, therefore, whom Matthew calls 'the Scribes of the people,' were those elders of the Sanhedrin, who were not sprung from the Sacerdotal or Levitical stock, but of other tribes. The elders of the Sanhedrin sprung of the blood of the priests, were the Scribes of the Clergy, the rest were the scribes of the people.

"We may therefore guess, and that no improbable conjecture, that in this assembly called together by Herod, there were present, among others: 1. Hillel, the President; 2. Shammai, Vice-President; 3. The sons of Betira, Judah, and Joshua, 4. Bava ben Buta; 5. Jonathan the son of Uzziel, the Chaldee paraphrast; 6. Simeon the son of Hillel."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' ii. 4; vol. ii. p. 109.

"He calleth them scribes of the people, to distinguish them from the secretaries or clerks of particular men, as Baruch was the scribe of Jeremy, and Seraiah the scribe or secretary of David (2 Sam. viii. 17). But these of whom mention is here, and so very frequently in the Gospel elsewhere, were not such private or peculiar clerks, but they were the public scribes or clerks of the people; and this their office or function consisted in two particulars.

"1. They were the men that took upon them to copy the Bible for those that desired to have a copy. For so great and various is the accuracy and exactness of the Scripture text in the mystical and profound significancies of letters, vowels, and accents, that it was not fit that every one should offer to transcribe the original, or that every vulgar pen should copy things of so sublime speculation. Therefore there was a peculiar and special order of learned men among the Jews, whose office it was to take care of the preservation of the purity of the text in all Bibles that should be copied out, that no corruption or error should creep into the original of the sacred writ, and these were called the 'Scribes of the people,' or their scriveners or writers of the copy of the Bible. And hence it is that there is so frequent mention in the Rabbins of Tikkun Sopherim, the correction or direction of the Scribes, or their peculiar and special disposing of the text, which the Massoreth at the beginning of the book of Numbers observeth to have been in eighteen places, which are reckoned there. These scribes may be conceived to have been either Priests or Levites, or both, the men of that tribe being the chiefest students in the Scriptures; and being bound by their calling to be able to instruct the people in the same (Deut. xxxiii. 10—Mal. ii. 7).

"They had eight and forty universities as it were, belonging to that tribe, for the education of the Clergy in the knowledge of the Law and the Prophets (Josh. xxi.); and from among the learned of those students were some set apart for this office, which required profound learning and skill; namely, to be the copiers of the Bible when any copy was to be taken, or, at least, to take care that all copies that should be transcribed, should be pure and without corruption.

"2. These also were the public and common preachers of the people, being more constant pulpit men, than any other of the Clergy; taking on them, not only to be the preservers and providers for the purity of the text, but also the most constant and common explainers and expounders of it in sermons. Therefore, it is said of our Saviour, that He taught as one that had authority, and not as the scribes (Matt. vii. 29), where the scribes are rather mentioned than any other order, because they were the greatest and most ordinary preachers. And our Saviour Himself in Mark xii. 25, 'How say the Scribes, that Christ is the Son of David?' Instancing in the Scribes only [whereas the Pharisees, Sadducees, and even all the nation of the Jews held the same opinion] because the Scribes were the men that were ofttest in the pulpit, and preached more than any other; and so this doctrine was heard more from them than others.

"And thus was Ezra a ready scribe in the Law of Moses (Ezra vii. 6), both for the copying and preserving pure the text of the Scripture, and also for the expounding of it by his sermons. And such a one is the Scribe that our Saviour speaketh of, that is instructed in the kingdom of heaven, that bringeth out of his treasure instructions out of the New Testament and Old (Matt. xiii. 52). The Chaldee Paraphrast on Jer. vi. 13, and viii. 10, and in other places instead of the Prophet, readeth the Scribe, taking, as it seemeth, the prophet in the same sense that Paul doth prophesying (1 Thess. v. 20—1 Cor. xiv. 5) for the preacher, and making the text speak in the same tenour that it doth here, 'the Priests and the Scribes.'"—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' Matt. ii. 4; vol. i. p. 439.

CHAPTER II.

[1. The wise men out of the east are directed to Christ by a star. 11. They worship Him, and offer their presents. 11. Joseph fleeth into Egypt, with Jesus and His mother. 16. He rest slayeth the children: 20. himself dieth. 23. Christ is brought back again into Galilee to Nazareth.]

[Vulg. Quomodo magi cum muneribus ad Christum natum pervenerint: de Herodis in infantes scilicet, et Christi in Egyptum exilio ipsiusque reditu in terram Israel.]

ALL the four Evangelists begin their Gospels in a different way; and introduce Jesus to us, so to speak, from a different point of view. S. Mark begins with the preaching of John, the Baptism, and the Temptation of Jesus preparatory to His Ministry.

S. John first of all states the Eternal Generation of Jesus, and the testimony of the Baptist to Him, as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

S. Luke begins with the miraculous conception and birth of John Baptist, the Annunciation of the Angel to the Blessed Virgin, the Birth of Jesus at Bethlehem, the appearance of the heavenly host to the shepherds, and their adoration of Him in the manger.

S. Matthew begins his Gospel with the genealogy of Jesus, the perplexity of Joseph at the Conception of the Blessed Virgin, the Birth of Jesus, and the arrival of the wise men from the East.

Each seems to give a different portion, so as to make up a perfect whole. S. Mark and S. John say nothing of His Birth or Childhood. S. Luke relates much of what S. Matthew omits, but he says nothing of the doubts of Joseph, of the arrival of the wise men from the East, or of Herod's act of cruelty and subtlety towards the infants around Bethlehem.

1. Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem ^a of Judæa in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2. Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star ^b in the east, and are come to worship him.

* Bethlehem.—"No one has ever doubted, I believe, that the present Beit Lahm, 'House of Flesh,' of the Arabs, is identical with the ancient Bethlehem, House of Bread, of the Jews; and it is therefore not necessary here to dwell upon the proofs, which may be seen in Reland, Palest. p. 642. Euseb. et Hieron. Onomast. art. Bethlehem. Not only does the name coincide; but the present distance of two hours from Jerusalem corresponds very exactly to the six Roman miles of antiquity. Tradition moreover has never lost sight of Bethlehem; and in almost every century since the times of the New Testament, it has been visited and mentioned by writers and travellers; by Justin Martyr in the second century; by Origen in the third; and then by Eusebius, Jerome, the Bordeaux pilgrim, and so on by hundreds to the present day. Helena built here a Church, which appears to have been the same that still exists. Jerome afterwards took up his residence in the convent, which early sprung up around it; and the Roman matron Paula came and erected other convents, and spent here the remainder of her days. . . .

"The crusaders, on their approach to Jerusalem, first took possession of Bethlehem, at the entreaty of its Christian inhabitants. In A.D. 1110, King Baldwin I. erected it into an episcopal see, a dignity it had never before enjoyed; but although this was confirmed by Pope Paschal II., and the title long retained in the Romish Church, yet the actual possession of the see appears not to have been of long continuance. In A.D. 1244, Bethlehem like Jerusalem was desolated by the wild hordes of the Kharisimians.

"The present inhabitants of Bethlehem are all Christians; and are rated at eight hundred taxable men, indicating a population of more than three thousand souls. There was formerly a Muhammedan quarter; but, after the rebellion in 1834, this was destroyed by order of Ibrahim Pacha. The town has gates at the entrance of some of the streets; the houses are solidly built though not large. The many olive and fig-orchards and vineyards round about, are marks of industry and thrift; and the adjacent fields, though stony and rough, produce, nevertheless, good crops of grain. Here indeed was the scene of the beautiful narrative of Ruth, gleaning in the fields of Boaz after his reapers; and it required no great stretch of imagination to call up again those transactions before our eyes. The present inhabitants, besides their agriculture, employ themselves in carving beads, crucifixes, models of the Holy Sepulchre, and other similar articles, in olive-wood, the fruit of the Dôm-palm, mother of pearl, and the like, in the same manner as the Christians of Jerusalem. Indeed the neatest and most skillfully wrought specimens of all these little articles, come from Bethlehem."—DR. ROBINSON, 'Biblical Researches in Palestine,' vol. ii. p. 159.

"Its confined position on the narrow ridge of the long gray hill would leave 'no room' for the crowded travellers to find shelter. Its elevation would naturally lead the early Christians to connect it with the words of Isaiah, 'He shall dwell on high, in a lofty cave of the strong rock,' Isaiah xxxiii. 16. Its southern situation made it always a resting-place, probably the first halting-place from Jerusalem, on the way to Egypt. 'By Bethlehem' in ancient times, Jerem. xl. 17, was the caravanserai or khan of Chimham, son of Barzillai, for those who would 'go to enter into Egypt'; and from Bethlehem, it may be, from that same caravanserai, Joseph 'arose and took the young Child and His mother and departed into Egypt,' Matt. ii. 14. The familiar well appears close by the gate, for whose water David longed. Eastward extend the wild hills, where the flocks and herds of David, and of Amos, and of 'the shepherds abiding with their flocks by night,' may have wandered. Amongst these hills is the long succession of rocky vaults, probably the 'cave of Adulam,' to which David retired, in the neighbourhood of his ancient home, 1 Sam. xxi. 2. Below lie the corn-fields, the scene of Ruth's adventures, from which it derives its name, the 'house of bread.' Along its slopes may be traced the vineyards of Judah, here kept up with greater energy because its inhabitants are Christians."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 163.

His Star.—"From the general expectation which prevailed in the East at the period of the Advent, and from the prophecies collected and carefully preserved in Rome under the name of the Sibylline books, we are at once led to presume that the knowledge of the early promise of a Deliverer had not been confined to the

After a careful examination it has been ascertained that the death of Herod, called the Great, took place about seven days before the Passover of 750 A.U.C., and therefore in the first eight days of the month Nisan, 750 A.U.C. As Jesus was born in the reign of Herod, His birth must in any case have taken place before the month Nisan, 750 A.U.C., that is four years before the common era, or the era of Dionysius.¹

The Incarnation was itself a miracle so stupendous, that it need not excite our surprise if God wrought other miracles to announce it. In spite of an occasional expression, which may seem to imply that some thought this star one of the regular, but uncommon, phenomena of the existing heavenly bodies, it was the general opinion of the ancient Fathers that this star was a supernatural light created for this special purpose.²

But how did these wise men infer that the appearance of this star indicated the birth of the King of the Jews? Either this was divinely borne in on their minds by God, in some strong irresistible manner, or they arrived at this conclusion from some tradition which they had received from earlier times. We are not driven to look to a Jewish source exclusively for such tradition; nor would their secluded position in Palestine, the peculiar nature of their government, or their own exclusive habits, be favourable for the dissemination of such knowledge among the heathen. The tradition may have come from some source common to both, before the Jews were separated off from the rest of the world; or the knowledge may have been gained and put into a prophetic form, even after the time of Abraham.

The country from which these wise men came may have been the same as that in which Balaam had formerly lived. Both are said to come from the East (ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν). A prophecy of Balaam, sufficient to suggest that the birth of some illustrious personage would be announced by a star has been preserved in the Old Testament (Numb. xxiv. 17). Additional knowledge, or other prophecies of like nature, he may have been the means, through God, of delivering to his own people, and for the benefit of their descendants.

These men might be, as their name implies, skilled in some branch of science; they might be astrologers, versed in the motions of the heavenly bodies, and they may have become acquainted with some singular phenomenon which happened about that time. But the more intimate was their acquaintance with the heavenly bodies, and with the laws according to which their movements are made, the greater would be their certainty, that no natural phenomenon could predict the birth of any human being, either in Judæa or elsewhere. Their whole behaviour favours the old opinion, that this star was a supernatural light, and that, though their minds might be prepared for ready belief by an ancient tradition, they received a special intimation as to the import of this star.³ Earnest and fearless they undertake a distant journey to a land, probably unknown to them. The throne of Judæa is then held by one of the most suspicious and most unscrupulous despots that ever lived, yet they proclaim that a new king of the Jews is born; and that their object in coming is to worship him. Men only act as these men did, when they are impelled by religious fervour, when they are acting, or think they are acting, at the direct command of God, and through His undoubted influence. Few men would risk their lives on convictions formed by the joint force of a scientific deduction and a popular tradition. Among the Persians, the Magi were a distinct order, like the priests among the Egyptians, and the Druids among the Gauls.⁴

Arabia Felix, or Persia, is most generally believed to be the country from which these wise men came. Justin Martyr, writing about the year A.D. 146 says that they came from Arabia;⁵ and he repeats this statement no less than ten times.

The Church, from time immemorial, has taught that these wise men first beheld the star on the birth of Jesus,⁶ and that they then started on their search, and, travelling on dromedaries, as was the custom of the country, they went first to Jerusalem, and then to Bethlehem, on January 6th, the day of the Epiphany, or Manifestation of God Incarnate to the Gentiles.⁷

Early writers were accustomed to recognise in the arrival of these wise men the fulfilment of Isaiah's words, "The Gentiles shall come to Thy Light, and kings to the brightness of Thy rising" (Is. 60). "The multitude of camels shall cover Thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah, all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord." And the Psalmist's words, "The kings of Tarshish, and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba shall offer gifts"

¹ See Wieseler, Chronological Synopsis, pp. 46-51.

² Jansenius in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 69.

³ Maldonatus in Matt. ii. 2; vol. i. p. 35.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide in Matt. ii. 2; vol. viii. p. 61.

⁵ S. Augustine, Sermo ii. in Epiph. cap. i.; vol. v. p. 1028.

⁶ S. Leo Magnus, Sermo i. in Epiph. cap. i.; vol. i. p. 235.

⁷ Herodotus, lib. i. 140.

Cicero de Divinatione, i.

[Tertullian

Tertullian ad Marcion. i. 13; vol. ii. p. 260.

⁵ S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. 305.

⁶ S. Augustine Serm. i. ii. iii. de Epiph. vol. v. pp. 1026-1031.

⁷ S. Leo Magnus, Serm. i.-viii. de Epiph. vol. i. pp. 235-260.

⁸ Tertullian, adv. Marc. iii. 13; vol. ii. p. 339.

— adv. Judeos, ix.; vol. ii. p. 619.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinit. iv. 38; vol. ii. p. 123.

S. Jerome in Dan. ii. 67; vol. v. p. 498.

Jewish nation. Their exclusive character, and that of their religion; their small significance in the political system and intellectual movement of the world; and the false as well as imperfect notions which seem to have prevailed elsewhere respecting them and their law (Apocrypha, Esther xiii. 1-7); all make it highly improbable that their expectation and predictions should have been drawn from them and their sacred books exclusively. Further, Holy Scripture distinctly exhibits to us the existence of channels of traditional knowledge severed from them. Thus much we learn particularly from the cases of Job, who was a prophet and servant of God, though he lived in a country where idolatry was practised, and of Balaam, who, not being an Israelite, nor an upright man, was nevertheless a prophet also."—GLADSTONE, 'Studies on Homer,' vol. ii. p. 39.

⁸ January vi., see note on ch. iii. 15.

(lxxii. 10). They consequently concluded that these wise men were princes or persons in high station in their own land. From the fact that the Evangelist does not speak of them in the dual, but in the plural number, it is inferred that they were more than two; and from the three kinds of gifts which they brought, it is further concluded that they were probably three in number.

In spite of the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of reconciling the expressions of S. Matthew with this supposition, the opinion has been held by some, in modern days, that this star was not a supernatural light created for a particular purpose, but one of the regular, though rare, phenomena of the heavenly bodies. Acting on this belief, the celebrated astronomer, Kepler, in the early part of the seventeenth century, calculated that in the year A.U.C. 748, or the year in which the birth of Jesus had been fixed on historical grounds, there was a rare conjunction of three planets, visible in the months of February, March, and April. This calculation has been confirmed, with slight alterations, by later astronomers. If this phenomenon, it is argued, was observed by the Magi, men who were probably astrologers, and acquainted with Balaam's prophecy of the star rising out of the East, and at a time, too, when all the world was in eager expectation of some such event, it would be sufficient to induce them to seek for further information.¹

3. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

S.V. the king Herod.
Vulg. Augustus aut m Herodes rex.

4. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

Herod, called the Great, was an Idumæan, and not a Jew by birth. The Roman Senate had created him king of Judæa, to the exclusion of the Asmonean line, and it was in the thirty-sixth year of his reign that this star appeared. Conscious that he had no hereditary title to the throne of the Jews, and that he had gained for himself but a very slight hold on the affections of the people, he would naturally enough be jealous of anything that appeared like setting up a rival to his power. To say that a new king of the Jews was born was a bold thing, and it would touch him to the quick. All Jerusalem would also be troubled, because they feared the miseries which this might be the occasion of their suffering from him. They had had experience before this of the excesses and cruelties of which Herod could be guilty.

The assembly, which Herod now called together for consultation, was probably the Sanhedrin. This usually consisted of seventy-one members, chief priests, scribes, Pharisees, and other men of eminence. This was the council in which thirty years later Nicodemus spoke in defence of Jesus (John vii.

50); and of this council Joseph of Arimathea was a member (Mark xv. 43).

5. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa: for thus it is written by the prophet, Vulg. Sic enim scriptum est per prophetam.

6.

"And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

Margin, that shall feed.

S. omits for.

Vulg. qui regat populum meum Israel.

Herod inquires of the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, where the Christ should be born, because they are the national guardians and interpreters of their own Scriptures. They reply from the prophet Micah (v. 2), in Bethlehem of Judæa. They do not quote the words of the prophet literally, but with sufficient accuracy for all purposes.

There is no real contradiction between the prophet and the Evangelist. Micah calls Bethlehem "little" among the princes, or principal cities of Judah, and S. Matthew calls it "not the least," that is, among the greatest. Bethlehem was little in itself, in its size, in the number of its inhabitants, in the grandeur of its buildings, when compared with other cities, but it was among the greatest when considered as the birth-place of David, the type of the Messiah, and as the birth-place of the Messiah Himself, of God Incarnate.

Micah calls it Bethlehem Ephratah, from Ephratah, who was the father of Bethlehem (1 Chron. iv. 4). The meanings of the two names are similar, and, if not intended as prophetic of Jesus, they are eminently descriptive of Him. Ephratah means fruitful, or fruit-bearing, and Bethlehem means the house of bread. After Bethlehem became the cradle of the Incarnation, all reference to the name of its founder, or to the fruitfulness of its soil was lost, and its meaning was concentrated in Him, who was the True Bread, who came down from heaven to give life unto the world.

7. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

Vulg. Tunc Herodes clam vocatis magis diligenter dilecti ab eis tempus stelle, qua apparuit eis.

Herod's object in calling the wise men privately was, that he might not appear to give too much importance to their communication; to avoid the excitement and tumult which an examination before the Sanhedrin would have created among the people; and to inquire more minutely into the particulars respecting the Star than he could in a public assembly.

¹ See Wieseler's Chronological Synopsis, pp. 56-564.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 399.

8. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young Child; and when ye have found Him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship Him also.

9. When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young Child was.

10. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

Some have supposed that the star may not have been visible to any but the wise men, or at least when it appeared the second time on their way from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. Herod was not accustomed to let his plans fail from want of skill or decision in the execution of them. If the star had been visible to himself and to his servants, he would doubtless have commissioned some more trusty messengers to go and search diligently for the young Child, and bring him word again where He was to be found. Herod only employed these strangers because, for some reason or other, he could not gain his object without them, probably because the star was not visible to any but them.¹

The star first indicated Judæa as the place where the newborn King was to be found, then Bethlehem, and then the habitation, τὴν οἰκίαν, in which Jesus and his Mother were found.

11. ¶ And when they were come into the house, they saw the young Child with Mary His mother, and fell down and worshipped Him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto Him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

Margin, offered.
Vulg. Et apertis thesauris suis obtulerunt ei munera, aurum, thus, et myrrham.

The opinion most common in primitive times, as already stated, and that in accordance with which the offices of the Church were framed, was, that the wise men arrived at Jerusalem within a few days after the birth of Jesus, that a few days more elapsed while they were delayed in Jerusalem, and that they finally arrived at Bethlehem about the 6th of January, where they found the Babe and His Mother still in the inn or khan, and probably still in that portion of it set apart for the cattle.²

An individual writer or two there were in early times, who held with many since, that the visit of the wise men might be considerably later.³ They were led to form this opinion, partly by the desire of shortening the interval between the time when Herod's suspicions were first aroused, and the time embraced by the decree which he issued for the slaughter of the infants, and partly by the words when they were come into "the house." They supposed that the term (τὴν οἰκίαν), which we have rendered "the house," implied a place or building, not merely inhabited by man, but intended for the habitation of man, and that the holy family had removed from the inn, the place in which was the manger, and where the shepherds had beheld and worshipped Jesus; and that this would be after the Purification of the Blessed Virgin and the Presentation of Jesus in the Temple, and therefore more than forty days after the Nativity. This explanation implies that they returned to Bethlehem, either immediately after the Presentation in the Temple, or some time later. S. Luke's words seem to indicate that after the Presentation they went straight to Nazareth (ii. 39).

S. Matthew does not speak of Joseph as being present when the wise men find the young Child with Mary, His Mother. He may, nevertheless, have been there. For the Evangelists seldom mention him, and only when they relate how his services were required for the protection of the Blessed Virgin and her Son. Joseph is introduced only on five occasions in the whole Gospel history; first, when he is represented as perplexed at the conception of Mary, his espoused wife; again, when he takes her to Bethlehem to be taxed along with himself, when Jesus was born (Luke ii. 4, &c.); when he took the young Child and His Mother into Egypt (Matt. ii. 13); again, when he brought them out of Egypt to Nazareth (Matt. ii. 19); and, lastly, when Jesus was twelve years old, when Joseph took Him and His Mother up to Jerusalem (Luke ii. 41). On all these occasions the character in which Joseph is prominently set forth, is not so much as the husband of Mary, as the guardian and protector of herself and her Son. It is only when acting in that capacity that Joseph is mentioned in the Gospels at all.

In falling down and worshipping Jesus (προσκύνησαν), and in offering to Him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh, were the Magi, or wise men, merely following the custom of their country, and acting as they would have done to one of their own native kings? or was the act intended as worship to a Being whom they recognised to be more than human? Probably they would have done the same to one of their own kings, but that does not exclude the notion that they did this to Jesus as to God, and as an act of divine worship. In the Eastern mind the difference between civil homage and religious worship was not so sharply defined as it was among the Jews. In Eastern countries the homage paid to man always bordered, and still borders, on what in more western

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 9; vol. viii. p. 66.

² S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. p. 306.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. viii.; vol. i. p. 100.

S. Gregory Nyssen, in Diem Natal. Christi, vol. iii. p. 1144.

Euthymius, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. i. p. 65.

S. Jerome, Epist. 17 ad Marcellam; vol. i. p. 490.

S. Augustine, Sermon. i. et ii. de Epiphany; vol. v. p. 1026, &c.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 36, art. 6; vol. iv. p. 332.

Maldonat, in Matt. ii. 10; vol. i. p. 38.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. viii. p. 67.

³ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xxx. 29; vol. i. p. 456.

climes, would be looked upon as divine worship. In the East, the difference between homage to man and worship to God, was scarcely marked by the outward act. The conduct of the Magi hitherto had been so different from that of the generality of men, even in their own country, that we can scarcely measure their actions by the common standard. In performing the greatest act of humiliation of which they were capable, and in offering the most costly, rare productions that their country yielded, they were probably influenced by very different feelings from those which animated the rest of their countrymen, or which had even influenced themselves before in performing similar acts. All the early writers who refer to the offering of the wise men, regard them as consciously performing an act of worship to one whom they were divinely taught to recognise as the God of heaven and earth.¹ The gifts, too, may have had a prophetic significance beyond what the givers intended, or they may have been fully alive, as was the common belief, to their import. Either way, the gifts were singularly adapted to represent the character of Him to whom they were offered. Gold has always been the emblem of a king, and as such the gold, which these wise men offered, would aptly represent Jesus as the King of heaven and earth; and might also indicate their belief in Him as such. Among the Jews, incense was used chiefly in the service of God. It was burnt daily on the altar before God, and was offered by the priest. Here it is presented to God Incarnate, the Great High Priest. Myrrh was used in embalming the body after death. Given to Jesus for His own use, it would have reference to His death. As early as the fourth century this was expressed in verse, and served to guide the faith, and to animate the devotion of Christians. S. Jerome praises Juvenius, a presbyter, as having succeeded in expressing in one admirable line, the supernatural meaning of these three gifts.

Thus, aurum, myrrham, regique, hominibus, Deique Dona ferunt.

How much these wise men saw of the nature and application of their own gifts, we are not informed. But may we not reasonably conclude that the sincerity and childlike faith which they had shown in following the star, would receive its reward and fuller development in a further manifestation of God's will to them, and in a fuller revelation of the Incarnation, the great object of man's faith, and the appointed means of his salvation?

12. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

Vulg. Et response acceptum somnis ne redirent ad Herodem.

13. And when they were departed, behold the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young Child and His mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young Child to destroy Him.

Vulg. apparuit . . . Futurum est enim ut Herodes querat puerum ad perditionem eum.

14. When he arose, he took the young Child and His mother by night, and departed into Egypt:

15. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

“Out of Egypt have I called my Son.”

Vulg. Ut adimpleretur quod dictum est a Domino per prophetam dicentem.

There is not sufficient reason to conclude that the departure of the wise men, and the flight of Joseph with the young Child and His Mother into Egypt, were closely connected in point of time. The most common opinion in the Church has been that there was a considerable interval between them. After the departure of the wise men, the holy family go up to Jerusalem, for the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, and the Presentation of her Son, related in Luke ii. The fortieth day required for her Purification would be February 2nd. This was most probably the very day on which they appeared in the Temple. It could not be before this day, and we know that in other particulars, and on other occasions, they observed the law of Moses strictly and to the very letter. From the Temple they proceed to their own city, Nazareth, in Galilee (Luke ii. 39). Here it is probable that the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph, bidding him flee into Egypt.² But some commentators have supposed that the Flight into Egypt was made from Judaea, and not from Galilee.³

Egypt had always been the place of refuge for the Hebrews, whether in distress from famine, or when fleeing from their enemies the Assyrians and Chaldeans. Already had there been a return out of Egypt, which was a prophetic figure of

¹ S. Irenaeus, contr. Hær. iii. 9 (alias 10), 2; p. 870.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. viii.; vol. i. p. 100.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xxx. 29; vol. i. p. 456.

S. Gregory Nyssen, in Diem Natal. Christi, vol. iii. p. 1144.

Theophylact, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. i. p. 13.

Tertullian, de Idololatria, 9; vol. i. p. 672.

— adv. Marc. iii. 15; vol. ii. p. 339.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. ii. 6, 7; vol. ii. p. 1569.

S. Jerome, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. vii. p. 26.

S. Augustine, Serm. i. et ii. de Epiphan. vol. v. p. 1026, &c.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo in Epiphan. i. 2; vol. i. p. 236.

S. Fulgentius, Sermo de Epiphan.; Patrol. vol. lxx. p. 736, Migne.

S. Gregorius Magnus, in Evang. Homil. x. 6; vol. ii. p. 1112.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 36, art. 8; vol. iv. p. 336.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 72.

Maldonatus, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. i. p. 38.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 11; vol. viii. p. 67.

² Euthymius, in Matt. ii. 13; vol. i. p. 71.

Maldonatus, in Matt. ii. 14; vol. i. p. 39.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 13; vol. viii. p. 69.

Grotius, in Matt. ii. 13; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 79.

³ S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 5; vol. iii. p. 1083.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. x. p. 82.

the return of Jesus. God, by the mouth of the evangelist S. Matthew, now describes the calling of Jesus out of Egypt, by the very same words, in which He had before described the calling of Israel out of Egypt, by the prophet Hosea (xi. 1), and in such a way as to show, that the one was typical or prophetic of the other.

In reply to the objections of Julian the apostate, it was pointed out¹ that S. Matthew's translation, ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἐκάλεσα τὸν υἱόν μου, is a much more correct rendering of the original Hebrew, than the Septuagint translation, ἐξ Αἰγύπτου μετεκάλεσα τὰ τέκνα αὐτοῦ. The latter is so wide, that it seems to have been intended as a paraphrase, giving the sense only, or, as it has been suggested, they may have had a different reading, as for instance, בְּנֵי, instead of בְּנֵי.²

16 ¶ Then Herod,³ when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men.^b

¹ Vulg. Tunc Herodes, videns quantum illius esset a magis, iratus est, valde, et mittere occidit omnes pueros qui erant in Bethlehem, et in omnibus finibus ejus, a bimatu et infra, secundum tempus quod exquisierat a magis.

We need not suppose, that Herod at once came to the conclusion, that he had been mocked by the wise men. Probably he never entertained the same confidence, that they would find the young king, as they did. When they did not return, at first he might very naturally conclude, that they had themselves been deceived, and had not found Him. Even supposing, that the visit of the wise men to Bethlehem was, as the Church in her office appears to imply, on January 6th, the interval between that date and February 2nd, the fortieth day from the birth of Jesus, would not be too long for Herod to have waited without having formed any unfavourable conclusion as to their conduct. He might still be expecting them, or he might suppose, that they had failed to find the Child, and were ashamed to return and confess their failure.²

But when he heard, as doubtless such a jealous tyrant would hear, that a Child had been presented in the Temple, who had been acknowledged by men, who had the character of saints and prophets, as "the Lord's Christ" and as "a Light to lighten the Gentiles," and the "Glory of Israel" (Luke ii. 26, 32); when Herod heard this, he would at once conclude, that he had been deceived by the wise men.

Some have supposed that Herod caused the children at Bethlehem to be put to death almost immediately, at the approaching Passover, that is, when Jesus was three months old. But the opinion most generally held by commentators is, that it took place in the second year of Jesus, probably about the time of the Passover, or when Jesus was fifteen months old.⁴ There may have been several reasons for this delay. Herod was not an independent sovereign. He ruled by the favour of the Roman Senate, and he could scarcely act in an affair of such gravity, until he could count on their

¹ S. Jerome, in Hosea xi. 1; vol. vi. p. 915.

² Erasmus, in Matt. ii. 15; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 63.

³ Maldonatus, in Matt. ii. 15; vol. i. p. 40.

² S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 11; vol. iii. p. 1088.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 16; vol. viii. p. 72.

^a Herod.—The following are the various Herods mentioned in the New Testament. (See Lardner, Credibility, part i. ch. i.; vol. i. p. 13, &c.)

Herod, called the Great (Matt. ii. 16-18).

Herod Philip,
in a private station,
married Herodias.

Herod Archelaus
(Matt. ii. 22),
Ethnarch of Judæa.

Herod Antipas (Matt. xiv. 1;
Luke vi. 17; xiii. 7; Acts x. 41).
Tetrarch of Galilee,
married Herodias,
wife of Herod Philip.

Herod Philip
(Luke iii. 1),
Tetrarch of Ituræa.

Aristobulus.
Herod Agrippa I.
(Acts xii. 21).
Herod Agrippa II.
(Acts xxv. 13, 23; xxvii. 27, 28.)

^b Massacre of the Innocents.—"The longer we live in the world, and the further removed we are from the feelings and remembrances of childhood, (and especially if removed from the sight of children,) the more reason we have to recollect our Lord's impressive action and word, where He called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of His disciples, and said, 'Verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of Heaven.' And in order to remind us of this our Saviour's judgment, the Church like a careful teacher, calls us back year by year upon this day (the Feast of the Holy Innocents) from the bustle and fever of the world. She takes advantage of the Massacre of the Innocents recorded in St. Matthew's gospel, to bring before us a truth which else we might think little of; to sober our wishes and hopes of this world, our high ambitious thoughts, or our anxious fears, jealousies, and cares by the picture of the purity, peace, and contentment which are the characteristics of little children. And, independently of the benefit thus accruing to us, it is surely right and meet thus to celebrate the death of the Holy Innocents; for it was a blessed one. To be brought near to Christ, and to suffer for Christ, is surely an unspeakable privilege; to suffer anyhow, even unconsciously. The little children whom He took up in His arms, were not conscious of His loving condescension; but was it no privilege when He blessed them? Surely this massacre had in it the nature of a Sacrament; it was a pledge of the love of the Son of God towards those who were encompassed by it. All who came near Him, more or less suffered by approaching Him, just as if earthly pain and trouble went out of Him, as some precious virtue for the good of their souls—and these infants in the number. Surely His very presence was a Sacrament; every motion, look, and word of His conveying grace to those who would receive it; and much more was fellowship with Him. And hence in ancient times such barbarous murders or martyrdoms were considered as a kind of baptism, a baptism of blood, with a sacramental charm in it which stood in the place of the appointed Laver of regeneration."—DR. NEWMAN, 'Parochial Sermons,' vol. ii. p. 68.

sufferance. Josephus represents him in the latter part of his life, as exceedingly anxious as to his position with the authorities at Rome.¹ To issue a decree for the slaughter of these children, before he had taken the precautionary measures, that were necessary to ensure its execution, would be the way to frustrate his own plans, to incur the odium of the hateful deed, without securing the accomplishment of it. To have given any hint of his intentions, before all was ready to carry them into operation, would simply have been to give the people warning to escape with their children. All would doubtless be carried on secretly and craftily, and probably under the guise of goodwill towards the children. The names of all, born within the stated period, would be ascertained, and especially of the male children. Such was the accuracy with which the Jews kept their tribal registers, that this could be easily done. But it would require some time, and the concurrence of the people. When all was perfectly ready, but not till then, the diabolical order would be issued, and it would be relentlessly carried into execution by Herod's agents. Under some pretence or other, the children may have been collected together, or his officers may have been dispersed throughout Bethlehem and its neighbourhood.

S. Matthew does not state, how long after the appearance of the Star it was, when Herod put the children to death. He is only careful to explain, that he put to death all the children that were born within the two years before the appearance of the Star. He learned from the wise men, when the Star appeared, and he concluded that the Star had appeared first on the birth of Jesus; and to ensure His death, he slew all the children who were born within the two years before that.²

S. Matthew does not record the number of the children that were slain. But the impression produced by reading his narrative is, that it was large; that there were many mothers who mourned for their children and would not be comforted. A conjectural, though perhaps an approximate estimate of the number may be made. The population of Bethlehem at the present time is about 3000. The proportion of births to the population in England, is in round numbers three per cent. annually. This rate would give one hundred and eighty children born in Bethlehem in the two years. Allowing twenty for the children born in the district around Bethlehem, we have two hundred children, male and female, born in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, during the whole two years. Taking one half of these for the males, though a less number would be perhaps more correct, we have about one hundred, rather under than over, as the number of male children born in Bethlehem and the neighbourhood in the two years. S. Matthew only says, that Herod slew all the male children (παῖδας τοῖς μακάρις). We have no means of ascertaining what was the exact population of Bethlehem at the time of Herod; but all modern writers on Palestine agree, that Josephus is correct in representing its population in his time, as very much greater than it is now. If we suppose the population of Bethlehem then double what it is now, and the proportion of births in Eastern countries double that in England, we shall have about two hundred as the number of male children whom Herod put to death, in order to ensure the death of Jesus, the King of the Jews. If other and more probable conditions be assumed, a different and more correct result will naturally follow.

Josephus, the contemporary Jewish historian, makes no mention of the slaughter of these children at Bethlehem. But he mentions Jesus only once, and that with a very slight passing notice;³ and he says nothing of the particulars of His birth, or of the miracles that attended it. Josephus was not, therefore, bound by the course of his history, to relate Herod's massacre of these children, with the sole object of including Jesus among them. But he relates other atrocities which Herod perpetrated, and such as make this perfectly credible. When wishing to show the cruelty and jealousy of Herod's temperament, Josephus selects instances of his conduct towards those who were bound to him by the nearest ties of nature, towards his most intimate friends, or his nearest relations, his own flesh and blood. He relates how Herod put to death men of the highest rank in the kingdom, three of his own sons, his wife, her brother, mother, and grandfather. All this and more he did, under the infatuation that he should thereby render himself more firm on his throne, the very same motive which influenced him in ordering the slaughter of these children of Bethlehem.

17. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying,

Vult. Tunc adimpletum est quod dictum est per Ieremiam prophetam, dicens:

18.

"In Rama^a was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning.

¹ Antiq. xvii.

² Euthymius, in Matt. ii. 16; vol. i. p. 81.

Maldonatus, in Matt. ii. 16; vol. i. p. 41.

³ Antiq. xviii. 3, 3; vol. ii. p. 798.

— Waiston's Trans. Antiq. xviii. 3, 3: p. 487.

^a Rama.—"From the passes of the tribe of Benjamin we turn by a natural connection to these remarkable heights which guard their entrance into the table-land, and which diversify with their pointed summits that table-land itself. The very names of the towns of Benjamin indicate how eminently they partook of this general characteristic of the position of Judah: Gibeah—Gibeah—Gibeah, all signifying 'hill'—Ramah, 'the high place'—

Mizpeh, 'the watch-tower.' And it has already been observed, how from these heights to the North of Jerusalem, is in all likelihood derived the ancient image of God 'standing about his people.' . . . Er-Ram, marked by the village and green patch on its summit—the most conspicuous object from a distance in the approach to Jerusalem from the south—is certainly 'Ramah of Benjamin.' —STANLEY, 'SINAI AND PALESTINE,' p. 214. [Descending

Rachel^a weeping for her children,
and would not be comforted, because they are not."

S.V. omit lamentation and.

Vulg. Vox in Rama audita est ploratus et ululatus multus:

The Evangelist expresses the exceeding bitterness of the cry which these women sent up for their children, in two ways: (1.) He represents them as Rachel weeping for her children; Rachel whose longing for children was excessive (Gen. xxx.), and a subject of history well-known to all the Jews. (2.) The weeping was uttered in Bethlehem, but it was heard in the neighbouring village of Rama. Bethlehem was six miles to the south of Jerusalem, in the tribe of Judah, and Rama was six miles to the north of Jerusalem, and of the tribe of Benjamin. Rachel aptly represented the bereaved mothers of Bethlehem for another reason. She had died near Bethlehem, in giving birth to Benjamin, and was buried there, and though Bethlehem properly belonged to the tribe of Judah, the tribes of Benjamin and Judah were united into one. Thus Rachel, the mother of Benjamin, might represent all the mothers of Bethlehem, especially where mourning for children was concerned. S. Matthew says that in this was fulfilled the prophecy of Jeremiah (xxxi. 15).

19. ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt;^b

20. Saying, Arise, and take the young Child and His mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young Child's life.

21. And he arose, and took the young Child and His mother, and came into the land of Israel.

S.V. and entered into.

Vulg. et venit in terram Israel.

—22. But when he heard that Archelaus^c did reign in Judæa in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee:

Several opinions have been held as to the length of time that Jesus remained in Egypt;¹ but the most probable appears to be, that He remained there not more than a year or two. Many modern commentators allow a much shorter time for our Saviour's sojourn in Egypt, not more than two or three months. Herod died at Jericho soon after the massacre of the infants at Bethlehem, in the seventieth year of his age, after a reign of thirty-seven years. After his

^a S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxviii. 10; vol. ii. p. 714.

"Descending the N.W. side of Tulleil el-Fûl, we observe at its base, near the road, some old foundations and heaps of ruins called Khirbat el-Kutna, probably remains of Gibeon. A few minutes farther the road to Yafa by el-Jib and Wady Sulaiman strikes off to the left; and twenty minutes more is a ruined khan with arches and reservoirs, from which a path leads up the stony hill on the right to er-Rim. This is a small poor village, with some fragments of columns and large stones built up in the modern houses, and scattered among the dirty lanes. The situation is high, as the name implies, but the view eastward is not equal to that from Tulleil el-Fûl. This is Ramah of Benjamin, which lay between Gibeon and Beeroth (Josh. xviii. 25); and which we learn from the poor Levite's sad story was not far distant from Gibeon (Judg. xix. 13). It is probably the place mentioned in the story of Deborah. 'She dwelt under the palm tree of Deborah, between Ramah and Bethel in Mount Ephraim' (Judg. iv. 5). Eusebius places it six Roman miles north of Jerusalem. It was inhabited by the Jews after the captivity (Ezra ii. 26), and has probably continued ever since much as we see it now. It is about ten minutes off the road, and is scarcely worth a visit."—Handbook to Palestine, p. 309.

^b Rachel's Tomb.—"The sepulchre which is called the tomb of Rachel exactly agrees with the spot described (Gen. xxxv. 16) as a little way from Bethlehem."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 149.

"The building is modern, but the authenticity of the sepulchre cannot be questioned. It is one of the few shrines which Muslims, Jews, and Christians agree in honouring, and concerning which their traditions are identical. . . .

"Passing the tomb, we skirt the side of a rocky hill, and have a wide and wild landscape of glen and mountain on our right. Bethlehem is a fine object behind, occupying the summit of a terraced ridge, clothed with olive, vine and fig. Its large convent on the eastern brow resembles an old baronial castle: the aqueduct from the pools is here close to the road on the right. Ascending a steep hill, we reach, in half an hour from Rachel's tomb, the convent of Mar Eliás—a large pile of gray masonry surrounded by a high wall. In the surface of a smooth rock, opposite the gate, is shown a slight depression, something like what might be left by the human form reclining on a bed of sand. Here, says tradition, the prophet Elijah lay down under the shade of an olive, weary, hungry, and careworn, when he fled from Jezebel; and here angels supplied his wants."—Handbook for Syria and Palestine, p. 70.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 20; vol. viii. p. 75.

^c In Egypt.—"The time that He was in Egypt was not above three or four months, so soon the Lord smote Herod for his butchery of the innocent children, and murderous intent against the Lord of Life."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. vii.; vol. i. p. 206.

"The flight into Egypt can have been little more than a journey there and back again. For the parents of Jesus set out shortly before the death of the aged Herod, who was already affected with a mortal sickness, and returned to Palestine as soon as they heard that Archelaus reigned over Judea in his father's room."—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 138.

^d Archelaus.—"St. Matthew says, that 'when Joseph heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, he was afraid to go thither.' There must have been some particular reason for this fear, and for his 'turning aside into the parts of Galilee,' (by virtue of a pure choice of 'his own, or of a new direction from heaven,) though Galilee also was in possession of one of Herod's sons.

"Some may infer from hence, that Archelaus must have had a bad character in Judea, even in his father's lifetime. And there are divers particulars in Josephus, which may confirm such a suspicion.

"After his father's death, and before he could set out for Rome, to obtain of Augustus the confirmation of Herod's last will, the Jews, upon his not granting some demands they made, became very death, two of his sons became claimants for his kingdom, Archelaus and Antipas. Augustus, the Roman Emperor, divided the kingdom into four tetrarchies, and gave Archelaus Judea, Antipas Galilee, Philip, another son of Herod, Trachonitis, and Lysanias Abilene.¹

Either Joseph understood the angel's words "land of Israel" as meaning Judaea, or for some reason he wished to take the young Child there.² Possibly he might think, that Bethlehem, the scene of His birth and of all the attending miracles, was the proper place for Him; or he might wish to revisit the Temple; or he might think, that, as the Temple was at Jerusalem, the God of the Temple should also dwell there. But hearing that Archelaus had succeeded his father in Judaea, he was afraid to go thither. For some reason not expressed, he thought that less danger was to be apprehended under Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee, than under Archelaus, Tetrarch of Judaea; though they were both sons of the Herod who sought the young Child's life, and who had slain the children at Bethlehem.

Archelaus was not, in strict terms a king, though he ruled over Judaea much in the same despotic manner that his father had done over his kingdom. After a rule of nine years, Archelaus was driven into exile to Vienne in Gaul.³

23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

Vult, ut adimpletur quod dictum est per prophetas: Quoniam Nazareus vocabitur.

Apparently it was in consequence of casual circumstances, that Jesus dwelt at Nazareth, but in the mysterious dispensation of events, known only to God, it was in fulfilment of ancient prophecy. The Evangelist does not say that these words were spoken by any one particular prophet, but by the prophets. He dwelt in Nazareth, in fulfilment of the general tenor of the prophecies respecting Him. Whether Jesus fulfilled the words of the prophets by dwelling at Nazareth, because He was the Branch (netser), and Nazareth may be derived from a similar root; or because He was the Holy One, separate from sinners, and Nazareth may be derived from a word signifying separation, or a crown, or garland; or because He was despised and rejected of men, and Nazareth was a city despised and held in scorn; whether it was for any of these, or some other reason, so it was, that by dwelling at Nazareth He fulfilled the prophecies of the Old Testament respecting Him.⁴

The following is the order of the events of this chapter most in accordance with the belief of the Early Fathers:—

Nativity.

Visit and Adoration of the Magi.

Presentation of Jesus in the Temple.

Return to Nazareth (Luke ii. 39).

Flight into Egypt.

Return from Egypt and settlement at Nazareth.

But later Harmonists,⁵ looking more to the apparent probabilities of the case from a modern point of view, and less to the passages to be found in ancient writers, sufficient to show what was the general, though not, perhaps, the unanimous belief, in the early Church, have come to a different conclusion; and are generally agreed in placing the visit of the Magi after the Presentation of Jesus in the Temple. On this supposition, the order of events would be as follows:—

Nativity at Bethlehem.

Presentation of Jesus in the Temple.

Return to Bethlehem.

Visit of the Magi.

Flight into Egypt.

Return from Egypt and settlement at Nazareth.

¹ Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 13. 4; vol. ii. p. 785.

——— Whiston's Antiq. xvii. 11. 4, p. 479.

² S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 9; vol. iii. p. 1087.

³ Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 15. 2; vol. ii. p. 788.

——— Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xvii. 13. 2; p. 481.

⁴ See

Malodonatus, in Matt. ii. 23; vol. i. p. 43.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ii. 23; vol. viii. p. 76.

tumultuous at the temple. And he ordered his soldiers in among them, who slew above three thousand (Ant. lib. xvii. cap. 9, sect. 3); which was reckoned a great piece of severity, in the beginning of his reign, or rather whilst he was but a private person: for many reckoned him no more, till the succession was confirmed by Augustus.

"As Archelaus went to Rome, so did Herod Antipas, and almost all the rest of the family. When they came thither, Herod made interest for Archelaus's share, which was called the kingdom; and the whole family favoured Herod's pretensions, 'not out of any love to him, but out of hatred to Archelaus' (Ibid. sect. 4).

"After Archelaus had left Judea, with the leave of Quintilius Varus, president of Syria, an embassy of fifty of the chief men of Jerusalem was sent to Rome, in the name of the whole nation, with a petition to Augustus, that they might be permitted to live according to their own laws under a Roman governor; and when ⁵ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sec. vi. vii.; vol. i. p. 204.

Greswell, Harmony, pp. xviii. and 13.

Wieseler, Chron. Synop. p. 141.

Tischendorf, Harmonia, p. xxiii. and 7.

Robinson, Harmony, p. 5.

Stroud, p. cxxviii.

See also the Bishop of Lincoln, on Matt. ii. 9, Greek Testament.

they came to Rome, they were joined by above eight thousand Jews who lived there. They arrived before Augustus had given his sentence upon Herod's will. When he gave Archelaus and this embassy an audience, none of the royal family would attend Archelaus to support his interest: such was their aversion to him. 'Nor did they join in with the embassy, being ashamed to oppose so near a relation in the presence of Augustus.' (Ibid. cap. ii. sect. 1.)

"And in the tenth year of his government, A.D. 6 or 7, the chief of the Jews and Samaritans, not being able to endure his cruelty and tyranny, presented complaints against him to Caesar. Augustus, having heard both sides, banished Archelaus to Vienna in Gaul, and confiscated his treasury." (Ibid. cap. 15, sect. 2.)

"Indeed he seems to have been the worst of all Herod's sons, except Antipater, whom Herod had put to death five days before his own decease."—LARDNER, 'Credibility,' vol. i. p. 16.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER III.

The Wilderness of Judæa.—"The 'wilderness' of the desert-plain, whether on the western or eastern side, is the most marked in the whole country, and never has been inhabited, except for the purposes of ascetic seclusion, as by the Essenes and the hermits of later times. Wide as was the moral and spiritual difference between the two great Prophets of the Jordan wilderness, and the wild ascetics of later times, yet it is for this very reason important to bear in mind the outward likeness which sets off this inward contrast. Travellers know well the startling appearance of the savage figures, who, whether as Bedouins or Dervishes, still haunt the solitary places of the East, with a 'cloak'—the usual striped Bedouin blanket—'woven of camel's hair, thrown over the shoulders, and tied in front on the breast; naked, except at the waist, round which is a girdle of skin; the hair flowing loose about the head.' This was precisely the description of Elijah, whose last appearance had been on this very wilderness before he finally vanished from the eyes of his disciple. This, too, was the aspect of his great representative when he came, in the same place, dwelling, like the sons of the prophets, in a leafy covert woven of the branches of the Jordan forest, preaching, in 'raiment of camel's hair,' with a 'leathern girdle round his loins,' eating the 'locusts' of the desert, and the 'wild honey,' or 'manna,' which dropped from the tamarisks of the desert-region, or which distilled from the palm-groves of Jericho."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 311.

"The Wilderness in which John the Baptist dwelt until his thirtieth year, and into which Jesus, when His time arrived, passed for His forty days of prayer and watching, begins at the gates of Hebron and Jerusalem, spreads beyond and below these cities to the south and west, and covers the mountain slopes of Judah from the crest of the high tableland of Ramah and Olivet down to the Fountain of Elisha and the shores of the Dead Sea. It is a tract of country about the size and shape of Sussex, not being a mere waste of scorching sands, herbless and waterless all the year, like the deserts of El Arish and Gisch, but only a dry, unpeopled region, in which the wells are few, the trees low and stunted, the wadies full of stones instead of water, and the caves tenanted by leopards and wolves. It contains no town, not even a village. It has no road, no khan. The fox, the vulture, the hyæna prowls about its solitude. But even in the wilderness nature is not so stern as man. Here and there, in clefts and basins, and on the hill-sides, grade on grade, you observe a patch of corn, a clump of olives, a single palm; but the men who sow the grain, who shake down the fruit, are nowhere to be seen. They dare not stay upon the grounds which they rip with their rude ploughs, or on which with careless husbandry they watch the olive-trees grow: they hie away for protection to the hamlets, and watch-towers on the hill-tops: to Maon, Tekoa, Bethlehem, and Bethany; for the Taámma Bedaween claim to be lords of the soil, and the spring grass and wild herbage tempt the Adouan from El Belta, the ancient Ammon, into these stony parts. No Syrian peasant dares to build his hut on land over which a Bedaween spreads his tent. In the wilderness of Judah the children of Esau are still what they were of old, the only abiding sheikhs and kings."—DIXON, 'Holy Land,' i. 244.

"We were in a most dreary country: calcined hills and barren valleys, furrowed by torrent beds, all without a tree or shrub, or sign of vegetation. The stillness of death reigned on one side, the sea of death, calm and curtained in mist, lay upon the other; and yet this is the most interesting country in the world. This is the Wilderness of Judæa; near this God conversed with Abraham, and here came John the Baptist preaching the glad tidings of salvation. These verdureless hills and arid valleys have echoed the words of the Great Precursor; and at the head of the next ravine lies Bethlehem, the birthplace of the meek Redeemer,—in full sight of the Holy City, the theatre of the most wondrous events recorded on the page of history,—where that Self-Sacrifice was offered, which became thenceforth the seal of a perpetual covenant between God and man!"—LYNCH, 'Expedition to the Dead Sea,' p. 383.

CHAPTER III.

[1. John preacheth : his office ; life, and baptism. 7. He reprehendeth the Pharisees, 13. and baptizeth Christ in Jordan.]

[Vulg. Ioannes Baptista (cujus vita austeritas describitur) paucitatem juxta Esaiæ vaticinium in deserto possidet; et populo ad ipsum confluyente, reprehendit phariseos una cum sadduceis, docens ut dignos faciant fructus paenitentiarum: et quantum sum a Christo baptismo differat: super Christum autem a Ioanne baptismum descendit Spiritus sanctus, et vox Patris caelitus audita est.]

S. MATTHEW relates nothing of the parents of John the Baptist, nothing of his birth and bringing up. His last mention of him was, when he entered upon his office. His last mention of Jesus was nearly thirty years before this, when He had returned out of Egypt, and dwelt in Nazareth. The Evangelist is now about to relate, how Jesus entered upon His Ministry, and as a preparation for this, he brings forward the Baptist, and the Baptist's testimony.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

S. MATTHEW iii. 1-6.

S. MARK i. 1-6.

S. LUKE iii. 1-6.

1 In those days

came John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judæa.
2 And saying, Repent ye
for the kingdom of heaven
is at hand.

3 For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias,
saying,

“The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
Prepare ye the way of the Lord,
make His paths straight.”

4 And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins:
and his meat was locusts
and wild honey.

5 Then went out to him
Jerusalem
and all Judæa,

6 and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him
in Jordan,
confessing their sins.

1 The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

4 John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach
the baptism of repentance
for the remission of sins.

2 As it is written in the prophets “Behold I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee.

3 The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
Prepare ye the way of the Lord,
make His paths straight.”

6 And John was clothed with camel's hair and with a girdle of a skin
about his loins:
and he did eat locusts
and wild honey:

5 And there went out unto him
all the land of Judæa, and they of Jerusalem.

and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan,
confessing their sins.

1 Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judæa, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene.

2 Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.

3 And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching
the baptism of repentance
for the remission of sins:

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet
saying,

“The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
Prepare ye the way of the Lord,
make His paths straight.

5 Every valley shall be filled and every mountain and hill shall be brought low;

and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough ways shall be made smooth;

6 and all flesh shall see the Salvation of God.”

1. In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judæa,

In those days, that is, after the events last mentioned, after Jesus had been born of the Virgin Mary, after He had returned from Egypt, and had settled at Nazareth. S. Luke fixes the time more closely, and specifies the very year, in which the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness of Judæa. He says it was the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar. Thus John would be about thirty years of age, when he undertook the office of preaching the baptism of repentance. This was the age at which the Levites entered on their office (1 Chron. xxiii. 3), and before which, as writers on Jewish affairs say, it was not customary for them to undertake any office of importance.

"The wilderness of Judæa" was not the wilderness in which the children of Israel had wandered forty years, but the district immediately adjoining the Jordan and the Dead Sea, on the west side of it, extending from the south of the Dead Sea to Scythopolis. We learn from S. Luke (1, 80), that John had spent the whole of his life up to this time in the wilderness.

There was a tradition,¹ though not recorded by any very ancient writer, that John's mother had fled with him into the wilderness from fear of Herod, when he slew the children at Bethlehem, and that after her death, which happened shortly after, John continued to live in the wilderness.

2. And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

S.V. omit and.
Vulg. Et dicentes: Penitentiam agite.
Tertullian: Penitentiam intote.

¹ See Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 1; vol. viii. p. 79.

² Tertullian de Penitentia, ii. vol. i. p. 1228. [Rönsch,

^a Raiment of Camel's Hair.—"Coming upon the dead carcase of a camel, which two men were flaying for the sake of its flesh and skin, our guide remarked that, besides these, the hair also is valuable, being used in making rough cloaks for the Bedouins. No doubt these are the same as the hairy garments worn by Elijah, and the 'raiment of camel's hair' worn by John the Baptist. All the Arabs were also a broad leathern girdle about the loins."
^b Mission to the Jews from Scotland, 1839, p. 76.

^b Locusts.—"In this desert there are many caroub trees, which bear a fruit like a bean, but it is flatter and has small seeds in it, they eat the shell of it when it is dry, which is very agreeable. It is supposed that this is the locust on which St. John fed, and not the cassia fistula which has been shewn for it, and does not grow in this country. There are, however, some who are of opinion, that the locusts he fed on, were those insects preserved with salt, as, they say the Arabs eat them in some parts at this time; and confirm their opinion by the Arabic translation of this passage; though there might be a tree of that name."—POCOCK, 'Travels,' vol. ii. p. 46.

Lightfoot shows by quotations from the Rabbinical writers that it was customary to eat the insect locust. "He that by vow tieth himself from flesh, is forbidden the flesh of fish and of locusts." (Hiero, Nedarim fol. 40, 2.) See the Babylonian Talmud (Cholin.

3. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying,

"The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
Prepare ye the way of the Lord,
make His paths straight."

Vulg. Qui dictus est per Isaiam prophetam dicentem.

The words, "For this is he," &c., are not the words of John, but of S. Matthew, applying the prophecy of Isaiah to John the Baptist. S. Mark and S. Luke omit them.

The expression, "The kingdom of heaven," would not be new to the Jews, who would at once know to what the Baptist referred. For Daniel had already foretold the foundation of a kingdom on earth, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed" (ii. 44). This kingdom of the God of heaven was the kingdom of God incarnate, of the Word made flesh, the Church which He should purchase with His Own Blood.

The king, who shall set up this kingdom, is at hand, and the Baptist calls on men to make ready for His coming, to remove the obstructions to His progress. John himself is but the voice, the herald sent to announce the presence of the king. The means by which they are to prepare the way of this king, is to repent of their sins. This, of course, implies repentance in its perfect sense, sorrow for sin, forsaking of sin, and reparation of sin.

After the Baptist's message, S. Matthew and S. Mark describe his dress, and his mode of life.

4. And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair,^a and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts^b and wild honey.^c fol. 65, 1) concerning locusts fit for food.—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' iii. 4; vol. ii. p. 116.

Rönsch, New Testament, Tertull. p. 59.

³ Maldonatus, in Matt. iii. 3; vol. i. p. 45.

^c Wild Honey.—Josephus speaking of this same region says, "The better sort of the palm trees, when they are pressed, yield an excellent kind of honey, not much inferior in sweetness to other honey. This country withal produces honey from bees: This place (Jericho) is one hundred and fifty furlongs from Jerusalem, and sixty from Jordan. The country, as far as Jerusalem, is desert and stony; but that as far as Jordan and the lake Asphaltites lies lower indeed, though it be equally desert and barren."
—WARS, iv. 8, 3; WHISTON'S Trans. p. 697.

"Bee-keeping also (at El Bussah, a little to the east of Tyre), is not an unimportant item of industry, and every house possesses a pile of bee-hives in its yard. Though similar in its habits, the hive-bee of Palestine is a different species from our own. We never found Apis mellifica L. our domestic species, in the country, though it very possibly occurs in the North: but the common Holy Land insect, Apis ligustica, is amazingly abundant, both in hives, in rocks, and in old hollow trees. It is smaller than our bee, with brighter yellow bands on the thorax and abdomen, which is rather wasp-like in shape, and with very long antennæ. In its habits, and especially in the immense population of neuters, in each community, and in the drones cast forth in autumn, it resembles the

The raiment of camel's hair would be a cloak or long garment woven of camel's hair, not the skin of a camel. The Law of Moses allowed them to eat the locust, "Even these of them ye may eat: the locust after his kind," &c. (Levit. xi. 22). The "wild honey" would be either honey from wild bees, or that distilled from the trees. (Josephus speaks of both as found in this district.)

5. Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judæa, and all the region round about Jordan.

6. And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.^a

^a Omits of him. S.V. in the river of Jordan.
Vulg. et baptizabantur ab eo in Iordane.

Such was John's reputation for holiness, such was the fervour of his preaching, and the impression produced by his ascetic life, that multitudes flocked to his baptism, from Jerusalem, from all parts of Judæa, and from both sides of the Jordan.

other species. Its sting, also, is quite as sharp. The hives are very simple, consisting of large tubes of sun-dried mud, like gas-pipes, about four feet long, and closed with mud at each end, leaving only an aperture in the centre, large enough for two or three bees to pass at a time. The insects appear to frequent both doors equally. The tubes are laid in rows horizontally, and piled in a pyramid. I counted one of these colonies, consisting of seventy-eight tubes, each a distinct hive. Coolness being the great object, the whole is thickly plastered over with mud, and covered with boughs, while a branch is stuck in the ground at each end, to assist the bees in alighting. At first, we took these singular structures for ovens or hen-houses. The barbarous practice of destroying the swarms for their honey is unknown. When the hives are full, the clay is removed from the ends of the pipes, and the honey extracted with an iron hook; those pieces of comb which contain young bees being carefully replaced, and the hives then closed up again. Everywhere during our journey, we found honey was always to be purchased; and it is used by the natives for many culinary purposes, and especially for the preparation of sweet cakes. It has the delicate aromatic flavour of the thyme—scented honey of Hybla or Hymettus.

"But however extensive are the bee colonies of the villagers the number of wild bees of the same species is far greater. The innumerable fissures and clefts of the limestone rocks, which everywhere flank the valleys, afford in their recesses secure shelter for any number of swarms; and many of the Bedouin, particularly in the wilderness of Judæa, obtain their subsistence by bee-hunting, bringing into Jerusalem jars of that wild honey on which John the Baptist fed in the wilderness; and which Jonathan had long before unwittingly tasted, when the comb had dropped on the ground from the hollow tree in which it was suspended. The visitor to the Wady Kurn, when he sees the busy multitudes of bees about its cliffs, cannot but recall to mind the promise, 'With honey out of the stony rock would I have satisfied thee.' There is no epithet of the land of promise more true to the letter, even to the present day, than this, that it was a land flowing with milk and honey."—TRISTRAM, 'Land of Israel,' p. 87.

^a Baptism.—"Baptism had been in long and common use among them many generations before John Baptist came, they using this for admission of proselytes into the Church, and baptizing men, women, and children for that end."

In confirmation of this, Lightfoot then quotes several passages from the Rabbinical writers.

They were required to confess their sins, as a proof of their penitence for them, and not with any idea that John's baptism would convey forgiveness for them. John was now, so to speak, instituting a new order among men, the order of penitents. The qualification for admission into this, was confession of their past sins. Their badge was baptism by John. The object of it was to prepare men for the coming of the Messiah, and for admission into the new kingdom, which He should found, the kingdom of heaven. In this kingdom they should obtain remission of the sins which they now confessed.

7. ¶ But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism,^a he said unto them, O generation of vipers,^b who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

^a S.V. to the baptism.
Vulg. Venientes ad baptismum suum.

Talm. in Jebamoth, cap. 4, and Maym. in Issurebiah, cap. 13: "A person is not a proselyte till he be both circumcised and baptized."

Id. in Chetuboth, cap. i.: "A little one they baptize, by the appointment of the Consistory."—And Maym. in Avadim, cap. 8: "An Israelite that takes a little heathen child, or that finds a heathen infant and baptizeth him for a proselyte, behold he is a proselyte."

"Hence a ready reason may be given, why there is so little mention of baptizing infants in the New Testament, that there is neither plain precept nor example for it, as some ordinarily plead. The reason is, because there needed no such mention, baptizing of infants having been as ordinarily used in the Church of the Jews, as ever it hath been in the Christian Church. It was enough to mention that Christ established Baptism for an ordinance under the gospel; and then, who should be baptized, was well enough known, by the use of this ordinance of old. Therefore it is a good plea, 'Because there is no clear forbidding of the baptizing of infants in the Gospel, ergo, they are to be baptized.' For that having been in common use among the Jews, that infants should be baptized as well as men and women, our Saviour would have given some special prohibition if He intended that they should have been excluded: so that silence in this case doth necessarily conclude approbation to have the practice continued, which had been used of old before."

"John's baptism differed from that before, only in this; that whereas that admitted proselytes to the Jewish religion, this admitted and translated Jews into the Gospel religion; that was a baptism binding them over to the performance of the law, as their circumcision did, but this was a baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. ix. vol. i. p. 209.

^a Generation of Vipers (γεννηματα ἐχιδνῶν).—"They were not only yevea generation, but γεννηματα an offspring of vipers, serpents sprung from serpents. Nor is it wonder, if they were rejected by God, when they had long since rejected God, and God's word by their traditions."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' iii. 3; vol. ii. p. 126.

"This the English reader invariably takes to be a parallel expression to a wicked and adulterous generation (yevea) though the Greek words are quite different, and generation in the first passage signifies 'offspring' or 'brood'—two good old English words, either of which might advantageously be substituted for it."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 177.

8. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance.

Margin, answerable to amendment of life.

S.V. fruit.

Vulg. Facite ergo fructum dignum poenitentiae.

The Baptist addressed these words to the Sadducees and Pharisees, and they have a special reference to them and to their belief and practice. Josephus says,¹ that when Jonathan, the brother of Judas Maccabeus, was high priest, that is, from B.C. 159 to B.C. 144, there arose three different sects or schools of thought among the Jews. Their difference turned chiefly on the subject of fate, or the interference of the Deity in the affairs of men. The first were called Essenes, and were a philosophic, contemplative sect. These are not mentioned in Scripture, at least, by name. The other two were the Pharisees and Sadducees, both of whom are frequently mentioned, and generally in terms of reprobation.

Many of their tenets may be gathered from Josephus, and also from the New Testament, so far as to explain the allusions made to them there. "The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both" (Acts xxiii. 8). Not believing in a resurrection, the joys and hopes of the Sadducees were centred in the present world, and in the honours of this life, and the pleasures of the body. The Pharisees, as may be gathered from many passages of Scripture, were very punctilious in the minute observance of the Law of Moses, and often to the entire perversion of the meaning of its commands. The temptation, to which the Pharisees were chiefly exposed, was to acquire among men the reputation of great sanctity, while they were at the same time regardless of God's favour. Thus their besetting sin was hypocrisy, acting a part, coveting the character of saints among men, while not really living as saints before God. Josephus²

JOHN BAPTIST'S ANSWER TO THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES.

S. MATTHEW iii. 7-10.

- 7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism,
he said unto them,
O generation of vipers,
who hath warned you
to flee from the wrath to come?
8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:
9 and think not to say
within yourselves,
We have Abraham to our Father:
for I say unto you,
that God is able of these stones
to raise up children unto Abraham.
10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees:
therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit
is hewn down,
and cast into the fire.

S. LUKE iii. 7-14.

- 7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him,
O generation of vipers,
who hath warned you
to flee from the wrath to come?
8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say
within yourselves,
We have Abraham to our Father:
for I say unto you,
that God is able of these stones
to raise up children unto Abraham.
9 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees:
every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit
is hewn down,
and cast into the fire.
10 And the people asked him, saying,
What shall we do then?
11 He answereth and saith unto them,
He that hath two coats,
let him impart to him that hath none:
and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.
12 Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do?
13 And he said unto them, exact no more than that which is appointed you.
14 And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do?
and he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages.

¹ Josephus, Antiq. xiii. 5, 9; vol. i. p. 574.

——— Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xiii. 5, 9; page 351.

² Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 2, 6; vol. ii. p. 753.

——— Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xvii. 2, 4; p. 460.

reckons the Pharisees at more than 6000, and he speaks of them as in a condition to offer considerable resistance to Herod's designs.

To understand John's words to the Sadducees and Pharisees, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" it will be necessary to bear in mind the disbelief of the Sadducees in the resurrection; and the desire, which the Pharisees had, to gain the reputation of sanctity among men.

John expresses his surprise and astonishment at their coming to his baptism. This may be explained in two ways:¹ he may do this, because he knew they were acting hypocritically in the matter, and were not honest in their profession of repentance; or because he thought them real genuine penitents. On the first supposition, his reasoning will be to this effect, "You come to my baptism, not because you are penitents, but to keep up appearances with the world. But your natural disposition is so thoroughly depraved by nature and by habit, you are so devoid of right principles, that you cannot possibly escape the coming wrath. How can you? For you, who are Sadducees, do not even believe that there is a wrath to come, you do not believe in a Day of Judgment, or a future state; and you who are Pharisees, have such a high opinion of your own sanctity, that you are already among the holiest of men, you think you have nothing to repent of."

On the other supposition, that John believed that the Sadducees and Pharisees, whom he saw coming to his baptism, were actuated by right motives, that they came honestly and sincerely, and because they were really penitent for their sins, and anxious to escape the wrath to come, his reasoning will be as follows: "Who has succeeded in inducing you to flee from the wrath to come, you who naturally, by disposition and education, are the most unlikely persons in the world? For you who are Sadducees, have been brought up to disbelieve in the existence of the wrath to come, and in a Day of Judgment: and you, who are Pharisees, have from childhood been brought up to look upon yourselves, as separated from the common herd of men, as raised above the weakness of sin, to which others are liable, and as therefore in no need of repentance. But if you are sincere in this your profession of repentance, prove it by bringing forth such fruit, as is the natural effect of true repentance."

By generation,² or brood, of vipers, the Baptist implies that their vices were the result of their principles of action, and did not arise merely from the weakness of their resolution; that they were inbred in their very nature, of long standing, and therefore most difficult to be eradicated. Our Saviour uses the same terms to express the same radical depravity, when addressing the Scribes and Pharisees, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (Matt. xxiii. 33.)

He bids them bring forth the fruits of repentance, and not trust to their supposed privilege, as children of Abraham.

9. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

The privilege of being children of Abraham, great as it was, did not give them immunity from the duty of a repentance adequate to their sins. God, it is true, promised the blessings of the covenant to Abraham and to his seed after him: but if they continued disobedient and unfruitful, God would reject the Jews as a nation from being His peculiar people: and in rejecting them, the children of Abraham after the flesh, He would not necessarily be breaking his promise to Abraham, because He would raise up the Gentiles to be Abraham's children. At present the Gentiles were so dead in sin and in ignorance of the One true God, that to cause them to live in the fear of God, would be giving life to stones. Nevertheless, God had the power to do this.³

10. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

S. V. omit, also.
Vulg. Jam enim securis.

Some interpret this verse in a general sense, as an independent proposition, unconnected with the preceding verse, and with no special reference to the Sadducees and Pharisees. The tree they explain as men in general, the axe as death, and the root as the life of man: and every tree which does not bring forth fruit, as cut down. But this was as true before the coming of John as after, and it has in this sense no particular reference to the subject of John's preaching, the coming of the Messiah, and the kingdom of heaven.

Others,⁴ and with greater probability, interpret this verse as having a peculiar application to the Sadducees and Pharisees, whom John saw coming to his baptism: they think that John is here speaking of God's rejection of the Jews as a nation, and of their exclusion from the kingdom of heaven, the Church of God Incarnate. In this view this verse is intimately connected with the verse before it, and is a continuation of the same argument. The reasoning is to this effect: If the Jews continue disobedient and unfruitful, God will reject them as a nation, and will raise up the Gentiles to be His people. Nay more, He has already begun to do this. The dispensation of God's judgment against the Jewish nation has now begun, the axe is already laid unto the root of the trees. All will not be rejected, but as a nation they

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 7; vol. viii. p. 84.

² S. Jerome, in Isaah xxx. 6; vol. iv. p. 341.

³ S. Gregory Magnus, Homil. in Evang. xx. 7; vol. ii. p. 1163.

⁴ S. Hilary Piet. in Matt. iii. 8; vol. i. p. 326.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. iii. 8; vol. ii. p. 1579.

S. Jerome, in Matt. iii. 8; vol. vii. p. 29.

S. Gregory Magnus, Homil. in Evang. xx. 9; vol. ii. p. 1163.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 10; vol. viii. p. 87.

will. Each will be tried by his own individual belief or unbelief, barrenness or fruitfulness.

S. Paul, when describing (Rom. xi.) the rejection of the Jews and the election of the Gentiles, uses much the same metaphor, and compares the Church of God to a tree, from which some branches should be broken off, and into which others should be grafted in their place. But S. Paul's object was chiefly to set forth the election of the Gentiles, the grafting in of the branches; while the Baptist's object is to foretell or rather to threaten, the rejection of the Jews, that the unfruitful branches shall be hewn down, and cast into the fire.

S. Luke represents the Baptist, in answer to the inquiries of the people, the publicans, and the soldiers, as going on to give special directions to each of these classes, applicable to their peculiar temptations. S. Matthew omits this.

JOHN BAPTIST'S FIRST TESTIMONY TO JESUS AS THE MESSIAH OR CHRIST.

S. MATTHEW iii. 11, 12.

11 I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance:
but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes
I am not worthy to bear:

He shall baptize you
with the Holy Ghost,
and with fire:
12 whose fan is in His hand,
and He will thoroughly purge His floor,
and gather His wheat into the garner:
but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

S. MARK i. 7, 8.

7 And preached, saying

There cometh one mightier than I after me,
the latchet
of whose shoes
I am not worthy
to stoop down and unloose.
8 I indeed have baptized you with water: but
He shall baptize you
with the Holy Ghost.

S. LUKE iii. 15-18.

15 And as the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not;
16 John answered, saying unto them all,
I indeed baptize you
with water;

but one
mightier than I cometh,
the latchet
of whose shoes
I am not worthy to unloose.

He shall baptize you
with the Holy Ghost
and with fire:
17 whose fan is in His hand,
and He will thoroughly purge His floor
and will gather the wheat into His garner:
but the chaff He will burn with fire unquenchable.
18 And many other things in His exhortation preached he unto the people.

11. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear:^a He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

S. For I indeed baptize.
Vulg. Ego quidem baptizo.

These words are not closely connected in sense with those that have gone before, and it is probable that they were not uttered at the same time, but after a little interval.¹ Of the three Evangelists who record them, S. Luke is the only one who indicates the circumstances under which they were spoken. He says (iii. 15), "And as the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John whether he were the Christ or not: John answered, saying unto them all, I indeed baptize," &c. From the sanctity of John's life, from the fervour of his preaching, and from the fact that he administered a baptism, which is nowhere in Scripture re-

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 11; vel. viii. p. 87.

^a Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear.—^a In Luke it is, to unloose the latchet of His shoes, which comes to the same thing. Both sound to the same import, as if he had said, whose servant I am not worthy to be."

Lightfoot then goes on to quote Maimonides as saying in his comment on the Talmud, "A Canaanite servant is like a farm, in respect of buying. For he is bought with money, or with writing, or by some service done, as a pledge or pawn. And what is such a pawning in the buying of servants? namely, that he looseth the shoe of him, who buys, or binds on his shoe, or carries to the bath such things as be necessary for him."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' iii. 11; vol. ii. p. 127.

corded of any one before him, coupled with the prophecy of Ezekiel (xxxvi. 25), that the Christ would cleanse the hearts of His people, by pouring clean water upon their bodies: from all this the people began to conclude that John was the Christ; and it was to prevent this error, that John uttered these words. He shows the difference between himself and the Christ, between his baptism and the Baptism, which the Christ should institute. It has been observed that the Evangelist S. John shows the superiority of Christ's nature over that of John the Baptist, while the Baptist, as recorded by S. Matthew, confines himself chiefly to His official superiority.

John was a servant of the most humble kind, and the Christ was the Master, "whose shoes he was not worthy to bear," or, "the latchet of whose shoes he was not worthy to unloose" (Luke), or, "the latchet of whose shoes he was not worthy to stoop down and unloose" (Mark). These three actions, different in words, are equivalent in meaning, and are used to express the same condition, that of a servant. It has been suggested, that the Baptist may have combined the words given by S. Matthew with those of one of the other two Evangelists, or that he may have used those given by any one of the three, as being equivalent expressions.¹

The Christ was mightier than John in many ways. In one way John had a most convincing proof of his own weakness and inferiority. He could only resist the power of the devil over his own body by a life of hardness, self-denial, and asceticism. The Christ could cast out devils from the bodies of others by a mere word.

John administered his baptism, in order to stir men up to repent of their past sins, but he could not give them remission of their sins.² But the Christ, through the Baptism which He would institute, would grant them remission of those sins, of which John had induced them to repent. John baptized the body only, and with water only; the Christ would baptize both the body and the soul, both with water and with the Holy Ghost and with fire.

Several different meanings were given by the early writers to the word "fire" here. Some supposed it referred to a purgatorial fire; others, to the fire of punishment at the Day of Judgment; and others, to the fire of affliction. But the most probable interpretation is, that it is used of the Holy Spirit, and as showing the effects of the Holy Spirit. It may be that by the word "fire" the Baptist wished to show the nature of the influence which the Holy Spirit would have on the soul. The properties of fire are to consume, to cleanse, to enlighten, to kindle and inflame with warmth, to carry upward, and to transform into its own self. All these would be exemplified by the action of the Holy Spirit on the souls of those whom the Christ baptized. He would cleanse their sin, enlighten their darkness, kindle the love of God and men in their hearts, and would cause them to raise their thoughts and their aims to heaven.³

From Christ's first coming, to purify and to save man, the Baptist passes on to His second coming, to judge him: from the gifts, which He should impart to them through His Baptism, he proceeds to describe the sifting, the separation, which He should make at the Day of Judgment, according to the use which they made of His gifts.

12. ¶ Whose fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor, and gather His wheat into the garner: but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

The Son of Man will judge the whole world, both those who have been engrafted into Him by His Baptism, and those who have lived by the light of their consciences variously enlightened, some in one degree and some in another. But it is probable, that by the term "His floor" the Baptist alludes only to the former, to those in the kingdom of heaven, the Church of God Incarnate. For he had just been speaking first of his own baptism, which was a preparation for the kingdom of heaven; and then of Christ's Baptism, which is the way of admission into this kingdom.

The fan in His hand indicates the judgment, which the Son of Man shall execute at the Day of Judgment, the separation which He will make between the wheat and the rest which is not wheat, the chaff and the straw. The wheat He will gather into the garner, or into the kingdom of bliss, and all the rest He will burn with unquenchable fire. The word ἀσβεστος, rendered unquenchable, is not found in the Septuagint, nor in the New Testament, except here and twice in S. Mark (ix. 43 and 45), and once in S. Luke (iii. 17). In all these cases it is used of the punishment of the wicked hereafter. The meaning which it conveys, as is clear from the context, is that the fire is not quenched, and does not consume that, which it burns.⁴

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 12; vol. iii. p. 1090.

² S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 38, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 346.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xi.; vol. i. p. 144.

S. Cyril Alex. in Matt. iii. 11; vol. v. p. 372.

Euthymius, in Matt. iii. 11; vol. i. p. 107.

Erasmus, in Matt. iii. 11; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 88.

Maldonat, in Matt. iii. 11; vol. i. p. 49.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 11; vol. viii. p. 89.

Grotius, in Matt. iii. 11; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 104.

⁴ See also Dr. Pusey's note on Tertullian de Baptismo, ch. x. p. 268. Library of the Fathers.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xi.; vol. i. p. 148.

S. Augustine, de Fide et Operibus xv.; vol. vi. p. 214.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. xiii. p. 117.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 12; vol. viii. p. 89.

Pearson, on the Creed, art. xii.; vol. i. p. 463; vol. ii. p. 317.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

S. MATTHEW iii. 13-17.

S. MARK i. 9-11.

S. LUKE iii. 21-23.

- 13 Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John,
to be baptized of him.
- 14 But John forbad Him, saying,
I have need to be baptized of Thee,
and comest Thou to me?
- 15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness.
Then He suffered
Him.
- 16 And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway
out of the water:
and,
lo, the heavens
were opened unto Him, And He saw the Spirit of God descending
like a Dove,
and lighting upon Him:
and lo! a voice
from heaven, saying,
This is My beloved Son,
In whom I am well pleased.

- 9 And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John

in Jordan.

- 10 And straightway coming up
out of the water,

He saw the heavens opened,
and the Spirit

like a dove
descending upon Him:
and there came a voice
from heaven, saying,
Thou art My Beloved Son,
in whom I am well pleased.

21 Now when all the people were baptized it came to pass, that Jesus
also being baptized, and praying,

the heaven
was opened,
and
the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape
like a dove
upon Him,
and a voice came
from heaven, which said,
Thou art My Beloved Son:
in Thee I am well pleased.

23 And Jesus Himself began to be about thirty years of age.

13. ¶ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

"Then," that is after John had just been showing the people his own inferiority to the Christ, and the inferiority of his own baptism to that of the Christ; and how He would make a perfect and eternal separation between the righteous and the wicked, then it was that Jesus came from Galilee to that part of the Jordan in Judea, where John was baptizing. For nearly thirty years he had now been living at Nazareth, in the house of Joseph, with whom, in all probability, He had been working at the trade of a carpenter. When the time for Him to exercise His Ministry draws near, He comes to John to be baptized of him.

14. But John forbad Him, saying, I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me?

S.V. But he forbad Him.

Vulg. Ioannes autem prohibebat eum.

15. And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered Him.

From the reason which John gives for refusing to baptize Jesus, it is plain that he knew who He was. John was conscious that himself, a mere man, subject to all the temptations of the flesh, had need to be baptized of Him, who was God as well as Man. He knew Him, but he was not permitted to make Him known to the people, as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, until he had seen the Holy Spirit descend upon Him, and had heard the voice from heaven. This would be to the people a guarantee for the certainty of his knowledge.

There might be several reasons why Jesus should be baptized of John,¹ but all these are contained in the one, "It becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." The expression "it becometh us," may mean, that the Baptist fulfilled all righteousness in administering baptism to the Jews, and that Jesus fulfilled all righteousness in receiving it at his hands. Jesus had no sins of His own to repent of, but as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, it may have been part of His office to receive the baptism unto the repentance of sins. His example would draw others also to the same baptism. Besides the benefit which they would receive by this penitential discipline, greater scope would thus be given for the effect of John's testimony to Jesus. By this He would sanctify or dedicate water as the element for His Baptism, as the means through which He would regenerate mankind, in the Name and by the Presence of the three Persons in the Godhead, who were present at this, His Baptism.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xii. vol. i. p. 154.
S. Jerome, in Matt. iii. 13; vol. vii. p. 30.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 39; vol. iv. p. 352.

The Early Church was fully alive to the importance of our Saviour's own acts, and soon treasured up the times and the places, at which He wrought them. By lapse of time the memory of these has in many cases been lost. But some of these traditions have come down to us from a very early source, and with more or less of certainty.

With singular tenacity¹ the Church in Ethiopia and Greece cling to the tradition, that Jesus was baptized on January 6th, the same day, on which thirty years before He had been worshipped by the Eastern Magi.² They showed their belief in this tradition, by instituting certain expressive customs to commemorate the event, and thus they contributed to hand on the tradition as they received it.

The place where, as it is supposed, Jesus was baptized, is on the Jordan, not very far from Jericho. Here at this very spot, or not very far from it, right against Jericho, it was, that the children of Israel passed over the Jordan into Canaan (Josh. iii. 16). Here too it was that Elijah divided the waters of the Jordan with his mantle, that himself and Elisha might pass over (2 Kings ii. 8).

16. And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon Him:

S. V. and unto him; S. V. and before lighting.
Vulg. Et ecce, aperti sunt caeli: et vidit Spiritum Dei descendentem in seut columbam, et venientem in super se.

17. And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son,^b in whom I am well pleased.

Vulg. Hic est Filius meus, in quo mihi complacui.

According to the custom of the Jews, and as the language here indicates, Jesus was baptized, not by pouring water on His Head only, but over His whole Body, or by immersion of the whole Body.

The words, "the heavens were opened," may mean no more than that the clouds were divided in some visible, perhaps in some unusual manner, so as to allow the dove to come forth into their sight. Jesus Himself saw this, the Baptist saw it, and probably others. The dove was probably not a natural dove, a bird of the air, but some supernatural form of a dove, created for the purpose of revealing the Holy Spirit to man. There could be no hypostatic union between the Holy Spirit and the dove, such as exists between the Word and the flesh.²

Here the Holy Spirit is revealed under the form of a dove, and afterwards at the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 1-4), as tongues of fire. In both cases it may be that the symbol had a fulness of meaning suitable to the occasion. The dove might indicate the love, the tender mercy, which Jesus had shown in coming to redeem mankind, and to pardon his manifold transgressions, as well as the gracious gifts, which

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 29; vol. i. p. 940.

² S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 66, art. 10; vol. iv. p. 619.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 13; vol. viii. p. 93.

² S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, i. 5; vol. iii. p. 422.

S. Augustine, Epist. clix. (alias 102); vol. ii. p. 746.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xii. vol. i. p. 157.

^a January 6th.—It was the custom of the Eastern Church (though apparently not earlier than the middle of the third century, see Orig. cont. Cels. 8, 22, and Clem. Al. Strom. i. c. 21) to celebrate on the same day, the Sixth of January, the Manifestation of our Lord (τὰ ἐπεφάνη) in four several respects: 1. The incarnation; 2. The adoration of the Magi; 3. The visible descent of the Holy Ghost at His Baptism; 4. The first miracle at Cana.—DR. NEWMAN, Note to Fleury's 'Ecc. Hist. Trans.' vol. ii. p. 206.

^b This is My Beloved Son, &c.—We may here make a remark upon the difference of the words as quoted in Matt. iii. 17 and the parallel passages. A like difference is seen in the four copies of the Title on the Cross, Matt. xxvii. 37; Mark xv. 26; Luke xxiii. 38; John xix. 19. And still more, in the solemn words of our Lord at the institution of the cup: Matt. xxvi. 28; Mark xiv.

Theophylact, in Matt. iii. 16; vol. i. p. 19.

Euthymius, in Matt. iii. 16; vol. i. p. 113.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 39, art. 7; vol. iv. p. 362.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xiv. page 121.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 16; vol. viii. p. 94.

24; Luke xxii. 20; 1 Cor. xi. 25. Similar varieties of expression in the different reports of the same language are found in the following passages, as well as many others: Matt. iii. 11; Mark i. 7; Luke iii. 16; John i. 27—Matt. ix. 11; Mark v. 16; Luke v. 30—Matt. xv. 27; Mark vii. 28—Matt. xvi. 6-9; Mark viii. 17-19—Matt. xx. 33; Mark x. 51; Luke xviii. 41—Matt. xxi. 9; Mark xi. 9; Luke xix. 38—Matt. xxiv. 39; Mark xiv. 56; Luke xiv. 42—Matt. xxviii. 5, 6; Mark xvi. 6; Luke xxiv. 5, 6. All these examples go on to show, that where the Evangelists profess to record the expressions used by our Lord and others, they usually give them according to the sense, and not according to the letter. As Le Clerc expresses it: Apostoli magis sententiam, quam locutiones, exprimerent volunt (Harm. p. 518).—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 187.

the Holy Spirit would bestow on them. The tongues of fire might symbolize the zeal, the fervour in preaching, with which the Holy Spirit thereby inspired them.

Here we have presented to us Jesus, the Second Person in the Godhead, coming out of the water; the Holy Spirit in the likeness of a dove, descending from heaven and lighting upon Him; and a voice in the Person of the Father, saying, This is My Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. For the first time the doctrine of the Holy Trinity,* Three Persons* in One Godhead, was plainly revealed to man. This

* The Holy Trinity.—Plainly therefore, and without doubt, it is to be believed, that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one Almighty God, eternal, unchangeable; and every one of these is God, and all of them but one God; and every one of them is a full and perfect eternal substance, and altogether but one substance; for whatsoever the Father is, as He is God, as He is substance, as He is eternity, that is the Son, that is the Holy Ghost; and so whatsoever the Son is, as He is God, as He is substance, as He is eternity, that is the Father, that is the Holy Ghost; and whatsoever the Holy Ghost is, in that He is God, in that He is substance, in that He is eternity, that is the Father, that is the Son; and therefore in all three there is but one Divinity, one essence, one omnipotence, and what else can be spoken substantially of God.

"Neither hath this truth been affirmed by particular Fathers only, but decreed also in several councils, as by the first general council at Constantinople, the second council at Carthage, the fourth council at Arles, the sixth at Toledo, the Lateran council anno Dom. 649; yea, and by an ancient council here in England held under Archbishop Theodorus, about the year of our Lord 670. But the fourth council at Toledo speaks the substance of them all: 'According to the Holy Scriptures, say they, and the doctrine which we have received from the holy Fathers, we confess the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost to be of one Divinity and substance, believing a Trinity in the diversity of persons, and preaching unity in the Divine nature, we neither confound the Persons nor separate the substances.'"—BISHOP BEVERIDGE, 'On 39 Articles,' art. i. p. 70.

"To gather into one sum all that hitherto hath been spoken touching this point, there are but four things which concur to make complete the whole state of our Lord Jesus Christ; His Deity, His manhood, the conjunction of both, and the distinction of the one from the other being joined in one. Four principal heresies there are which have in those things withstood the truth; Arians by bending themselves against the Deity of Christ; Apollinarians by maiming and misinterpreting that which belongeth to His human nature; Nestorians by rending Christ asunder, and dividing Him into two persons; the followers of Eutyches by confounding in His person those natures which they should distinguish. Against these there have been four most famous ancient general councils; the council of Nice to define against Arians, against Apollinarians the council of Constantinople, the council of Ephesus against Nestorians, against Eutychians, the Chalcedon council. In four words, ἀλλῶς, τελέως, ἀδιαίρετος, ἀσπύχτως. τινί, ῥεφέως, ἰδιωδῶς, ἁπλῶς; the first applied to His being God, and the second to His being Man, the third to His being of both One, and the fourth to His still continuing in that one Both; we may fully by way of abridgment comprise whatsoever antiquity hath at large handled either in declaration of Christian belief, or in refutation of the foresaid heresies. Within the compass of which four heads, I may truly affirm, that all heresies which touch but the person of Jesus Christ, whether they have risen in these later days, or in any age heretofore, may be with great facility brought to confine themselves."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 54, 10; vol. ii. p. 237, Keble's ed.

^b Three Persons.—The following will show in what sense the Early Church used the word Person with respect to the Trinity.

"The Lord our God is but One God. In which indivisible Unity notwithstanding we adore the Father as being altogether of himself, we glorify that consubstantial Word which is the Son, we bless and magnify that co-essential Spirit eternally proceeding from both which is the Holy Ghost. Seeing therefore the Father is of none, the Son is of the Father, and the Spirit is of both, they are by these their several properties really distinguishable each from other. For the substance of God with this property to be of none doth make the Person of the Father; the very selfsame substance in number with this property to be of the Father maketh the Person of the Son; the same substance having added unto it the property of proceeding from the other two maketh the Person of the Holy Ghost. So that in every Person there is implied both the substance of God which is one, and also that property which causeth the same person really and truly to differ from the other two. Every person hath his own substance which no other besides hath, although there be others besides that are of the same substance. As no man but Peter can be the person which Peter is, yet Paul hath the selfsame nature which Peter hath. Again, angels have every one of them the nature of pure and invisible spirits, but every angel is not that angel which appeared in a dream to Joseph."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 51, 1; vol. ii. p. 220.

"The word Person which we venture to use in speaking of those three distinct and real modes in which it has pleased Almighty God to reveal to us His being, is in its philosophical sense too wide for our meaning. Its essential signification, as applied to ourselves, is that of an individual intelligent agent, answering to the Greek hypostasis or reality. On the other hand, if we restrict it to its etymological sense of persona or prosopon, that is character, it, evidently means less than the Scripture doctrine, which we wish to define by means of it, as denoting merely certain outward manifestations of the Supreme Being relatively to ourselves, which are of an accidental and variable nature. The statements of Revelation then lie between these antagonistic senses in which the doctrine of the Holy Trinity may be erroneously conceived, between Tritheism and what is popularly called Unitarianism.

"In the choice of difficulties, then, between words which say too much and too little, the Latins, looking at the popular and practical side of the doctrine, selected the term which properly belonged to the external and defective notion of the Son and Spirit, and called Them Persons, or Characters; with no intention, however, of infringing on the doctrine of their completeness and reality as distinct from the Father, but aiming at the whole truth, as nearly as their language would permit. The Greeks, on the other hand, with their instinctive anxiety for philosophical accuracy of expression, secured the notion of Their existence in Themselves, by calling them Hypostases or Realities; for which they considered, with some reason, that they had the sanction of the Apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews. Moreover, they were led to insist upon this internal view of the doctrine, by the prevalence of Sabellianism in the East in the third century; a heresy, which professed to resolve the distinction of the Three Persons, into a mere distinction of character. Hence the prominence given to the Three Hypostases or Realities, in the creeds of the Semi-Arians (for instance, Lucian's and Basil's, A.D. 341-358), who were the special antagonists of Sabellius, Marcellus, Photinus, and kindred heretics. It was this praiseworthy jealousy of Sabellianism, which led the Greeks to lay stress upon the doctrine of the Hypostatic Word (the Word in real existence), lest the bare use of the terms, Word, Voice, Power, Wisdom and Radiance, in designating our Lord, should lead to a forgetfulness of His Personality. At the same time, the word usia (substance) was adopted by them, to express the simple individuality of the Divine Nature, to which the Greeks, as scrupulously as the Latins, referred the separate Personalities of the Son and Spirit."—DR. NEWMAN, 'Arians of the Fourth Century,' p. 376.

[Looking

had already been symbolized, and shadowed out in various degrees of fulness, but never until now had it been plainly revealed.¹

Jesus is the Son of God as distinguished from all other sons, whether angels or men. He is the Son by nature, they by adoption; He is consubstantial with the Father, they are His sons by imitation.

He is the Beloved Son, through whom, for whose sake, and through whose influence, all other sons of God are beloved. He it is who reconciles God and man together.

S. Matthew differs from S. Mark and S. Luke in the exact wording of the voice, but in substance and meaning it is the same in all three. S. Matthew gives it, "This is;" S. Mark and S. Luke, "Thou art." As addressed to Jesus Himself, the latter would seem to be more likely to be the more correct form, and it is given by two of the Evangelists.² When a similar voice came from heaven at the Transfiguration, the addition, "Hear ye Him" was made to it.

The early writers were accustomed to discuss with considerable interest two questions, to which the last few verses of this chapter gave rise. The first of these was, whether Jesus did actually baptize John. On one side it was urged, that John himself acknowledged that he had need of Christ's Baptism, that is, in order to wash away the sins and frailties of which he had been guilty, and to impart to him a greater degree of grace. Jesus, according to the then commonly received opinion, baptized the Blessed Virgin Mary herself, as well as His twelve Apostles, and why not therefore John the Baptist?³ On the other side it is said, that Jesus may have baptized John with the Holy Spirit, without the Sacrament of Baptism. It is also said that, if Jesus had baptized John, His disciples could scarcely have come to him and said, "Rabbi, He that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to Him" (John iii. 26). If Jesus did baptize John, it must have been after this report of His disciples.

The other question was, whether Jesus instituted the Sacrament of Baptism now, or at some later time. The general opinion was that, when John baptized Him in the Jordan, Jesus thereby in one sense instituted the Sacrament of Baptism, that is, by His act, but not in express words; by His example then, and by a positive command at a later period, after the descent of the Holy Spirit at the day of Pentecost.⁴

By His Baptism and by the attendant circumstances it is very probable that Jesus meant to teach mankind, that as it was when He, the Head of the Church, was baptized, so it should be in the Baptism of every one, who thereby became a member of Him. Frail man should administer the Baptism, which should be in the element of water, with the sanction, or in the name, of the Three Persons in the Godhead, and the Holy Spirit should descend, and abide with the person so baptized. Such is the doctrine of the Church Catholic, and such it has been from the beginning.⁵ Soon after this we find

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo li. (alias 63): vol. v. p. 354.

— in Jean. Tract. vi.: vol. iii. p. 1425.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 17: vol. viii. p. 95.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 14: vol. iii. p. 1092.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xiv. p. 122.

Maldonatus, in Matt. iii. 17: vol. i. p. 54.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 17: vol. viii. p. 96.

³ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 38, art. 6: vol. iv. p. 350.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iii. 14: vol. viii. p. 91.

⁴ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 66, art. 2: vol. iv. p. 603.

⁵ S. Augustine, in Jean. Tract. vi. vol. iii. p. 1425, &c.

"Looking then at the literature of Christianity from the time of St. John to the time of St. Athanasius, as a whole—as a whole, because proceeding from a whole, that is, from that one great all-encompassing religious association called the Catholic Church, which was found wherever Christianity was found, and represents Christianity historically—(one, however, divided by time and place, by reason of the mutual recognition and active intercommunion of its portions, and of their common claims to an apostolical tradition of doctrine, to an absolute agreement together in faith and morals, and to a divine authority to teach and to denounce dissentants.)—I say, looking at the Christian literature as a whole, in which what one writer says may be fairly interpreted, explained, and supplemented by what others say, we may reasonably pronounce, that there was during the second and third centuries a profession and teaching concerning the Holy Trinity, not vague and cloudy, but of a certain determinate character; moreover that this teaching was to the effect that God was to be worshipped in Three distinct Persons (that is, a distinct Three, of whom severally the personal pronoun could be used), each of whom was the One Indivisible God, Each dwelt in Each, Each was really distinct from Each, Each was united to Each by definite correlations; moreover, that such a teaching was contradictory and destructive of the Arian hypothesis, which considered the Son of God, and à fortiori the Holy Ghost, simply and absolutely creatures of God, who once did not exist, however exalted it might assert them to be in nature and by grace."—DR. NEWMAN, 'Theological Tracts,' p. 116.

"What is the Catholic course, as it was explained in ancient times, and is still maintained in all Churches of the Saints? No attempt is made to explain the nature of the Divine Being. Since Revelation is assumed to be the entrance of Divine realities into this lower world, it is not supposed that human conceptions can give them adequate expression. The Church does not aim, therefore, at such logical completeness on this subject, as may be required from those who consider that every thing is brought down to the level of their faculties. She is content to state that the Supreme Being is one in some true and real sense. For this is revealed as the original law of God's nature. Such is the doctrine of the Unity in Trinity. On the other hand, the Church teaches that in the Blessed Trinity are Three Persons. In neither case does she affirm that the principle of existence which belongs to the Supreme Being, is identical with that which we call personality in mankind, or that our consciousness of our own being qualifies us to fathom the depths of that Being which is Infinite. But that the Three Persons in the Blessed Trinity have a real existence in themselves—that in the Deity there is an original, objective triplicity, independently of us, and of the world of creation—she grounds on the declarations of Holy Writ. And this is the mystery of the Trinity in Unity."—R. I. WILDERFORCE, 'On the Incarnation,' p. 162.

Jesus instructing Nicodemus in the nature of the Sacrament of Baptism, of Baptism by water and the Spirit (John iii.); and a little later we read, that He and His disciples had begun to baptize. But Jesus did not institute the Sacrament of Baptism, in the sense of commanding the absolute necessity of it, until after the descent of the Holy Spirit at the day of Pentecost. Then it was, that in the fullest sense Christ can be said to have instituted the Sacrament of Baptism, as the medium of salvation for all men: when He, through His Apostles, said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the Name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts ii. 38.)

On this subject see also Commentary on S. John, i. 32.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The Pinnacle of the Temple (τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ).—"There is no word, on the meaning of which the commentators are more at variance, than πτερύγιον in this and the parallel place in S. Luke. One thing, however, appears certain, viz., that the article shows πτερύγιον to be something Monadic. Had there been several πτερύγια, we should probably have read τι πτερύγιον. It cannot, therefore, be "a pinnacle," as the English version renders it. To determine what is really meant is, perhaps, impossible; since no instance can be found in any author, in which πτερύγιον is applied to a building. It is probable, however, from the meaning of the cognate term πτερόν, that a ridged or pointed roof is intended. For from some of the passages collected by Wetstein, it is evident that πτερόν is synonymous with ἀέρος or ἀέρωμα, a term appropriated to the roofs of temples. See Aristoph. Aves 1110, and his Scholiast: Dion. Hal. Antiq. Rom. edit. Reiske, vol. ii. p. 789; Josephus i. p. 109, edit. Huds., in which last place it is spoken of the Tabernacle, and so applied, as it should seem, on account of the figure, which the transverse section of a pointed roof, or the gable, presents. Now if this be πτερόν, analogy would lead us to infer, that πτερύγιον was the same thing, only of smaller dimensions; and therefore, if the pointed roof of the Temple be πτερόν, πτερύγιον may be the same kind of roof of the great eastern porch: and this is the spot fixed upon by Lightfoot. The height of this roof was 385 feet, and therefore it is not ill adapted to the circumstances of the narration. However, Wetstein and Michaelis (Anmerk. ad loc.) understand it of the Royal Porch, which overlooked the precipice to the east and south of the Temple. This situation is, perhaps, even better suited to the history; but the difficulty is to account how the roof of this detached building could be called τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ. Michaelis, indeed, in his Introduction (vol. i. p. 144, edit. Marsh) supposes πτερύγιον to have been a kind of side-wall enclosing the Temple. But then there were several such porches or colonnades, each of which might thus be called πτερύγιον: but the πτερύγιον, as was shown, could be only one. On the whole I have nothing more plausible to offer, than what has been suggested above. The extreme difficulty of the question is admitted by Mr. Herbert Marsh on the first part of Michaelis, vol. i. 420."—BISHOP MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 135.

"τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ. This is understood variously, but it seemeth to mean the battlements of the Temple wherewithal it was ledged round about; as Deut. xxii. 8, called there חֹמָה, an hedge, or enclosure, as R. Sol. renders it.

The Chaldee expresseth it by the Greek word θήκη, a case. The Seventy, by στέφανη, a crown. The Vulgar and Erasmus use Pinnaculum here, as our English doth, meaning some spire or broach that shot up from the roof. Camerarius indifferently takes it for the top or highest part of the Temple, be it pinnacle, battlement, spire, fane, or what else it would. The Priests used to go to the top of the Temple. (Talm. in Taaneth, R. Sol. on Isaiah, 22-1)."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' sec. xi. vol. i. p. 497.

"What part of the Temple it was that Christ was set upon at this time, it is in vain to go about to determine, whether on some turret of it, as is conceived by some, or on the battlement ledge, as by others; or on some of the flying fanes, as by a third sort; or on the sharp broaches that were set there to keep off birds, as by a fourth; it is as little material, as it is little determinable."—Ibid. i. 507.

"Whether he placed Him upon the Temple itself, or upon some building within the holy circuit, it is in vain to seek, because it cannot be found. If it were upon the Temple itself, I should reflect upon the top of the ἄλυσ porch of the Temple; if upon some other building, I should reflect upon the στοὰν βασιλικήν, the Royal Gallery. The Priests were wont sometimes to go up to the top of the Temple, stairs being made for this purpose, and described in the Talmudick book entitled 'Middoth,' chap. iv. hal. 5.

"Above all other parts of the Temple, the ἄλυσ porch of the Temple, yea, the whole πρόναον, space before it, may not unfitly be called τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ, the wing of the Temple, because, like wings, it extended itself in breadth on each side, far beyond the breadth of the Temple.

"If, therefore, the devil had placed Christ in the very precipice of this part of the Temple, he may well be said to have placed Him upon the wing of the Temple, both because this part was like a wing to the Temple itself, and that that precipice was the wing of this part.

"But if you suppose Him placed ἐπὶ στοὰν βασιλικήν, upon the Royal Gallery, look upon it thus pointed out by Josephus (Antiq. xv. 11, 5), 'On the south part (of the Court of the Gentiles) was the στοὰ βασιλική, the King's Gallery, that deserves to be mentioned among the most magnificent things under the sun. For upon a huge depth of a valley, scarcely to be fathomed by the eye of him that stands above, Herod erected a gallery of a vast height; from the top of which, if any looked down, he would grow dizzy, his eyes not being able to reach to so vast a depth.'"—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' iv. 5, vol. ii. p. 130.

CHAPTER IV.

[1. Christ fasteth, and is tempted. 11. The angels minister unto Him. 13. He dwelleth in Capernaum. 17. beginneth to preach. 18. calleth Peter and Andrew. 21. James and John. 23. and healeth all the diseased.

[Vulg. Christus in deserto post jejuniū quinquaginta dierum vinct diabolū tentat; et capto Joanne secūdens in Capernaum penitentiam prœdicat; piscatores Petrum et Andream, Jacobum et Joannem Zebedi ad se vocat: annuntians quoque Galilæis evangelium, variis curat infirmitatibus, turbis ipsam comitantibus.]

THE beginning of this chapter is a continuation of the last. The connection of the narrative is rather broken, and the sense rendered obscure by the division into chapters here. For the Evangelist having related that Jesus was baptized, that the Holy Spirit descended upon Him in the form of a dove, and that a voice came to Him from heaven, goes on to say, "Then," or as S. Mark expresses it, "immediately after," Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness. The connection between this and the former part is accordingly best seen in S. Mark's Gospel, because the division of the chapter does not occur there.

Before entering on a consideration of each separate temptation, it will be interesting to consider, as far as can be ascertained from the words of the Evangelists—1st. The locality of the temptations; and 2nd, The order of them.

1st. What wilderness was this? Was it the wilderness on the west side of the Jordan, or the wilderness on the east of Jordan? Some have supposed, that because the Evangelist says "the wilderness" (ἡ ἔρημος), without any distinctive name, that he means the great wilderness on the east of the Jordan? But it seems fairest to conclude, that by the "wilderness" the Evangelist means the same wilderness which he had mentioned in the last chapter, and which was the scene of John Baptist's preaching, that is, the wilderness of Judæa, which lay on the west side of the Jordan and the Dead Sea, north and south of Jerusalem. This agrees with the early local tradition, and it is well suited by its wild, rugged, solitary character for such a purpose. So strong was the conviction in the Primitive Church, that the wilderness of Judæa was meant, that it was no uncommon thing for men to retire to a certain mountain in this wilderness, which they named Quarantania, under the impression, that here was the very spot, where Jesus had fasted forty days, and where He was afterwards tempted by the devil. Here by a life of self-discipline and prayer, they endeavoured to conform themselves to the example of Jesus.

The first notice we have of Jesus, on His re-appearing among men after the Temptation, is on the east side of the Jordan (John i. 28, 29). It may be, therefore, that the mountain, to which the devil carried Him after he had set Him on the pinnacle of the Temple, was one of the lofty mountains, that abound in the wilderness to the east of Jordan. Here, too, it was, on Mount Sinai, that Moses had already fasted forty days and forty nights. (Exod. xxxiv. 28.) Here, too, on Mount Horeb, Elijah had fasted forty days and forty nights.

2nd. S. Matthew (iv.), and S. Luke (iv.), both record the three temptations; but not in the same order. S. Matthew gives the temptation to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the Temple, as the second, while S. Luke gives it, as the third in order in his narrative.

There is reason to believe—with some early writers¹—that S. Luke's is not the order, in which the temptations took place, and also that he did not intend to imply, that it was. S. Luke uses no words before each temptation, that indicate sequence in order of time. He merely connects the three temptations together by the word, and (vv. 3, 5, 9). On the other hand, S. Matthew's account has every appearance of being intended as a record of these temptations in the order in which they occurred. Before the first temptation, he says, "And when the tempter came to Him he said," &c.; before the second, "Then (τότε) the devil," &c.; and before the third, "Again (πάλιν) the devil," &c. The words, too, with which Jesus brings the Temptation to an end, "Get thee hence, Satan," seem to belong better to his request, that "Jesus should fall down and worship him," than to his other request, "that He should cast Himself down from the Temple." The first of these was a more audacious pitch of impiety than even the second.

Several reasons have been suggested why S. Luke gives the three temptations in the order in which he does. One is, that he wished to show how much alike the temptations, with which Satan assailed the second Adam, were to the temptations by which he overcame the first Adam; that he therefore set the temptations of the first Adam and the temptations of the second Adam, that most resemble each other, side by side, without regard to the order in which the temptations of the second Adam actually occurred.

¹ See Justin Martyr, Dialog. p. 361.

S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 16; vol. iii. p. 1093.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 41, art. 4; vol. iv. p.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xv. p. 130.

Maldonatus, in Matt. iv. 5; vol. i. p. 59.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 5; vol. viii. p. 103.

Bengel, in Matt. iv. 5; p. 31.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

S. MATTHEW iv. 1-11.

1 Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit
into the wilderness
to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when He had fasted
forty days and forty nights,
He was afterward an hungred.

3 And when the tempter came to Him,
he said,
If Thou be the Son of God,
command that these stones be made bread.

4 But He answered and said,
It is written, "Man shall not live
by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

5 Then the devil taketh Him up into the holy city, and setteth Him on a pinnacle
of the Temple,

6 And saith unto Him,
If thou be the Son of God,
cast Thyself down:
for it is written, "He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee:
and in their hands
they shall bear Thee up,
lest at any time
Thou dash Thy foot
against a stone."

7 Jesus said unto him,
It is written again, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

8 Again, the devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth Him
all the kingdoms of the world,
and the glory of them:

9 And saith unto Him,
All these things will I give Thee, if Thou
wilt fall down and worship me.

10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan:
for it is written,
"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God,
and Him only shalt thou serve."

11 Then the devil
leaveth Him, and behold angels came and ministered unto Him.

S. MARK i. 12-13.

12 And immediately
the Spirit driveth Him
into the wilderness.

13 And He was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan:
and was with the wild beasts:

S. LUKE iv. 1-13.

1 And Jesus
being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit
into the wilderness,

2 being forty days tempted of the devil.
and in those days
He did eat nothing:
and when they were ended,
He afterward hungered.

3 and the devil
said unto Him,
If thou be the Son of God,
command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying,
It is written that "man shall not live
by bread alone, but by every word
of God."

5 And he brought Him to Jerusalem, and set Him on a pinnacle
of the Temple,
and said unto Him,
If Thou be the Son of God,
cast Thyself down
from hence:

6 for it is written, "He shall give His angels charge over Thee to keep Thee:
And in their hands
they shall bear Thee up,
lest at any time
Thou dash Thy foot
against a stone."

7 And Jesus answering, said unto him,
It is said, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God,"

8 And the devil taking Him up into an high mountain, shewed unto Him
all the kingdoms of the world
in a moment of time.

9 And the devil said unto Him,
all this power will I give Thee,
and the glory of them:
for that is delivered unto me:
and to whomsoever I will I give it.

10 If Thou therefore wilt worship me,
all shall be Thine.

11 And Jesus answered and said unto him,
Get thee behind me, Satan:
for it is written,
"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God,
and Him only shalt thou serve."

12 And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from Him
for a season.

and the angels
ministered unto Him.

1. Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.^a

V. Into the wilderness by the Spirit.
Vulg. in desertum a spiritu.

Here we have distinctly stated the time, when Jesus was led up into the wilderness, immediately after the descent of the Holy Spirit upon Him; the Person, under whose influence He acted, the Holy Spirit;¹ and the object, with which He went into the wilderness, to be tempted by the devil, to enter on the combat with the Serpent, which had been foretold from the very first (Gen. iii. 15). "The seed of the woman," having been publicly appointed to His office, goes to wage war with the Serpent, and we here see what is the preparation which He makes for it, retirement and fasting.

The three Evangelists use different verbs to express the action of the Holy Spirit in this matter. S. Matthew says He was led up (ἀνέχθη) of the Spirit; S. Luke, He was led (ἡγήρο), and S. Mark says, the Spirit driveth (ἐκβάλλει) Him. Comparing these words together, we may fairly conclude, that the meaning conveyed by them is, that the Temptation was ordained by the Godhead, and that the flesh naturally shrank from it, as afterwards from the cup of suffering, at His Passion.

These three expressions, "the Spirit" τὸ Πνεῦμα (S. Mark), "of the Spirit" ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος (S. Matthew), and "by the Spirit" ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι (S. Luke), all mean the same

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xiii. i. vol. i. p. 162.

S. Jerome, in Matt. iv. 1, vol. vii. p. 31.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. iv. 1, vol. i. p. 928.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xvi. vol. ii. p. 1135.

^a Jesus led up of the Spirit.—"Each Evangelist hath his peculiar expression, and each expression its peculiar meaning; though some translators do not much mind their differences; as the Syriac, that useth the same word in Matthew and Luke, and the Arabic the same in Matthew and Mark, only either of them take it actively in the one, and passively in the other. 1. Luke saith, ἡγήρο, He was acted or moved, actus est, and agebatur, in Beza and the Vulgar, intending the internal moving of the Spirit within Him: for so the manner of speech is used, Rom. viii. 14, Gal. v. 18. 2. Mark saith ἐκβάλλει, the Spirit casteth, bringeth, or driveth Him out, for in these senses is the word used, Matt. xii. 35, Luke ix. 40, John x. 4, Gal. iv. 30, &c. And he implicitly by it: First, His parting Him from the company at Jordan. Secondly, His sending Him out upon His office and function; for so the word is also used, Matt. ix. 38. And thirdly, it seemeth to denote some visible vehemency and rapture wherewithal the Spirit separated Him from the company, as Philip was taken away from the Eunuch, Acts viii. 39. 3. Matthew saith ἀνέχθη, He was led up, as our English hath well rendered it, from the low grounds about Jordan, to the high mountains of the wilderness; some conceive He was rapt up into the air, and there carried aloft till He came into the wilderness; which if it were so, the evil spirit imitated this act of the Holy Spirit, when he carried Him in the air to the pinnacle of the Temple."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' sect. xi. i. vol. i. p. 495.

Mount Quarantania.—"Directly west, at the distance of a mile and a half (from Jericho) is the high and precipitous mountain called Quarantania, from a tradition that our Saviour here fasted forty days and nights, and also that this is the 'high mountain' from whose top the tempter exhibited 'all the kingdoms of thing, that His going into the wilderness was a real, not a visionary action; that He was led by a Personal agency; and not that He was led up in spirit or in vision, as when Ezekiel was carried into the valley of dry bones (Ezek. xxxvii. 1).²

2. And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He was afterward an hungred.

Jesus³ by His own divine power could fast forty days and forty nights. Mere human nature unassisted could not do this; and when it is recorded that Moses and Elijah fasted forty days and forty nights, they were both in close intercourse with God, and were doubtless enabled, by power supernaturally imparted to them, to endure this strain on the flesh. After the forty days were ended, He allowed Himself to feel the hunger which in the course of nature followed such a fast, probably hunger in its fiercest form, the hunger of a man who had fasted forty days, hunger so intense, as to be as much beyond the power of mere man to experience, as it would be for him to fast forty days.

As every man, in his degree, has to enter into conflict with the same enemy, that Jesus here did, so the Church from the beginning,⁴ has called on all her members to imitate Him in the preparation that He made for this conflict. In memory of this forty days' fast and temptation, and as a means of sharing in the benefits of it, she year by year requires all the

² S. Gregory Magnus, Homil. in Evang. xvi. vol. ii. p. 1135.

Grotius, in Matt. iv. 1; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 119.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 2, vol. viii. p. 99.

⁴ See the proofs of this in Gunning's Lent Fast, Oxford edition, 1845.

the world, and the glory of them.' The side facing the plain is as perpendicular, and apparently as high as the rock of Gibraltar, and upon the very summit are still visible the ruins of an ancient convent. Midway below are caverns hewn in the perpendicular rock, where hermits formerly retired to fast and pray in imitation of the forty days."—TIMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 617.

The Three Temptations.—"The manner of His temptations was twofold. First, invisibly, as the devil is wont to tempt sinners; and this for forty days, while the tempter endeavoured with all his industry to throw in his suggestions, if possible, into the mind of Christ, as he does to mortal men. Which when he could not compass, because he found nothing in Him, in which such a temptation might fix itself (John xiv. 30), he attempted another way, namely, by appearing to Him in a visible shape, and conversing with Him, and that in the form of an angel of light. Let the Evangelists be compared. Mark saith, He was tempted forty days, so also doth Luke. But Matthew, that the tempter came to Him after forty days, that is, in a visible form."—LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' iv. 1; vol. ii. p. 130.

"That the temptation of Jesus took place immediately after His baptism, appears from the εὐθεία of Mark i. 12; and also from a comparison of John i. 29, 35, 44. According to Mark and Luke, Jesus was subjected to temptation during the forty days. Matthew and Luke specify three instances of temptation, but in a different order. Of these, that founded on our Lord's hunger, must have occurred at the end of the forty days, while that which included the promise of all temporal power was obviously the final one. The order of Matthew is therefore the most natural of the two."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 187.

faithful to give up a tenth of their days to preparation, more or less strict, for their life-long fight with Satan.

The words of the Evangelists do not imply that Jesus was forty days in the wilderness before He was tempted by the devil, but that He was forty days before the tempter came to Him in a visible form, and tempted Him by the three following temptations. During these forty days it is probable, that He was tempted in other ways, perhaps by internal suggestions.¹

3. And when the tempter came to Him, he said, If Thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.²

S. came, he said unto him.
Vulg. Et accedens tentator dixit ei.

4. But He answered and said, It is written,

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Vulg. non in solo pane vivit homo.

In this the first of the three temptations, Satan's object seems to have been to induce Jesus, through the weakness of the body from the long fast, and from the longing for food consequent on that fast, not to rely on God the Father's provision for Him, but to act independently for Himself, and by a miracle, to provide the food, which was not supplied to Him in the ordinary course of God's providence, and that too at the command or suggestion of him the enemy of God.³

Many, both in ancient and in modern times have thought, and it would seem, with some degree of probability, that before these temptations Satan was not fully convinced, that Jesus was the Son of God.⁴ The words of the angels at His birth (Luke ii. 10-14), the voice from heaven at His baptism, this fast of forty days, as well as many other passages in His life, may have suggested to Satan, that Jesus was not an ordinary Man. Whether he was fully aware of the Mystery of the Incarnation, seems doubtful. It seems scarcely possible to believe, that Satan would have ventured to tempt Jesus, had he known for certain, that He was God of God, very God of very God, that He was One with the Father, and equal to the Father. He would have known that the consequence of such a temptation would be a repulse, and a diminution of his power by such repulse, a bruising of his head. Many have, therefore, thought that, besides tempting Jesus to a distrust of God's provision for Him, and to independency of action, Satan also wished to discover, whether He really were the Son of God or not. To create, or to change one object into another by a word (Gen. i.), was the act of God only; Satan, therefore, proposes to Jesus to change stones (S. Matt.), or a stone (S. Luke), into bread. If He attempted and failed, He would be proved not to be the Son of God; if He succeeded, He would be acting on the suggestion of him the enemy of God, and in distrust of God the Father's care.⁵

Jesus resists the tempter's suggestion on the ground that He is Man, and that as Man, He must conform in that in which He is the representative of men, to the laws laid down by God for the preservation of man's life. He repels Satan's command by a quotation from the words of Moses when he reasoned with the people of Israel in the wilderness, and showed them that the object of God in His various dealings with them hitherto had been to try them. "And He humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that He might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Deut. viii. 3.

5. Then the devil taketh Him up into the holy city, and setteth Him on a pinnacle of the temple,

S. V. and set him.
Vulg. Tunc assumpsit . . . et statuit eum.

6. And saith unto Him, if Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down: for it is written,

"He shall give his angels charge concerning thee;
and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone."

Vulg. scriptum est enim quia angelis suis mandavit de te.
Tertullian. scriptum est enim, quod mandavit angelis suis super te.

7. Jesus said unto him, It is written again,

"Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

The scene of the Temptation now changes from the wilderness tenanted only, as S. Mark notes to intimate the extreme solitariness and wildness of the place,⁶ by wild beasts, to the crowded city of Jerusalem. So great is this change, that we naturally look for some reason for it, especially

¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 41, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 377.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 3; vol. viii. p. 102.

³ S. Ignatius, Epist. ad Ephes. 19, p. 79.

Corpus Ignatianum (Caretton) . p. 36.

Origen, in Luc. Homil. vi.; vol. iii. p. 1815.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xiii.; vol. i. p. 165.

S. Jerome, in Matt. iv. 6; vol. vii. p. 32.

⁴ The Temptation.—"As the doctrine of our Lord's humiliation is most mysterious, so the very surface of the narrative in Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xv. p. 129.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 3; vol. viii. p. 102.

Grotius, in Matt. iv. 3; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 119.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 3, vol. viii. p. 102.

⁶ Tertullian, adv. Prax. i. vol. ii. p. 155.

Theophylact, in Marc. i. 13; vol. i. p. 176.

Euthymius, in Marc. i. 13; vol. iii. p. 21.

which it is contained is mysterious also, as exciting wonder, and impressing upon us our real ignorance of the nature, manner, and [causes

when we know that there were in the wilderness heights as high as any part of the Temple. The most probable reason why Satan brought Jesus to the Temple, appears to be, that there might be witnesses of the act, when at the command of Satan He should cast Himself down. From a height in the wilderness there would be no spectators; from the Temple at Jerusalem there would be many. The priests would be ministering, and the people would be worshipping, or crowding in the Temple courts, as usual. Though it is not stated, it is not improbable that Satan urged Jesus to cast Himself down, and to claim from the assembled crowd the worship due to Him as God, and as God who had descended from Heaven.¹

Some suppose that Satan perverts the Scripture which he quotes, and applies a passage to Christ which was not intended for Him.² Others³ think that though the passage did apply to Christ, it was not intended for Him in the sense in which Satan quotes it; and that he quotes it imperfectly, but a small portion of it, leaving out a part of the verse which applied to himself. The words of the Psalmist (xci. 10-13) are, "There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder, the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet," &c. Jesus does not accuse Satan of misquoting, or misapplying the words of Scripture. He simply corrects his application of them by another quotation. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Man is not to presume on God's care over him beyond the bounds which reason and revelation have set to it.

His answer to the first temptation was that man was not to despair of God's care over him, or to act in distrust of such care. His answer to the second was, that man was not to presume on God's care over him, or to act in such presumption. Both these temptations were addressed to Jesus with reference to His divine nature, to induce Him to do works which He could only do as God; and to both of them he replies as a man, as the representative of men. If Satan were in doubt as to the Incarnation, or as to the real nature of Jesus, nothing that He has as yet said reveals the mystery to him.

S. Matthew says, "Then the devil taketh Him up (παράλαβέναι) into the Holy City," and S. Luke "he brought Him (ἤγαγεν) to Jerusalem;" but a comparison of the Evangelists throws no light as to the way in which Satan conveyed Jesus to Jerusalem; whether it was through the air, as some have thought, and if so, whether this was visible to the assembled multitudes. A bodily movement is undoubtedly implied. Neither does the expression the pinnacle (τὸ πτερύγιον) of the Temple indicate what part of the Temple this was. Those who think that the devil intended Jesus to throw Himself down at his command in the sight of the people, suppose that the roof of the eastern porch was meant. This was directly over the Court of the Israelites, and was about 385 feet high. But those who think that the devil merely wished to persuade Jesus to an unnecessary act of wanton presumption on the care of God, find a place more suitable for such a purpose in the στοὰ βασιλική, the Royal Porch, which was very high itself, and which was also built on the top of an immense precipice (see Introductory Note).

8. Again, the devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them;

Vulg. iterum assumpsit eum diabolus.

9. And saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me.

Vulg. et dixit ei.

10. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written,

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."

Two principal explanations have been given of this temptation. Satan had preface the first two temptations with the

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 6; vol. viii. p. 104.

² Origen, in Luc. Homil. xxxi. vol. iii. p. 1881.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xiii. vol. i. p. 167.

S. Jerome, in Matt. iv. 6; vol. vii. p. 32.

causes of it. Take, for instance, His temptation. Why was it undergone at all, seeing our redemption is ascribed to His death, not to it? Why was it so long? What took place during it? What was Satan's particular object in tempting Him? How came Satan to have such power over Him as to be able to transport Him from place to place? And what was the precise result of the temptation? These and many other questions admit of no satisfactory solution. There is something remarkable too in the period of it, being the same as that of the long fasts of Moses and Elijah, and of His own abode on earth after His resurrection. A like mystery again is cast around that last period of His earthly mission. Then He was engaged we know not how, except that He appeared, from time to time, to His Apostles; of the forty days of His temptation we know still less, only that 'He did eat nothing' and was 'with the wild beasts,' Luke iv. 2; Mark i. 13.

³ S. Gregory Nazianz., Orat. in S. Baptism. ch. x., vol. ii. p. 372.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. iv. 6, vol. i. p. 930.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. iv. 10, vol. ii. p. 1619.

"Again, there is something of mystery in the connexion of this temptation with the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him on His baptism. After the voice from Heaven had proclaimed, 'This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased,' 'immediately,' as St. Mark says, 'the Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness.' As if there were some connexion, beyond our understanding, between His baptism and temptation, the first act of the Holy Spirit is forthwith to 'drive Him' (whatever is meant by the word) into the wilderness. Observe, too, that it was almost from this solemn recognition, 'This is My beloved Son,' that the Devil took up the temptation. 'If Thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread,' Matt. iv. 3. Yet what his thoughts and designs were we cannot even conjecture. All we see is a renewal, apparently, of Adam's temptation, in the person of the 'second man.'"—NEWMAN, 'Parochial Sermons,' vol. iii. p. 174.

words, "If Thou be the Son of God," because he was anxious to ascertain that. But in both cases Jesus had foiled him by declining to work the miracle suggested, and by giving a satisfactory reason which applied to Him as Man. In the third temptation he does not make use of the phrase, and some have therefore supposed that Satan had come to the conclusion that Jesus was not the Son of God, and that he therefore assumed that claim for himself, as well as the power which it implied, that is, the right to bestow the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, to induce Jesus to fall down and worship him.

Others, again, have supposed that Satan did know that Jesus was the Son of God, and that he nevertheless tempted Him to idolatry by the offer of worldly grandeur, which was his of right to dispose of.

Satan shows Jesus all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and S. Luke indicates that this was done in some supernatural way, by adding "in a moment of time."

The way in which Jesus repulses Satan after the third temptation, is related in S. Luke in a slightly different form from that by S. Matthew. The latter relates that after the third temptation, Jesus said to Satan, "Get thee hence" (ὑπάγε), and S. Luke says, "Get thee behind me" (ὑπάγε ὀπίσω μου). This difference has been explained as owing to the different order in which these Evangelists have related the three temptations. S. Matthew, giving this as the last of the temptations, expresses Christ's rebuke to Satan by ὑπάγε. "Get thee hence," get thee away Satan; while S. Luke, recording this as the second of the three temptations, says only, "Get thee behind Me, Satan (ὑπάγε ὀπίσω μου)," thus expressing the same outburst of indignation, but implying that Satan did not leave Him as yet; that there was, according to his relation, still a third temptation.

The three temptations were different, probably so different as to include in them every possible species of temptation.

* The Ministry of Angels.—"When the evil angels more violently assault the faithful by their temptations, the good angels presently step in, to succour, aid, and assist them, that they sink not under those temptations. Our Saviour, who was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin, Heb. iv. 15, is our example in this. He was tempted in the wilderness in a very astonishing manner, the devil violently seizing His body and hurrying it up to a pinnacle of the Temple, and then again into an exceeding high mountain, and impetuously assaulting His mind with the most horrid temptations to tempt God, to commit idolatry, and the worst sort of it, the worship of the devil himself. But the good angels were all the while ready at hand, and when they saw their time appeared and ministered to Him, as we read Matt. iv. 11. Then the devil leaveth Him, and behold angels came and ministered to Him. "His true the good angels seem not by those words to have come in to our Saviour till after He had single and alone vanquished all the assaults of the devil, because they knew His virtue to be impregnable, and in no danger of being overcome by temptations so foul and horrid. But yet as man and in the state of humiliation, He was subject to the pure natural infirmities of mankind; and therefore needed food for His body after so long an abstinence, and refreshment to His mind after so dreadful a conflict

The first had been to distrust of God's care; the second, to wanton presumption on His care; and the third, to idolatry. The baits that were offered in these temptations were also different. In the first temptation, the bait offered by Satan to Jesus was the instant relief of His intense hunger; in the third it was the unlimited grasp of worldly grandeur: what the inducement offered in the second was, it is not so easy to see, unless it were the admiration and the worship of the crowd assembled below, and who would be the spectators of His miraculous descent.

When Satan had exhausted all the modes of assaulting Jesus of which he was capable, or as S. Luke expresses it when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from Him for a season or until a season (ἄχρι καιρῶν). Satan had learnt in the Garden of Eden that he should have the power to bruise His heel, that is, to accomplish His Death, and he now retires until that season approaches. But he had not been content with attacking His heel, with wounding Him, as it were, in His Human nature, he had assaulted His head, he had attempted to induce Him to rebel against God the Father. In this he had signally failed, and he now withdrew, vanquished and enfeebled.

11. Then the devil leaveth Him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him.^a Vulg. Tunc reliquit eum diabolus.

In general when Scripture speaks of angels coming or going, it means in some visible and apparent form, as in Gen. xix. 1, and xxxii. 12; Jude 6; and in such sense it is doubtless to be understood here. The Prince of the evil spirits, of the angels of darkness, departed from Jesus, and good angels came in an equally visible form, and ministered unto Him (διδόνουσιν αὐτῷ). Besides acts of worship, this ministration would probably include the supplying of food to relieve His hunger.

It is probably not without meaning that three different with the devil, for both these purposes we may well suppose the good angels came and ministered to Him. They ministered to Him when tempted by the devil, all needful help and aid, and so they will to all the faithful His members, who as they stand in need of a more timely assistance of God's holy angels in their temptations, so they shall never fail to receive it. Our Saviour again, a little before His death, was in a most dreadful agony; His soul being exceeding sorrowful, the anguish of His mind overflowing the channels of His body, and causing Him to sweat great drops of blood, Mark xiv. 34; Luke xxii. 44. There is little reason to doubt but that Satan had some hand in this last anguish of our Saviour. For we must not think that the devil after he had tempted our Lord in the wilderness, so left Him as never to return again to trouble Him any more. Nay, St. Luke expressly obviates this conceit, when he tells us the devil then departed from Him for a season, Luke iv. 13. If he then departed from Him only for a season, we may be sure that this was not his last assault upon our Saviour. He set upon Him again afterwards, but especially and in the most pressing manner (as is most probable) in His last agony in the garden. But, behold, then there appeared an angel unto Him from Heaven strengthening Him, as St. Luke assures us, chap. xxii. 43.^b names are given to the devil in this account of the Temptation, ὁ διάβολος, the Accuser; ὁ πειράζων, the Tempter; and Σατανᾶς (שָׂטָן), the Adversary. Four times he is spoken of as the Devil, once as the Tempter, in the first temptation, and once as the Adversary, in the third temptation. These terms are well suited to represent his character, and the nature of his actions and intentions towards men.

—BISHOP BULL, Sermon on Hebrews, l. 14; vol. ii. p. 515.

S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke omit all reference to events between the Baptism of Jesus and the imprisonment of John, with the exception of His temptation. They make no mention of the deputation from the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem to John, to question him on the nature of his office. None of the three records our Lord's first visit into Galilee after His baptism, His miracle at the marriage at Cana, His visit to Capernaum, His going up to Jerusalem to keep the first Passover after His baptism, driving out the buyers and sellers, &c., from the Temple, His conversation with Nicodemus, and with the woman of Samaria. All this is fully related by S. John, but by none of the other Evangelists. S. John alone relates His acts during the first year of His ministry.

JESUS PREPARES TO ENTER ON HIS PUBLIC MINISTRY.

S. MATTHEW iv. 12-17.

S. MARK i. 14, 15.

12 Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison,
13 He departed into Galilee:
And leaving Nazareth
He came and dwelt in Capernaum,
which is upon the sea coast,
in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:
14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet saying, 15 The land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthalim by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles.
16 The people which sat in darkness saw great light: and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.
17 From that time Jesus began to preach,
and to say, Repent:
for the kingdom of heaven
is at hand.

14 Now after that John was put in prison,
Jesus came into Galilee, preaching
the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying,
The time is fulfilled,
and the kingdom of God
is at hand:
repent ye and believe the Gospel.

12. ¶ Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, He departed into Galilee;^a Margn. delivered up.

S.V. When he had heard.
Vulg. Cum autem audisset Jesus quod Joannes traditus esset.

If we compare the four Evangelists together, it will be plain that this is the second visit that Jesus made to Galilee after His baptism, and that there is a considerable interval between this verse and the last, that is, between the Temptation and His second visit into Galilee,¹ of probably not less than eight

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 18, vol. iii. p. 1097.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxiii. p. 169.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 12, vol. viii. p. 109.
Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sec. xvi. vol. i. p.

^a Jesus departed into Galilee.—“A specification of time is given in John iv. 35, which is tolerably definite. Say ye not, There are yet four months, and the harvest cometh? According to Lev. xxiii. 5-7, 10, 11, 14, 15, and Josephus, Ant. iii. 10, 5, the Denn Alford on Matt. iv. 12, Greek Testament.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. xxv. 18.
Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 19, 189.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 545, 548.

first fruits of the barley-harvest were presented on the second day of the paschal festival; while the wheat-harvest was two or three weeks later; see Bibl. Res. in Palest. ii. p. 99, &c. Hence this journey of our Lord must have been made in the latter part of months. For after His first visit to Galilee, He went up to Jerusalem to the Passover. In S. John, when recording this second visit into Galilee, in consequence of the imprisonment of John the Baptist, Jesus is related to have said that it wanted four months to harvest, that is, to the Passover. This would leave at least eight months between His two visits into Galilee.

Jesus would probably be more free from molestation in Galilee, where Herod reigned, than in Judæa, where the Pharisees lived. If He remained in the neighbourhood of the Pharisees, and under their eyes, they would be sure to represent to Herod that there was danger to the public peace in the crowds that daily resorted to Him.

13. And leaving Nazareth, He came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim :^a

S V. Capernaum.
Vulg. Capernaum.

14. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

Vulg. quod dictum est per Isaiam prophetam.

15.

“The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee
of the Gentiles :”

November or in December, about eight months after the preceding passover. It follows, that the public ministry of John the Baptist had continued for at least a year and six months, before his imprisonment.”—ROBINSON, ‘Harmony of the Four Gospels,’ p. 189.

* Jesus came and dwelt in Capernaum.—“Why He left Nazareth, after He had passed six or seven and twenty years there, the reason appears Luke iv. 28, &c. We do not read that He returned thither again, and so, unhappy Nazareth, thou perishest by thine own folly and perverseness. Whether His father Joseph had any inheritance at Capernaum, which He possessed as his heir, or rather dwelt there in some hired house, we dispute not. This is certainly called His city, Matt. ix. 1, &c., and here, as a citizen, He paid, the half-shekel, Matt. xvii. 24, where it is worth remarking what is said by the Jews: ‘How long does a man dwell in some city before he be as one of the citizens? Twelve months’ (‘Bava Bathra,’ cap. i. hal. 6). The same is recited elsewhere. The Jerusalem Gemara thus explains it: ‘If he tarry in the city thirty days, he becomes as one of the citizens in respect of the alms-chest; if six months, he becomes a citizen in respect of clothing; if twelve months, in respect of tributes and taxes.’ The Babylonian adds, ‘if nine months, in respect of burial.’ That is, if any abide in a city thirty days, they require of him alms for the poor; if six months, he is bound with the other citizens to clothe the poor; if nine months, to bury the dead poor; if twelve months, he is bound to undergo all other taxes with the rest of the citizens.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘On S. Matthew,’ iv. 13; vol. ii. p. 131.

Zabulon and Nephthalim.—“In the coasts of Zabulon and Naphthali captivity had first begun (2 Kings xv. 29), and there Christ first beginneth, more publicly and evidently to preach the near approach of the kingdom of heaven and redemption. In the first plantation of the land after the captivity, Galilee escaped from being Samaritan, and was reserved for this happy privilege, of being the first scene of Christ’s preaching the Gospel. And as that country was inhabited by a good part of the ten tribes before their captivity, so upon the return out of Babel in the ten tribes of Zorobabel and Ezra, it may well be held to have been planted with some of the ten tribes again. For 1. Observe in Ezra i. that there is a proclamation from Cyrus, that any of the blood of the Jews whosoever within his dominions, should have liberty to go up to Jerusalem, vers. 3, 4, 5. No undoubtedly the ten tribes were then residing within his dominions, and it is harsh to conceive that they had all so far utterly forgot God and their country, as none of them to desire to go to their own land again when permitted. 2. There is a summa totalis in Ezra ii. of forty-two thousand three hundred and threescore, ver. 64, that returned out of captivity upon that proclamation, and there are the number of several families reckoned, as making up that sum; whereas if the total of these particulars be summed up, it reacheth not, by sixteen thousand or thereabout, to that number of forty-two thousand, three hundred and threescore. Where then must we find those sixteen thousand, since they arise not in the number of the families there named? The families there named are of Juda and Benjamin, and then certainly those sixteen can hardly be imagined any other than of the ten tribes. And 3. Whereas it is apparent that the returned of Juda and Benjamin planted Judea, whom can we imagine, but some of the ten tribes to have planted Galilee? And hence their difference in language from the Jews of Judea, and in several customs. And hence the reducing of some after the captivity, to the line of some of the ten tribes: as Hannah to the tribe of Asher (Luke ii. 36), Ben Cobisim of the tribe of Ahab (Talm. Jerus. in Taanith fol. 68, col. 1).

“And here is the first returning of the ten tribes to be supposed, and it carrieth fair probability that the most of the twelve Apostles, and many of the rest of the disciples that were of Christ’s most constant retinue, were of the progeny of some of the ten tribes returned.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. xviii. vol. i. p. 216.

“Nazareth, Keir Kenna, Kānā, and all the regions adjacent, where our Lord lived, and where He commenced His Ministry, and by His miracles manifested forth His glory ‘were within the limit of Zebulun; but Capernaum, Chorazin, and Bethsaida were in Naphthali. It was this latter tribe that was by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles’. Zebulun did not touch the sea of Galilee at any point, but the territories of these two tribes met at the north-east corner of the Buttauf, not far from Kānā, and within these two tribes thus united our Lord passed nearly the whole of His wonderful life.”—THOMSON, ‘The Land and the Book,’ p. 426.

^b Galilee of the Gentiles.—“The western coast of the lake was once inhabited by the Galilean mountaineers, from whom many of the Apostles were selected (Acts i. 11; ii. 7)—an active, remarkable people, despised by the Jews, but honoured by the Saviour, and made the medium of diffusing the Gospel among the Jews as well as the Gentiles. Josephus, the rigid Pharisee, praises the Galileans on the score of their extraordinary industry, their agricultural skill, their thrift in business, and the valour which they always displayed. The sea-coast was strewn with cities and villages, and the population must have been an exceedingly dense one, else Josephus would not have been able to say that it would have been an easy thing for him to raise up an army of a hundred thousand volunteers for the defence of Galilee against the Romans. Some of their towns contained 15,000 inhabitants each. Not the tenth part of this number could be called together at the present day. The east of the lake, on the other hand, seems always to have been inhabited by restless, unsettled tribes, unable, as Josephus says, to live in peace: their fixed abodes were upon the tops of 16.

The people, which sat in darkness, saw great light:
and to them, which sat in the region and shadow of death,
light is sprung up."

S. Matthew relates the fact of his leaving Nazareth and going to dwell at Capernaum, but does not state any reason for this. Some think this is to be found in the account which S. Luke (iv. 14-30) gives of their rejection of Him, and of their attempt to cast him down headlong from the brow of the hill on which their city was built.* For six, or seven, and twenty years he had lived at Nazareth; from His return out of Egypt to His baptism, He had made it His own city, His home on earth, and now He leaves it. Once, and only once, after this we read that he preached in their synagogue (Matt. xiii. 54-58), but we have no reason to believe that he ever lived here again. Henceforth He dwelt at Capernaum, and it became His own city.

In making His abode at Capernaum on the sea coast Jesus fulfilled the prophecy, which Isaiah (ix. 2) had delivered 700 years before. He shed light over the land which had hitherto been buried in darkness, by His presence, by the miracles which He performed among them, and by His preaching.

hills, and some of their ruins may be seen at the present time, as, for instance, those of Gamala, Hippos, and Gadara.

"Although, in comparatively modern times, Tiberias has become the chief place in Galilee, in Josephus' day Sepphoris was the most important place; and the mountain district known by the name of Galilee seems to have been more inland than the tracts belonging to Naphtali and Zebulon, extending from the springs of the Jordan to the outlet of the sea of Chinnereth. This district only subsequently became a part of Galilee.

"A proof of this Gesenius finds in the primitive application of the name Galilee to a region very unimportant in size in comparison with that which the province of Galilee subsequently became: see the allusion to it in the times of Solomon and Hiram, in 1 Kings ix. 11, and 2 Kings xv. 29, where it can only mean a limited tract of Naphtali. This is yet more plainly seen in Josh. xx. 7, "Kedesh in Galilee, in Mount Naphtali," and this expression, Kedesh in Galilee, is one of very frequent occurrence (Josh. xii. 32; 1 Chron. vi. 76). Rosenmüller's claim, that the words "in Galilee" are annexed merely to distinguish it from another Kedesh, seems superfluous, since the expression "in Naphtali" would have been sufficient to distinguish it from the Kedesh in Judah and that in Issachar. It may be set down as tolerably certain that the Kedesh whose position we have already fixed on the north-west side of the waters of Merom was a central spot in the ancient province of Galilee, at a period when the shores of the subsequent Sea of Galilee could not strictly bear that name.

"The word has been supposed to be derived from the Hebrew Galil or Galilah, which originally signifies a circle, and which could naturally be applied to a region whose proportions were continually expanding. And here we find the first clue to explain the scorn which was universally displayed towards Galileans, and which appears in the New Testament as exercising a decided influence upon the Israelites in their relations to the Teacher of Nazareth (Matt. xvi. 6; Luke xiii. 6); the scorn to which

The chief subject of his preaching was repentance of their past sins, and preparation for the kingdom of heaven, which He, by His death and ascension, would shortly re-open for them. The Evangelist does not quote the whole words of Isaiah, but only so much of them as refer to the blessing which they should receive from the coming of Messiah among them. The prophet had been contrasting the affliction of the land with the comfort which it should afterwards receive: that, where darkness and captivity had first appeared, there should light and redemption also first spring up. In the coasts of Zebulon and Naphtali captivity had first begun (2 Kings xv. 29) and there Christ first began to preach redemption unto the people.

The various places here specified are lower Galilee or the land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, the sea coast, the country round the lake of Galilee on 'the way of the sea,' Peraea, or country beyond Jordan, and upper Galilee, or Galilee of the Gentiles.

17. ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

"From that time" may mean either after Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, or after He had come into Galilee, most probably the latter.

Isaiah alludes as to be taken away, when Galilee should attain her promised glory (Isa. ix. 1, 2): 'Nevertheless, the dimness shall not be such as in her vexation, when at the first He lightly afflicted the land of Zebulon, and the land of Naphtali, and afterward did more grievously afflict her by the way of the sea, beyond [this side of: Luther's Germ. trans.] Jordan, in Galilee of the nations. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.' The ignominy which rested upon Galilee was occasioned by the fact that, in spite of the bravery of the people of Naphtali and Zebulon, they had, from the very time when their territory was apportioned to them, been willing to receive the Gentiles or heathens among themselves. They remained in closer alliance with their idolatrous neighbours than any of the other tribes. Of Zebulon the prophecy had been spoken, 'He shall dwell at the haven of the sea; and he shall be for a haven of ships: and his borders shall be unto Sidon.' This implied industrial and commercial occupations, which were foreign to the genius of the Hebrew policy, and led first to the transfer of twenty Galilean cities by Solomon to Hiram king of Tyre (1 Kings ix. 11), and subsequently to idolatry in Dan, at the head-waters of the Jordan, on Hermon, and in other parts of the mountain-land. The marriage of the Israelites with the daughters of the heathen followed as a matter of course; and this unrighteous connection, together with the idolatrous worship, was the occasion of the scorn expressed by Isaiah, as well as by Matt. iv. 15, in those words, 'Galilee of the Gentiles,' which had become current. The ill repute in which the Galileans stood may have been increased by the misfortunes endured at the hands of Benhadad and Tiglath-Pileser, as well as by the coarse Syrian dialect and the strong guttural accent of the mountaineers, and many other things which throw light upon the question put by Nathanael, 'Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?' (John i. 46; vii. 52).—RITTER'S 'Comparative Geography of Palestine,' vol. ii. p. 254.

* See comment on Matt. xiii. 54.

THE CALL OF SIMON PETER AND ANDREW, AND OF JAMES AND JOHN, WITH THE MIRACULOUS DRAUGHT OF FISHES.

S. MATTHEW iv. 18-22.

S. MARK i. 16-20.

S. LUKE v. 1-11.

18 And Jesus, walking
by the sea of Galilee,
saw two brethren,
Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother,
casting a net into the sea:
for they were fishers.

16 Now as He walked
by the sea of Galilee,
He saw
Simon and Andrew his brother
casting a net into the sea:
for they were fishers.

1 And it came to pass, that as the people pressed upon Him to hear the word of God,
He stood by the lake of Gennesaret,

2 And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

3 And He entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land.
And He sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 Now when He had left speaking, He said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep,
and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon answering, said unto Him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done they enclosed a great multitude of fishes:
and their net brake.

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came and filled both the ships,

so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me:
for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

9 For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken:

10 And so was also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon.
And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not:
from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

19 And He saith unto them,
Follow Me,
and I will make you
fishers of men.
20 And they straightway left their nets,
and followed Him.
21 And going on
from thence,
He saw other two brethren,
James the son of Zebedee,
and John his brother,
in a ship with Zebedee their father,
mending their nets:
and He called them.
22 And they immediately left the ship and their father,
and followed Him.

17 And Jesus said unto them
Come ye after Me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.
18 And straightway they forsook their nets
and followed Him.
19 And when He had gone
a little farther thence,
He saw
James the son of Zebedee,
and John his brother,
who also were in the ship
mending their nets,
20 And straightway He called them:
and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after Him.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all

and followed Him.

18. ¶ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.^a

S.V. He saw (omit Jesus).
Vulg. Ambulans autem Iesus.

19. And He saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

20. And they straightway left their nets, and followed Him.

21. And going on from thence, He saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and He called them.

22. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed Him.

S. left their ship.
Vulg. relietis retibus et patre.

The call of these same four disciples is also related by S. Mark (i. 16-18) in nearly the same words, and the question arises,^b is it the same as that described by S. Luke (v. 1)? Many writers¹ think it is. S. Augustine,² who discusses the subject with great care, sees so many objections which he cannot remove that he is unable to agree with this explanation; and he has been followed by others.³

S. John (i. 40, &c.), who alone records the acts of the first year of Christ's ministry, relates how Andrew, Simon Peter, and three other disciples are attracted to Jesus, and are with Him when He performed the miracle at the marriage at Cana in Galilee. After some time these five disciples appear to have returned to their usual occupation. Neither S. Matthew, S. Mark, nor S. Luke say anything of this; because they take up the relation of Christ's ministry at the beginning of His second year, and omit all mention of it during His first year. All the three Evangelists relate a call of these same four disciples, S. Matthew and S. Mark in much the same words, and S. Luke with many additional circumstances. The only question is whether S. Luke is relating a different event, or the same with many particulars not mentioned by S. Matthew and S. Mark.

Jesus had called Peter and four others to be His disciples in the first year of His ministry, immediately after his return from the Temptation as related by S. John (i. 40, &c.), and they had continued with Him for some time. How is it that He has now to call them a second time? The probability is that, when Jesus heard that John was cast into prison, and knew that the Pharisees were jealously watching Him, and were remarking on the number of the disciples that He was daily making (John iv. 1) He judged it best for the present to send away His five disciples, to follow their own occupation for a time, while He Himself went about Galilee preaching the Gospel and healing all manner of sickness, and thus getting a footing, as it were, in the hearts and affections of the people. Here He calls together again these disciples, never to return any more to their fishing, except for a few days after His resurrection.

23. ¶ And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.

V. And He went: S. about Galilee: S. teaching them.
Vulg. et circumtulit Iesus totam galiliam, docens in synagogis eorum.

24. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and He healed them.

V. omits and after torments.
Vulg. et qui demonia habebant.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xiv.; vol. i. p. 179.
Theophylact, in Matt. iv. 18; vol. i. p. 22.
Euthemius, in Matt. iv. 18; vol. i. p. 137.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxvi. p. 186.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 18; vol. viii. p. 112.
Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, vol. i. p. 216.
Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xxix. and l. 25.

^a Casting a net into the sea.—Early in the morning we bated with delight in the pure water of the lake of Galilee. While we were thus employed, a fisherman passed by with a hand-net, which he cast into the sea. The net was exactly the net called in the Gospel of Matthew ἀμφιβληστρον, the same kind of net which we had seen used at Lake Bourlos, in Egypt. . . .

"The fishermen on shore (Lake Bourlos) were using the ἀμφιβληστρον, a net resembling the poke-net used in the isles of Scotland. It is circular, and weights are placed round the circumference. The fisherman holds it by the centre, gathers it up in his hand, and casts it into the water: he then draws it slowly to shore by a line fastened to the centre. This is probably the very kind of net used by the disciples."—"Mission of Enquiry from Scotland," pp. 294 and 63.

Wieseler, Chronological Synopsis, p. 252.
Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, Luke v. 1.
Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 23, 189.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 438.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 17; vol. iii. p. 1094.

³ Dean Alford, Greek Testament, Luke v. 1.

^b Jesus calls Disciples.—"The three accounts all evidently refer to the same transaction. Luke relates more particularly the former part, including the putting off upon the lake in Simon's boat, and also the miraculous draught, and passes lightly over the latter part. Matthew and Mark, on the other hand, narrate the former part only generally, but the latter part with more detail. In the one part, Luke introduces circumstances which the others omit; in the other part, Matthew and Mark mention facts which Luke has not noted. The remark of Spanheim is here just; Quæ narratur a Luca, illa non negantur a Mattheo, sed præmittuntur tantum. Nihil vero frequentius, quam quædam præmittunt ab his suppleri ab aliis; ne vel scripturæ sacre et comperto scriptoris viderentur, vel lectores uni ex illis reliquis spretis hærerent" (Dubia Evang. tom. iii. Dub. 72, vii.).—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 189.

25. And there followed Him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judæa, and from beyond Jordan.

The principal means that Jesus used for the conversion of the people, as the Evangelist here intimates, were two, teaching and healing. He convinced their reason; He proved to them out of their own Scriptures, and by arguments drawn from other sources, that He was the Christ, the Son of God; and He predisposed them to receive His teaching favourably by healing the various maladies with which they were afflicted.

Few of the cures that Jesus wrought are related at length, very few in comparison with the great number that He wrought. The Evangelist uses general terms, so as to imply not individual cases but different classes of diseases. 1. He healed all manner of sickness (πάσαν νόσον). The term νόσος would probably comprise all who were afflicted with any form of disease that was incurable by human skill; as, for instance, the blind, the lame, the withered, &c. 2. He healed all manner of disease (πάσαν μαλακίαν). The term μαλακία would denote all who were suffering from failure of strength, and might comprise consumption, and every other kind of wasting. 3. He healed those who were taken with torments (Βάρανος). This term Βάρανος would include all who were racked with pain, whose existence was one continued torture. Three kinds of diseases the Evangelist specifies—palsy, lunacy, and demoniacal possession. The first is a bodily affliction, the second mental, and the third may include both.

Such were the various kinds of diseases that Jesus cured. But to form an idea of the number of individual cases there might be, we must take into account the extent of country from which they came to Him: "From Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judæa, and from beyond Jordan."

Josephus says¹ there were 240 cities and villages, or inhabited places, in Galilee alone. Of the district called Decapolis, Lightfoot² quotes Pliny as saying, "The region of Decapolis is joined to Judæa on the side of Syria. It was so called from the number of the ten cities in it, about which all are not agreed. Most writers reckon them as follows: Damascus and Opatos, both watered by the river Chrysorrhoas, fruitful Philadelphia and Raphana, all lying towards Arabia; Scythopolis, Hippos, Gadara, Pella, Gelasa, Canatha. Among and about these cities there lie tetrarchies, every one like whole countries, and they are divided into kingdoms, Trachonitis, Paneas, in which is Casarea." Some writers³ have thought that by Decapolis is meant a district comprising ten cities which lay more in the neighbourhood of the Sea of Galilee, the names of which were Tiberias, Sephet, Asor, Cedus, Casarea Philippi, Capharnaum, Jotapata, Bethsaida, Corazin, Bethshan or Scythopolis. Whichever of these lists of cities be the real district of Decapolis, it is plain that a very wide extent of country is here indicated, and that the number of cases which Jesus healed would be in like proportion.

¹ Josephus, Vita, 45; vol. ii. p. 927.

——— Whiston's Trans. Life, p. 15.

² Lightfoot, Chorograph. Decad. ch. vii. vol. ii. p. 314.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. iv. 25; vol. viii. p. 114.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER V.

The Mount of Beatitudes.—"Twelve miles north-northeast from Nazareth, we came to the Mount of Beatitudes, where our Saviour delivered His remarkable sermon: it is about ten miles north of Mount Tabor. From the plain to the south, it appears like a long low hill, with a mount at the east and west end, from which it seems to have the name of Kern-el-Hutin (the horns of Hutin), the village of Hutin being under it. At the first sight, the whole hill appears to be rocky and uneven, but the eastern mount is a level surface, covered with fine herbage: and here, they say, it was that those blessings proceeded out of the mouth of the Redeemer of mankind. The mount is ninety paces long, and sixty wide. About the middle of this eastern mount are the foundations of a small church, twenty-two feet square, on a ground a little elevated, which probably is the place where they supposed our Saviour was, when He spake to His disciples. To the west of it there is a cistern underground, which might serve for the use of those who had the care of the church."—POCOCKE, 'Travels,' vol. ii. p. 67.

"The undulating table-land which skirts the hills of Galilee on the east, is broken by a long low ridge rising at its northern extremity into a square-shaped hill with two tops, which give it the modern name of 'the Horns of Hattin,' Hattin being the village on the ridge at its base. This mountain or hill—for it only rises sixty feet above the plain—is that known to pilgrims as the Mount of the Beatitudes, the supposed scene of the Sermon on the Mount. The tradition cannot lay claim to an early date: it was in all probability suggested first to the Crusaders, by its remarkable situation. But that situation so strikingly coincides with the intimations of the Gospel narrative, as almost to force the inference that in this instance the eye of those who selected the spot was for once rightly guided. It is the only height seen in this direction from the shores of the Lake of Gennesareth. The plain on which it stands is easily accessible from the lake, and from that plain to the summit is but a few minutes' walk. The platform at the top is evidently suitable for the collection of a multitude, and corresponds precisely to the 'level place' (τόπου πεδινού), to which He would 'come down' as from one of its higher horns to address the people. Its situation is central, both to the peasants of the Galilean hills and the fishermen of the Galilean lake, between which it stands, and would therefore be a natural resort both to Jesus and His disciples when they retired for solitude from the shores of the sea, and also to the crowds who assembled from Galilee, 'from Decapolis, from Jerusalem, from Judæa, and from beyond Jordan.' None of the other mountains in the neighbourhood could answer equally well to this description, inasmuch as they are merged into the uniform barrier of hills round the lake; whereas this stands separate—'the mountain,' which alone could lay claim to a distinct name, with the exception of the one height of Tabor, which is too distant to answer the requirements."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 368.

"The tradition which makes Kurn Hattin the Mount of Beatitudes is of Latin origin, and not older than the twelfth or thirteenth century; but the place is so well adapted for the delivery of a discourse to a large multitude, that in this case we may well believe it was correctly chosen by those who first selected it."—WILSON and WARREN, 'Recovery of Jerusalem,' vol. ii. p. 356.

CHAPTER V.

[1. Christ beginneth His sermon in the mount : 3. declaring who are blessed, 13. who are the salt of the earth, 14. the light of the world, the city on a hill, 15. the candle : 17. that He came to fulfil the law. 21. What it is to kill, 27. to commit adultery, 33. to swear : 35. exhorteth to suffer wrong, 44. to love even our enemies, 48. and to labour after perfectness.]

[Vulg. celestis tradidit leuitatibus : Apostolus autem terre et lucem mundi dicit : nec venit ut aboleret legem aut prophetas, &c. Ladinpleat, docens de non irascendo fratri, sed ut ei reconciliemur, de non conespicienda matre, de membro scandalizante abijciendo, de uzore extra casum adulterii non dimittenda : non iurandum, nec malo resistendum, inimicos diligendos, et de male meritis bene mercedem]

Two questions arise in connection with S. Matthew's account of our Saviour's sermon on the mount. 1. Is S. Matthew here and S. Luke vi. 20 giving an account of the same sermon? 2. If so, which of the two gives the sermon in the order of events in which it was delivered?

I. After a minute examination of the points of agreement and difference in the sermon of our Lord, as recorded by S. Matthew and S. Luke, S. Augustine¹ was scarcely able to make up his mind whether they were relations of two different discourses, or different accounts of one and the same discourse. On the whole, he seemed rather to lean to the opinion, that they were the relations of two discourses delivered at different times. He seems to think it not improbable that they were two discourses delivered on the same day, part to His disciples and part to the general multitude. On the other hand, many eminent commentators have held that the two Evangelists are referring to one and the same sermon.²

Some of the early writers³ appear, from their remarks, to imply that the two accounts are relations of one and the same discourse, though they have not said so in as many words.

At first sight, it might appear that the two Evangelists are giving an account of two different discourses, because S. Luke expressly states that Jesus chose His twelve Apostles before He delivered His sermon, while S. Matthew does not make any mention of the twelve Apostles until long after the delivery of His sermon. But a little examination will show that the two Evangelists may still be relating the same discourse. Because S. Matthew nowhere records the election of the twelve Apostles; when he first mentions them it is to relate how Jesus endued them with miraculous power, and sent them to preach the Gospel and to heal the sick, and he uses words which rather imply that He had chosen them some time before.

An inspection of the two accounts can scarcely fail to strengthen the impression, that they refer to one and the same sermon. It will also show that S. Matthew's is much the fuller account, extending as it does over one hundred and seven verses, while S. Luke's is contained in thirty; that S. Luke's account, as far as it goes, is identical in subject-matter with S. Matthew's, and almost in the very same words; and that the beginning and the conclusion of the sermon is alike in both the Evangelists. Why S. Luke omitted so large a portion of the sermon it may be impossible to say. It has been suggested that a great part of that which he omits has a special reference to Jewish customs and to Jewish feelings, and that, as S. Luke was writing for Gentiles, he passed over that which had a special reference to the Jews.

II. Supposing that the accounts of the two Evangelists refer to the same sermon, there can be no question that S. Luke's is the one which is given in the order of events in which it was delivered.⁴ The motive that influenced S. Matthew in placing the Sermon on the Mount by anticipation here, though in the proper course of the narrative it should not come in until chapter viii. 4, in all probability was that love for classification according to subjects which he has shown in other parts of his Gospel. S. Matthew often puts things together that are alike in their nature, or that happened in the same place, without much regard to the time when they took place. Hence his Gospel cannot be called, as it was not intended to be, a strictly chronological arrangement of events.

In verse 23 of the last chapter, S. Matthew says that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness." He then goes on to give specimens of these subjects, and in the order in which he has here

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 19; vol. iii. p. 1098.

² Janinius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxix. p. 261.

Maldonatus, in Matt. v. i.; vol. i. p. 65.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. i.; vol. viii. p. 116.

Grotius, in Luc. vi. 17; Critici Sac. vol. vi. p. 1267.

Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, Luke vi. 17.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evang. pp. xxxi. and 33.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 192.

Stroud, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. cxlii.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 443.

³ S. Ambrose, in Luc. vi. 20; vol. ii. p. 1649.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xv.; vol. i. p. 187.

⁴ Janinius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxix. p. 261.

Maldonatus, in Matt. v. i.; vol. i. p. 65.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. i.; vol. viii. p. 116.

Robinson's Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 34, 192.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. xxxi.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 445.

classed them. Having first mentioned His teaching in the synagogues and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, instead of narrating the events which happened next in order, he first gives the substance of what He taught, and on both the subjects on which He taught—that is, on both the Law and the Gospel—in the Sermon on the Mount; and he then records instances of His healing. By this arrangement he is also enabled to bring together several instances of healing, all of which were wrought at the same place, either in Capernaum itself, or in the immediate neighbourhood of it.*

Whether this be the right key to explain the meaning of S. Matthew's arrangement or not, the fact remains that his arrangement here is exceedingly like the way in which he groups events together in other parts of his Gospel, and with the same disregard of time.

There is no difficulty as to the place in which the sermon is said to have been delivered by the two Evangelists. S. Matthew says, He went up into "a mountain," or into "the mountain" (εἰς τὸ ὄρος): "and when He was set, His disciples came unto Him." S. Luke says that He came down with them; that is, from the mountain (τὸ ὄρος) which he had mentioned just before, and stood in the plain (ἐν τῷ πεδυνῷ), or, as it is rendered, on a level place. By reference to the introductory note to this chapter, it will be seen that the mountain and the level place on the mountain exactly correspond with the description which travellers give of the mountain supposed to be the Mount of Beatitudes.

The time assigned by commentators to the delivery of the Sermon on the Mount, will vary according as they regard the sermon recorded by S. Matthew to be the same as that by S. Luke or not. For instance, Cornelius a Lapide thinks they are the same, while Greswell thinks they were delivered at different times and to different audiences. The time which a Lapide assigns to the delivery of the sermon, is about the middle of May;¹ and so after the second Passover of our Saviour's ministry. This is about the same time that Greswell gives to the delivery of the discourse which S. Luke relates; but he makes the date of the Sermon on the Mount by S. Matthew earlier by several months, and places it in February—that is, some time before the second Passover.

The Sermon on the Mount divides itself into three great divisions—

I. The sermon, from verse 1 to 16, contains various qualifications for the exalted position and the great responsibility to which He had called the Apostles. These verses appear to have been addressed primarily to the Twelve.

II. From verse 17 to 48, it contains His condemnation of the glosses and interpretations of the Law of Moses, by which they had rendered it of no effect. Very little of this is recorded by S. Luke.

III. The rest of the sermon, chapters vi., vii., is taken up with various duties towards God and man.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 1; vol. viii. p. 116.

* The Sermon on the Mount.—The following is a concise summary in favour of S. Luke's position of the Sermon on the Mount.

"The Sermon on the Mount follows here, in accordance with the order of Luke. The correctness of this order, so far as it respects Matthew, depends on the question: Whether the discourse as reported by the two Evangelists is one and the same, and was delivered on the same occasion? This question is answered at the present day by interpreters, with great unanimity, in the affirmative; and mainly for the following reasons:—

"1. The choice of the Twelve by our Lord, as His ministers and witnesses, furnished an appropriate occasion for this public declaration respecting the spiritual nature of His kingdom, and the life and character required of those who would become His true followers. Luke expressly assigns this as the occasion; and although Matthew is silent here and elsewhere as to the selection of the Apostles, yet some passages of the discourse, as reported by him, seem to presuppose their previous appointment as teachers: see Matt. v. 13, 14; vii. 6.

"2. The beginning and the end of both discourses, and the general course of thought in both, exhibit an entire accordance one with the other.

"3. The historical circumstances which follow both discourses are the same, viz. the entrance into Capernaum, and the healing of the centurion's servant.

"The main objection which has been felt and urged against the identity of the two discourses, is the fact that Matthew's report contains much that is not found in Luke, while, on the other hand, Luke adds a few things not found in Matthew, as v. 24–26, 38–40, 45; and further, his expressions are often modified and different, as in v. 20, 29, 35, 36, 43, 44, 46. But this objection vanishes, if we look at the different objects which the two Evangelists had in view. Matthew was writing chiefly for Hebrew Christians; and it was therefore important for him to bring out, in full, the manner in which our Lord enforced the spiritual nature of His dispensation and doctrine, in opposition to the mere letter of the Jewish law and the teaching and practice of the Scribes and Pharisees. This he does particularly, and with many examples, in Matt. v. 18–38, vi. 1–34. Luke, on the contrary, was writing mainly for Gentile Christians; and hence he omits the long passages of Matthew above referred to, and dwells only upon those topics which are of practical importance to all. In other respects, the discourses as given by the two writers do not differ more than is elsewhere often the case in different reports of the same discourse. . . .

"Augustine, in order to avoid the like difficulty, supposed that our Lord first held the longer discourse in Matthew before His disciples on the top of the mountain; and afterwards descended and delivered the same in the briefer form of Luke to the multitudes below (de consensu Evangelistarum, ii. 45). But this is unnecessary; and the order of circumstances would seem rather to have been the following:—Our Lord retires to the mountain and chooses the Twelve; and with them descends to the multitudes on the level place or plain, where He heals many. As they press upon Him, He again ascends to a more elevated spot, where He can overlook the crowds and be heard by them; and here, seating Himself with the Twelve around Him, He addresses Himself to His disciples in particular, and to the multitudes in general. See Matt. v. 1, 2; Luke vi. 20: also Matt. vii. 28; Luke vii. 1."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 192.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

S. MATTHEW v.

- 1 And seeing the multitudes, He went up into a mountain :
and when He was set,
- His disciples came unto Him :
2 And He opened His mouth, and taught them,
saying,
- 3 Blessed are the poor in spirit :
for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
- 4 Blessed are they that mourn :
for they shall be comforted.
- 5 Blessed are the meek :
for they shall inherit the earth.
- 6 Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness :
for they shall be filled.
- 7 Blessed are the merciful :
for they shall obtain mercy.
- 8 Blessed are the pure in heart :
for they shall see God.
- 9 Blessed are the peacemakers :
for they shall be called the children of God.
- 10 Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake :
for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
- 11 Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you,
and persecute you,
and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely,
for my sake.
- 12 Rejoice,
and be exceeding glad :
for great is your reward in heaven :
for so persecuted they
the prophets which were before you.

S. LUKE vi.

- 17 And He came down with them,
and stood in the plain,
and the company of His disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judæa and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon,
which came to hear Him,
and to be healed of their diseases ;
- 18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits :
and they were healed.
- 19 And the whole multitude sought to touch Him :
for there went virtue out of Him, and healed them all.
- 20 And He lifted up His eyes on His disciples,
and said,
Blessed be ye poor :
for yours is the kingdom of God.
- 21 Blessed are ye that hunger now :
for ye shall be filled.
- Blessed are ye that weep now :
for ye shall laugh.
- 22 Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you,
and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you,
and cast out your name as evil,
for the Son of Man's sake.
- 23 Rejoice ye in that day,
and leap for joy :
for, behold, your reward is great in heaven :
for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.
- 24 But woe unto you that are rich !
for ye have received your consolation.
- 25 Woe unto you that are full !
for ye shall hunger.
- Woe unto you that laugh now !
for ye shall mourn and weep.
- 26 Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you !
for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

1. And seeing the multitudes, He went up into a mountain : and when He was set, His disciples came unto Him :

V. omits unto Him.

Vulg. Videns autem Iesus turbas . . . accesserunt ad eum discipuli ejus.

2. And He opened His mouth, and taught them, saying,

3. Blessed are the poor in spirit : for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

The Baptist had come preaching, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus Himself had gone about all Galilee, saying, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Here He declares what must be the dispositions of those who are to compose this kingdom. The kingdom of heaven, or the kingdom of God, may be looked at in its two separate conditions, as (1) Christ's kingdom, or Christ's Church, on earth preparing for heaven; or (2) as having already reached heaven. Whilst on earth they are commanded to show this poverty in spirit as a disposition becoming citizens of this kingdom; and in heaven they will receive the reward of having shown this spirit while on earth.

Most of the conditions which our Saviour here pronounces blessed, had hitherto been regarded as indications of misery and misfortune. Henceforward, and under certain restrictions, they were to be signs of blessedness present and future.

The chief point indicated in the words "Blessed are the poor in spirit" is the inward temper, and not any external condition; the state of their heart, and not the nature of their worldly circumstances. Neither necessary poverty, nor poverty voluntarily embraced, in itself is the condition here pronounced "Blessed," but humility of spirit, a desire to walk humbly before God. It is true that Jesus has elsewhere depicted the deceitfulness of riches in such strong colours as almost to imply that a fear of offending God was rarely found combined with riches. Under the impression that poverty in worldly goods was the best way to ensure this poverty or humility in spirit, many in ancient times distributed their worldly goods among the poor, and voluntarily embraced a state of poverty. By this they freed themselves from the distraction of mind which the possession of money or property always entails, and they were enabled to give themselves up more unreservedly to the uninterrupted worship of God, and they avoided the temptations to worldliness, to grasp as much as possible of what this world has to offer. So far they were on the road to blessedness.

4. Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

S². that mourn now.

5. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Vulg. 4. Beati mites: quoniam ipsi possidebunt terram.

5. Beati qui iugent: quoniam ipsi consolabuntur.

The Vulgate places "Blessed are the meek" next to "Blessed are the poor in spirit," and before "Blessed are they that mourn." This is also the order that is generally followed by the Latin commentators.¹ But S. Leo, commenting on these verses, places "Blessed are they that mourn" before "Blessed are the meek." But the Greek MSS., the Syriac, and the Arabic arrange the Beatitudes in the order in which we have them. This is also the order followed by the Greek commentators.²

It has been observed that the reward annexed to all the Beatitudes is the kingdom of heaven,³ either expressly stated, as in the first and eighth Beatitudes, or virtually so, as in the rest. In the other six the reward promised corresponds with the grace that is pronounced "blessed."

The expression "in the spirit" (τῷ πνεύματι)⁴ may probably be understood to belong to all the Beatitudes as well as to the first. Thus restricted, the comfort here promised would not be to all who mourn, to every kind of sorrow, but to them who mourn "in the spirit" (τῷ πνεύματι), whatever may be the precise meaning of those words. It would doubtless include all mourning in sorrow for sin, and mourning of all kinds, even for loss of worldly goods, borne patiently and with resignation to the will of God.

To the eyes of man the meek and unresisting appear to be the prey of the strong, the lawless, and the violent. In all acts of aggression the meek appear to be the sufferers. But this meekness is so far from entailing on them any loss, that it actually entitles them to a possession, and not to an accidental possession, but to a rightful inheritance (κληρονομήσουσι), "they shall inherit the earth." In consequence of this their conduct they shall possess that which, as being the most substantial and the most lasting of all, is rightly called "the land:" they shall inherit the land where they live for ever.⁵

6. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

7. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

To hunger and thirst after righteousness is to have the same longing, the same craving for righteousness, that we have for meat and drink. The term righteousness (τὴν δικαιοσύνην) in its largest sense implies our duty both to God and to man. In its more limited signification, it applies to our duty to man only, to our conduct to each other, and it is then generally termed justice. In this latter sense righteousness is closely allied to mercy. For mercy is what we do to each other over and above that which we are bound to do by the law of the land.

8. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

9. Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Vulg. quoniam filii Dei vocabuntur.

Few terms embrace a wider field than the words "pure in heart," or "a pure heart:" for the heart is the source of all

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. v.; vol. vii. p. 34.

S. Augustine, de Serm. in Monte, i. 2; vol. iii. p. 1232.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. v.; vol. i. p. 932.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xv.; vol. i. p. 190.

Theophylact, in Matt. v.; vol. i. p. 23.

Euthymius, in Matt. v.; vol. i. p. 147.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evangel. cap. xxxix. p. 268.

Maklonatus, in Matt. v. 4; vol. i. p. 68.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 4; vol. viii. p. 121.

³ S. Augustine, de Serm. in Monte, i. 4, 12; vol. iii. p. 1235.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 10; vol. viii. p. 128.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 4; vol. viii. p. 123.

⁵ S. Basil, in Psalm xxxiii. 3; vol. i. p. 355.

S. Gregory Nyssen, de Beatit. orat. ii.; vol. i. p. 1212.

S. Cyril Alex. in Isaiah lviii. 14; vol. iii. p. 1302.

S. Jerome, in Matt. v. 5; vol. vii. p. 34.

action, and actions partake of the nature of the heart, from which they proceed. They whose heart is pure shall have the most unrestricted intercourse with God hereafter which it is possible for man to enjoy: they shall see God. What the effect of seeing God is, S. John has shown (1 John iii. 2): it is to transform them into His likeness.

To create peace between man and man, and peace between God and man, has been the distinguishing mark of the most eminent servants of God in all ages. But, besides the reward which their very employment will yield them in this world, they shall be recognised and owned as sons of God in the life to come.

10. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Vulg. qui persecutionem patiuntur.

11. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

Margin, lying.

Vulg. et dixerint omne malum adversum vos mentientes.

12. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

They were to rejoice, when suffering persecution, and false accusation of every description, in the service of God, for two reasons: (1) Because the reward which God would hereafter bestow on them for this, would be great; and (2) because they in this resembled the prophets of old.

The audience to which our Saviour delivered His sermon on the mount consisted of the multitudes and His disciples, or His Apostles: for S. Luke relates, that He had chosen His twelve Apostles before He delivered this sermon. It is also probable that He uttered the Beatitudes, and the four verses that follow them, with special reference to the Apostles, to encourage and support them in the career on which they were about to enter, and to instruct them in the responsibility of the office to which they had been called. Their life would henceforth be one of poverty, of sorrow, of oppression, and of persecution. All these conditions of suffering, borne for His sake, in His service, would meet with their appropriate reward, but not in this life. They must also be gentle, pure, merciful, and the promoters of peace among men. Thus, in the Beatitudes, He warns them of the hardships which they would have to endure, and the dispositions which they must show in His service.

S. Matthew gives eight Beatitudes, while S. Luke gives only four. S. Luke relates that He pronounced blessedness on four conditions, and woe on the four conditions opposed to these. The latter is omitted by S. Matthew. As a rule it may be said that S. Matthew is fuller than S. Luke in the description of the incidents or events which he relates, while S. Luke relates a greater number of those events.

In the four verses that follow the Beatitudes, He points out to them by three different similes the exalted station to which He had raised them by choosing them as His Apostles, and the responsibility which this entailed on them. They were the salt of the earth, the lights of the world, as a city set on a hill. Henceforth they were not mere hearers, like the rest of the crowd: they were the salt to season the rest; they were the lights to give light to the rest. These words could scarcely apply to any in that whole multitude but to the newly-elected Twelve, and to such as bear an office in some degree similar to theirs.

S. MATTHEW v.

- 13 Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.
- 14 Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.
- 15 Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick: and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.
- 16 Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

S. LUKE xi.

- No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light.

13. ¶ Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour,* wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

14. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill^b cannot be hid.

15. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

Vulg. ut luceat.

16. Let your light so shine before men,^c that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

V.* your good things.

Vulg. ut videant opera vestra bona.

* Salt having lost its savour.—“It is plainly implied that salt, under certain conditions so generally known as to permit Him to found His instructions upon them, did actually lose its saltiness; and our only business is to discover these conditions, not to question their existence. Nor is this difficult. I have often seen just such salt, and the identical disposition of it that our Lord has mentioned. A merchant of Sidon having farmed of the Government the revenue from the importation of salt, brought over an immense quantity from the marshes of Cyprus—enough, in fact, to supply the whole province for at least twenty years. This he had transferred to the mountains, to cheat the Government out of some small percentage. Sixty-five houses in Jûne—Lady Stanhope’s village—were rented and filled with salt. These houses have merely earthen floors, and the salt next the ground in a few years entirely spoiled. I saw large quantities of it literally thrown into the street, to be trodden under foot of men and beasts. It was ‘good for nothing.’ Similar magazines are common in this country, and have been from remote ages, as we learn from history, both sacred and profane; and the sweeping out of the spoiled salt and casting it into the street are actions familiar to all men.

“It should be stated in this connection, that the salt used in this country is not manufactured by boiling clean salt water, nor quarried from mines, but is obtained from marshes along the seashore, as in Cyprus, or from salt lakes in the interior, which dry up in summer, as the one in the desert north of Palmyra, and the great lake of Jebbûl, south-east of Aleppo. The salt of our Sidon merchant was from the vast marshes near Larnaca. I have seen these marshes covered with a thick crust of salt, and have also visited them when it had been gathered into heaps like haystacks in a meadow. The large winter lake south-east of Aleppo I found dried up by the last of August, and the entire basin, further than the eye could reach, was white as snow with an incrustation of coarse salt. Hundreds of people were out gathering and carrying it to Jebbûl, where the Government stores were kept.

“Maundrell, who visited the lake at Jebbûl, tells us that he found salt there which had entirely ‘lost its savour’ and the same abounds among the debris at Uduim, and in other localities of rock-salt at the south end of the Dead Sea. Indeed, it is a well known fact that the salt of this country, when in contact with the ground, or exposed to rain and sun, does become insipid and useless. From the manner in which it is gathered, much earth and other impurities are necessarily collected with it. Not a little of it is so impure that it cannot be used at all; and such salt soon effloresces and turns to dust—not to fruitful soil, however. It is not only good for nothing itself, but it actually destroys all fertility wherever it is thrown; and this is the reason why it is cast into the street. There is a sort of verbal verisimilitude in the manner in which our Lord alludes to the act—‘it is cast out’ and ‘trodden under foot’ so troublesome is this corrupted salt, that it is carefully swept up, carried forth, and thrown into the street. There is no place about the house, yard, or garden where it can be tolerated. No man will allow it to be thrown on to his field, and the only place for it is the street: and there it is cast, to be trodden under foot of men.”—THOMSON, ‘The Land and the Book,’ p. 381.

^b A city set on an hill.—“Maundrell, Jowett and others, throw out the hint that Safed was the city set on a hill which could not be hid; and if that greatest of sermons was preached on the horns of Huttin, or near them, as tradition affirms, and if any particular city was referred to, there would be plausibility enough in the suggestion. These ancient parts of the castle render it all but certain that there was then a city or citadel on this most conspicuous ‘hill’ top; and our Lord might well point to it to illustrate and confirm His precept. The present Hebrew name is Zephath, and may either refer to its elevation like a watch-tower, or to the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding prospects. Certainly they are quite sufficient to suggest the name. There lies Gennesaret, like a mirror set in a framework of dark mountains and many-faceted hills. Beyond is the vast plateau of the Hauran, faintly shading with its rocky ranges the utmost horizon eastward. Thence the eye sweeps over Gilead and Bashan, Samaria and Carmel, the plains of Galilee, the coasts of Phœnicia, the hills of Naphtali, the long line of Lebanon, and the lofty head of Hermon—a vast panorama, embracing a thousand points of historic and sacred interest. Safed is truly a high tower on which to set the watchmen of Zion. My aneroid makes it 2650 feet above the Mediterranean. Tabor looks low, and Huttin seems to be in a valley.”—THOMSON, ‘The Land and the Book,’ p. 273.

“We turn to the glorious panorama, and we do not wonder as we look that imaginative interpreters should have made Safed ‘the city set on a hill, which cannot be hid’ (Matt. v. 14). The whole land is before us, from the Hauran mountains on the eastern horizon to the ridge of Samaria on the south-western. The most striking features of the scene are, first, the plateau of the Jaulân and Hauran, stretching from the high eastern bank of the Jordan valley far into the Arabian desert. This is the ancient kingdom of Bashan. Beyond it is a blue mountain-ridge, with one conspicuous peak near its centre, called by the Arabs el-Kuleib, ‘the Little Heart’; and just at the southern end of the ridge we can easily make out with a glass a conical hill surmounted by a castle—it is Salcah, and it marks the eastern boundary of Bashan (Josh. xiii. 11). Second, the deep basin of the Sea of Tiberias, lying nearly 2500 feet below us; and third, the rounded top of Tabor.”—Handbook of Palestine, p. 415.

“Safed is said to be alluded to by our Lord as ‘the city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid’; and certainly, if it had then existed, visible from the shores of the lake. We very soon lost the basalt, and crossed a limestone district, bare, but well cultivated wherever there was soil. Safed is clustered all round the sides of a limestone peat, 3335 feet above the lake. On the summit of the hill are the ruins of a large fortress, with deep moat and a triple line of walls, utterly destroyed by the earthquake of January 1, 1837, and separated from the town by a narrow belt of gardens and orchards. On the west face of the hill rises the Jewish quarter (a set of terraces), and on the east and south faces are the Moslem quarters. From the top of the ruins we enjoyed a glorious view, especially to the north-east, unfolding to us the plateau of Bashan, from the distinctly-marked gorge of the Yarmah, with the outline of the Lejah (Trachonitis), and its many extinct craters showing their black cones against the horizon. At our feet was spread out the Lake of Galilee, looking so near that it seemed one might almost have leaped into it, yet ten miles distant; Tiberias was distinctly seen beyond the plain of Gennesaret, and to the south we commanded a sight of Hattin, Tabor, Gilboa, and even Carmel.”—TRISTRAM, ‘Land of Israel,’ p. 581.

^c Let your light so shine.—“An instance where the connection

In Palestine salt had a twofold office: (1) It was used for domestic purposes, to season the food, to give taste to it, and to preserve it from putrefaction. (2) It was used in the Temple. God had thus commanded Moses, "Every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt" (Levit. ii. 13). Nothing was to be offered to God that was tainted with the effects of decay and corruption. What the salt was to their food and to their sacrifices, the Apostles were to be to the world. What He had made them by His appointment, they were to be by the holiness of their lives, and in the aptitude of their instruction. They were to give the tone to the world; they were to preserve it free from the corruption of sin and ignorance. The prophets had been the salt of Judaea, of the Jews; they were to be the salt of the earth, of both Jews and Gentiles.

Their office was exalted, and their responsibility was unbounded: for if the salt should lose its power to season, to preserve from corruption, there was nothing to season the salt. Nothing could recover for the salt its seasoning power, if once lost; and salt that had lost its power to season, was the most useless of all things. An Apostle faithless to his office could not influence others for God, and there was none to restore him; an Apostle that had become dead to the influence of the Holy Spirit, was an outcast from God. An instance of this we see in Judas Iscariot.

So highly does He dignify their office, that He addresses them by a term which is usually confined to Himself. He says they are the light (τὸ φῶς) of the world. He is the Light of the world, as being the centre, the source of light; they were the light of the world, as drawing their light from Him, and as being sent by Him. They were sent to shed light and heat on hearts darkened by sin. That their light is a borrowed light and lit by Him may be inferred from the next verse, where they are compared to a candle (λύχνον) that is lighted. They were called to be as a city set on a hill, to be the example of the world. On them, His Apostles, all eyes would be fixed. As a light was only lit in order to give light, and not to be hid, so they had been called in order to give light to others, by their example and by their instruction. The principles laid down in the Beatitudes, if acted on, would render them in reality, what He by His call had made them officially: they would be the salt of the earth; they would be the light of the world; they would be a city set on a hill.

Having explained to the newly-elected Apostles the exalted nature of the office to which He had called them, and the responsibility which this office carried with it, as well as the various dispositions with which they must meet the suffering and the persecution to which it would expose them, and the reward to which such dispositions would entitle them; He then, as it were, turns to the multitude, and refutes the charge which the Scribes and Pharisees made against Him, that He could not be the Christ, because He broke the Law.

II. What may be called the second part of our Lord's sermon on the mount extends from verse 17 to 48, and contains His exposition of the Law, both the corrupt interpretation of it which they had received by tradition from their fathers, and its meaning in that highest degree of perfection of which it was capable; and to which He, by His authority and sanction, now raises it. These two meanings He exemplifies in five different cases. In these He exposes both their imperfect and their radically corrupt interpretation of it. When cleared of their traditional glosses and explanations, He republishes the moral Law of Moses as the foundation of His Gospel. He extends its application almost indefinitely, and enforces it by new sanctions, by eternal rewards and eternal punishments. But before He enters on these particular instances, He declares that the object of the Incarnation, the object of His coming in the flesh, was to fulfil the Law; to fulfil it in His own Person, and to fulfil it by imparting grace to men, to enable them to obey it. He fulfilled the Law in three senses especially; (1) in being the Person foreshadowed by all the types of the Law, and in having in His own Life and Death fulfilled all that the typical ceremonies of the Law foretold; (2) in having given to the Law an immeasurably wider scope and higher tone of interpretation than belonged to it before; and (3) in giving men strength to enable them to keep the Law. Before the coming of Christ, the Law of Moses commanded certain duties to be done, but did not give men power to perform these. But in the economy of the Incarnation, grace, or supernatural strength, was imparted to men through the Sacraments, to enable them to fulfil the Law.¹

17. ¶ Think not that I am come to destroy the Law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.²

Vulg. Nolite putare quoniam veni solvere legem, aut prophetas: non veni solvere, sed adimplere.

¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. i. 2, quæst. 107, art. 2; vol. n. p. 887.

is not indeed wholly broken (for the context will not suffer this), but greatly impaired, see Matt. v. 15, 16, ἀλαρεὶ πᾶσαν τοὺς ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ οὐκ ἀλαρεῖ το φῶς ὑμῶν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀδελφῶν, which should run, 'It scintilla upon all that are in the house: Lucis so let your light shine before men,' &c. But in our translation, 'It gloweth light unto all that are in the house: Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works,' &c., the two sentences are detached from each other by the double error of rendering ἀλαρεὶ, ἀναφῶται, by different words, and of misunderstanding οὐρα. I say misunderstanding, because the alternative that 'so' is a mere ambiguity of expression seems to be precluded by the fact that in our Communion Service the words 'Let your light so shine before men,' &c., detached from their context, are chosen as the initial sentence at the Offertory, where the correct meaning, 'in like manner,' could not stand.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On the Revision of the N. T.,' p. 42.

² Jesus came not to destroy the Law.—"I. It was the opinion of the nation concerning the Messiah that He would bring in a new

18. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle^a shall in no wise pass from the Law, till all be fulfilled.

Vulg. jota unum, aut unus apex non praeerit a lege.

19. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

20. For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Vulg. non intrabitis in regnum celorum.

So far was He from being a breaker of the Law, that heaven and earth should sooner pass away than that He should omit fulfilling the smallest particular predicted of Him by the Law and the prophets. Nay more, even their observance of the Law, their righteousness (δικαιοσύνη), if they would enter His kingdom, must be greater than that prescribed by the Law and recognised interpreters of the Law, the Scribes and Pharisees.

Jod (יָוָה) was the name of the least letter in the Hebrew alphabet, and the tittle (כְּפֵאָה) was a dash or stroke added to the end of one letter to distinguish it from other similar letters. These would indicate the smallest possible precept of the Law down to the very form of its wording.

The office of the Apostles, like that of the Scribes and Pharisees, was to do and to teach, to observe the Law themselves and to teach others to observe it. As the reward for the fulfilment of their office would be great, so would their punishment for the abuse of it.

The teaching of the Scribes and Pharisees on the Law was faulty in three respects: (1) They held that sin, or a breach of the moral law, consisted in the external action only, and not at all in the indulgence of the internal affection, as in the case of the Seventh Commandment. (2) By their glosses and distinctions they explained away the plain meaning of the Law, as in the case of the Corban. (3) They made the observance of the Law to consist in ceremonial acts, such as frequent washings of the body, and failed to see that this was intended to indicate, and as it were bound them to, purity of heart, and that these washings of the body fulfilled the Law only in so far as they were accompanied with purity of heart.

Their righteousness, their observance of the Law, must exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, not only in these particulars, but also in that which the Law of Moses only ushered in, and prepared men for, that which He should further reveal of Himself and of His kingdom, the Incarnation and its kindred doctrines.¹

21. ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment:

Margin, to them.

Vulg. Audistis quia dictum est antiquis.

22. But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca,^b shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.^c

Margin, vain fellow.

S.V. omit without a cause.

Vulg. omits without a cause.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 21; vol. viii. p. 135.

Law, but not at all to the prejudice or damage of Moses and the prophets; but that He would advance the Mosaic Law to the very highest pitch, and would fulfil those things that were foretold by the prophets; and that according to the letter, even to the greatest point.

"II. The Scribes and Pharisees therefore snatch an occasion of cavilling against Christ, and readily objected that He was not the true Messiah, because He abolished the doctrines of the traditions, which they obtruded upon the people for Moses and the prophets.

"III. He meets with this prejudice here, and so onwards, by many arguments, as namely:—1. That He abolished not the Law when He abolished the traditions, for therefore He came, that He might fulfil the Law. 2. That He asserts that not one jota should perish from the Law. 3. That He brought in an observation of the Law, much more pure and excellent than the Pharisaical observation of it was; which He confirms even to the end of the chapter, explaining the Law according to its genuine and spiritual sense."—LIGHTFOOT, on Matt. v. 17; vol. ii. p. 137.

^a One tittle.—"It seems to denote the little heads or dashes of letters, whereby the difference is made between letters of a form almost alike."

"That our Saviour by יָוָה and כְּפֵאָה, 'jot and tittle,' did not only understand the bare letters, or the little marks that distinguish them, appears sufficiently from verse 19, where He renders it 'one of these least commands;' in which sense is that also in the Jerusalem Gemara, of Solomon's rooting out Jod, that is, evacuating that precept 'He shall not multiply wives.' And yet it appears enough hence, that our Saviour also so far asserts the uncorrupt immortality and purity of the holy text, that no particle of the sacred sense should perish, from the beginning of the Law to the end of it."—LIGHTFOOT, on Matt. v. 18; vol. ii. p. 138.

^b Raca (רָקָא).—"A word used by one that despiseth another in the highest scorn; very usual in the Hebrew writers, and very common in the mouth of the nation."—LIGHTFOOT, on Matt. v. 22; vol. ii. p. 141.

^c Hell-fire (τὴν γέεναν τοῦ πυρός).—"The valley of Hinnom, otherwise called 'the valley of the son' or 'children of Hinnom,' a deep and narrow ravine, with steep, rocky sides, to the south and west of Jerusalem, separating Mount Zion to the north from the 'Hill of Evil Counsel,' and the sloping rocky plateau of the 'plain of Rephaim' to the south. The earliest mention of the valley of Hinnom in the sacred writings is in Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 16, where the boundary-line between the tribes of Judah and Benjamin is described as passing along the bed of the ravine. On the southern brow, overlooking the valley at its eastern extremity, Solomon erected high places for Molech (1 Kings xi. 7), whose horrid rites

The first instance that He gives that He came to fulfil the Law is in the case of the Sixth Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." By this commandment the Law of Moses forbade the outward act of killing another. Jesus, by His authority, as the Lawgiver who had first given this command with its limited meaning, now extends its meaning, and forbids by it not only the actual slaying of a man, but also the feeling of anger which leads up to this. He describes the several stages in this anger, with the appropriate punishment due to each. (1) Anger without a cause was liable to the judgment of God. (2) Anger which showed itself in using terms of scorn and contempt towards another was taken cognizance of by the Council, or the Sanhedrin, the great Court of the land. (3) Anger which consigned another to hell was itself guilty of similar punishment. The fire in the valley of Hinnom is now for the first time used as the type of hell-fire,¹ and that by our Saviour Himself. The word is nowhere used in this sense in the Old Testament. In other words, to unjust anger He assigned the just anger and judgment of God; to public reproach a public trial; and hell-fire to the sentence that adjudges another there. This division of the punishment, due to various degrees of anger, may have in some measure corresponded with the various degrees of guilt which they attributed to murder. Lightfoot² quotes many passages from rabbinical writers to show that they distinguished between murder which a man committed by employing another, or by setting on a beast, and murder which he committed by his own hands. In the latter case he was tried by the Council or Sanhedrin, while in the former he was liable to the judgment of God only, but could not be tried by the Sanhedrin.³

Three derivations are given of the word raca,⁴ but all from words expressing the utmost scorn and contempt, such as was calculated to injure a man in the eyes of his fellow-men, or which might lead to a breach of the public peace, and which therefore naturally came within the cognizance of the civil authorities.

The expression "Thou fool" (μωρὲ), thus used, may have had reference to a man's future condition, and did not lessen the estimation in which he was held by his fellow-citizens; it was expressive of his reprobate state before God, without implying that he had been proved unworthy of the confidence of men. It may be that raca implied depreciation in a social, civil point of view, and μωρὲ in a religious point of view.

The word μωρός is used by Solomon to describe a wicked, reprobate person, and by the Scribes to denote the people who from their ignorance of the Law were lost before God.

23. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

24. Leave there thy gift before the altar,^a and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

From the mention of anger and injury, He goes on to correct another misconception in connection with this subject. He shows them that if one man was unjustly angry with another, or in any way injured another, it was not enough,

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. x. 28; vol. vii. p. 66.

² Lightfoot, in Matt. v. 22; vol. ii. p. 142.

³ S. Augustine, de Serm. in Monte, cap. ix. 22, &c.; vol. iii. p. 1240.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 22; vol. viii. p. 136.

were revived from time to time in the same vicinity by the later idolatrous kings. Ahaz and Manasseh made their children "pass through the fire" in this valley (2 Kings xvi. 3; 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, xxxiii. 6), and the fiendish custom of infant sacrifice to the fire-gods seems to have been kept up in Tophet, at its south-east extremity, for a considerable period (Jer. vii. 31; 2 Kings xxx. 10). To put an end to these abominations, the place was polluted by Josiah, who rendered it ceremonially unclean by spreading over it human bones and other corruptions (2 Kings xxiii. 10, 13, 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, 5), from which time it appears to have become the common cesspool of the city, into which its sewage was conducted, to be carried off by the waters of the Kidron, as well as a laystall, where all its solid filth was collected. From its ceremonial defilement, and from the detested and abominable fire of Molech, if not from the supposed ever-burning funeral piles, the later Jews applied the name of this valley, the Hinnom, Tephonim, to denote the place of eternal torment."—SMITH, 'Biblical Dictionary.'

^a The gift brought to the altar.—"Our Lord spoke to the Jews in their common language. But then it is to be observed that those Jews were His disciples, and that this precept of reconciliation was therefore intended by Him for an ordinance of the New Testament, like many others which He gave His disciples, while He instructed them in the doctrines relating to the kingdom of God. Thus He spoke, by way of anticipation, of baptism and baptismal regeneration to Nicodemus (John iii. 3-5), and of the Holy Eucharist (John vi. 50-58). Many other doctrines and precepts of Christian perfection were given by way of anticipation for the Gospel state, which are to be found in His sermon on the mount, and other places of the Evangelists: as that wherein He told His disciples that their righteousness was to exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees; that of not calling our brother a fool; that of not looking upon a woman with a lustful eye; that whereby He forbid divorce in other places, as well as in His sermon; that of not resisting evil; of loving our enemies; and of forgiving others their offences and trespasses against us, as a condition without which God would not forgive us ours against Him. To these we may add the special beatitudes promised to those who mourn; to the poor, meek, and humble in spirit; and to those who are reviled and persecuted for His sake. All which were given to them, as well as the precept of being reconciled before they offered at the altar, as to His disciples, and for the future Christian Church, to renew the Divine likeness and image in us, and make us partakers of the Divine perfections, by conforming our lives and our whole selves to His instruction and will. And as the primitive Church conceived this precept of reconciliation to be intended, among those I have mentioned, for a Gospel precept, so they always applied it to the Eucharist, as the Gospel sacrifice or oblation, not thinking (as Mr. Mede well observes) that our Lord would make a new law, or let me add, enforce an old one, concerning legal sacrifices, which He was presently to abolish, but that it had reference to that oblation which was to be instituted by Him for the Gospel dispensation, and to continue with and under it for ever."—DR. HICKES, 'On the Christian Priesthood,' ch. ii. 6; vol. ii. p. 42.

in order to obtain pardon, to be sorry for this, and to offer sacrifice to God for it, but restitution and compensation must also be made to the person injured, so that a reconciliation may be effected between them. The restitution and compensation may vary according to the circumstances of each case, but it must be sufficient to produce a reconciliation. He implies that sacrifice is only acceptable to God, on the condition that a reconciliation has been already effected.

These words might apply to the Jews and to their sacrifices; but as Jesus was formally delivering the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven, many of the early writers¹ thought, as it would seem with great probability, that He had, by anticipation, especial reference to the Christian Altar and the Christian Sacrifice in the Eucharist. As applied to the Jews, His precept could be in force but a very short time indeed, a few years at the longest. With the present generation both the Jewish sacrifices and altar would be swept away for ever, while the Christian Altar and the Christian Sacrifice would remain for all time.

25. Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

S.V. with him in the way: and the judge to the (omit, deliver thee).
Vulg. dum es in via cum eo; ne forte tradat te adversarius judici, et iudex tradat te ministro.

26. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.^a

The various terms here used, "the adversary" (ὁ ἀντίδικος), "the judge" (ὁ κριτής), and "the officer" (ὁ ὑπηρετής), and the process in law alluded to, were no doubt taken from the Jewish customs with regard to cases of debt and disputes in money matters. Jesus had before counselled reconciliation from motives of piety, now He urges it from motives of self-interest and common prudence. As it was wiser to compound a debt, and so to stay all further proceedings, than to be dragged into court, and from one court to another, until execution be finally carried into effect, so to make restitution for an injury committed, and thus to gain reconciliation with the person injured, and at the same time pardon from God, is better than to remain unreconciled and unpardoned, and so to suffer punishment, the full punishment, hereafter. As thus understood, it may be impossible to show the application of each particular term in this simile, but of the general sense there can be no doubt. The following may be the explanation of the separate words.² "The adversary" may mean the person injured; "the way" this life; "the judge" Christ Himself, who will be the judge at the day of judgment; and "the prison" the place of future punishment. This parable was also delivered on another occasion, and with a different object (S. Luke xii. 59).

27. ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery:

S.V. omit by them of old time.
Vulg. Audistis quia dictum est antiquis.

28. But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

S*. omits after her.
Vulg. ad concupiscendum eam.

29. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

Margin, do cause thee to offend.
Vulg. quod si oculus tuus dexter scandalizat te . . . quam totum corpus tuum mittatur in gehennam.

30. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

S*. rather than.
Vulg. quam totum corpus tuum eat in gehennam.

The second instance in which to the words of the old Law Jesus imparts a new perfection of meaning, is in the case of the Seventh Commandment. He thereby forbids not only the act of adultery, but also the indulgence of every feeling that would eventually lead to it.

As a wise physician would not hesitate to sacrifice any single member of the body, however valuable, even the right eye or the right hand, in order to secure the health and safety of the rest of the body, so a wise Christian will refuse no sacrifice, however great or however painful to make, in order to preserve the soul from the sin of adultery and its punishment. The eyes and the hands may have been specially selected for mention, because these are the instruments through which the feelings here forbidden are generally produced.

¹ Const. Apost. lib. ii. cap. 53.

S. Irenæus, adv. Hæres. iv. 18; p. 1024.

Eusebius, de Vita Constant. iv. 41; vol. ii. p. 1189.

S. Cyril. Hierosol. Mystag. v. 3; p. 1111.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xvi.; vol. i. p. 231.

Tertullian, de Patientia, 12; vol. i. p. 1267.

S. Jerome, in Matt. v. 23; vol. vii. p. 37.

S. Augustine, Sermo lxxii. (16 de verbis Dom.) 5; vol. v.

p. 508.

See also Dr. G. Hickes on the Christian Priesthood, vol. ii. p. 45.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. v. 25; vol. vii. p. 37.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. v. 25; vol. i. p. 937.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xii. 58; vol. ii. p. 1739.

Maldonatus, in Matt. v. 25; vol. i. p. 82.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 25; vol. viii. p. 139.

^a Farthing.—See note on chap. x. 29.

31. It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement :

32. But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery : and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

S.V. Whosoever putteth away, V. and whosoever marrieth her.
Vulg. qui omnis qui dimiserit uxorem suam . . . et qui dimissam duxerit.

The third instance in which He corrects and reforms the Law of Moses, is the subject of divorce. The Law of Moses had allowed the man to put away his wife at his own will, on giving her a writing of divorcement. This was not enacted by Moses as a wise and proper thing for them to do, but it was permitted as a concession to the hardness of their hearts, and probably with a view to prevent a greater evil, the sin of wife-murder. This permission Jesus, by His own authority, now withdraws; and henceforth He allows a man to put away his wife for one cause, and for one cause only, adultery.

A very important question arises with respect to this subject. After a divorce on the ground of adultery, would our Lord's words allow the innocent husband, or the innocent wife, as the case may be, to contract a second marriage? All are agreed that He forbids the guilty party to contract a second marriage; but the question is, how are His words to be understood with respect to the innocent party? The interpretation of our Lord's words, as received in the Primitive Church,¹ was that, on the divorce of a wife by her husband on account of adultery, it was forbidden the husband, guiltless though he might be, to marry another; and that what was forbidden to an innocent husband was also forbidden to an innocent wife. Though it would appear never to have been possible to enforce on the whole Church the practice of what was confessed to be the right interpretation of our Lord's own words, several attempts were made, both in early and late times, and by councils representing larger and smaller portions of the Christian Church.²

This is not the only passage in which our Lord touches on this subject. He recurs to it more than once. His teaching would seem to have caused surprise to His disciples, and to have given offence to the Pharisees (Mark x. 2); and when questioned by them, He lays down one principle as the foundation of all interpretation and explanation of the future law of divorce. He says that a man and his wife are one flesh, joined together by God; and that this union can only be dissolved by death, and that no regulation of man can dissolve it before. It is the continued existence of this union which causes the wife who has been divorced, to commit adultery if she marries again; because she is still married, in the eyes of God, to her first husband, and only socially separated from him—that is, separated from him by the law of man. A woman's union, after divorce, with another man under the name of marriage is by our Saviour termed adultery, no less than her unfaithfulness to her husband before her divorce. Thus, whether it be the husband or the wife, whether it be the one guilty of unfaithfulness, or the one that is innocent, who marries again after their divorce or legal separation, he or she, in the eyes of God, is guilty of adultery; and that on the ground that a man and a woman once married are made one flesh, and will remain so until death.

Death only can put an end to the relationship between a father and his child. So when Jesus commanded a man to leave his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife, because they were no more twain but one flesh, He in fact showed that the relationship between a husband and wife is as real and as indissoluble as is the relationship between a father and his child. No regulation of man can undo this relationship—death alone can dissolve it. So the husband may divorce his wife guilty of adultery, but he cannot contract a second marriage, because his relationship between himself and his wife is of such a nature that it can never be dissolved except by death.

This may seem hard on the unoffending husband or wife. But it is in entire harmony with God's universal law, that the punishment of sin committed by one member of a household is partly shared by the other members, though they may be guiltless of all share in the sin. Besides, to have allowed the innocent husband to contract a second marriage after he had divorced his wife on the ground of adultery, would have been to strike at the root of all social morality, and virtually to offer a premium for adultery. For in that case, and in that case only, could a husband's desire for change be gratified, viz. by encouraging his wife to sin: a fearful alternative to leave in the hands of frail man.

¹ Canon. Apostol. xlviii.; Bishop Beveridge, vol. xi. p. li.

Clemens Alex. Strom. ii. 23; vol. i. p. 1096.

Origen, in Matt. tomus xiv.; vol. iii. p. 1246.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xvii.; vol. i. p. 246.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xix. 9; vol. vii. p. 135.

Epist. de morte Fabiolæ, lxxvii. (alias 30); vol. i. p. 691.

Epist. ad Amandum, lv. (alias 147); vol. i. p. 560.

S. Augustine, de Conjugal. Adult. lib. i. cap. 1 and 22; vol. vi. pp. 452 and 467.

de Nuptiis et Concup. i. 10; vol. x. p. 420.

de Bone Conjugal. cap. vi.; vol. vi. p. 378.

V. Bede, in Marc. x. 11; vol. iii. p. 230.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. Supplement, quæst. lxii. art. 5; vol. iv. p. 1183.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xl. p. 293.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xix. 9; vol. i. p. 258.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xix. 9; vol. viii. p. 363.

² See Concilium Milevitanum, Can. 17.

Africanum, Can. 69.

Forojuliense, Can. 10.

Nannetense, Can. 10.

Trident. Sess. 24, Can. 7; p. 215.

It has been supposed that the cause of the difference in the interpretation given to our Lord's words, was the excessive fullness of S. Matthew's language; from his having thrown into one sentence answers to two separate questions: (1) For what cause a man might divorce his wife; and (2) whether, after he had divorced her, he might marry another. If we compare S. Matthew's words with a corresponding passage in S. Mark (x. 2) and S. Luke (xvi. 18), we shall find that the sum of our Lord's teaching is (1) that a man may not divorce or legally separate from his wife, except for the cause of adultery; (2) that the man who divorces his wife on the ground of adultery, and marries another, is guilty of adultery; (3) that the wife who is divorced from her husband and is married to another is guilty of adultery; and (4) that the man who marries the woman divorced from her husband is guilty of adultery. The cause of adultery in all these cases is the same, viz. because the first marriage continues in force, and cannot be dissolved except by death. Man's laws may separate a man from his wife, but they cannot affect the union, the oneness, that exists between them, any more than they can the relationship that exists between a father and his child.

See also comment on S. Matthew xix. 9.

33. ¶ Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths:

Vulg. Iterum audistis quia dictum est antiquis.

34. But I say unto you, Swear not at all;^a neither by heaven; for it is God's throne:

35. Nor by the earth; for it is His footstool:^b neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King.

Vulg. Neque per terram quia scabellum est pedum ejus.

36. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black.

37. But let your communication be, Yea, yea;

Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Vulg. Sit autem sermo vester, Est, est; Non, non.

After laying down the new law of marriage and divorce, He then refutes two grave errors, which seem to have pervaded the practice and the teaching of the Jews on the subject of swearing.

(1) They held that to swear by God was binding on a man, while to swear by one of His creatures was not binding. He shows them that as all God's creatures exist for God, and are upheld by Him; so to swear by one of His creatures, whether it be the heaven, or the earth, or Jerusalem, is really to swear by Him, the Creator of them. In the same way that which appears to belong more nearly to a man's own self, as his head for instance, is ultimately referred to God. A man may swear by his head, but he has in reality no power independent of God, not only over his head, but even over one hair of his head.

(2) They indulged in a multiplicity of oaths, and on trifling occasions. Modern travellers tell us that so deeply engrained was this custom, that it still exists in the same land at this very day to a most frightful extent. Jesus lays down the rule that their communication should consist of a simple affirmation and a simple denial, and that whatever there is beside this, comes as a temptation from the devil, in the shape of levity and irreverence in himself, or of disbelief in others.

Interpreted by the general tenor of Scripture, and by our Saviour's own practice, of using the strong asseveration Amen, Amen, and by the example of S. Paul (Rom. i. 9; Philip. i. 8; 1 Cor. xv. 31), it would appear that Jesus did not forbid men ever to swear, but that He forbade them ever to swear except when the occasion warranted it. Such occasion there would always be in the administration of justice, when an oath would enable the civil magistrate to execute justice between man and man. The objections to swearing have been well summed up in the saying that false swearing is death to the soul, and that sincere truthful swearing cannot be often repeated without danger: "Falsa juratio exitiosa est, vera juratio periculosa est, nulla juratio secura est."¹

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo clxxx. (alias 28 de verb. Apostoli); vol. v. p. 974.

^a Swear not at all.—See note on Matt. xxvi. 74.

^b For it is His footstool.—See note on Mark ii. 4.

S. MATTHEW V.

- 38 Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye,
and a tooth for a tooth :
- 39 But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil :
but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.
- 40 And if any man will sue thee at the law,
and take away thy coat (τὸν χιτῶνα),
let him have thy cloak (τὸ ἱμάτιον) also.
- 41 And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile,
go with him twain.
- 42 Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.
- 43 Ye have heard that it hath been said,
Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.
- 44 But I say unto you,
Love your enemies,
bless them that curse you,
do good to them that hate you,
and pray for them
which despitefully use you,
and persecute you :
- 45 That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven :
for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.
- 46 For if ye love them which love you,
what reward have ye ?
do not even the publicans the same ?
- 47 And if ye salute your brethren only,
what do ye more than others ?
do not even the publicans so ?
- 48 Be ye therefore perfect,
even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

S. LUKE VI.

- 29 And unto him
that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other ;
- and him that taketh away thy cloak (τὸ ἱμάτιον) forbid not to take thy coat (τὸν χιτῶνα) also.
- 30 Give to every man that asketh of thee ;
and of him that taketh away thy goods
ask them not again.
- 27 But I say unto you which hear,
Love your enemies,
do good to them which hate you, 28 Bless them that curse you,
and pray for them
which despitefully use you.
- 32 For if ye love them which love you,
what thank have ye ?
for sinners also love those that love them.
- 33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you,
what thank have ye ?
for sinners also do even the same.
- 34 And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye ?
for sinners also lend to sinners,
to receive as much again.
- 35 But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again ;
and your reward shall be great,
and ye shall be the children of the Highest :
- 36 for He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.
- Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

38. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been said,
An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth :
39. But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil : but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

S. on the right cheek.
Vulg. in dexteram maxillam tuam.

40. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

Vulg. et tunicam tuam tollere, dimitte ei et pallium.

41. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

Vulg. Et quicumque te angariaverit mille passus, vade cum illo et alia duo.

42. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.

Retaliation for an injury was allowed by the Law of Moses, but it was not left to the will of each individual. It was regulated and limited by law, and thus it was in a manner taken out of the domain of private revenge. The object of the Law was not to encourage retaliation, but to repress it, and keep it within due bounds. An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, is a sample of the righteousness which pervaded all its provisions. But just and fair as was the Law of Moses, it was not to be the law of Christ's new kingdom. The distinguishing marks of His kingdom were to be patience and love. Nothing allied to retaliation and revenge was to have a home there. He first lays down the general law that no follower of Him was to rise up and resist (ἀντιστῆναι) an injurious person, so as to require the law of retaliation to be put in force against him. He then specifies three special instances as specimens of the various kinds of wrong in which they were to show this forbearance. (1) Acts done to the person of an insulting and painful nature, and for which there could be no pretence. (2) Acts of injustice, for which some right in law might be pleaded. (3) Acts of violence and compulsion done under the authority of the rulers.

1. According to some, in using the words "whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek," our Saviour was referring to a well-known saying, often discussed in the Rabbinical writings, the compensation for which they carefully assessed in proportion to the supposed amount of suffering and indignity of the act. All this the follower of Christ was to forego, and to accept the blow with such meekness, as would turn the anger of the assailant into admiration and repentance.

2. If one was intending to sue a disciple of Christ according to law, and to take from him his coat, his inner vest (χιτῶν), as a pledge adjudged to him by the law, rather let an end be put to the strife by allowing him to take his richer, his outer robe (ἱμάτιον) as well as the inner. If, on the other hand, he is disposed to act with violence, without the plea of the law in his favour, and to strip him of his outer robe, let him take his inner too (Luke vi. 20).¹

3. If the authorities exact of him some public service, such as is deemed burdensome and oppressive, let him show, by the readiness and zeal with which he even exceeds the duty required, that he is a follower of Jesus.

The word here translated "compel thee to go" (ἀγγαρεύσει) is taken from the Persian custom of sending the royal dispatches by mounted couriers, placed at regular stages throughout the kingdom. Hence it came to mean any kind of government service into which a man was liable to be impressed, at the arbitrary will of the authorities. The only other place in the New Testament where the word is used, is where (S. Matt. xxvii. 32; S. Mark xv. 21) the soldiers compel Simon to bear the cross of Jesus after Him to the place of crucifixion.

From this time the Mosaic law of retaliation, of exacting an equivalent for wrong done, was superseded by the command to resist not evil in whatever shape it might be offered. So far from offering a requital for evil done, Jesus here commands us to repay it with deeds of active goodness. If a man has used us with insult, or has taken all the advantage against us that the law allows him, or has imposed an oppressive burden on us; if such a man is in want of a gift or a loan, He commands us to assist him, and to assist him according to his need. The spirit, the willingness to help, even if the power be wanting, is expressed by not turning away from him.²

43. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.

44. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you :

S.V. omitt bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you. S.V. omitt despitefully use you and.

Vulg. Deligite inimicos vestros, ben facite his qui od-runt vos; et orate pro persecutibus, et calumniantibus vobis.

The words "Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy," are nowhere found in the Old Testament. An equivalent for these words there is, but not the words themselves. When, at the command of God, the children of Israel journeyed through the wilderness to Canaan, the Amalekites and others harassed them in their journey. They met them by the way and slew the hindmost of them, all that were feeble behind them, when they were faint and weary (Deut. xxv. 18), and they feared not God. To show the heinousness of their sin, in attempting to hinder Israel from accomplishing His commands, God, through His servant Moses, bids Israel to remember their conduct from generation to generation and to act accordingly (Deut. xxv. 19, and xxiii. 6). It was probably in reference to this, that Jesus said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy." But He, who had first bidden them remember what Amalek did unto them, now revokes this His command, and bids them henceforth show their love to all men alike, irrespective of their past conduct, or of their future gratitude.

To act thus was the part of sons of God, while to do otherwise was to act like those outcasts of Jewish society, the publicans. They were God's children in dignity, by adoption; they must be His also in action, by imitation.³

45. That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven : for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

S.V. omitts and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

Vulg. et pluit super justos et injustos.

46. For if ye love them which love you, what

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evangel. cap. xl. p. 301.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 40; vol. viii. p. 147.

² S. Augustine, de Serm. in Monte, i. 20, 68; vol. iii. p. 1264.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evangel. cap. xl. p. 303.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. v. 45; vol. viii. p. 150.

reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?

S^c. the publicans also do the same.
Vulg. nonne et publicani hoc faciunt?

47. And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?

S.V. do not even the heathen the same?
Vulg. nonne et ethnici hoc faciunt?

48. Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

S.V. your heavenly Father is perfect.
Vulg. sicut et Pater vester celestis perfectus est.

The publicans were those men who were employed to collect from the public the taxes that were paid to the Roman Government. To pay taxes to a foreign power at all was a degradation hateful enough; but when these taxes were collected from the Jews by their own countrymen, and when these men oppressed the poor with their merciless severity, the publicans came to be looked upon as men without the common feelings of humanity. But, lost to all sense of goodness as the publicans were, they could love those who showed them love in return; they could pay all the courtesies of life, contained in the words "to salute with a kiss," to those who showed the same friendliness to them. To love, then, in return for love, was the virtue of the publican. But Jesus expected more from those who were members of His kingdom. Their example was to be God Himself, their Father, and His dealings towards mankind. Throughout all creation there is no greater blessing than the sun, and next to that, especially in Eastern climes, the rain. Such is God's love and mercy towards man, that He distributes these His blessings to them, regardless either of their deserts or of their gratitude. The same perfection of love, the same richness of blessing, that God the Father shows to mankind, His children cannot show to their fellow-men, but they can show their love in the same way that He does. They can imitate Him in loving all, and in being kind to the unthankful and to the evil.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER VI.

The Daily Eucharist.—The two following extracts show, as concisely as is possible under the circumstances, that it was the rule of the Early Church to administer the Eucharist daily; but that, notwithstanding this rule, her practice varied at different times and in different places: the former extract also suggests the probable reasons for this variation.—“It will hardly be disputed that the example of the Apostles during that short time for which we have any detailed statement of their actions, shows a daily Eucharist (Acts ii. 46) to be the normal condition of the Church's existence. In the less full account of somewhat later transactions it is manifest likewise that those who were collected on the first day of the week ‘came together to break bread.’ Those, therefore, who reject the authority of the ancient Church, might be expected to feel the more bound to a rule, which, according to the models left us in Scripture, is without exception. But what was the practice of the Primitive Church? It is commonly alleged that as the first fervour of devotion passed away the frequency with which the Holy Eucharist was administered diminished also, so that since the moral state of ancient times was not likely to be very different from our own, it might be anticipated that the ancient and modern rules respecting the use of this Sacrament would be nearly coincident. And so much must be admitted, that since the Christian communities consisted, in the first instance, principally either of slaves or of persons whose rank in life did not afford unbroken leisure, such daily assemblies as those at Jerusalem can hardly have been possible. It is not unlikely, therefore, that while the Gospel was as yet emerging from the lowest ranks the ministrations of the Holy Eucharist may have been almost confined to the Lord's Day. Such would seem to have been the case among those whom Pliny (Ep. lib. x. 97) interrogated in Asia Minor; and though Justin Martyr (Apol. i. p. 97, &c., Thirlby) may have been referring only to the more solemn assemblies, yet he makes no mention of worship, except on the Lord's Day. Less than this, however, was never tolerated; neither does there seem to have been any ancient Church, however circumstanced, which thought that its Sunday solemnity could be complete without the celebration of the Christian Mystery.

“And no sooner had the first period of oppression passed away, no sooner did the Church include persons of leisure in her ranks, and obtain such toleration as sufficed for the performance of common worship, than she returned in great measure to the rule of primitive observance. No doubt, as her numbers increased, there must have been many who could not come together more than once or twice a week, and it seems to have been in reference to such parties that we hear of more solemn assemblies on Saturday and Sunday (see note), and on the festivals of the Martyrs; but the daily reception of the Holy Eucharist was a prevalent custom among devout people, nor is there a single distinguished man by whom any other rule is recommended. It is probable that it prevailed before the end of the second century, when Tertullian's (de Oratione 19; vol. i., p. 1181, Migne) reference to those who scrupled to receive the Holy Eucharist on Wednesday and Friday (the two station days), proves that this ordinance was celebrated during the week; and his own comparison of our Lord's Body with daily bread (de Oratione 6, vol. i. p. 1160) would imply its daily celebration. Moreover, he states (de Corona Milit. 3, vol. ii. p. 79) that it was offered, as we know from S. Cyprian (Ep. xxxiv. 3, p. 323, Migne; xxxvii. 2, p. 328) to have been the case during the next century, on the festivals of the martyrs. In the third century the testimony of S. Cyprian (Ep. iv. 3; Migne, Patrol. vol. iii. p. 857) is express, that the custom of the Christian priesthood was ‘to celebrate sacrifices daily to God.’ For ‘we daily receive the Eucharist as our saving food’ (S. Cyprian, de Oratione Dom. 18; p. 531, Migne). And S. Hippolytus had spoken of it somewhat earlier in the century, as ‘daily prepared on the mystical and divine Table.’

“The more full information which we have respecting the fourth century shows how universal the usage had then become. Eusebius seems to be speaking of the Church at large when he says (Demonst. i. 10; vol. iv. p. 87, Migne) that the Christians ‘celebrated a daily memorial of our Lord's Body and Blood.’ S. Gaudentius, Bishop of Brescia in Italy, speaks of ‘the representation of Christ's Passion’ as ‘daily’ received; and his metropolitan, S. Ambrose, writes (in Psalm. cxviii., Sermon. xviii. 26; vol. ii. p. 1461), ‘Christ is ministered to me every day.’ He is contrasting the Holy Eucharist with the manna in the desert: ‘Christ is my food, Christ is my drink; the Flesh of God is my food, the Blood of God is my drink.' 'That true Bread from heaven the Father has reserved for me. For me has that Bread of God descended from heaven, which gives life to this world. It did not descend for the Jews, it did not descend for the Synagogue; but it has descended for the Church.' 'Why do you ask Him, Jew, to give you that Bread which He gives to all, which He gives daily?'

"That such was the practice of the African Church, as well as of the Donatists, may be inferred from the approving notice of S. Optatus (de Schism. Don. ii. 12) respecting the latter. While in Bethlehem S. Jerome (Epist. ad Hedib. cxx. (alias 150), 2; vol. i. p. 986, Migne) speaks of himself as 'drinking Christ's Blood daily' 'in His Sacrifices.' His statement, that daily participation was the especial rule of the Roman and Spanish Churches (Epist. ad Lucinium lxxi. (alias 28), 6; vol. i. p. 672) would seem to imply indeed that the custom was not equally universal in the East. And this is confirmed by the censure passed both by S. Chrysostom (in Ephes. Homil. iii. p. 132; Oxon.), and by the writer of the work, 'De Sacramentis' (S. Amb. de Sac. v. 4, 25; vol. iii. p. 452, Migne), upon those who were accustomed to receive only once a year. But this negligence, though frequent, was not universal even in the East (S. Augustine, de Serm. in Monte ii. 26; vol. iii. p. 1280, Migne), so that, though many abstained from daily participation, the public sacrifice of the Church may have been daily offered. And S. Chrysostom repeatedly affirms that it was. 'Do we not offer every day? Certainly we do' (in Epist. ad Hebr. Homil. xvii. 3; p. 208, Oxon.). So that he calls the Holy Eucharist 'the daily Sacrifice' (in Epist. ad Ephes. Homil. iii. 4; p. 133, Oxon.); and speaks of Christians as having a 'daily memorial in these mysteries' (in Matt. Homil. i. 3; vol. ii. p. 63, Oxon.). The only Father of note who speaks of his own practice as not coming up to the common rule is S. Basil, who communicated four times a week, as well as on all Saints' days. But it does not follow that even in Pontus the Holy Eucharist was not celebrated daily, for Saints' days occurred every week, and he says 'to communicate every day, and be partaker of the sacred Body and Blood of Christ is good and profitable' (Epist. xciii.; vol. iv. p. 484, Migne). So that he exhibits but a slight deviation from that rule which the leading teachers of the ancient Church recommended to others, as well as practised themselves. And we find the same usage in the next century. S. Maximus says that 'the death of our Lord is celebrated every day, in obedience to His own command' (de Nat. Sanct. Serm. 78), and S. Augustine speaks of Christ as 'slain daily for the people in the Sacrament' (Epist. xcvi. 9; vol. ii. p. 364, Migne). He abstained, indeed, from censuring the custom of those places where reception was less frequent, and where the offering was only made once or twice a week (Epist. liv. 2; vol. ii. p. 200, Migne), but his own judgment is that men 'ought to receive daily' (Serm. 227; vol. v. p. 1099, Migne); for himself he says, that 'the Eucharist is our daily bread' (Serm. lvii. 7; vol. v. p. 389; lviii. 4; vol. v.

p. 395; lix. 3; vol. v. p. 401; de Sermone Dom. in Mont. ii. 24; vol. iii. p. 1280, Migne); and his daily homilies appear to have been preached on the occasions of its celebration (vide Serm. exxviii. 6; vol. v. p. 715; cliv. 1; vol. v. p. 833; clv. 1; vol. v. p. 841, Migne).

"The history of the first four centuries, then, shows that the Church adhered as closely as possible to the Apostolic usage of the 'daily' 'breaking of bread.' There were times when persecution made daily assemblies impossible, there were places which were wanting in the zeal which maintained them, but the most distinguished Fathers speak of the Holy Eucharist as daily offered, and recommend daily reception to the faithful. 'The oblation which is made to-day, which was made yesterday, which is made every day, is like the one which was made on that sabbath (i.e. of its institution); that was not more sacred than this is, nor is this less weighty than that was; but it is ever one and the same, alike awful and saving' (S. Chrysost. cont. Jud., Homil. iii. 4). To trace the custom lower is hardly necessary, for after this time its predominance will scarcely be disputed."—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' pp. 429–436.

"Justin Martyr (Apol. i. c. 67) distinctly mentions Sunday (ἡ λεγομένη ἡλίου ἡμέρα) as the day of Christian Communion, the day on which God made the light and on which Christ rose from the dead. There is, in fact, no reason to doubt that, from the first 'Lord's Day' to the present time Christians have met on the first day of the week to 'break bread' as the Lord commanded.

"The days which next appear as dedicated to Holy Communion are the fourth and sixth days of the week, the Dies Stationum (Statio). These days appear as days of special observance and administration of Holy Communion in the time of Tertullian (de Oratione, c. 14). Basil (Ep. 2-9) adds to these days the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, which has always been a day of special observance in the Eastern Church. 'We communicate,' he says, 'four times in the week, on the Lord's Day, the fourth day, the Preparation Day (i.e., Friday), and the Sabbath.' But this was not a universal custom, for Epiphanius (Expositio Fidei, c. 22, p. 1104) speaks as if the celebrations (συνάξεις) of the Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday, were alone usual in his time and within his knowledge, which included a large part of the East during the latter portion of the fourth century. The Synod of Laodicea, about A.D. 320 (al. 372), enjoins that bread should not be offered in Lent, except on the Sabbath and on the Lord's Day; the Sabbath being in the East a festival approaching in joyfulness to the Lord's Day. In the West, where the Sabbath was generally a day of humiliation, there is no trace of its being preferred for the celebration of Holy Communion.

"When Christianity became the recognised religion of the empire, daily celebration of the Eucharist soon became usual. For the Church of Constantinople this is proved by the testimony of Chrysostom, who (in Ephes. Hom. iii. p. 23) complains of the rarity of communicants at the daily offering.

S. Augustine testifies (Ep. 98, c. 9) that in Africa, in his time, Christ was sacrificed (immolari) every day for the people; yet he also proves (Ep. 118, ad Januarium) that this was by no means a universal custom, saying, 'in some places no day passes without an offering; in others offering is made on the Sabbath only and the Lord's day; in others on the Lord's day only.' That the daily sacrifice was observed in the Spanish Church at the end of the fourth century we have the testimony of the first Council of Toledo (circ. 398), which enjoins (canon 5) all clerics to be present in church at the time of the daily sacrifice. With regard to the Roman Church, Jerome, writing to Lucinius (Ep. 71) refers to a question which his correspondent had asked, whether the Eucharist were to be received daily, 'according to the custom which the Churches of Rome and Spain are said to observe.' Although the expression used is not absolutely decisive, Jerome seems to write as if the custom of Rome was, in fact, the same as that of Spain, where, as we have seen, the daily sacrifice was customary at the time when he wrote."—SMITH, 'Dictionary of Christian Antiquities,' vol. i. p. 419.

CHAPTER VI.

[1. Christ continueth His sermon on the mount, speaking of alms, 5. prayer, 14. forgiving our brethren, 16. fasting, 19. where our treasure is to be laid up, 24. of serving God and mammon: 25. exhorteth not to be careful for worldly things: 33. but to seek God's kingdom.]

[Vulg. Docet Christus quo modo faciendis sint elemosyna et oratio, traditque discipulis formam orandi, et offensas alius condonandi: item quo modo sit jejuniandum: quod non in terra sed in calo thesaurizandum, oculus mundanus, non servendum duobus dominis: vitat itaque sollicitudinem de ecta, restitit, et de crastino.]

In the last few verses Jesus had taught that His followers are not to act on the law of retaliation, and to repay like with like, but on the law of loving-kindness, and to return good for evil. The Pattern in all their actions is to be their heavenly Father, who maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. He then goes on to teach them a further lesson, that the best of actions may be performed, and yet may be so far marred in the doing of them as to be fruitless to the person who performs them. If the object for which they are done be ostentation, or to gain the applause of their fellow-men, however good the actions may be in themselves, they will fail to gain any reward from their heavenly Father.

1. Take heed that ye do not your alms^a before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven.

Margin, your righteousness.
S. But take heed: S.V. your righteousness.
Vulg. Attende ne iustitiam vestram facias coram hominibus. . . . alioquin mercedem non habebitis.

He first lays down the general principle, and then in the seventeen verses following He specifies three several kinds of actions, in which it is to be observed, and in the performance of which there is an especial temptation to display and vain-glory. These are almsgiving, prayer, and fasting. He recognises the temptation incident to these; He points out the imperfection to which they are always liable. But He nowhere implies that the perversion of these duties is so common, and the temptation to it so strong, that it were better to omit them altogether. He commands the duties, or rather He speaks of them as actions which His followers will naturally perform, saying, "When thou doest alms," and prescribes the caution that is to be used in the performance of them.

2. Therefore when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet^b before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

Margin, cause not a trumpet to be sounded.
Vulg. noli tuba canere ante te.
S^a. verily, verily.
Vulg. Amen dico vobis.

* Alms.—"It is questioned, whether Matthew writ ἐλεημοσύνη, alms, or δικαιοσύνη, righteousness. I answer,

"1. That our Saviour certainly said צדקה, righteousness (or in Syriac ܥܕܩܗ): I make no doubt at all, but that that word could not be otherwise understood by the common people than of alms, there is as little doubt to be made. For although the word צדקה, according to the idiom of the Old Testament, signifies nothing else than righteousness, yet now, when our Saviour spoke those words, it signified nothing so much as alms.

"II. Christ used also the same word רִיכּוּתָא, righteousness, in the three verses next following, and Matthew used the word ἐλεημοσύνη, alms. But by what right, I beseech you, should he call it δικαιοσύνη, righteousness, in the first verse, and ἐλεημοσύνη, alms, in the following, when Christ everywhere used one and the same word? Matthew might not change in Greek, where our Saviour had not changed in Syriac.

"Therefore we must say, that the Lord Jesus used the word צדקה or רִיכּוּתָא in these four first verses: but that, speaking in the dialect of common people, he was understood by the common people to speak of alms.

"Now they called alms by the name of צדקה, righteousness, in that the fathers of the Traditions taught, and the common people believed that alms conferred very much to justification."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' vi. 1; vol. ii. p. 153.

* Sounding a Trumpet.—"It is just scruple, whether this sounding a trumpet be to be understood according to the letter, or in a borrowed sense. I have not found, although I have sought for it much and seriously, even the least mention of a trumpet in Almsgiving. I would most willingly be taught this from the more learned.

"You may divide the ordinary alms of the Jews into three parts.

"1. The Alms Dish. They gave alms to the public dish or basket. Tamchui was a certain vessel in which bread and food was gathered for the poor of the world. You may not improperly call it the alms-basket. By the poor of the world are to be understood any beggars begging from door to door, yea even heathen beggars. The Alms Dish was for every man. This alms was gathered daily by three men, and distributed by three. It was gathered of the townsmen by collectors within their doors. . . . Here was no probability at all of a Trumpet, when this Alms was of the lowest degree, being to be bestowed upon vagabond strangers, and they very often heathen.

"II. The Poor's Chest. They gave alms also in the public poor's-box, which was to be distributed to the poor only of that city. The alms dish is for the poor of the world, but the alms chest for the poor only of that city.

"This alms was collected in the synagogue on the Sabbath (compare 1 Cor. xvi. 2), and it was distributed to the poor, on the Sabbath Eve. The Alms chest is from the Sabbath Eve to the Sabbath Eve: the Alms dish every day.

"Whether, therefore, the Trumpet sounded in the Synagogue, when Alms were done it again remains obscure, since the Jewish Canonists do not openly mention it, while yet they treat of these

3. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth :

4. That thine alms may be in secret : and thy Father which seeth in secret Himself shall reward thee openly.

S.V. omit Himself, openly.
Vulg. et Pater tuus, qui videt in abscondito, reddet tibi.

Either Jesus used the words, "Do not sound a trumpet before thee," &c., metaphorically, and with a general reference to their ostentation in alms-giving, or he referred to some custom which they had of calling the poor together to a distribution of alms by means of a trumpet, or He may have referred to the custom common among actors of calling their audience together by means of a trumpet. Though each synagogue possessed a trumpet, which was used on various occasions, no reference has been found in the Rabbinical writings of sounding a trumpet before the distribution of alms. If the words are used in the third of these senses Jesus may have implied by the word hypocrites, ὑποκριταί, that in giving alms they, like professional actors, were merely acting a part, laying claim to a character which did not really belong to them.¹

In the words, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," He probably refers to some well-known form of expression existing among them, indicating the utmost degree of secrecy, the entire absence of all display.

In doing alms in order to gain the applause of men, they have to the utmost (ἀνέχουσι) their reward, that is, the reward which they sought, which they proposed to themselves, the reward which they deserved, and which was appropriate and suitable to their mode of acting. But the reward of almsgiving done for display is the applause of men, and in this life only, even if it last so long. The reward of almsgiving done to please God is the favour of God, and that to all eternity.

5. ¶ And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are : for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

S.V. And when ye pray ye shall not be.
Vulg. Et cum oratis, non eritis sicut hypocritæ—receperunt mercedem suam.

Our Lord's objection was neither to the posture in which they prayed, nor to the places here mentioned, but to these, when used as occasions of vainglory, merely to gain the reputation of being devout and holy men. The fault reprobated was in the motive, not in the manner or place. The synagogue was a place appointed for prayer, and doubtless many devout and acceptable prayers were there offered to God. To worship standing was as common as to worship kneeling, both in public and in private. Abraham stood while he prayed before the Lord (Gen. xix. 27). The priests stood while sacrificing, and the singers when singing Psalms to God, and the people when beholding and partaking in the same. In the Primitive Church the common posture for their worship was kneeling. But on Sundays, and on all days between Easter and Whitsunday, they stood when they worshipped, in memory of the Resurrection of Jesus from the dead.²

6. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret ; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

S.V. omit openly.
Vulg. omits openly.

In these words Jesus does not promise a blessing to private prayer which is not granted to public prayer; He rather teaches that one qualification for all acceptable approach to God is the entire withdrawal of their thoughts from all around them, and the concentration of them on God alone. To obtain God's favour they must seek His favour, and His only.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 307.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 2; vol. i. p. 92.

[Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 2; vol. viii. p. 155.

² Tertullian, de Corona 3; vol. ii. p. 79.

Alms very largely. Indeed every synagogue had its trumpet. For, "1. They sounded with the Trumpet in every city, in which was a Judiciary bench, at the coming in of the new year. But this was not used, but after the destruction of the Temple.

"2. They sounded with the Trumpet, when any one was excommunicated. Hence among the utensils of a Judge is numbered a Trumpet.

"3. The Trumpet sounded six times at the coming in of every Sabbath: that from thence, by that sign given, all people should cease from servile works.

"Thus there was a Trumpet in every Synagogue, but whether it were used while Alms were done, I still enquire. . . .

"III. They gave Alms also out of the field, and that was especially fourfold: (1) The corner of the field not reaped. (2) Sheaves left in the field, either by forgetfulness or voluntarily. (3) The gleanings of the vintage: of which see Levit. xix. 9, 10, Deut. xxiv. 19. And (4) The Poor's tenth, of which the Talmudists speak largely. . . .

"These were the ordinary Alms of the Jewish people: in the doing which, seeing as yet I cannot find so much as the least sound of a trumpet in their writers, I guess that either our Saviour here spoke metaphorically, or, if there were any trumpet used, that it was used in peculiar and extraordinary Alms.

"The Jews did very highly approve of Alms done secretly: hence the treasury of the silent was of famed memory in the Temple: whither some very religious men-brought their Alms in silence, and privacy, when the poor children of good men were maintained. And hence is that proverb, He that doeth Alms in secret, is greater than our master Moses himself. And yet they laboured under such an itch to make their Alms public, lest they should not be seen by men; that they did them not without a trumpet, or which was as good as a trumpet, with a proud affectation of making them known: that they might the more be pointed at with the finger, and that it might be said of them, These are the men."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' vi. 2; vol. ii. p. 154.

7. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.^a

V. as the hypocrites do.
Vulg. nolite multum loqui, sicut ethnici.

8. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him.

S*. V. for God your Father.
Vulg. scit enim Pater vester.

That Jesus does not here condemn the bare saying over again the same petitions, either in the same words, or in words of the same import, may be gathered from His own practice. He Himself in His agony in the garden, "prayed the third time, saying the same words" (Matt. xxvi. 44). What He condemns is the opinion which attributed the efficacy of the prayer to the length of it, or to the amount of repetitions it contained, rather than to the zeal and fervour, and purity of heart, with which it is offered.¹

To suppose that God was ignorant of their distress, and required to be informed of it, or that He was disinclined to relieve it, and required to be gained over, was the opinion of ignorant heathens. Jesus here shows, that the effect intended by prayer to God, that is, by the soul's communion with God, has reference to man himself rather than to God. The object in prayer is not to inform God, or to prevail upon Him to grant a blessing, but to put the soul of man into a right frame to receive the blessing, so as to enable, so to speak, God to grant it. God knows the nature of the blessing which is necessary. He is willing to grant it, but the soul of man must be first prepared to receive it. This is done by prayer to God.²

Having pointed out several defects to be avoided in their prayers to God, He gives them a model for their prayers, a compendium of the things they should pray for, and also of the order in which they were to pray for them. He thus furnishes them not only with the objects to be desired, but also with the relative value, so to speak, of those objects.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

IN HIS SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

S. MATTHEW vi. 9-13.

9 Our Father which art in heaven,
Hallowed be Thy name.
10 Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done
in earth, as it is in heaven.
11 Give us this day our daily bread,
12 And forgive us our debts,
as we forgive our debtors.
13 And lead us not into temptation,
but deliver us from evil:
For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

RECORDED AS DELIVERED LATER.

S. LUKE xi. 2-4.

2 Our Father which art in heaven,
Hallowed be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done,
as in heaven, so in earth.
3 Give us day by day our daily bread.
4 And forgive us our sins:
for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us.
And lead us not into temptation,
but deliver us from evil.

9. After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name.

Vulg. Sic ergo vos orabit.

S. Matthew and S. Luke are the only two of the Evangelists who have recorded the Lord's Prayer. S. Matthew joins it to the Sermon on the Mount, as if Jesus had at that time taught it to His twelve Apostles. S. Luke gives it later, after the sending of the Seventy disciples. S. Luke also says, that Jesus delivered it to His disciples on an occasion after He had Himself been praying, and that one of His disciples asked Him to teach them to pray, as John had taught His disciples. S. Matthew relates none of these particulars. It has therefore been concluded either that Jesus taught His Prayer on two different occasions, first to

¹ S. Gregory Nyssen, de Oratione Domin. i.; vol. i. p. 1126.

² S. Augustine, Epist. ad Probam, cxxx. (alias 121), cap. 8, 17; vol. ii. p. 500. [S. Thomas

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 83, art. 9; vol. iii. p. 632.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 310.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 7; vol. viii. p. 157.

^a For their much speaking (ἐν τῇ πολλολογίᾳ αὐτῶν).—The figurative use of ἐν is extremely diversified, sometimes meaning the ground, reason, cause, as in Matt. vi. 7, on account of their much speaking, properly on or in their much speaking."—WINER, 'Grammar of N. T. Diction,' p. 405.

His twelve Apostles, and afterwards to the Seventy disciples; or that He delivered it only once, and most probably in the order in which it is related by S. Luke, and that S. Matthew recorded it earlier by anticipation, out of its proper order, as he did some other things.¹

Probably no better division of our Lord's Prayer can be made than the old one mentioned by S. Augustine, into two parts containing seven petitions, the first three of which refer to the honour or glory of God, and the last four to man himself and his wants.²

- | | | |
|----------------|---|--|
| God's Honour. | { | 1. Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name.
2. Thy kingdom come.
3. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. |
| Man's Benefit. | { | 1. Give us this day our daily bread.
2. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.
3. And lead us not into temptation,
4. But deliver us from evil. |

The term Father here is not limited to God the Father, but has reference to all the three Persons in the Godhead.³ For God is our Father by creation, by redemption, by regeneration, and adoption.⁴ Thus the permission to address God as our Father is a pledge to us of the remission of our sins, of our adoption into His family, and of our final inheritance in His kingdom. By bidding them say, "Our Father," it is plain that Jesus did not mean each man to pray for himself, and for himself alone, but each man to pray for himself and for all the rest of the Church. The words "which art in heaven" should remind us of God's unlimited power to grant our requests, and that the inheritance which He has promised us is a heavenly and not an earthly one. They should lead us to transfer our thoughts from things of earth, and to ask of Him chiefly heavenly blessings, and earthly blessings so far as they enable us to obtain the heavenly.

In the first petition we pray that God's name may be hallowed among men, that is, that He may become known among men, and may be the object of their worship, and that the worship of idols and of all false gods may give place to the worship of Him, the one true God. This includes the knowledge of God, and the worship of Him in the fullest sense in which He has revealed Himself to mankind. Men were first taught the Unity of God, that there is one true God; gradually they were instructed in the Trinity, that there are three Persons in the Godhead, and when the fulness of time was come, in the Mystery of the Incarnation, that the Word was made flesh. We hallow God's name when we pay worship to Him as the Creator of heaven and earth, and as God Incarnate, born of a virgin to redeem mankind.

10. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

Vulg. sicut in celo et in terra.

There are at least four senses in which we may understand the expression "Thy kingdom." The first has reference to His dominion over the world as the Creator of all things; the second, to His power over the hearts of men through their belief, fear, and love of Him; the third, to the state of blessedness into which those who now worship Him shall hereafter be admitted; the fourth has reference to His dominion over both good and bad, after the Day of Judgment, with special reference to the power which He will then display over those who have resisted Him, over Satan and his agents, in putting an end to the power which Satan has hitherto been permitted to exercise over mankind. In all of the three last senses has this petition been understood. But it is most probable that the last of the three is the sense in which it is here especially meant. Thus in this petition we pray that God would hasten the time when He would put an everlasting end to the power He has given to Satan over men.⁴

There is a sense in which we cannot resist the will of God, in which it is absolute and independent of us. There is also a sense in which it is permissive, so to speak, and requires our co-operation for its completion. We may not be able to express this satisfactorily, in philosophical terms, but in practical life we all recognise and act on this distinction. It is in the latter sense that we pray that His will may be done as in heaven, so also in earth; that His will may be done in us and by us who are in earth, as readily and as effectually, as by the angels in heaven. Whether it be by patient suffering and resignation, or by active work, that we answer to the intimation of His will, the power to do this must first come from God Himself. Here then we pray that He would grant us such effectual grace that we may co-operate unservedly with His will.

11. Give us this day our daily bread.⁵

Vulg. Panem nostrum supersubstantialem da nobis hodie.

¹ Euthymius in Luc. xi. 1; vol. iii. p. 433.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxxiii. p. 159.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xi. 1; vol. ii. p. 201.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xi. 1; vol. viii. p. 758.

² S. Augustine, de Sermonibus Domini in Monte, ii. cap. x; vol. iii. p. 1285.

Enchiridion 115; vol. vi. p. 286.

³ Jansenius in Concord. Evang. xli. p. 311.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 9; vol. i. p. 96.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 9; vol. viii. p. 158.

⁴ Theophylact, in Matt. vi. 10; vol. i. p. 32.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 313.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 10; vol. i. p. 97.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 10; vol. viii. p. 159.

⁵ Daily bread.—"Of the twenty-two recorded expositions of the entire phrase ἄρτος ἐπιούσιος, fifteen are those expressly sanctioned by one or more of the Fathers themselves; and of these fifteen nine refer the phrase to Christ, the Bread of Life, in the Eucharist

The difficulty of the word ἐπιούσιος, which we translate "daily," is shown by the amount of learning which has been brought to bear on its examination.¹ The difficulty is increased because the word is found only in this passage, and in S. Luke xi. 3. It is nowhere used in the Old Testament. The ancient commentators appear to have been as much divided respecting its exact meaning as the modern, and in much the same way. Two sources of derivation have been assigned to the word, either from the verb ἵσται, to go, or εἶναι, to be, through its present participle, or through its kindred substantive, οὐσία, substance. As one or other of these verbs is regarded as its root, ἐπιούσιος has been rendered crastinus (to-morrow), quotidianus (daily), or supersubstantialis (needful for existence, or surpassing all created things).

The preparation of food for the morrow was a subject with which the Jews were exceedingly familiar, their attention had been divinely drawn to it. In the wilderness they were commanded to gather on the sixth day manna to serve for the sixth and seventh days; and after their settlement in Canaan, they were commanded to prepare their food for the coming Sabbath on the Friday, the day of preparation. It has been shown² that the meaning of crastinus would not be at all inconsistent with verse 34, and that the prayer for the morrow's food would be no sign of the care (μέριμνα) there forbidden, and that 'crastinus' is no improbable meaning of ἐπιούσιος, though not so probable as 'quotidianus,' which almost unbroken tradition before S. Jerome, and since, has assigned as its meaning.³

The Commentators on the Lord's Prayer before the days of S. Jerome,⁴ such as Tertullian, S. Cyprian, and S. Ambrose, as well as S. Augustine, rendered ἐπιούσιος by 'quotidianus.' But considering the word as derived from ἐν and οὐσία, substance, S. Jerome translated it in S. Matthew, 'supersubstantialis,' and in S. Luke (xi. 3) 'quotidianus,' though the Greek word is the same in both. Whether this variation was the effect of his uncertainty or oversight, it still remains in the Vulgate, the translation sanctioned by the Latin Church.

The ancient writers⁵ considered that this bread implied not only the food of the body, but also the food of the soul, and especially the food supplied to the soul in the Eucharist.

Our Saviour's discourse in the synagogue of Capernaum, later in His ministry, on Himself the true Bread, gives a fulness of meaning to His words in this prayer. They form, as it were, His own commentary on His own prayer. The manna was in every sense ἐπιούσιος, whichever of its meanings we give to it; but the manna was but the shadow, Jesus Himself was the true bread. In praying for their daily bread, they were doubtless to pray for the meat which perisheth, but chiefly for the meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man would give unto them.

He Himself was the true Bread; the food of the body was the meat that perisheth. They were bidden not to labour for the meat that perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man would give unto them (John vi. 27). The food of the body was no more an adequate object for their prayer than it was for their labour. The God Incarnate, the knowledge of Him, and union with Him through eating His Body and drinking His Blood, should be the principal object in all their labour and in all their prayer.

12. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

S*. V. as we have forgiven.

Vulg. sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris.

It has been pointed out that the word "as" (ὡς) here implies a condition, not a corresponding measure.⁶ The very nature of the case would not admit of that. For Jesus Himself elsewhere (Matt. xviii. 24) represents the sins which one man commits against another, compared with those which he commits against God, to be in the same proportion as 100 pence to 10,000 talents, or, to speak approximately in round numbers, in the same proportion as 3*l.* to 3,000,000*l.* In the word "as" we acknowledge the condition on which God will forgive us, and we plead the fulfilment of it as a necessary preparation and condition for our own forgiveness.

In giving this petition to be used by all, Jesus clearly implied that all had sins that required to be forgiven by God. In providing for the universal corruption of man's nature, He had confessed it in the strongest possible form. In this sense

¹ See Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. viii. p. 162.

Suicer, sub voce, vol. i. p. 1169.

² Canon Lightfoot, Revision of the New Testament, pp. 195-234. McClellan, New Testament, vol. i. pp. 632-647.

³ Canon Lightfoot, ut supra.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. vii. p. 43.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 315.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. i. p. 99.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. viii. p. 162.

⁵ Tertullian, de Oratione vi.; vol. i. p. 1160.

S. Cyprian, de Oratione Dominica, xviii. p. 531.

S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, lib. v. cap. iv.; vol. iii. p. 451.

S. Augustine, Enchiridion 115; vol. vi. p. 286.

⁶ Tertullian, de Oratione vi.; vol. i. p. 1160. [S. Cyprian,

S. Cyprian, de Oratione Dominica xviii. p. 531.

S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, lib. v. cap. iv.; vol. iii. p. 452.

S. Augustine, Enchiridion 115; vol. vi. p. 286.

S. Jerome, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. vii. p. 43.

Clemens Alex. Pædag. i. 12; vol. i. p. 368.

Origen, de Oratione 27; vol. i. p. 505.

S. Athanasius, de Incarnat. contra Arian. 16; vol. ii. p. 1012.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. xxiii. Mystag. v. 15, p. 1119.

Theophylact, in Matt. vi. 11; vol. i. p. 32.

See also Dr. Pusey's note on Tertullian, "Lord's Prayer," ch. vi. p. 303, 'Library of the Fathers.'

⁶ S. Cyprian, de Oratione Dominica 23, p. 535.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 12; vol. i. p. 100.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 12; vol. viii. p. 164.

or otherwise; one to the Holy Scriptures; five only, at the most, to common bread, of which five four belong to Cent. IV."—McClellan, 'New Testament,' vol. i. p. 643.

this petition was urged against ancient heretics, such as the Pelagians.¹

13. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

S.V. omit For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen.

Vulg. omits For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever.

In the words "Lead us not into temptation," we pray either that God would not permit us to be tempted beyond our power to resist, or, seeing the danger that always attends temptation, and fearing for our power, we pray that He would deliver us from temptation entirely. S. James shows that God does not tempt men in the same sense that Satan tempts them. God is said to tempt men because He gives Satan permission, and thus uses him as His instrument, either to purify their faith, or to punish their sin. In this petition, then, we pray either that God would not permit Satan to tempt us, so that we fall into sin; or that He would not permit him to tempt us at all.

The seventh and last petition, "But deliver us from evil," is not included in the former. It goes beyond the former petition, and prays for deliverance from sin, and from the effects of sin, from the tempter and from the work of the tempter in every form: it expresses a desire to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God, the longing which those feel who groan within themselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body (Rom. viii. 21, 23). The evil (τὸ πονηρὸν) from which we pray to be delivered, may mean either the evil one himself, the tempter, as some think,² or it may be used in a more general sense to mean the work of the evil one.³

The Lord's Prayer, as given by S. Luke, ends with this petition, "Deliver us from evil;" but the concluding words of His prayer, as given by S. Matthew, in the English Authorized Version are, "For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen." How to account for the presence of these words in the text is one of the difficulties of the New Testament. They are not found in any of the earliest extant manuscripts of the Gospels, nor are they cited by any of the Fathers of the Latin Church, who have left us commentaries on the Lord's Prayer. They are not mentioned, for instance, by Tertullian, S. Cyprian, S. Ambrose, S. Jerome, or S. Augustine. Nor are they contained in S. Matthew's Gospel, as given by the Vulgate. But they are quoted by S. Chrysostom, by S. Gregory Nyssen, and by some later Greek commentators.⁴ The general opinion of scholars is, that these words had a Greek origin. As it was the Greek Christians who began the practice of singing the doxology at the end of the Psalms in their public worship, it is thought that they may have also added this ascription to the end of the Lord's Prayer when repeating it in public worship. From the service-books it is supposed to have crept into some later copies of S. Matthew's Gospel.⁵

Lightfoot⁶ gives a different origin to the ascription at the end of the Lord's Prayer in S. Matthew's Gospel. Whether he was aware of its omission in all the earliest manuscripts is uncertain. He quotes many passages from rabbinical writings to show that this ascription, or one exceedingly like it, was used at the end of their prayers in the Temple worship, when it was repeated aloud by the priests, to which the people answered Amen; and that this same form was also repeated at the end of their Phylacterical, or certain private prayers, but not aloud. The conclusion which he draws from this is, that because Jesus had delivered His prayer with the ascription and with the Amen, the disciples understood His prayer as intended to be a model for their public prayers; and that, some six months after the delivery of the Sermon on the Mount, they asked Him for a form for their private prayers, saying, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples" (Luke xi. 1), and that He then gave them the same form of prayer as before, but without its former ascription and Amen.

This ingenious explanation might help to account for the difference in the Lord's Prayer, as given by S. Matthew and S. Luke, but it is scarcely sufficient to account for the entire omission of the ascription in all the earliest extant manuscripts, and in all the commentaries on the Lord's Prayer by the Fathers of the Western Church.

14. For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you:

Vulg. dimittet et vobis Pater vester celestis delicta vestra.

15. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

S. omits their trespasses: S. the Father forgive you your trespasses.

Vulg. Si autem non dimiseritis hominibus: nec Pater vester dimittet vobis peccata vestra.

When He had finished His prayer, Jesus returns to one

¹ S. Jerome, adv. Pelagianos, lib. iii. 15; vol. ii. p. 585.

S. Augustine, lib. ii. contra Ep. Parmen. x.; vol. ix. p. 63.

_____, lib. iii. cap. v. contra duas Epist. Pelag.; vol. x. p. 599.

² Tertullian, de Oratione viii.; vol. i. p. 1164.

_____, de Fuga, 2; vol. i. p. 105.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xix.; vol. i. p. 282.

Theophylact, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. i. p. 32.

Euthymius, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. i. p. 229.

Erasmus, in Matt. vi. 13; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 219.

Bengel, in Matt. vi. 13, p. 45.

³ S. Cyprian, de Oratione Dominica xxvii. p. 537.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xix.; vol. i. p. 283.

S. Gregory Nyssen, de Oratione Domin. v.; vol. i. p. 1193.

Theophylact, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. i. p. 32.

Euthymius, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. i. p. 233.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 322.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. i. p. 101.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vi. 13; vol. viii. p. 165.

Grotius, in Matt. vi. 13; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 241.

⁶ Lightfoot, on Matt. vi. 13; vol. ii. p. 160.

petition. He had just before repealed the old law of retaliation, of repaying like with like, and had instituted in its place the new law of loving-kindness. But He seems to say, there is a sense in which the law of retaliation still holds: God the Father still recognises and acts on the law of retaliation in the forgiveness of sins. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." It is not that God the Father would forgive their sins in the same proportion as they forgive others, but that He would forgive them on this condition, and on this condition only.

The next duty which Jesus brings before them, with the abuse which certain men of that day made of it, with His caution against this and a remedy for it, is fasting.

16. ¶ Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

S^t. as hypocrites: S^t. their face: S^t. for verily.

Vulg. exterminant enim facies suas . . . recipiunt mercedem suam.

17. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face;^a

18. That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

S^t. and the Father: S.V. omit openly.

Vulg. omits openly.

In hot countries like Palestine, frequently to bathe and anoint the body was not a sign of a soft and luxurious temperament, it was rather a mark of necessary attention to health and personal comfort. But hypocrites, men who acted a part to gain the reputation of sanctity and self-denial among their fellow-men, neglected this. As in the case of almsgiving and prayer, so in fasting, they have the reward of their conduct, the reward which they seek, and which is appropriate to their actions.

Jesus pre-supposes that His disciples will fast as a matter of course, just as He supposed they would give alms, and offer up prayer to God. In bidding them anoint their head and wash their face, it is not that He prescribes the performance of these acts themselves, so much as the exhibition of that cheerfulness of mind and body which these acts always produce.¹ The antidote which He proposes for all the abuses of fasting, is to act on the conviction that God sees them, that He sees their secret actions, and their hidden motives, and that He will reward them not as man, but as God.

From the love of ostentation, which was the source of all the abuses of which the hypocrites in our Saviour's time were guilty in their various acts of almsgiving, prayer, and fasting, and which marred all the benefit which they might otherwise have derived from those religious practices, He passes on to another great principle in human nature; a principle which not only influenced the scribes and Pharisees of His day, but which influences all mankind more or less,—to the love of money, a love of hoarding up money. This occupies the remainder of the chapter.

Jesus divides riches into earthly and heavenly. He dissuades His hearers from the pursuit of earthly riches by three principal arguments. 1. Because they are fleeting and corruptible in their nature, verses 19-21. 2. Because they darken and blind the conscience, the eye of the soul, verses 22, 23. 3. Because they withdraw man's heart from serving God, verse 24.

19. ¶ Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:^b

20. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal:

S. and steal.

Vulg. nec furantur.

21. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

S.V. the treasure: S.V. thine heart: V. omits also.

Vulg. ubi enim est thesaurus tuus, ibi est et cor tuum.

The first argument against laying up treasure on earth is drawn from its liability to corruption and loss. Treasure laid up on earth is subject to three kinds of loss, one or other of which kinds nothing can escape. The moth (σῆς) destroys the most costly garments, and every thing in the way of textile fabrics; the rust (βρῶσις) eats into the precious metals, and decay from length of time in one shape or other attacks a thousand other things; and thieves spare nothing. But treasure laid up in heaven is exposed to none of these. The earth is no place for a man's heart to rest in; but if his treasure is there, his heart with all its affections and longings will be there too.

The second argument against covetousness, or laying up treasure on earth, is drawn from its power over the heart to pervert and darken it.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xx.; vol. i. p. 291. [S.]

^a Fasting.—"Our Lord and Saviour would not touch the manner of doing, much less propose a reward for doing, that which were not both holy and acceptable in God's sight. The Pharisees weekly bound themselves unto double fasts, neither are they for this reproved. Often fasting, which was a virtue in John's disciples, could not in them of itself be a vice, and therefore not the offensiveness of their fasting, but their hypocrisy therein, was blamed."—

S. Augustine, de Serm. Dom. in Monte, li. 12; vol. iii. p. 1288.

HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 72, 4; vol. ii. p. 411.

^b Where thieves break through.—"We arrived at Menagehee, a poor village, where every house was built entirely of mud. Perhaps Ezekiel refers to such mud walls as these (xiii. 10): and our Lord, Matt. vi. 19, where thieves dig through (διαπύρουσαι) and steal."—Mission from Scotland to the Jews, p. 76.

S. MATTHEW vi. 22, 23.

- 22 The light of the body is the eye :
if therefore thine eye be single,
thy whole body shall be full of light.
- 23 But if thine eye be evil,
thy whole body shall be full of darkness.
If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness,
how great is that darkness !

V. of the body is thine eye : S. omits therefore.
Vulg. Lucerna corporis tui est oculus tuus. Si oculus tuus fuerit simplex.

23. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness !

The natural effect of covetousness is to darken the conscience, the eye of the soul. But it is the office of conscience to guide and direct all the passions and faculties of the soul. But if that, which should guide and direct and give light to the rest of the soul, be itself dark, how gross must be the darkness of the soul ! We can see this plainly in the case of the body ; the effect produced there strikes the senses at once. We all acknowledge and bewail the misery of the man whose steps are directed by a blinded eye.

The third argument against laying up treasure on earth is drawn from its tendency to withdraw the heart from the service of God.

24. ¶ No man can serve two masters : for either he will hate the one, and love the other ; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

It is as impossible to serve both God and Mammon, that is, God and riches, or the god of riches, as it is to serve two masters with equal love and fidelity. He does not argue from the impropriety of it, but from the moral impossibility of it. The nature of men is so constituted that it is impossible to do it.

To abate that anxious care for the future of this world, to which most men are addicted, Jesus delivers seven considerations in one connected series.

1. God's care for the body, which He has already shown in giving life to it, verse 25.

2. The example of the birds of the air, which are the object of God's daily care, verse 26.

S. LUKE xi. 34-36.

- 34 The light of the body is the eye :
therefore when thine eye is single,
thy whole body also is full of light ;
but when thine eye is evil,
thy body also is full of darkness.
- 35 Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness.

36 If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

3. The unavailing nature of man's anxiety, verse 27.

4. The example of the lilies and of the grass, verses 28-31.

5. Because such anxiety becomes heathens rather than Christians, verse 32.

6. Because God, who knows all our wants, will provide all things necessary for those who seek His kingdom, verse 33.

7. Because sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, verse 34.

The first argument against such anxiety about food and raiment is drawn from God's care shown in the creation and preservation of man's life.

25. Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink ; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment ?

S. omits, or what ye shall drink ; S*. for the body.
Vulg. omits, or what ye shall drink : corpori vestro.

In the first consideration He directs our attention to what God has already done for us.

What God has already done for us is intimated in these words, "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment ?" If so, then He that is able to give the greater, can give the less also. If God could give life, He can give meat to support it. If God could form the body, He can give raiment to clothe it. If God have the goodness as well as the power to give these once, He will not fail to continue these gifts.

In His second consideration, He directs our attention to what God does daily for His other creatures.

26. Behold the fowls of the air : for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns ; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they ?

Vulg. et Pater vester celestis pascit illa.

The lesson here given is not that man is to imitate the birds in not sowing, nor reaping, nor gathering into barns, but in faithfully following the nature which God has given them. In this the birds of the air are an example to man.

They follow the instincts which God has given them, while man abuses the principles which God has equally implanted in his nature. For instance, God has given man a nature which leads him to provide for the future, to sow and to reap. Instead of following this bent of his nature so far as to provide for his wants, he follows it to the exclusion of trust in God his Creator; he follows it until he becomes more anxious to provide against the possibility of want hereafter, than he is to fulfil the commands of God.

In feeding the birds of the air, which neither sow, nor reap, nor gather into barns; in clothing the lilies and grass of the field with beauty, that far surpasses all the powers of art, does He not plainly prove that He is ever ready to continue support to every sort of being that He has once given? Do not these justify our dependence on His care?

This appears in a stronger light when we consider the order in which God has arranged His creatures. The birds of the air have only an animal life, and the flowers of the field a vegetable life. Neither of these, so far as we can see, is of any great moment nor of any long duration. But they have not been thought unworthy of the care of Him who made them. But man is created with an immortal soul made after God's own image, made capable of obedience here, and of everlasting life hereafter. And have we not reason to conclude that God will proportion His tenderness and concern according to the value of the object? All may share in His care, but that will be shown in an especial manner to mankind.

In His third consideration, He puts before us the unavailing nature of such anxiety.

27. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

Vulg. ad staturam suam cubitum unum.

¹ Tertullian, de Spectac. 23; vol. i. p. 655.

S. Jerome, in Matt. vi. 27; vol. vii. p. 45.

S. Augustine, de Sermonibus Domini in Monte, ii. 15; vol. iii. p. 1291.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxi.; vol. i. p. 309.

* The Hühel of the field.—“The lilies of the field are all out, a few tulips (Tulipa gesneriana) cover the rocks, the scarlet anemone (Anemone coccinea, L.) now dominates everywhere, and a small blue bulbous iris, almost rivalling it in abundance and brilliancy of colour. There have been many claimants for the distinctive honour of ‘the lilies of the field;’ but while it seems most natural to view the term as a generic expression, yet if one special flower was more likely than another to catch the eye of the Lord as He spoke, no one familiar with the flora of Palestine in spring-time can hesitate in assigning the place to the anemone.”—TRISTRAM, ‘Land of Israel,’ p. 437.

“The Hühel lily, the flower, as I believe, mentioned by our Lord in that delightful exhortation to trust in the kind care of our heavenly Father: ‘Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not, and yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.’ This Hühel lily is very large, and the three inner petals meet above, and form a gorgeous canopy, such as art never approached, and king never sat under, even in his utmost glory. And when I met this incomparable flower, in all its loveliness, among the oak woods around

The word (ήλικία), which in the Authorized Version is here rendered stature, is used at least eight times in the New Testament. Sometimes it is undoubtedly used of the body, as when it is said of Zaccheus (Luke xix. 3) that he was little of stature, and sometimes it refers to the age, or time of life, as when the parents of the man who was born blind, said, “he is of age, ask him” (John ix. 23). In a similar passage in St. Luke (xii. 26), to add to his ήλικία, one cubit is spoken of as “that thing which is least.” The ancient commentators¹ on this passage understood the word ήλικία, as translated in the A. V. and as applying to the stature of the body. In modern times it has been explained of the length of a man's life, on the ground that while a cubit at the end of a man's life might be described as “a very little thing,” the addition of a cubit, that is, of a foot and a half, to a man's stature could scarcely come under that description.²

Our creation was the work of God, and to make us more sensible of this, He has reserved to Himself many conditions in our life which we cannot alter. If with all our anxiety we cannot gain the smallest addition to our bodily stature, or add the least portion of a day to the length of life which God has allotted to us, how vain is it to suppose that our care is that on which our whole life depends!

The fourth consideration is drawn from the lilies and the grass of the field.

28. And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field,^a how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

29. And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

30. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is cast Theophylact, in Luc. xii. 25; vol. i. p. 372.

Euthymius, in Matt. vi. 27; vol. i. p. 249.

Bengel, in Luc. xii. 25, p. 236.

² See Dean Alford's Revised Translation.

the northern base of Tabor and on the hills of Nazareth, where our Lord spent his youth, I felt assured that it was to this He referred. We call it Hühel lily because it was here that it was first discovered. Its botanical name, if it has one, I am unacquainted with, and am not anxious to have any other than that which connects it with this neighbourhood. I suppose, also, that it is this identical flower to which Solomon refers in the ‘Song of Songs’ (ii. 2, 16): ‘I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.’ As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.’ The bride, comparing her beloved to a rose or a young hart, sees him feeding among the lilies. Our flower delights most in the valleys, but is also found on the mountains. It grows among thorns, and I have sadly lacerated my hands in extricating it from them. Nothing can be in higher contrast than the luxuriant, velvety softness of this lily, and the crabbed, tangled hedge of thorns about it. Gazelles still delight to feed among them, and you can scarcely ride through the woods north of Tabor, where these lilies abound, without frightening them from their flowery pasture.”—THOMSON, ‘The Land and the Book,’ p. 256.

into the oven,^a shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?

God vouchsafes to the vegetable creation a beauty of clothing which He does not give to man. It would be as impossible for man to equal this, as it would be unbecoming his condition to attempt it. Solomon, the greatest king they had ever heard of, was not clothed like one of the commonest lilies of the field. But if God took such care of creatures so low in the scale of creation as the lilies of the field or the grass of the field, would He not, much more, of them whose Father He was in the highest sense, by creation, by redemption, and by adoption?

In the words, "the grass of the field which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven," he refers to the common practice in Palestine of substituting hay or grass for fuel in the heating of their ovens for baking.

The fifth and sixth considerations are drawn from the superior knowledge which the Jews and Christians had of God, and of His providence over the world, compared with that which the heathen had.

31. Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

32. (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek :) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

^{S.} for God your Father.
^{Vulg.} scit enim Pater vester.

33. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

^{S.} His kingdom and righteousness: ^{V.} His righte-ousness and kingdom.
^{Vulg.} Quærite ergo primum regnum Dei, et justitiam ejus.

Many among the heathen were entirely ignorant of the nature and providence of God. None of them had a right understanding of it. In them, therefore, that anxiety was less criminal. For men who had no knowledge of a life after this, or such only as was mixed up with fable and ignorance, for them to lay out all their thoughts, to spend all their labour in providing the things that perish, was far more excusable than it is for Christians.

For Christians are taught that the providence of God is over all His works, that it is over mankind especially, that it is over good men in a still greater degree, that they who fear Him lack nothing, and that from them who lead a godly life He will withhold nothing that is good. We are confirmed in these assurances by God's dealings with ourselves and with all His creatures every day of our lives. We know that the affection of a Father cannot suffer His children to perish in their necessities, that the all-sufficiency of the heavenly Father cannot want the power to supply their necessities. With all these motives, then, we ought not to seek after the things that the Gentiles seek. We are bidden to seek first or chiefly the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all things necessary for the body shall be added unto us.

34. Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

^{S. V.} shall take thought for itself.
^{Vulg.} crastinus enim dies sollicitus erit sibi ipsi.

This is His seventh and last consideration. From the number and variety of the arguments which Jesus adduces to allay the thirst for this world's goods, we may fairly conclude either that this vice is one which it is most difficult to counteract, or one to which the generality of men are addicted. Perhaps both these conclusions are true.

It is not every kind of carefulness that He forbids. What He means is that useless, distracting, untimely anxiety which disposes men to call in question God's power and goodness, that eagerness for increase which makes them regardless of their duty here, and which places all their endeavours and aims on earth, and looks not beyond this world.

^a Oven.—"The Eastern oven is of two kinds—fixed and portable. The former is found only in towns, where regular bakers are employed (Hos. vii. 4). The latter is adapted to the nomad state, and is the article generally intended by the Hebrew term tannûr. It consists of a large jar made of clay, about three feet high, and widening towards the bottom, with a hole for the extraction of the ashes. Each household possessed such an article (Ex. viii. 3); and it was only in times of extreme dearth that the same oven sufficed for several families (Lev. xxvi. 26). It was heated with dry twigs and grass (Matt. vi. 50); and the loaves were placed both inside and outside of it."—SMITH, 'Biblical Dictionary.'

"In Bethlehem I took particular notice of their ovens, which are sunk down in the ground, and have an arch turned over them; there is a descent of some steps to the door by which they enter into them: in the middle is a pyramid of hot ashes, which they bring frequently from their houses, and lay them on a large earthen jar that is covered, and is half full of small stones, which I suppose are heated red-hot: once a week they take away all the ashes, and bring others, which in some measure keep in the heat, being often changed: when they would bake their cakes, they move the ashes from the top, take off the lid, and lay the bread on the stones, and putting it on again, cover the top with ashes."—POCOCKE, 'Travels,' ii. 40.

CHAPTER VII.

[1. Christ ending His sermon on the mount, reproveth rash judgment, 6. forbiddeth to cast holy things to dogs, 7. exhorteth to prayer, 13. to enter in at the street gate, 15. to beware of false prophets, 21. not to be hearers, but doers of the word : 21. like houses builded on a rock, 26. and end on the sand.]

[Vulg. Docet non iudicandum : de festiva in oculo fratris et trabe in proprio oculo : sanctum non duntaxat canibus : omnem patientem, querentem, et pulsantem a deo exauriri : facientium alius quod nobis fieri volumus : per angustam portam ad vitam intrantem : quomodo dignoscantur falsi prophetae, et arbor bona a mala : comparatio de audiente Christi verba, et operantis aut non operante iuxta illa.]

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT—continued.

S. MATTHEW vii. 1-27.

S. LUKE vi. 37-42; xi. 9-13; vi. 43-49.

- 1 Judge not, that ye be not judged.
2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged.

and with what measure ye mete,
it shall be measured to you again.
- 3 And why beholdest thou the mote
that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam
that is in thine own eye?
4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother,
Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye;
and, behold,
5 a beam is in thine own eye?
Thou hypocrite, first cast out
the beam out of thine own eye;
and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.
- 6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.
- 7 Ask, and it shall be given you :
seek, and ye shall find :
knock, and it shall be opened unto you ;
8 For every one that asketh receiveth ;
and he that seeketh findeth ;
and to him that knocketh
it shall be opened.
- 9 Or what man is there of you,
whom if his son ask bread,
will he give him a stone?
10 Or if he ask a fish,
will he give him a serpent?
- 11 If ye then, being evil, know
how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?

- 37 Judge not, and ye shall not be judged :
condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned :
forgive, and ye shall be forgiven.
- 38 Give, and it shall be given unto you :
good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over,
shall men give into your bosom.
- For with the same measure that ye mete withal
it shall be measured to you again.
- 39 And He spake a parable unto them,
Can the blind lead the blind?
shall they not both fall into the ditch?
40 The disciple is not above his master :
but every one that is perfect shall be as his master.
- 41 And why beholdest thou the mote
that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam
that is in thine own eye?
42 Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye?
Thou hypocrite, cast out first
the beam out of thine own eye,
and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

xi. 9

- And I say unto you,
Ask, and it shall be given you :
seek, and ye shall find ;
knock, and it shall be opened unto you.
- 10 For every one that asketh receiveth ;
and he that seeketh findeth ;
and to him that knocketh
it shall be opened.
- 11 If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father,
will he give him a stone?
or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?
12 Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?
13 If ye then, being evil, know
how to give good gifts unto your children :
how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit
to them that ask Him?

ST. MATTHEW vii.

ST. LUKE vi.

12 Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets.

13 Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

14 Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

15 Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit: but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

21 Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity.

24 Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock:

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house: and it fell not:
for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: 27 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell:

and great was the fall of it.

vi. 43

For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes.

45 A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 And why call ye Me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever cometh to Me, and heareth My sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like 48 He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock:

and when the flood arose, the stream, beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it:
for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But he that heareth and doeth not is like a man that without a foundation built a house upon the earth:

against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

FROM His commands and exhortations against too anxious care of the things of this world, Jesus proceeds to warn them against passing unnecessary and uncharitable judgment on the faults of others. Nothing, that He says, makes against the legitimate exercise of the Judge's office. His words are entirely directed against picking out the failings of others for censorious remarks.

In the first five verses He shows what kind of persons they ought to be who undertake to reprove others, and to pass judgment on their faults. In the sixth He mentions a class of men, who require to be corrected and dealt with according to their character.

1. Judge not, that ye be not judged.

2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete,^a it shall be measured to you again.

S. ov. mit again.

Vulg. in qua mensura mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis.

That the principle which He enunciates is true as regards men's dealings one with another, they are themselves witnesses by the adage which He quotes, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again," which was a common proverbial saying among the Jews. It was true also as spoken of God. Of this He Himself is witness. The judgment of other men, severe or merciful, would be returned to them, according to the same rule, and in the same degree, as they showed to others. The judgment of God would exceed in mercy or severity that which they had shown to others, as being a reward or punishment.

3. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4. Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

S*. Or how sayest thou: S. to thy brother, Brother, let.
Vulg. Aut quomodo dicis fratri tuo? Sine ejusdem.

5. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

S. Cast out of thine own eye the beam.
Vulg. Ejice primum trabem de oculo tuo.

The mote (κρόφος) was any dry particle, a dry stalk, or chip, something exceedingly small. It was therefore well calculated to indicate the smallest faults or defects of character. The beam (δοκός) was a large bar or long piece of wood, used in the building of houses or other works that required strength and support. As applied to the character, the beam would imply the grossest of faults. Sensitive and delicate an organ as the eye of the body is, it is not more sensitive than the eye of the soul, the conscience, or moral faculty of man. To reprobate the faults of others is easy to all of us, and depends on the quickness of our intellect: but the power to estimate truly the faults of others, and to assist in correcting them, depends on our freedom from vice, on the clearness of our moral eye. It is as impossible for a man who indulges in gross vices himself, to judge correctly the faults of others, and to render assistance in correcting them, as it would be for a man with a beam of timber in his eye, to see to extricate the minutest particle or chip from the eye of another. All pretence of correcting the faults of others, while we indulge in the same or greater, is mere hypocrisy. Thus Jesus, the God Incarnate, gives the sanction of truth to another of the Jewish common proverbs.

Jesus does not therefore imply that no discrimination is to be exercised as to men's characters. Among others whom He was now addressing were His Apostles, the stewards of His Mysteries, and He goes on to instruct them that they were not to admit to a share of those Mysteries men of infamous life, men of obstinate unbelief.

6. ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

The meaning of this verse turns on the meaning contained in the words "holy," "pearls," "dogs," and "swine."

"Cast not your pearls before swine," is another of those Jewish proverbial sayings which Jesus adopts and consecrates to a higher meaning. Pearls, in relation to that which is holy, evidently imply the most precious of the holy. If we take into account who was the speaker here, and who was the audience, we cannot doubt that by the word "holy" Jesus means the revelation of His Incarnation, and by "the pearls" the great Mysteries of this revelation; that He is instructing the Apostles to use caution and discretion in teaching the Mysteries of the Faith to those who, like dogs, continue wilfully and obstinately to resist it, and not to desecrate His Holy Sacraments by offering them to swine, to men of unclean, immoral life.¹

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xliii.; vol. i. p. 330, &c.

S. Augustine, de Sermone Domini in Monte ii. 20; vol. iii. p. 1300.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xliii. p. 338.

Maldonatus, in Matt. vii. 6; vol. i. p. 109.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 6; vol. viii. p. 176.

^a For with what measure ye mete.—See note on Mark ii. 4.

In appearance the pearls would differ little from common things, they would resemble the usual food of swine; in size and look they might be like pease, but in value they would be beyond all earthly price. Besides the impropriety—the unreasonableness—of casting pearls before swine, He adds another reason against it, lest destruction should come upon themselves by this act. It may be that in the words “Lest they turn again and rend you,” He alludes to the punishment of those who profane His Holy Sacraments by allowing men of profligate and wicked lives to partake in them.

In the seventh verse He returns to give further instructions on prayer. This He had partly treated in the last chapter (verses 5–15), but had left off to take up the subject of fasting.

7. ¶ Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

8. For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

V. it is opened.
Vulg. et pulsanti aperietur.

He bids them pray, and prescribes three different modes: to ask, to seek, and to knock; and to each of these He promises a distinct blessing. Each of the terms which He uses rises higher than the former, each implies a higher degree of earnestness and fervour than the preceding.¹

To impress on them the certainty of success in their petitions, He reminds them of their condition as sons of God. By a twofold question He depicts the natural affection of a father, and contrasts this with the love of their heavenly Father, giving at the same time His testimony to the universal corruption of human nature.²

9. Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?

S.V. of whom his son shall ask.
Vulg. quem si petierit filius suus panem.

10. Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?

S.V. Or shall ask.
Vulg. Aut si piscem petierit.

11. If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?

To offer a stone to a son asking for bread, would be giving him that which was useless; to offer him a serpent, when he asked for a fish, or to give him a scorpion, when he asked for an egg, as S. Luke adds, would be giving him that which was positively injurious to him. But if an earthly father, with all his weakness and propensity to evil, would shrink from such conduct as unnatural, how much more would their heavenly Father, who is not weak and evil like themselves, but infinitely beyond all imperfection! how readily would He give good things, or the Holy Spirit (S. Luke), to them that ask Him!

12. Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.

S*. omits therefore.
Vulg. Omnia ergo.

Two ways have been proposed of explaining the word “therefore.” The first³ is to connect it with what goes immediately before, somewhat in this sense. If therefore you desire to obtain the good things which your heavenly Father has promised to grant, ask for them in the way here prescribed, and whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. The second,⁴ and more general way, is to regard it as a sort of summing up of what He had said before in His sermon respecting loving their enemies, forgiving injuries, giving alms, not judging others, &c. If all these precepts could be summarized and resolved into one short principle of action, it would be expressed in the words, Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. Nor was this any new doctrine. For this was what both the Law and the Prophets aimed at producing. They would have fulfilled their object, if they prepared men to receive this teaching.

In this sermon Jesus had uttered things strange to their ears. By His various prohibitions and injunctions, He had represented the way of life as difficult of attainment, nay, as impossible, without unusual effort and earnestness. To make this the more plain to them, and to enforce it in a way which they could not misinterpret, He divides the world into two classes, the one large and the other small, the one walking in a broad way through a wide gate, and the other in a narrow way through a strait gate; the one following the bent of their own passions, without any restraint or self-discipline, living a life of ease and self-indulgence; the other living a life of

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxiii.; vol. i. p. 332.

S. Augustine, Retract. i. 19; vol. i. p. 617.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 7; vol. vii. p. 177.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. vii. 11, &c.; vol. vii. p. 47.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxiii.; vol. i. p. 335.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 12; vol. viii. p. 178.

self-denial and humility of spirit; the one on the road to destruction, the other to life everlasting.

13. ¶ Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way,^a that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

S*. For wide and broad is the way.
Vulg. quia lata porta, et spatiosa via est.

14. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

Margin. How strait.
S*. V*. How strait.
Vulg. Quam angusta porta, et arcta via est.

Men in general live an easy, self-indulgent life, following the bent of their own passions, with little or no self-discipline, leading the life that gives the most pleasure and the least restraint, with no concern for anything much beyond this present state of existence. These are they who walk on the broad way, and through the wide gate. The few who enter through the narrow gate, and walk along the strait or straitened way, are they who look upon this life, not as a state for indulgence or enjoyment, but for self-discipline and preparation for another, and who keep this always in view.

Jesus uses the two expressions, the strait gate and the narrow way, not to convey different meanings, but in order to fix the thought more firmly in their minds.¹

That the way of life was strait, and that few there be that choose it, had been already set forth again and again in the Old Testament, and in many forms. When the flood was sent on the earth, only eight, during the years that Noah had been preaching to them, had chosen the strait way. When Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed, only three were saved alive. Out of the immense number of the children of Israel who left Egypt, and to all of whom the land of Canaan was promised, only two were permitted to reach it. These were the standing instances of their own dispensation, which proclaimed to the Jewish nation the same truth that Jesus here lays down for all mankind.

But notwithstanding the authority, the distinctness, and the earnestness with which He had delivered this His sermon, men would arise who would deny it all; men who in the garb of His own teachers, would deny that the way to life was through a narrow gate and along a straitened path, or that it was not intended for man to follow the lead of his natural inclinations; men who would deny that alms should be given, that prayers need be offered, or that fasts are necessary. Against such, Jesus warns his hearers.

15. ¶ Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

In Scripture language² the word prophet does not necessarily mean one who foretells the future, but rather one who fills the office of instructor, it may be with respect to the past, the present, or the future.

Some³ have supposed that by the term "come," "who come," Jesus adds another item in His description of these teachers, that such men generally act without authority, that they take this office upon themselves, and are not sent by competent authority. They come without being sent, they are disguised as sheep, but like wolves they scatter and maim and destroy the flock. If their object were apparent at first the flock would beware of such teachers, but by one specious pretence or other they delude the flock and thus accomplish their ruin.

The test which He gives, by which they are to know these prophets, is the fruit of their teaching. Such teachers inevitably produce one of two kinds of fruits indicated in the terms "thorns" and "thistles." Their teaching ends either in false doctrine, or corrupt practice, or both. This is the necessary consequence of their nature.

16. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

¹ S. Basil, Regulæ brevis tractat. 241; vol. iii. 1243.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xliii. p. 342.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 15; vol. viii. p. 180.

^a Broad is the way.—In these words concerning the broad and narrow way, our Saviour seems to allude to the rules of the Jews among their lawyers concerning the public and private ways, with whom a private way was four cubits in breadth, a public way was sixteen cubits. See the Gloss in Peah. cap. 2, hal. 1.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On S. Matthew,' vii. 13; vol. ii. p. 163.

"There was considerable verdure on the undulating plains through which we passed. The road is not like a king's highway with us, made before it is travelled, but is made by the feet of the animals that travel it; and, as camels generally follow one another, it consists of many narrow paths in one broad way. We counted fifteen or twenty of these narrow paths mingling with each other, in a breadth of thirty or forty yards. Verdure and wild genista often occurred between the paths, so that the camels were frequently bending their long necks to feed as we journeyed. We notice this, because it seems to illustrate the description of wisdom in Proverbs: 'She standeth by the way in the places of the paths' (viii. 2). Hence also the expression, 'Hold up my goings in Thy paths' (Ps. xvii. 5); and in the 23rd Psalm, 'He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness;' and the declaration, 'Broad is the way which leadeth to destruction' (Matt. vii. 13), hints at its many paths."—Mission from Scotland to the Jews, p. 96.

17. Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Vulg. excideatur, et in ignem mittetur.

20. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

A true prophet or teacher will produce good fruit, and a false prophet will produce evil fruit. There may be exceptions and limitations to this, but such at least is the general rule. For here as elsewhere the parable is intended to have only a general likeness and application.¹ As the end of an unfruitful tree is one suited to its nature, so the end of all false teachers is punishment appropriate to their deserts.

Jesus then proceeds to lay down the character of a faithful teacher of His will. In doing this He warns them not to harbour certain misconceptions as to the rule on which He will act at the Day of Judgment. He will then recognise as His, only those who have done His will, not those who have merely taught in His name, and have wrought miracles in the power of His name.²

21. ¶ Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Vulg. sed qui facit voluntatem Patris mei qui in caelis est, ipse intrabit in regnum celorum.

22. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works?

S.V. Cast out many devils.

Vulg. in nomine tuo demonia eiecimus.

23. And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

Our Lord's answer shows the fatal deception that men may put upon themselves, and continue even to the last. These men are represented as having been admired and caressed among men for their gifts, and are utterly astonished at the reception they meet with from Him. They cry apparently in utter amazement, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name have done many wonderful works? How then, after all this, say their words, can we be shut out of heaven? For we are not to suppose that they had not wrought the works they mention. They had wrought them, but without being themselves profited by them, because they had lived in the neglect of God's commands.

His answer shows, too, that faith without a corresponding life is nothing worth; that not only will he be cast out of heaven who believes in Jesus as the Son of God and still lives in wickedness, but that even though he have the gift of prophecy, and power to cast out devils, and to work wonders, it will avail him nothing, unless his life be in accordance with his faith. To do the will of God, two things are necessary: belief in His doctrine—in the revelation which He has made of Himself—and obedience to His commands.

That wicked men should sometimes be entrusted with the most eminent gifts appears part of God's dispensation. We may see this in the case of Judas Iscariot. When Jesus called His Twelve disciples, and gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease (Matt. x. 1), no exception was made in the case of Judas. In the Old Testament we read that divine revelations were made through heathens, nay through the most impious heathens, such as Balaam and Nebuchadnezzar. Apparently grace, or divine power, to work miracles in God's name, was not necessarily connected with grace to believe His word and to obey it. But a miracle cannot be wrought to prove the truth of a false doctrine.³

Throughout His sermon Jesus had been teaching them that there was only one way to enter into the kingdom of heaven and life eternal, and that was to act as He then taught them. Some would hear Him and would obey His commands; others would hear him and would go on as before, and would continue to lead their usual life. As a conclusion to His sermon, He sets before them a practical illustration of the difference between these two sets of hearers.

24. ¶ Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock:

S.V. shall be likened.

Vulg. assimilabitur viro sapienti.

25. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock:

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xliii. p. 344.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 18; vol. viii. p. 181.

³ S. Augustine, Sermo xciii. (alias 23 de Verbis Dom.) x.; vol. v. p. 579.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xii. 5; vol. ii. p. 1121.

⁴ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. ii. 2, quaest. 178, art. 2; vol. iii. p. 1255.

26. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand :

27. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house ; and it fell : and great was the fall of it.*

The Rock is Jesus the Son of Mary, the God Incarnate.¹ The man who hears His words and does them lays the foundation of his house upon Him, the Rock. The man who hears His words and does them not, lays no foundation, and so does not build his house upon Him, the Rock, but upon the sand. Two things are therefore required for the foundation of the house of the wise man : (1) Faith in Jesus as the only Rock of salvation against the temptations and troubles in this life, and the judgment at the last day, that is, belief in the Incarnation ; and (2) a life springing out of this belief, work in entire accordance with this belief. Men may hear the words of Jesus, and believe them in a sense, and still not lay the foundation of their house on Him, the Rock. Belief, so as to build on Him the Rock, is a practical, living, active principle, not a mere belief in Him as a true historical character.

Some have supposed that these words "the rain," "the floods," and "the wind," indicate every possible form of temptation, but without any nice distinction between them. Others have thought that these three different terms were intended to represent three kinds of temptations, differing in their nature, to speak in general terms, according to the difference in these elements. The rain, for instance, descending from above, and watering the earth and producing luxuriance of verdure and plenty, has been identified with temptations from the world, temptations that lead men astray in the direction of pride and wantonness. The floods, again, arising from the earth and gradually encompassing the house, until they threaten it with utter ruin, have been compared to the lusts of the flesh. The winds have been supposed to indicate the suggestions of Satan. They come from the air, of which he is said to be the prince. They work, invisibly to the eye of man, with the utmost subtlety, and they turn from side to side the men of light inconstant character.

Both the wise man and the foolish man built a house, and the difference between their work was only discovered in the day of trial, at the Day of Judgment. The foolish man's house fell, and it is added, "great was the fall of it," probably to intimate, among other things, that the mistake could not be repaired. There was no building a second house, for the time of work and of trial was now over.

28. And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at His doctrine :

Vulg. admirabantur turbes super doctrinam ejus.

29. For He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

S.V. as their scribes.

Vulg. sicut scribe eorum, et pharisei.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xliiii. p. 347.

Maldenatus, in Matt. vii. 24 ; vol. i. p. 117.

[Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 24 ; vol. viii. p. 184.

* The Sermon on the Mount.—The following, by a well-known living writer, commends itself as an excellent summary of the Sermon on the Mount :—

"The original laws of the new kingdom are for the most part set forth by its Founder in His Sermon on the Mount. After a preliminary statement of the distinctive character which was to mark the life and bearing of those who would fully correspond to His mind and will, and a further sketch of the nature and depth of the influence which His subjects were to exert upon other men, He proceeds to define the general relation of the new law which He is promulgating to the law that had preceded it. The vital principle of His legislation, namely, that moral obedience shall be enforced, not merely in the performance of or in the abstinence from outward acts, but in the deepest and most secret springs of thought and motive, is traced in its application to certain specific prescriptions of the older Law, while other ancient enactments are modified or set aside by the stricter purity, the genuine simplicity of motive and character, the entire unselfishness, and the superiority to personal prejudices and exclusiveness which the New Lawgiver insisted on. The required life of the new kingdom is then exhibited in detail ; the duties of almsgiving, of prayer, and of fasting, are successively enforced ; but the rectification of the ruling motive is chiefly insisted on as essential. In performing religious duties, God's will, and not any conventional standard of human opinion, is to be kept steadily before the eye of the soul.

The Legislator insists upon the need of a single, supreme, unrivalled motive in thought and action, unless all is to be lost. The uncorruptible treasure must be in heaven ; the body of the moral life will only be full of light if the eye is single ; no man can serve two masters. The birds and the flowers suggest the lesson of trust in and devotion to the One Source and End of life, all will really be well with those who in very deed seek His kingdom and His righteousness. Charity in judgment of other men, circumspection in communicating sacred truth, confidence and constancy in prayer, perfect consideration for the wishes of others, yet also a determination to seek the paths of difficulty and sacrifice, rather than the broad, easy ways trodden by the mass of mankind ;—these features will mark the conduct of loyal subjects of the kingdom. They will beware too of false prophets, that is, of the movers of spiritual sedition, of teachers who are false to the truths upon which the kingdom is based and to the temper which is required of its real children. The false prophets will be known by their moral unfruitfulness, rather than by any lack of popularity or success. Finally, obedience to the law of the kingdom is insisted on as the one condition of safety ; obedience,—as distinct from professions of loyalty ; obedience,—which will be found to have really based a man's life upon the immovable rock at that solemn moment when all that stands upon the sand must utterly perish."

—CAXON LIDDELL. 'Bampton Lectures,' m. p. 190.

The multitudes were astonished at His teaching. This differed from that of the Scribes in two principal points, in the subject of His teaching, and in the manner of it.¹ (1) Jesus endeavoured to awaken in them a consciousness that this life was only a state of trial and of preparation for another, an endless life; while the Scribes were intent on things trivial in themselves, and of no moment to their future life, on ceremonial washings of the body, on the exact payment of tithe in things minute, and other actions that had little or no bearing on moral conduct. (2) Jesus taught them as a lawgiver, claiming full authority to repeal and to enact, while the highest claim of the Scribes was to hand down the traditional form of interpretation received from their fathers.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxvii. p. 190.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. vii. 29; vol. viii. p. 185.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Gadara was the metropolis of Perea. Josephus (De Bell. iv. 26) calls it the strong metropolis of Perea. It was sixty furlongs distant from Tiberias, by the measure of the same author.

Gergesa.—"Another city, also Gergesa by name, was so near it, that that which in Mark (v. 1) is called χώρα Γαδαρῶν, the country of the Gadarens, in Matthew (viii. 28) is χώρα Γεργισσῶν, the country of the Gergesens. Which, whether it took its name from the Gergashites, the posterity of Canaan, or from the clayish nature of the soil (Gargishta signifying clay), we leave to the more learned to decide."—Lightfoot, 'Chorographical Century,' lxxv.; vol. ii. p. 69.

"The name of this prostrate town is Kerza, or Gerza, as my Bedawin guide shouted it in my ear the first time I visited it. It was a small place, but the walls can be traced all round, and there seem to have been considerable suburbs. I identify these ruins with the long lost site of Gergesa, where Our Lord healed the two men possessed with devils, and suffered those malignant spirits to enter into the herd of swine. If this be correct, it is a discovery of some importance. From Origen down to the last critic who has tried his skill upon the Greek text of the New Testament, the conflicting and contradictory readings of Manuscripts in regard to the place where the miracle was performed, have furnished a fruitful source of discussion. Matthew locates it at Gergesa, Mark and Luke at Gadara. A few various readings give Gergesa. The Vulgate, Arabic, and others that follow the Vulgate, read Gergesa in all the Evangelists: nor are these all the discrepancies in regard to the name of this place. Only one of these readings can be correct: which shall we select? This is the question to be settled. Our inquiries will, of course, be confined to the topographical indications which may have a bearing upon the problem.

"Our first point is that the miracle could not have occurred at Gadara. It is certain, from all the accounts we have of it, that the place was near the shore of the lake. Mark says that when he came out of the ship, 'immediately there met him a man,' &c. With this precise statement the tenor of all the narratives coincides, and therefore we must find a locality directly on the shore, and every place must be rejected that is not consistent with this ascertained fact. Again, the city itself, as well as the country of the Gergesenes, was at the shore of the lake. All the accounts imply this fact. Lastly, there was a steep mountain so near at hand, that the herd of swine, rushing down it, were precipitated into the lake. Now Gadara does not meet any one of these necessary conditions. I take for granted what I believe to be true, that Um Keis marks the site of Gadara; and it was, therefore, about three hours to the south of the extreme shore of the lake in that direction. There is first a broad plain from Khurbet Samra to the Jermuk; then the vast gorge of this river; and after it an ascent for an hour and a half to Um Keis. No one, I think, will maintain that this meets the requirements of the sacred narratives, but is in irreconcilable contradiction to them. It is true that a celebrated traveller, from his lofty stand-point at Um Keis, overlooks all intervening obstacles, and makes the swine rush headlong into the lake from beneath his very feet. But to do this in fact (and the Evangelists deal only in plain facts), they must have run down the mountain for an hour and a half, forded the deep Jermuk, quite as formidable as the Jordan itself, ascended its northern bank, and raced across a level plain several miles before they could reach the nearest margin of the lake, a feat which no herd of swine would be likely to achieve, even though they were 'possessed.' The site of the miracle, therefore, was not at Gadara. This is an important result. Nor was it in the country of the Gadarenes, because that country lay south of the great river Jermuk: and, besides, if the territory of that city did at any time reach to the south end of the lake, there is no mountain there above it adapted to the conditions of the miracle; and further, the city itself where it was wrought was evidently on the shore. There we must find it, whatever be its name. And in this Gersa, or Chersa, we have a position which fulfils every requirement of the narratives, and with a name so near that in Matthew as to be in itself a strong corroboration of the truth of this identification. It is within a few rods of the shore, and an immense mountain rises directly above it, in which are ancient tombs, out of some of which the two men possessed of the devils may have issued to meet Jesus. The lake is so near the base of the mountain, that the swine, rushing madly down it, could not stop, but would be hurried on into the water and drowned. The place is one which our Lord would be likely to visit, having Capernaum in full view to the north, and Galilee "over against it," as Luke says it was. The name, however, pronounced by Bedawin Arabs, is so similar to Gergesa, that to all my inquiries for this place, they invariably said it was at Chersa; and they insisted that they were identical, and I agree with them in this opinion.

"In studying the details of the miracle, I was obliged to modify one opinion or impression which had grown up with me from childhood. There is no bold cliff overhanging the lake on the eastern side, nor, indeed, on any other, except just north of Tiberias. Everywhere along the north-eastern and eastern shores, a smooth beach declines gently down to the water. . . .

"I have an abiding sense that Matthew wrote the name correctly. He was from this region, and personally knew the localities. His Gospel also was written first of all, and mainly circulated in the beginning, in these Oriental regions. John does not mention the miracle, and Mark and Luke were strangers to this part of the country, and may possibly have intended, by mentioning the country of the Gadarenes, to point out to their distant Greek and Roman readers the mere vicinity of the place where the miracle was wrought. Gergesa, or Gerasa, or Chersa, however pronounced, was small and unknown; while Gadara was a Greek city, celebrated for its temples and theatre, and for the warm baths on the Hieromax just below it. They may, therefore, have written 'country of the Gadarenes.' But I think it far more probable that intermeddling scholiasts made the change from Gergesa to Gadara, in order to indicate to the unlearned the spot where the wonder took place. There is a certain resemblance between the names, and when once introduced into a leading manuscript, the basis for the controversy would be fairly laid down. Learned annotators would be misled by the very extent of their geographical knowledge, which, however, would not be sufficiently exact to prove to them that the miracle could not have taken place at Gadara. Origen (in Joan. tomus vi. sec. 25; vol. iv. p. 269, Migne), who, I believe, first attempted to correct the text in those passages, seems to have been acquainted with this very site we are upon: and this might well have been the case, since he resided at Caesarea. Still his notice of it is confused, and his criticisms had no valuable result. The mistake spread and became permanent."—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 375, &c.

"On the left bank of Wady Semakh, and at the point where the hills end and the plain stretches out toward the lake, are the ruins of Khersa (Gergesa). The site is enclosed by a wall three feet thick. The remains are not of much importance, with the exception of those of a large rectangular building lying east and west. On the shore of the lake are a few ruined buildings, to which the same name was given by the Bedawin. About a mile south of this, the hills, which everywhere else on the eastern side are recessed from a half to three-quarters of a mile from the water's edge, approach within forty feet of it: they do not terminate abruptly, but there is a steep even slope which we would identify with the 'steep place' down which the herd of swine ran violently into the sea, and so were choked. A few yards off is a small intermittent hot spring.

"That the meeting of our Lord with the two demoniacs took place on the eastern shore of the lake is plain from Matt. ix. 1, and it is equally evident, on an examination of the ground, that there is only one place on that side where the herd of swine could have run down a steep place into the lake, the place mentioned above. The eastern coast has since been carefully examined by Mr. Macgregor in his canoe, and he has come to exactly the same conclusion. A difficulty has arisen with regard to this locality in consequence of the different readings in the three Gospels. In Matthew our Saviour is said to have come into the country of the Gergesenes; in Luke and John into that of the Gadarenes. The old MSS. do not give any assistance here: but the similarity of the name Khersa to that of Gergesa is, as Dr. Thomson points out in 'The Land and the Book,' a strong reason for believing that the reading of Matthew is correct; and we have also the testimony of Eusebius and Origen that a village called Gergesa once existed on the borders of the lake. Perhaps the discrepancy may be explained by supposing that Gergesa was under the jurisdiction of Gadara. There do not appear to be any rock-hewn tombs near Khersa; but the demoniacs may possibly have lived in one of those tombs built above ground which have been noticed under the head of Tel Hum, a form of tomb much more common in Galilee than has been supposed. I have entered into this question rather fully, as travellers have alternately asserted and denied the existence of a suitable locality on the eastern shore; and even such a carefully compiled work as the 'Dictionary of the Bible,' has made the extraordinary blunder of placing the scene of the miracle at Gadara, now Umm Keis, a place from which the swine would have had a hard gallop of two hours before reaching the lake."—"Recovery of Jerusalem," p. 368.

See also Macgregor, 'Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 423.

CHAPTER VIII.

[2. Christ cleanseth the leper, 5. healeth the centurion's servant, 14. Peter's mother-in-law, 16. and many other diseases: 18. sheweth how He is to be followed: 23. stilleth the tempest on the sea, 28. driveth the devils out of two men possessed, 31. and suffereth them to go into the swine.]

[Vide. Quantum leprosum Jesus mittit ad discipulos: sanant parum centurionis, ejus fidem commendat: item socum Petri, Christianum, aliosque plures male habentes: verbo spiritus eiecit: soritum sequi volentem reject, alium verbatim in sepulchro mox sequi jubet: navicula fluctibus periclitante exortatus a discipulis mare sedat: duos quoque demoniacos apud Gerasenos liberat, domibus in porcos ingredi permittens: quo viso Geraseni precantur ut a suis finibus discedat.]

1. When He was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed Him.

As far as the sense is concerned, the verse which stands the first in this chapter might stand as the last of the preceding chapter.¹ As the first verse of this chapter, it indicates the time and place when Jesus healed the leper. As the last of the preceding, it would contain an account of the conduct of the people in consequence of their admiration for Him after His Sermon on the Mount. Accordingly some commentators place it as the first verse of this chapter,² and others as the last of the preceding chapter.³

S. Mark and S. Luke relate the healing of a leper by our Saviour, which differs so slightly from the account here given by S. Matthew, that commentators generally, both ancient and modern, have agreed that the three Evangelists are recording the healing of the same man.⁴

It has already been shown, or attempted to be shown, that the sermon given by S. Luke, ch. vi., is the Sermon on the Mount, as recorded at greater length by S. Matthew. But if the healing of this leper be the same as that related by S. Luke, and if the Sermon on the Mount, as related by S. Matthew, be the same as that given by S. Luke, one of them must have given the account of the healing of the leper out of its proper order. For S. Luke places it before the Sermon, and S. Matthew after. If our Saviour healed this leper before He delivered His Sermon on the Mount, then the first verse of this chapter should stand as the last of the preceding, as an account of the conduct of the people after they had heard His teaching.

That this was the same leper as mentioned by S. Mark (i. 40), and S. Luke (v. 12), appears from three considerations.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 1; vol. viii. p. 187.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. viii. 1; vol. vii. p. 50.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 348.

⁴ Bengel, in Matt. viii.; i. p. 52.

⁵ Tischendorf, p. xxx. and 26.

⁶ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, vol. i. p. 219.

⁷ Robinson, Harmony of the Greek New Testament, p. 40.

⁸ McClellan, New Testament, vol. i. pp. 444, 552.

⁹ Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. i. p. 301.

¹⁰ S. Augustine, de Consensu Evangel. ii. cap. xix. sec. 47; vol. iii. p. 1100.

¹¹ Venerable Bede, in Matt. viii. 1; vol. iii. p. 39.

1. The posture of the leper is described by all the three, not exactly in the same words, but in terms that denote the same spirit of humiliation and reverence. In S. Matthew's account he came and worshipped Him; in S. Mark he is described as beseeching Him and kneeling down to Him; and S. Luke says he fell on his face and besought Him. It will be seen that there is the slightest possible variation in detail as to the posture, and that the three several expressions are identical in meaning.

2. The address of the leper to Jesus, as given by all the three, is exactly the same to the very letter, "If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean."

3. All the three Evangelists represent Jesus as using the very same action, and the same words, on His cleansing the leper, and giving him the same charge to go and show himself to the priest, and in the meantime to keep silence respecting his cure. S. Mark and S. Luke alone go on to relate how he began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter.

To see what was the real state of the case as regards this leper, we must carefully observe the distinction between pronouncing a leper clean and healing a leper of his disease. The first consisted in removing certain civil and religious disabilities from the leper, and in restoring him to his former privileges as a member of the congregation of Israel.^{*} This was the office of the priests under the Law. They were commanded (Levit. xiii.) to examine the leper, and so long as the leprosy was in its active spreading stage, to pronounce him unclean, unfit to mingle with the congregation. When the virulence of the disease had run its course, and the leprosy had overspread the whole body, then the leper might be restored to his social and religious rank, or at least partially Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 348.

^{*} Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. viii. p. 118.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. viii. p. 187.

Grotius, in Matt. viii. 2; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 273.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sec. xxi.; vol. i. p. 219.

Greswell, Harmonia, sec. xxv. p. 56.

Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, in Luke v. 1.

Dean Afford, Greek Testament, in Matt. viii. 2.

Robinson, Harmony of the Greek New Testament, p. 26.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 552.

[†] See Introductory Note to Chap. IX.

so. But the disease was not cured; it still remained a frightful affliction to the leper himself, though it may have been innocuous as regards others. To heal the leprosy by the skill of man was impossible, and no provision had been made by God for this purpose. With the exception of Miriam and Naaman, no instance is on record where the leprosy was healed, before the cure of this leper by Jesus.

JESUS HEALS A LEPER.

S. MATTHEW viii. 2-4.

S. MARK i. 40-45.

S. LUKE v. 12-16.

2 And behold, there came a leper, and worshipped Him. saying, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth His hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

4 And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man; but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

40 And there came a leper to Him, beseeching Him, and kneeling down to Him, and saying unto Him, If thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. And Jesus moved with compassion, put forth His hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will: be thou clean. And as soon as He had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed. And He straightly charged him, and forthwith sent him away: and saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

42 And as soon as He had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And He straightly charged him, and forthwith sent him away: and saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

44 And He straightly charged him, and forthwith sent him away: and saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

45 But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to Him from every quarter.

12 And it came to pass, when He was in a certain city, behold a man full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought Him, saying, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. And He put forth His hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

13 And He charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

14 And He charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

15 But so much the more went there a fame abroad of Him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by Him of their infirmities.

16 And He withdrew Himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

2. And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.

3. And Jesus put forth His hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.*

S.V. And he put forth: S*. omits immediately.
Vulg. Et extendens Iesus manum . . . et confestim.

* Jesus put forth His hand, &c.—“The birth of the flesh is a manifestation of human nature, the bearing of the Virgin a token of divine power. The infancy of a little one is shown in the lowliness of the cradle, the greatness of the Highest is proclaimed by the voices of the angels. He has the rudiments of men whom Herod impiously plots to kill, He is the Lord of all whom the Magi delight suppliantly to adore, &c. To hunger, thirst, weary, and sleep are evidently human; but to satisfy five thousand on five

The expression of S. Luke, "when He was in a certain city," would seem to imply that He was not merely in the neighbourhood of the city but in the city. Some have supposed that lepers were not forbidden to pass through a city, but only to lodge or dwell in it, and that Jesus may have met with this leper as he was passing through the city. Others have held that this leper had already passed through the active stage of the disease, and had been pronounced clean by the priests, and restored, at least so far as he could, to his former position in Jewish society (Levit. xiii.). S. Luke's words, "a man full of leprosy" (v. 12), have been interpreted as specially indicating that the leper here was in the condition when lepers were regarded as clean (Levit. xiii. 13).

This leper¹ showed, both by the tenor of his address to Jesus, as well as by the adoration and reverence expressed in his posture, that he believed Him to be God. For no one had the power to cleanse the leprosy at his will but God. The priests under the Law could not render a leper clean. They could only declare him to be clean when his case answered certain conditions which the Law prescribed. To "kneel down to Him," to "fall on his face," and to "worship Him," were actions which in a Jew expressed a belief that Jesus was God. Even in an inhabitant of more Eastern climes such bodily postures as this leper assumed, coupled with his address to Jesus, could not have been shown to a fellow-man. In a Jew it would have been positive idolatry, and would have been regarded as such by all around him. It is not stated how he gained this belief. It may have been partly the effect of his own reasoning on the miraculous cures which Jesus had already wrought, of which the leper had probably heard, for this was in the second year of His ministry, and it may have been produced partly by some divine illumination.² Evidently there was in the leper all that Jesus required before He exerted His supernatural power to heal, before He put forth His hand and touched him.

In many points the leprosy of the body resembles the leprosy of the soul, but in no point did the leprosy of this man's body more resemble the leprosy of his soul than in the cure of it. On the leper's part there was a loathing of his leprosy, and faith in Jesus as God, and consequently in His power to heal him; and on the part of Jesus there was a communication of His power as God, through His human nature, by touching him. The source and medium of health to this leper's body is the touch of God Incarnate.³ In like manner, life and health is communicated to man's soul through the Incarnation. That is to him both the source and medium of all life-giving power.

In ancient times the third verse of this chapter was regarded as a mine of dogmatic teaching.⁴ Every word of it was looked upon as charged with a fulness of meaning, and they were severally used to confute the various heresies that were springing up around them. To Photinus, who taught that Jesus was a mere man and in no sense God, was objected the word "I will," as indicating His claim to possess an Almighty will, the power to heal at His own will. Arius taught that the Son was inferior to the Father, and was therefore unable to issue a command, but only to execute the commands of the Father. To him were objected the words, "I will, be thou clean," as claiming an equality with the Father. Manichæus taught that Jesus did not possess a body in truth and reality, but only in appearance, and that He could not therefore either touch another or be touched Himself. To him were objected the words, "Jesus put forth His hand, and touched him."

4. And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man; but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest,⁵ and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

S*, said.
Vulg. et ait illi Jesus.

The gift that was to be offered when a leper was declared clean was a lamb, or, in the case of a poor man, a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons (Levit. xiii. 14, &c.). This cure had been wrought in Galilee, either at Capernaum or in the neighbourhood of it, and the priests would be at Jerusalem. Jesus is therefore sending this leper a distance, as he would travel, of not less than 80 or 90 miles. He lays upon him the charge of a sacrifice and the labour of a long journey.

There might be other reasons for His prohibition to divulge the miracle: such as to teach silence on the performance of any works of charity. The two which Jesus mentions are, that he may first offer a sacrifice to God and bear testimony

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxv.; vol. i. p. 359.

Theophylact, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. i. p. 38.

Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. i. p. 299.

Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. i. p. 118.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. viii. p. 188.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 2; vol. viii. p. 188.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Matt. viii. 3; vol. v. p. 390.

Theophylact, in Matt. viii. 3; vol. i. p. 38.

⁴ S. Ambrose, in Luc. v. 13; vol. ii. p. 1636.

⁵ Venerable Bede, in Matt. viii. 3; vol. iii. p. 39.

Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 3; vol. i. p. 119.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 3; vol. viii. p. 188.

leaves, and to give the Samaritan living water . . . to walk on the sea and the feet not to sink, and to lay the tossing waves with a rebuke, is unambiguously divine." Leo's Tome (Ep. 28) 4. "When He touched the leper, it was the man that was seen; but something beyond man, when He cleansed him, &c. Ambrose Epist. I. 46, n. 7; Hil. Trin. x. 23 fin., vid. inf. 56, note; and S. Leo's extracts in his Epist. 165; Chrysol. Sermon. 44 and 35; Paul ap.

Conc. Eph. (p. 1620, Labbe). These are instances of a theologically called the θεωρῶν ἐνέργεια, i.e., the union of the energies of both natures in one act. — DR. J. H. NEWMAN, ON S. ATHANASIUS, 'Library of the Fathers,' vol. viii. p. 445.

To the priest (τῷ ἱερεῖ). — To the officiating priest, not to the high priest, as supposed by Wolfius. The Syriac has 'to the priest.' — MIDDLETON, On the Greek Article, p. 143.

unto the priests. This leper healed—not merely restored to the civil and religious privileges of a Jew, but with his disease removed—would be a proof to the priests that a prophet had arisen who could heal the leprosy, who could take up their work where they had left it and perfect it, and, in short, that a new dispensation was begun. In all probability the priests had already done for this leper all they could, and had pronounced him clean, and restored him to his place in the congregation, still his leprosy was unhealed, and clung to him as closely as ever. The thoughts¹ which this testimony ought to have suggested to the priests were such as the following: that Jesus was He whom He claimed to be, the Messiah, the Son of God; that the kingdom of heaven which He preached was henceforth to supersede the economy through which He had hitherto dispensed His blessings to man. In this leper they might behold the difference between the power which He had formerly given to them, His ministers under the Law, and the power which He would henceforth give to the Apostles, His ministers under the kingdom of heaven. Under the Law no authority had been given to them to heal the leper, but merely to declare when he was clean and when he was unclean. Under the kingdom of heaven, He would give power and authority to His ministers to convey life and health.

The comparison² which Jesus suggested was not between His own ministry and that of the priests under the Law, but between His ministry, as carried on by the priests, and His ministry which was henceforth to be carried on by the Apostles whom He had lately chosen. Both ministries were His: both that of the priests and that of the Apostles; both had been appointed by Him, but for different times, and to convey different gifts. The priests under the Law had been the medium of a legal and conventional cleanness, so to speak, and of restoration to the life and privilege of a Jew, but the Apostles were to be the medium of an actual cleansing, of a radical purification.

The instance in which Jesus had exerted His power to heal and had displayed this new gift to man was in the body, and so was visible to the eyes of the priests. But, in the case of the paralytic man, He taught them that it was as easy to cleanse the soul, to forgive the sins of the soul, as it was to heal the body, and that neither could be done except by God, or one commissioned by God to do this. The priests under the Law could not heal the leprosy of the body, simply because they were not appointed to do this; the Apostles could heal the leprosy of the soul, and for the reason that they were appointed for this purpose.

S. Mark records the charge which Jesus gave to this leper, not to speak of his cure to any one, in stronger terms than S. Matthew does. He also adds that the leper disobeyed Him, and began to publish it abroad so much as to cause interruption to Him in His work of healing. It does not appear whether the leper did this from any misapprehension of the strictness of the charge, or from over-zeal for the honour of Jesus, or from the overflow of his joy at being cured of his leprosy. Judging from his former conduct, and from the strong belief which he showed in Jesus as the Messiah, we may fairly conclude that his intentions were right, though his action was wrong, as being contrary to the command of Jesus.

The event which S. Matthew relates next after the healing of the leper, is the healing of the centurion's servant, though the former took place before the delivery of His sermon on the Mount, and the latter immediately after.

THE HEALING OF A CENTURION'S SERVANT.

S. MATTHEW viii. 5-13.

- 5 And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum,
there came unto Him a centurion beseeching Him, 6 And saying, Lord, my servant (ὁ παῖς μου) lieth at home, sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

S. LUKE vii. 1-10.

- 1 Now when He had ended all His sayings in the audience of the people,
He entered into Capernaum.
2 And a certain centurion's servant (δούλος), who was dear unto him,
was sick and ready to die.
3 And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto Him
the elders of the Jews, beseeching Him, that He would come and heal his servant (τὸν δούλον αὐτοῦ).
4 And when they came to Jesus, they besought Him instantly, saying, that he was worthy for whom He should do this:
5 For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxv.; vol. i. p. 362.
Tertullian, adv. Marc. iv. 9; vol. ii. p. 376.
S. Ambrose, in Luc. v. 14; vol. ii. p. 1637.
S. Jerome, in Matt. viii. 4; vol. vii. p. 51.

² S. Augustine, in Quæst. Evang. ii. 40; vol. iii. p. 1355.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 19; vol. vii. p. 118.
S. Chrysostom, de Sacerdotio, iii. 6.

S. MATTHEW viii. 5-13.

- 7 And Jesus saith unto him,
I will come and heal him.
- 8 The centurion answered and said,
Lord,
I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof:
- but speak the word only,
and my servant (ὁ παῖς μου) shall be healed.
- 9 For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me:
and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth:
and to another, Come, and he cometh:
and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.
- 10 When Jesus heard it,
He marvelled,
and said to them that followed,
Verily I say unto you, I have not found
so great faith, no, not in Israel.
- 11 And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.
- 12 But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness:
there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.
- 13 And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee.
And his servant (ὁ παῖς αὐτοῦ) was healed in the selfsame hour.

S. LUKE vii. 1-10.

- 6 Then Jesus went with them. And when He was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to Him, saying unto Him, Lord, trouble not Thyself: for I am not worthy that Thou shouldest enter
under my roof:
- 7 Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee:
but say in a word,
and my servant (ὁ παῖς μου) shall be healed.
- 8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers,
and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth;
and to another, Come, and he cometh:
and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.
- 9 When Jesus heard these things
He marvelled
at him, and turned Him about,
and said unto the people that followed Him,
I say unto you, I have not found
so great faith, no, not in Israel.
- 10 And they that were sent, returning to the house,
found the servant (τὸν δοῦλον) whole that had been sick.

5. ¶ And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto Him a centurion, beseeching Him,^a

S.V. When he was: S.V. Capernaum.
Vulg. Cum autem introisset Capernaum.

6. And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

S.V. omits Lord.
Vulg. Et ait illi Dominus.

7. And Jesus saith unto Him, I will come and heal him.

V. omits And: S.V. He saith: S.V. follow me, I will come.
Vulg. Et ait illi Jesus: Ego veniam, et curabo eum.

8. The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed.

S.V. But the centurion.
Vulg. Et respondens centurio.

9. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

S.V. a man set under authority.
Vulg. Nam et ego homo sum sub potestate constitutus.

Two of the Evangelists record this healing of the centurion's servant, and though their relations vary slightly in the details, it is only a case of greater or less fulness in the account. There is no contradiction between them. S. Matthew says that the centurion entreated Jesus; and S. Luke says that he sent the elders of the Jews to Jesus. Two ways have been proposed of reconciling this apparent discrepancy in their narrative. One way¹ is to fill up S. Luke's account from that by S. Matthew, and to suppose that the centurion first sent his friends, the elders, to Jesus to entreat for him, and that, at their request, Jesus set out to accompany them, and that, as He was approaching Capernaum, the centurion himself went to meet Him, and then declared His own unworthiness, and his faith in the power of Jesus to heal, though absent from the place. According to this explanation,

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. xvi. 1; vol. i. p. 370.
Theophylact, in Matt. vii. 5; vol. i. p. 38.

Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 5; vol. i. p. 313.

^a And when Jesus.—On the interpolation of Ἰησοῦς here, see Scrivener's 'Introduction to New Testament Criticism,' p. 11; also quoted in this 'Commentary on S. John,' i. 43.

S. Matthew relates what the centurion did in this matter personally, while S. Luke confines himself to what he did through his friends, the elders. The other way¹ is to suppose that the centurion entreated Jesus not personally, as might appear from S. Matthew, but through the elders of the Jews, as S. Luke states. For a man to be represented as doing himself what he does through the agency of others was a mode of speaking much more common in ancient times than in modern.

By comparing S. Matthew and S. Luke together, we gather that the centurion sent the elders of the Jews to ask Jesus to heal his servant, and that the elders of their own will added the request that He would come and heal him.² Such was the faith and humility of the centurion, that he believed that Jesus could heal his servant as well absent as present, and that He would do his prayer to him accordingly. The elders of the Jews having less faith, and great love for the centurion, in order to make more sure of a cure, requested Jesus to come to him.

The centurion justly argued that if he, who was under the orders of some higher officer, had the power to order others and they performed his bidding, how much more could Jesus, who was under the command of none, who had none higher than Himself, how much more could He bid the palsy depart from his servant, and He would be obeyed.

Wonder or admiration is the effect produced by seeing, or hearing, something new or unknown before.³ So far as this was possible in the case of Jesus, the God Man, such admiration was excited in Him by the words of the centurion.

10. When Jesus heard it, He marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

V. non in uano in Israel.
Vulg. non inveni tantam fidem in Israel.

11. And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.

12. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.⁴

S*. shall come out into.
Vulg. Fili autem regni eicientur.

13. And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour.

S.V. Go thy way, as thou: S.V. and the servant: S*. in the selfsame hour. And the centurion returning to his house in that same hour found the servant whole.

Vulg. Vade, et sicut . . . et sanatus est puer in illa hora.

It is not easy to see how this centurion had displayed greater faith than some of the patriarchs had shown in ancient times; than Abraham, for instance, or Moses, than John the Baptist, or the Blessed Virgin, in later times. It has therefore been proposed⁴ to explain our Saviour's words as limited to the time in which He had been exercising His ministry, and to the crowds among whom He had taught; or else to understand them as implying that this centurion had shown greater faith than any in Israel, in proportion to the instruction which he had received.

From the great faith and humility of this centurion, who was a Gentile, Jesus takes occasion to foretell the call of the Gentiles and the rejection of the Jews. Under the imagery of a feast, or supper, He describes the blessings, the happiness, which the Gentiles on their conversion to the faith in Jesus should enjoy, their perfect equality with the most eminent of the Jewish patriarchs, and the punishment of the descendants of Abraham who continue to disbelieve in Him: though "the sons of the kingdom," to whom the kingdom was promised, they shall be shut out from this feast.

The feasting time of the ancients was the evening meal. Then there would be no interruption from the labours of the day, but one continued, unbroken, rest and enjoyment. The time of the feast also supplies another image, for the punishment of those who disbelieve in Him. Instead of sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, from whom they boasted to be descended, they should be thrust out into the darkness that reigned all around. Their punishment is described in terms that convey to man an idea of the severest suffering, mental and bodily, "weeping and gnashing of teeth."

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 20; vol. iii. p. 1100.
S. Augustine, contra Faust. xxxiii. 7, 8; vol. viii. p. 515.
Venerable Bede, in Matt. viii. 5; vol. iii. p. 40.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. xlv. p. 354.
Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 5; vol. i. p. 120.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 6; vol. viii. p. 190.

³ There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth (ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων).—This is another of the passages which might induce an English reader, but superficially acquainted with the Greek language, to suppose that its Article may be inserted ad libitum. The expression occurs in the New Testament seven times, and always in the same form: the usage, therefore, cannot be supposed to be arbitrary; and the reason why the Articles are inserted is plain. The weeping and gnashing of teeth spoken of is that of the persons last mentioned; and the sense

³ S. Augustine, de Genes. contr. Manich. i. 8; vol. iii. p. 180.

⁴ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 15. art. 8; vol. iv. p. 159.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 355.

Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 10; vol. i. p. 122.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 10; vol. viii. p. 192.

is, "there shall they weep and gnash their teeth." Without the Articles the proposition would have asserted only that some persons should there weep: which falls short of the real meaning. Our English translations, however, in general say nothing more. The Complut. omits the first Article, probably, because it had been observed that in propositions, which merely affirm or deny existence, the noun is commonly anarthrous. Here, however, the case is different: the affirmation terminates not in ἔσται, but in ἐκεῖ.—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 143. ["But

S. Matthew's love of classification, of grouping together events that happened near the same place, or that were of a like nature, has already been pointed out. This chapter is a striking specimen of his habit. For by comparing S. Matthew with the other two Evangelists (S. Mark i. 22, &c., and S. Luke iv. 32, &c.), and on the supposition that S. Matthew and S. Luke are both recording the same Sermon on the Mount, we are warranted in saying, that of the two miracles already narrated in this chapter, one was wrought before the Sermon on the Mount, and the other after. Many commentators have concluded that the events related from verse 14 of this chapter to chapter ix. 34, all took place before the delivery of the Sermon on the Mount, and that the proper place for the narrative contained in verse 14 to chapter ix. 34 would be in chapter iv. after verse 22.²

Granting that S. Matthew and S. Luke record the same

Sermon on the Mount, the arrangement of the events, described by them as happening about the same time, cannot both be in the order in which they took place. For S. Luke relates that Jesus had chosen His twelve Apostles before He delivered His Sermon on the Mount, and this would appear from the general tenor of that discourse to be the right order; while S. Matthew does not relate his own call to be an Apostle until after the Sermon on the Mount, and not until chapter ix. 9.

After Jesus had called Peter and Andrew to leave their fishing and follow Him, as related in chapter iv. 18, He entered into Capernaum and taught in the synagogue on the sabbath day, and healed a man with an unclean spirit (Mark i. 20, &c.). From thence He proceeded to the home of Simon Peter, and healed his wife's mother.

JESUS HEALS SIMON'S MOTHER-IN-LAW OF A FEVER.

S. MATTHEW viii. 14-15.

S. MARK i. 29-31.

S. LUKE iv. 38, 39.

14

And when Jesus was come into Peter's house,

He saw his wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever.

15

And He
touched her hand,

and
the fever left her:
and she arose,
and ministered unto them.

29

And forthwith, when they were come
out of the synagogue,
they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30

But Simon's wife's mother
lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell Him of her.

31

And He came and took her by the hand,
and lifted her up;
and immediately
the fever left her,
and she ministered unto them.

38

And He arose
out of the synagogue,
and entered into Simon's house.

39

And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever;
and they besought Him for her.
And He stood over her, and rebuked the fever,

and
it left her:
and immediately she arose
and ministered unto them.

14. ¶ And when Jesus was come into Peter's house, He saw his wife's^a mother laid, and sick of a fever.

15. And He touched her hand, and the fever left her: and she arose, and ministered unto them.

S. N. unto him.
Vulg. et ministrabat eis.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxviii. p. 193.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 14; vol. viii. p. 194.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sec. xx. &c., vol. i.

"But more especially are the omissions of the Article frequent in those passages which relate to the Second Advent and its accompanying terrors or glories. The imagery of this great crisis was definitely conceived, and as such the Apostles refer to it . . . Another instance, not very dissimilar, occurs in the Gospels. The same expression is used six times in S. Matthew (viii. 12; xiii. 42, 50; xlii. 13; xxiv. 51; xxv. 30), and once in S. Luke (xiii. 28) to describe the despair and misery of the condemned: ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθῆος καὶ ὁ θρῆνισμὸς τῶν ὀδυνῶν, where the rendering should be corrected into 'There shall be the wailing and the gnashing of

p. 217, &c.

Robinson, Harmony of the Greek New Testament, p. 26, &c.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 551.

teeth.'"—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of the New Testament,' p. 105.

^a The wife of S. Peter.—"Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromat. vii. 11; vol. ii. p. 488, Migne) records a tradition of his own day, that the wife of S. Peter went before him to the death during the persecution raised by Nero, and that on seeing her led forth the Apostle expressed himself pleased that she had received the call, and was on her way home; and, addressing her by name, bid her be of good cheer, and remember the Lord."—J. J. BLUNT, 'History of the Christian Church,' p. 227.

Bethsaida, which was not far from Capernaum, was Peter's native place (John i. 44); but both S. Mark and S. Luke imply that this miracle was wrought in Capernaum, and probably in the house of his wife's mother. S. Mark and S. Luke both give several additional particulars respecting this miracle which S. Matthew does not mention. From them we learn that it was immediately after leaving the synagogue that our Saviour entered into Peter's house; from S. Mark, that it was the sabbath day on which He entered the synagogue, and that James and John were with Him; and from S. Luke that they besought Him for her. This is a specimen of the way in which the Evangelists usually differ from each other.

One supplies particulars which the other omits, without any real contradiction in their accounts.

It was the sabbath day when Jesus healed Peter's wife's mother, and from the report of this miraculous cure others were brought to Him for a similar purpose, but not until the even when the sun was set, that is, not until the Sabbath was ended. In the opinion of the Jews, the rest enjoined on the Sabbath would have been broken by carrying the sick, even for the purpose of being healed. The Sabbath began at sunset on Friday, and would be over at sunset on Saturday. After that they brought their sick to Jesus.

JESUS WORKS DIVERS MIRACLES OF HEALING, &c.

S. MATTHEW viii. 16-17.

- 16 When the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils:
- and He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick:
- 17 that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

S. MARK i. 32-34.

- 32 And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto Him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.
- 33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.
- 34 And He healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils:
- and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew Him.

S. LUKE iv. 40-41.

- 40 Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him: And He laid His hands on every one of them, and healed them.
- 41 And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And He rebuking them, suffered them not to speak: for they knew that He was Christ.

16. ¶ When the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils: and He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick:

Vulg. ejiciet et spiritus, verbo.

17. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

“Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.”

Vulg. Ut adimpleretur quod dictum est per Isaiam prophetam, dicentem.

In the cases here cured, the Evangelists say nothing of the condition which Jesus usually required from those who came to be healed, viz., faith in His power to heal; and which He required either from the sick themselves, or in cases where that was impossible, from those who brought them to Him. In general, where an individual is healed, this is expressly mentioned. Here multitudes were healed, and of divers diseases, and the Evangelist contents himself with stating the manner in which he healed them, that is, through contact with Himself, the God Incarnate: He laid His hands on them.

The sickness of the soul and the sickness of the body are so intimately connected together that the same words may be used of both. The disease of the body is the result, the fruit of the disease of the soul. They are related to each other as cause and effect. In Scripture language they are bound up together. Isaiah is enumerating the several qualities of the Messiah, and in one set of words he foretells how He would carry, or heal, the sickness of the soul and the sickness of the body. S. Matthew here records the fulfilment of his words in one sense, in the healing of the body; and S. Peter (1 Peter ii. 24) refers to their fulfilment in the other sense, by the healing of the soul. In the one sense Jesus fulfilled these words in His daily round of mercy; and in the other He fulfilled them in His agony in the garden, and in His death on the Cross.

After Jesus had healed Peter's wife's mother, and the others that were diseased, and before He crossed over the lake into the country of the Gergesenes, He held a conversation with several individuals on the subject of following Him. These are also related by S. Luke (ix. 57, &c.), with several additional particulars, which S. Matthew omits, but with nothing to indicate the time at which they were held. S. Luke also goes on to relate another conversation on the same subject, which S. Matthew does not give.

JESUS REPLIES TO A SCRIBE WHO WOULD FOLLOW HIM, &c.

S. MATTHEW viii. 18-22.

- 18 Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about Him,
He gave commandment to depart unto the other side.
19 And a certain scribe came, and said unto Him, Master, I will follow Thee
whithersoever Thou goest.
20 And Jesus saith unto him,
The foxes have holes,
and the birds of the air have nests;
but the Son of Man hath not
where to lay His head.
21 And another of His disciples said unto Him,
Lord, suffer me first to go
and bury my father.
22 But Jesus said unto him,
Follow Me;
and let the dead bury their dead.

S. LUKE ix. 57-62.

- 57 And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way,
a certain man said unto Him,
Lord, I will follow Thee
whithersoever Thou goest.
58 And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes,
and birds of the air have nests;
but the Son of Man hath not
where to lay His head.
59 And He said unto another, Follow Me.
But he said,
Lord, suffer me first to go
and bury my father.
60 Jesus said unto him,
Let the dead bury their dead:
but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.
61 And another also said,
Lord, I will follow Thee;
but let me first go bid them farewell,
which are at home at my house.
62 And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

18. ¶ Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about Him, He gave commandment to depart unto the other side.

^{S^t. saw multitudes. V. saw a multitude.}
^{Vulg. Videns autem Iesus turbas multas.}

19. And a certain scribe came, and said unto Him, Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest.

20. And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man^a hath not where to lay His head.

^a The Son of Man.—“As it had been addressed to the prophet Ezekiel, the title Son of Man seemed to contrast the frail and short-lived life of men with the boundless strength and the eternal years of the infinite God; and as applied to Himself by Jesus, it doubtless expresses a real Humanity, a perfect and penetrating community of nature and feeling with the lot of human kind. Thus, when our Lord says that authority was given Him to execute judgment because He is the Son of Man, it is plain that the point of the reason lies, not in His being Messiah, but in His being Human. He displays a genuine Humanity which could deem nothing human strange, and could be touched with a feeling of the infirmities of the race which He was to judge. But the title Son of Man means more than this in its application to our Lord. It does not merely assert His real incorporation with our kind; it exalts Him indefinitely above us all as the representative, the ideal, the pattern Man. He is, in a special sense, the Son of Mankind, the genuine offspring of the race. His is the Human Life which does justice to the Idea of Humanity. All human history tends to Him or radiates from Him. He is the point in which humanity finds its unity; as S. Irenæus says, He ‘recapitulates’ it. He closes the earlier history of our race, He inaugurates its future. Nothing local, transient, individualizing, national, sectarian, dwarfs the proportions of His world-embracing Character; He rises above the parentage, the blood, the narrow horizon which bounded, as it seemed, His Human Life; He is the Archetypal Man, in Whose presence distinctions of race, intervals of ages, types of civilization, degrees of mental culture, are as nothing. This sense of the title seems to be implied in such passages as that in which He contrasts ‘the foxes which have holes, and the birds of the air which have nests,’ with ‘the Son of Man Who hath not where to lay His head.’ It is not the official Messiah, as such; but ‘the fairest among the children of men,’ the natural Prince and Leader, the very prime and flower of human kind, Whose lot is thus harder than that of the lower creatures, and in Whose humiliation humanity itself is humbled below the level of its natural dignity.”—CAXON LIDDON, ‘Bampton Lectures,’ i. p. 8.

As there is nothing else to guide us to the object which this Scribe proposed to himself in following Jesus, we are left to conjecture what was the nature of his motives from the answer which He made to him. Jesus had not expressly called him to follow Him. His proposal was not therefore from a sense of duty. It is not improbable that Jesus had some reference to the cunning and guile that lurked in the Scribe's motives in the illustration which He gave, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests."

This Scribe had witnessed the crowds that were collected around Him after He had healed the sick, he saw the estimation in which He was held by the people, and he may have reasoned that, if he associated himself with Jesus, he should have some share in His fame, and might reap some solid worldly advantage through the working of His miraculous cures, and through the fame which it brought. Anyhow, we may gather from the answer which Jesus made to him, and from the gentle rebuke it contained, that his motives were corrupt. The general opinion is, that he did not carry his proposal into execution. He probably saw, by the answer which our Saviour made him, that he could not gain his intended object, and that his motives were already understood.¹

It is not clear whether Jesus used the expression "the Son of Man" here because it had some special application to this case, or because it was the term which best described Himself as the God Incarnate, the Word made flesh.

21. And another of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

S. V. of the disciples.
Vulg. de discipulis ejus.

22. But Jesus said unto him, Follow Me; and let the dead bury their dead.

S. But he saith: V. But Jesus saith.
Vulg. Jesus autem ait illi . . . et dimitte mortuos sepelire mortuos suos.

One striking difference between this case and the last is that Jesus, as we learn from S. Luke, had first bidden him to follow Him. It may be that He had seen in this hearer such sincerity and honesty of heart as fitted him to be a follower of the Son of Man, who had not where to lay His head. Such was not the case with the Scribe. He, unbidden, proposed to follow Jesus, probably not from any love to Him, or from admiration of His teaching, but to gain some worldly advantage. Even the cause of delay which this man urged, indicated in him no feeling of selfishness. It was a part of filial piety, and urged to all appearance honestly and not as an excuse. Some² have thought that his words do not prove that his father was already dead or even very ill, but that he thought himself bound not to leave his father so long as he was living. The more general opinion³ is that his father was already dead. But Jesus, wishing to remove him from further temptation to delay, bids him go at once to preach the Gospel, and leave the dead in sin and unbelief to bury those among them that were dead as to the body. There is evidently a play upon the word "dead,"⁴ applied first to those who were spiritually dead, and next to those who were dead by the departure of the soul from the body. According to S. Luke, Jesus repeats His commands. Before his answer He bids him follow Him, and after it He bids him go and preach the Gospel.

A tradition is mentioned by a writer⁵ in the early part of the third century, that Philip was the disciple here called. Though Philip had been called some time before this (John i. 43), it has been supposed that it might still be true of him: that he may have requested leave of Jesus to go and bury his father, and that He, foreseeing the temptation and delay to which he would be exposed, may have withheld the permission.⁶

Looking at S. Matthew alone, we should say that the crowds, from which Jesus now wished to depart, had been collected by the fame of His healing the sick, the lepers, and those that were possessed with devils. But if we take S. Mark as our guide as to the order of events here, we should say that this was the concourse which had been gathered together to hear His parables.

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. viii. 20; vol. i. p. 957.

S. Jerome, in Matt. viii. 20; vol. i. p. 52.

S. Augustine, Sermo C (alias 7 de Verbis Dom.), i.; vol. v. p. 602.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxvii.; vol. i. p. 388.

Theophylact, in Matt. viii. 20; vol. i. p. 40.

Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 20; vol. i. p. 323.

² Theophylact, in Luc. ix. 60; vol. i. p. 341.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxvii.; vol. i. p. 390.

S. Basil, Constitut. Monastica, cap. xx.; vol. iii. p. 1393.

Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 21; vol. i. p. 325.

Maldonatus, in Matt. viii. 21; vol. i. p. 126.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 21; vol. iii. p. 199.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxvii.; vol. i. p. 390.

S. Augustine, quest. vi. in Matt.; vol. iii. p. 1365.

S. Jerome, in Matt. viii. 22; vol. vii. p. 53.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. ix. 60; vol. ii. p. 1708.

⁵ Clemens Alexand. Stromat. iii. 4; vol. i. p. 1129.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. viii. 21; vol. viii. p. 199.

JESUS ENTERS A SHIP AND CALMS A STORM OF WIND ON THE LAKE.

S. MATTHEW viii. 23-27.

S. MARK iv. 35-41.

S. LUKE viii. 22-25.

- 23 And when He was entered into a ship,
His disciples followed Him.
- 24 And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves :
but He was asleep.
And His disciples came to Him,
and awoke Him,
saying, Lord, save us :
we perish.
And He saith unto them,
Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith ?
Then He arose,
and rebuked the winds and the sea :
and there was a great calm.
- 27 But the men marvelled,
saying,
What manner of man is this,
that even the winds
and the sea obey Him !
- 35 And the same day, when the even was come, He saith unto them,
Let us pass over unto the other side.
- 36 And when they had sent away the multitude,
they took Him even as He was in the ship.
- And there were also with Him other little ships.
- 37 And there arose
a great storm of wind,
and the waves beat into the ship,
so that it was now full.
- 38 And He was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow :
and they awoke Him,
and say unto Him, Master,
carest Thou not that we perish ?
- 39 And He arose,
and rebuked the wind,
and said unto the sea,
Peace, be still.
And the wind ceased,
and there was a great calm.
- 40 And He said unto them,
Why are ye so fearful ?
how is it that ye have no faith ?
- 41 And they feared exceedingly,
and said one to another,
What manner of man is this,
that even the wind
and the sea obey Him ?
- 22 Now it came to pass
on a certain day,
that He went into a ship
with His disciples :
and He said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake.
- 23 And they launched forth.
But as they sailed He fell asleep :
and there came down
a storm of wind on the lake ;
and they were
filled with water,
and were in jeopardy.
- 24 And they came to Him,
and awoke Him,
saying, Master, Master,
we perish.
- 25 Then He arose,
and rebuked the wind
and the raging of the water :
and they ceased,
and there was a calm.
And He said unto them,
Where is your faith ?
And they being afraid, wondered,
saying one to another,
What manner of man is this !
for He commandeth
even the winds and water, and they obey Him.

23. ¶ And when He was entered into a ship,
His disciples followed Him.

S. into the ship.
Vulg. in naviculam.

24. And, behold, there arose a great tempest^a in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves : but He was asleep.

^a There arose a great tempest.—“Small as the lake is, and placid, in general, as a molten mirror, I have repeatedly seen it quiver, and leap, and boil like a caldron when driven by fierce winds from the eastern mountains ; and the waves ran high—high

25. And His disciples came to Him, and awoke Him, saying, Lord, save us : we perish.

S. V. And they came to him. S. V. save : we perish.
Vulg. Et accesserunt ad eum discipuli ejus . . . Domine, salva nos, perimus.

26. And He saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith ? Then He arose, enough to fill or to ‘cover’ the ships, as S. Matthew has it.”—THOMSON, ‘The Land and the Book,’ p. 392.

See description of a storm on the Lake in the Introductory Note to John vi.

and rebuked the winds and the sea ; and there was a great calm.

S*. the wind.
Vulg. Et dixit eis Iesus . . . ventis.

27. But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him !

Vulg. Porro homines mirati sunt.

Though Jesus had been asleep as a man, He arose and commanded the sea as God, and there was a great calm. But the men marvelled. The term, "the men," may include not only the disciples, who are seldom, if ever, spoken of as simply "the men," but also the sailors in their own ship, as well as in the ships that accompanied them.¹

One of the greatest confirmations of the truth of the Gospel narrative is the difficulty which the Apostles had all along in realizing the true character of Jesus, the God Incarnate. Had He worked unseen, removed from their sight and shrouded in mystery, they might not have experienced the same difficulty. But when they saw Him, in appearance a man like themselves, mixing among them almost on terms of equality, and subject to the same cravings of nature as themselves, they were apt to overlook His claim to be God. They might keep this in mind so long as they saw Him healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, or driving out devils from those that were possessed. But when they saw Him asleep in the midst of the storm, they forgot that he was God as well as man, and they address Him as if He were ignorant or heedless of their danger. Their want of trust in His power arose from their want of an ever-abiding, perfect belief that He was God. Such faith in Him was not created by one act, but by many, and after long intercourse with Him.

To the disciples this incident was another confirmation of their faith in the nature and power of Jesus ; to the Church it is a lesson for all time. As an emblem of the Church, this ship foretells that storms and tempests will arise, which to all appearance will well-nigh overwhelm her. All human means may fail to afford hope of surviving the storm. Despair may seize on all around. Men may direct the ship whose faith in the Godhead of Jesus, and in His supernatural working, may be defective. But the only way of safety lies in prayer to Him, in trust in His power to calm the storm in His own time. Peace and tranquillity will follow, and the storm will have been but another trial, only a strengthening of their faith in Jesus, as the Word made flesh, and in His supernatural power over all the elements of strife.

THE TWO DEMONIACS OF GADARA.

S. MATTHEW viii. 28-34.		S. MARK v. 1-20.		S. LUKE viii. 26-39.
28	And when He was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes,	1	And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.	26	And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.
	there met Him two possessed with devils,	2	And when He was come out of the ship, immediately there met Him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,	27	And when He went forth to land, there met Him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and wore no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.
	coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way.	3	who had his dwelling among the tombs ;
			and no man could bind him, no, not with chains :
		4	Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces : neither could any man tame him.
		5	And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.
		6	But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran	28	When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before Him,
29	And, behold, they cried out, saying,	7	and worshipped Him, and cried with a loud voice, and said,		and with a loud voice said,

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. viii. 27 ; vol. vii. p. 54. Venerable Bede, in Matt. viii. 27 ; vol. iii. p. 43.

S. MATTHEW viii.

S. MARK v.

S. LUKE viii.

What have we to do with Thee,
Jesus, Thou Son
of God?
art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?

What have I to do with Thee,
Jesus, Thou Son
of the most High God?
I adjure Thee by God,
that Thou torment me not.
8 For He said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

What have I to do with Thee,
Jesus, Thou Son
of God most High?
I beseech Thee,
torment me not.

29 (For He had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man.
For oftentimes it had caught him :
and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters ; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil
into the wilderness.)

9 And He asked him,
What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion : for we are many.

30 And Jesus asked him, saying,
What is thy name? And he said, Legion : because many devils were entered into him.

10 And he besought Him much that He would not send them away out of the country.

31 And they besought Him that He would not command them to go out into the deep.

11 Now there was there nigh unto the mountains
a great herd of swine feeding.

32 And there was there

12 And all the devils besought Him,
saying,
Send us
into the swine,
that we may enter into them.

an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain :
and they besought Him
that He would suffer them to enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out,
and entered into the swine :
and
the herd ran violently down a steep place into
the sea,
(they were about two thousand :)
and were choked in the sea.

33 And He suffered them. Then went the devils out of the man,
and entered into the swine :
and
the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake,
and were choked.

14 And they that

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went
and told it in the city
and in the country.

fed the swine fled,
and told it in the city,
and in the country.

And they went out to see what it was that was done.
15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting,

35 Then they went out to see what was done ;
and came to Jesus,
and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind :

and clothed, and in his right mind :
and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

16 And they that saw it told them how it befell to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17 And they began to pray Him
to depart out of their coasts.

37 Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought Him
to depart from them ;
for they were taken with great fear :
and He went up into the ship,
and returned back again.

18 And when He was come into the ship,

38 Now and when they saw Him, they besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts.

S. MATTHEW viii.

S. MARK v.

S. LUKE viii.

he that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him
that he might be with Him.
19 Howbeit Jesus suffered him not,
but saith unto him,
Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee,
and hath had compassion on thee.
20 And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis
how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

the man out of whom the devils were departed besought Him
that he might be with Him:
but Jesus sent him away,
saying,
39 Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee.
And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city
how great things Jesus had done unto him.

28. ¶ And when He was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there met Him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way.

S*. When they were come: S*. of the Gazarenes: V. of the Gadarenes.
Vulg. Et cum venisset trans fretum in regionem Gerasenorum.

29. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do* with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God? art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?

S.V. omit Jesus: S*. to destroy us.
Vulg. Iesu fili Dei! Venisti hic ante tempus torquere nos?

30. And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding.

Vulg. non longe ab illis.

31. So the devils besought Him, saying, If Thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine.

S.V. Send us forth into the herd.
Vulg. Si ejicis nos hinc, mitte nos in gregem porcorum.

32. And He said unto them, Go.* And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine: and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.

S.V. into the swine: S.V. the whole herd (omit of swine) ran.
Vulg. in porcos, et ecce impetu abiit totus gregis per præceps in mare.

33. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils.

34. And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus: and when they saw Him, they besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts.

There are other instances besides this where S. Matthew speaks of two persons interested, where the other Evangelists mention only one. S. Matthew (xx. 30) says that two blind men were sitting by the wayside when Jesus passed; S. Mark mentions only blind Bartimæus. S. Matthew (xxvii. 44) and S. Mark (xv. 32) say that both the thieves reviled Him; S. Luke (xxiii. 39) speaks of only one as doing so. In all these instances the same principle of interpretation must be applied, namely, to supplement the least full account by any additional information which the other gives to it. Even in this very transaction we do not hesitate to fill up S. Matthew's account by many particulars from S. Mark and S. Luke, which he omits. These particulars vary in importance and in their likeness to what the others have stated.

S. Matthew may have related that there were two men possessed with devils, to show the greatness of the miracle. S. Mark and S. Luke may speak of only one, because he was so much more prominent as almost to throw the other into the shade.¹ His prominence may have consisted, as some think,² in the fact that he was more furious and ungovernable, and possessed by a greater number of spirits than the other, or he may have been a heathen, and so less likely to be healed than if he had been a Jew.

Many of the tombs in Palestine were small rooms with niches on each side, so as to contain a number of bodies,

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 24; vol. iii. p. 1104.
Venerable Bede, in Matt. viii. 28; vol. iii. p. 43.

* And He said unto them, Go (ἵνα γένηται).—"The imperative usually denotes an invitation or command, but sometimes mere permission or leave, as in 1 Cor. vii. 15. When, however, this acceptance is necessary, must be determined on hermeneutical and not on ² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxviii.; vol. i. p. 399.

Theophylact, in Matt. viii. 28; vol. i. p. 41.
Euthymius, in Matt. viii. 28; vol. i. p. 333.

grammatical grounds; and neither in Matt. viii. 32, on account of the parallel passage, Luke viii. 32, nor in John xiii. 27, or 1 Cor. xi. 6, must the imperative be taken as simply permissive."—WINER'S 'Grammar of N. T.,' p. 327.

often a whole family. In such places the possessed would have no difficulty in fixing his dwelling. Some¹ have thought that it was because they drove their victims to the tombs, and similar places of uncleanness, that these spirits were called unclean. An unclean spirit (πνεῦμα ἀκάθαρτον) was an evil spirit that frequented the tombs, &c.

Apart from the Gospel narratives, there is abundant evidence from Josephus² of the general belief in the reality of demoniacal possession, and in the frightful extent of it in the time of our Saviour. It is also plain from Origen³ that there were in early times two ways of accounting for the maladies of the demoniacs; some, such as the physicians of the time, attributing these maladies to natural causes, and others, with Origen himself, regarding them as the effect of a superhuman possession by a demon.

In the language of the New Testament a distinction is made between Satan, or the Devil, or the Tempter who tempted Jesus in the wilderness, and the evil spirits, which are represented as taking possession of the bodies of men. The former is called ὁ διάβολος, the devil, and the latter δαίμονιον, a demon. This distinction, which is always observed in the Greek, is neglected in the English Authorized Version, which renders them both alike by "devil." It is probable that the demon (δαίμονιον) was of a different nature from the devil (διάβολος), perhaps of an inferior nature. That the demon was an agent, or instrument, which the devil made use of to effect his objects, is clear from many passages. A woman afflicted with a spirit of infirmity (πνεῦμα ὀσφειᾶς) is said to have been bound by Satan (Luke xiii. 10). Those possessed by demons are said to be oppressed by the devil (Acts x. 38). The casting out of these demons from men is represented by our Saviour as synonymous with casting out Satan (Mark iii. 22, 23).

That so few cases should have been recorded in profane history, and only one or two in the Old Testament, while so many instances are related in the Gospels, have caused some to conclude that, in the time of our Saviour, the Jewish nation had reached their highest pitch of impiety, and were already reaping the curses pronounced against them in Levit. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii., and that they brought these devils among them, in a great measure, through their own means, by their arts of magic and divination, and invocation of devils. In the Acts of the Apostles (xix. 13) one remarkable instance of this is detailed at length. The entire subjection of these spirits to Jesus, and their utter helplessness in His presence, is manifest throughout. They seem drawn to Him by some irresistible influence, and are compelled to approach Him and to acknowledge His Godhead.

The degradation of the possessed is complete. So entirely had the devils taken possession of him, that his identity is almost lost in theirs. He gives the name of the devils, and he expresses their fears. Even if the name Legion is not to be understood literally, as indicating 6000, it must still mean a very large indefinite number, such a number as could take possession of the two thousand swine.

Lightfoot gives many quotations from rabbinical writers to show the nature of their Canons, and of the public feeling among the Jews against keeping swine. He then concludes that these swine either did not belong to Jews, or if they did, that they were kept for the purpose of being sold to Gentiles, probably to the Romans, who set store on the flesh of swine. He thinks the latter not very improbable, because it was not directly against the Law to have to do with swine when alive, though so strictly forbidden to eat them dead.

Of the present condition of evil spirits, little is known for certain. We gather from this case, that they were expecting a time when they should endure some more fearful punishment; that their present occupation and object was to torture God's creatures, chiefly man, and next, creatures inferior to man; that when not in possession of the bodies of some beings, a certain place of abode is assigned them (Luke viii. 31), here termed the deep (τὴν ἄβυσσον), which in all probability is not the place of their final punishment: for this is elsewhere described as a lake of fire and brimstone (Rev. xx. 10).

It may be that the inhabitants of Palestine, and especially of this district, required to be taught the consequences of diabolical possession in a more appreciable form than they could be, so long as this was confined to such injuries as they could work on the souls and bodies of these two men. The destruction of such an amount of valuable property would affect the owners in a way that nothing else would. A strong sense of the material loss and injury that might arise from possession by devils might induce them to avoid the arts and practices and vices that lead to it. These might be better known to them than they are to us at this day.

Their attention had thus been aroused to the subject of devils dwelling in the midst of them, and exercising almost unlimited power over them and their substance. But as yet they appear to attribute the destruction of their property to Jesus rather than to the devils, and in order to escape further loss they entreat Him to depart out of their country. This was the effect of their fears and of their imperfect knowledge of the whole transaction. When, therefore, the man that had been possessed, perhaps fearful lest, if he should remove from Jesus, the devils might again take possession of him, requests to remain with Him, Jesus bids him go home to his friends, and tell them how great things the Lord had done for him, and had compassion on him. His information would set the whole matter in its true light: it would lead them to see that the devils were the cause of their loss, and the proper object for their fears, not Jesus. S. Mark adds that the effect of His teaching in Decapolis was that "all men did marvel."

¹ Lightfoot, on Luke xiii. 11; vol. ii. p. 442.

² Josephus, Antiq. viii. 2, 5; vol. i. p. 339.

³ —, Whiston's trans. Antiq. viii. 2, 5, p. 216.

Josephus, Bell. Jud. vii. 6, 3; vol. ii. p. 1308.

—, Whiston's trans. B. J. vii. 6, 3, p. 771.

³ Origen, in Matt. sermons tract. v. c. 1105.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Uncleanness.—"After the rules for things clean and fit for sacrifice, the Lord cometh to give rules (Leviticus xi. xii. xiii. xiv. xv.) for things clean and fit to eat, and clean and fit to touch; for this was the tripartite distinction of clean or unclean in the Law. Every thing that was unclean to touch, was unclean to eat; but every thing that was unclean to eat, was not unclean to touch: every thing that was unclean to eat, was unclean^a to sacrifice; but every thing that was unclean to sacrifice, was not unclean to eat: for many things might be eaten which might not be sacrificed, and many things might be touched which might not be eaten. And under the Law about clean and unclean, there is exceeding much of the doctrine of sin and renovation touched: considerable in very many particulars.

"1. By the Law of Moses nothing was unclean to be touched while it was alive, but only man. A man in leprosy unclean to be touched (Levit. xiii.), and a woman in her separation (Levit. xii.); but dogs, swine, worms, &c., not unclean to be touched till they be dead (Levit. xi. 31).

"2. By the Law of Moses uncleanness had several degrees, and leprosy was the greatest. There was uncleanness for a day, as by touching a dead beast; for a week, as by touching a dead man; for a month, as a woman after child-birth; and for a year or more, as leprosy.

"3. Every priest had equal privilege and calling to judge of the leprosy, as well as the high priest.

"4. The priests that were judges of leprosy could not be tainted with it.

"5. The priests could not make any man clean, but only pronounce him clean.

"6. He that was leprous all over, and no place free, was to be pronounced clean. For it appeared that all the poison was come forth, and the danger of infecting others was past; but he that had any part that was not scabby over, he was unclean. He that appears before God in any of his own righteousness, like the proud Pharisee, he hath his answer in that parable: but that humble confession of a poor sinner that shows him leprous all over, like that of the publican, obtains the best answer.

"7. The leper that was cleansed had not his disease healed; but, the danger of the infection being over, he was restored to the society of men again: so that he was not so much clean unto himself, as unto the congregation."—LIGHTFOOT on Leviticus xi. xii. xiii. xiv.; vol. i. p. 30.

CHAPTER IX.

[2. Christ curing one sick of the palsy, 9. callth Matthew from the receipt of custom, 10. cateth with publicans and sinners, 11. defendeth His disciples for not fasting, 20. cureth the bloody issue, 23. raiseth from death Jairus' daughter, 27. giveth sight to two blind men, 32. healeth a dumb man possessed of a devil, 36. and hath compassion of the multitude.]

[Vulg. Paralyticum curat, scribis murmurantibus quod dixisset remissa illi peccata: vocat Matthæum publicanum, et respondet phariseis murmurantibus quod cum publicanis ederet, quodque ipse discipuli non jejunarent: mulierem a sanguinis profusio liberat: filium principis mortuam suscitât: visu duobus cæcis restituit, demoniacum mutum sanat: et ubique prædicantis omnes sanat infirmitates, dicens multam esse messem, paucos vero operarios.]

I. And He entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into His own city.

The verse which stands the first in this chapter has no connection with the words that follow, but belongs to the preceding chapter.¹ As the end of the former chapter, it relates what Jesus did after the Gergesenes had besought Him to depart out of their country. As the beginning of this chapter, it would connect His healing of the two men possessed with devils with His healing of this man sick of the palsy, as two consecutive events; though we gather from S. Mark and S. Luke that this was not the case.

The city here called His own, and which He had left when He crossed over to the country of the Gergesenes, was doubtless Capernaum,² though some have thought it might mean Nazareth.³ Three cities were dignified with the title of His own city: Bethlehem, because He was born there; Nazareth, because He was brought up there; and Capernaum, because He chiefly dwelt there during the time of His Ministry (iv. 13).

JESUS HEALS A MAN SICK OF THE PALSÝ.

S. MATTHEW ix. 2-8.

S. MARK ii. 1-12.

S. LUKE v. 17-26.

1 Again He entered into Capernaum, after some days: and it was noised that He was in the house.

2 And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door; and He preached the word unto them.

2 And, behold, they brought to Him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed:

3 And they come unto Him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto Him

17 And it came to pass on a certain day, as He was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the Law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

18 And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy:

and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before Him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xxxix. vol. i. p. 250.

Dean Alford, Greek Testament, on Matt. ix. 1. Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 59. McClellan, New Testament, vol. i. pp. 552 and 561.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxix. ; vol. i. p. 408. Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 1; vol. i. p. 42.

Euthymius, in Matt. ix. 1; vol. i. p. 341.

S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1105.

Erasmus, in Matt. ix. 1; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 283.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxi. p. 210.

Maldonatus, in Matt. ix. 1; vol. i. p. 132.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ix. 1; vol. viii. p. 204.

Grotius, in Matt. ix. 1; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 290.

Bengel, in Matt. ix. 1; p. 56.

³ S. Jerome, in Matt. ix. 1; vol. vii. p. 54.

S. MATTHEW ix.

S. MARK ii.

S. LUKE v.

for the press,

they uncovered the roof where He was :
and when they had broken it up,
they let down the bed

wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

because of the multitude,
they went upon the housetop,

and let him down through the tiling with his couch and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy ; Son,

be of good cheer ;
thy sins be forgiven thee.
And, behold, certain of the scribes

said within themselves,
This man
blasphemeth.

And Jesus

knowing their thoughts
said,

Wherefore think ye evil
in your hearts ?

For whether is easier, to say,

Thy sins be forgiven thee ;
or to say, Arise,

and walk ?

But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power
on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the sick of the palsy,)

Arise, take up thy bed, and go
unto thine house.

And he arose,

and departed to his house.

But when the multitudes
saw it, they marvelled,
and glorified God,
which had given such power unto men.

When Jesus saw their faith, He said unto the sick of the palsy, Son,

thy sins be forgiven thee.
But there were certain
of the scribes

sitting there, and reasoning
in their hearts,

Why doth this man
thus speak blasphemies ?
who can forgive sins
but God only ?

And immediately when Jesus perceived in His spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, He
said unto them,

Why reason ye these things
in your hearts ?

Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy,

Thy sins be forgiven thee ;
or to say, Arise,
and take up thy bed,
and walk ?

But that ye may know
that the Son of Man hath power
on earth to forgive sins,
(He saith to the sick of the palsy,)

I say unto thee,
Arise, and take up thy bed,
and go thy way
into thine house.

And immediately he arose,

took up the bed,
and went forth before them all ;
insomuch that
they were all amazed,
and glorified God,

saying,
We never saw it
on this fashion.

20 And when He saw their faith, He said unto him, Man,

thy sins are forgiven thee.
And

the scribes and the Pharisees began to reason,
saying,

Who is this which
speaketh blasphemies ?
Who can forgive sins,
but God alone ?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, He answering

said unto them,

What reason ye
in your hearts ?

23 Whether is easier, to say,
Thy sins be forgiven thee ;
or to say, Rise up

and walk ?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power
upon earth to forgive sins, (He said unto the sick of the palsy,)

I say unto thee,
Arise, and take up thy couch,
and go
into thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them,
and took up that whereon he lay,
and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26 And they were all amazed, and they glorified God,

and were filled with fear,
saying,

We have seen strange things to day.

2. And, behold, they brought to Him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed : and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy ;
Son, be of good cheer ; thy sins be forgiven thee.

S.V. omit thee.
Vulg. remittuntur tibi peccata tua.

3. And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth.

4. And Jesus knowing their thoughts said,
Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts ?

5. For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee ; or to say, Arise, and walk ?

S.V. omit thee : S.V. omits and.
Vulg. Quid est facilius dicere : Dimittuntur tibi peccata tua ; an dicere :
Surge et ambula.

6. But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house.

7. And he arose, and departed to his house.

8. But when the multitudes saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.^a

^a V. they were afraid.
Vulg. Videntes autem turbæ timeverunt, et glorificaverunt Deum, qui dedit potestatem talem hominibus.

Probably in no place except Jerusalem would Jesus have an audience more distinguished in rank, or more able and disposed to carp at His teaching, than in Capernaum, the scene of this miracle; for Capernaum was the busiest town in that most populous portion of Palestine, Gennesaret. S. Luke says there were gathered together "Pharisees and doctors of the Law, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem," an assembly evidently wanting in either the power nor the will to find a flaw in His teaching, or in His works.

The utter helplessness of the man is shown by his being "borne of four;" his expectation of a cure, his own belief in the power of Jesus to perform this, as well as that of those who were with him, is abundantly proved by their labour in letting him down through the roof. Some¹ have thought that "their faith" means the faith of the men who carried him. Others² think that it also implies the faith of the sick man. In the East, where the houses are low and the roofs flat, and where the inhabitants spend much of their time on the roof, this would be very practicable; while in European countries, where the houses are lofty and the roofs high-pitched, this would be attended with considerable danger, and almost impossible.

Besides indicating, by His encouraging words, the necessity of faith in His power to heal, it may be that Jesus, in His address to the palsied man, shows the intimate connection there is between sin and bodily disease, and that freedom from the former is first to be sought for, and even as a means to the latter.³ These and other lessons may be contained in His words, but it is manifest that the principal object of Jesus was to heal this sick man in such a way as to convince even these captious Pharisees and doctors of the Law that He was God.⁴ It may be with reference to this, that S. Luke says, "the power of the Lord was present to heal them."

Up to a certain point the reasoning of these scribes was correct. They failed only because they did not go on to draw the right conclusion, that Jesus was God; and, therefore, that He had forgiven the sins of the paralytic. On their failing to draw this conclusion, He asks them, Which is easier, to heal the soul of man, or to heal his body? He does not by this question imply that one was easier than the other; but He does this by way of calling to their attention that they are equally the work of God, and that He, who could do one, could do the other also. The real difference between them is, that one could be seen by man, and the other not; but they each required the exercise of the same superhuman divine power. He then proves His power to work the former, which they could not see, by performing the latter, which they could see; and he does this in a way which they could not gainsay.

The mingled feelings produced by this miracle were awe, and fear, and amazement, and thanksgiving to God. The common crowd could see only the miracle wrought on the paralytic man: the Pharisees and the doctors of the Law or at least the most thoughtful and honest among them, would recognise that the performance of this miracle by Jesus was merely the proof of a much greater claim; that He could forgive sins, and therefore that He was God. This was their own train of reasoning, with the conclusion, which they had before failed to draw, forced on them.

Among the men that listened to Jesus at Capernaum, as He proved to them His Godhead by the healing of the palsied man, was most probably Matthew, whom the other two Evangelists call Levi. The discourse ended, and the paralytic healed, Jesus passed along to the shore of the lake; and as He went, He beheld this Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom,—it may be, taking toll from those who passed over the lake; and He bids him leave his calling and become His disciple. Still influenced by the feeling of awe and admiration produced by the miracle, Matthew rose up and followed Him.

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. v. 20; vol. ii. p. 1638.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. ix. 2; vol. vii. p. 54.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxix.; vol. i. p. 409.

⁴ Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 2; vol. i. p. 42.

Euthymius, in Matt. ix. 2; vol. i. p. 343.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. ix. 5; vol. vii. p. 55.

Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 2; vol. i. p. 42.

Euthymius, in Matt. ix. 2; vol. i. p. 343.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxix.; vol. i. p. 411.

^a Such power unto men (τοῖς ἀνθρώποις).—"The plural is used when the predicate refers to one individual, but the writer wishes to avoid particularising him, as Matt. ix. 20: 'they are dead which sought,' where Herod the Great alone is meant. On the other hand, in Matt. ix. 8, the reference is, undoubtedly, not to Christ alone, but must be taken generally."—WINKLER'S Grammar of the New Testament, p. 188.

HE CALLS MATTHEW TO BE ONE OF HIS DISCIPLES.

S. MATTHEW ix. 9.

13 And as Jesus passed forth from thence,
He saw
a man, named Matthew,
sitting at the receipt of custom :
and He saith unto him,
Follow Me.
And he arose,
and followed Him.

S. MARK ii. 13, 14.

13 And
He went forth again
by the sea side ;
and all the multitude resorted unto Him,
and He taught them.
14 And as He passed by,
He saw
Levi
the son of Alphaeus
sitting at the receipt of custom,
and said unto him,
Follow Me.
And he arose
and followed Him.

S. LUKE v. 27, 28.

27 And after these things
He went forth, and saw
a publican, named Levi,
sitting at the receipt of custom :
and He said unto him,
Follow Me.
28 And he left all,
rose up,
and followed Him.

9. ¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, He saw a man, named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom :^a and He saith unto him, Follow Me. And he arose, and followed Him.

^a S. omits from thence: S*. of custom: He saith.

Vulg. Et cum transiret inde Jesus vidit hominem sedentem in telonio, Matthæum nomine, et ait illi: Sequere me, et surgens, secutus eum.

An examination of the account of this call by the three Evangelists will show that they are all here relating the same event. The only variation in their relation of it is, that S. Matthew speaks of himself as "a man named Matthew," while S. Mark calls him "Levi the son of Alphaeus," and S. Luke "a publican" named Levi." Considering how common the custom was among the Jews to have two names, or at least two names at different parts of their lives, this difference of name does not imply that they were different men. S. Matthew speaks of himself by the name of Matthew, S. Mark and S. Luke call him Levi, which was probably the more honourable name of the two.¹ After his call by Christ, he is always called Matthew. With this single exception, all the three Evangelists record this call in the same words, to the very letter. They all place it at Capernaum, after the healing of the paralytic man. Though S. Luke alone calls him a publican, they all relate that his employment was that of a publican, and that at the time of his call he was engaged in the duties of his office, in the very act of collecting tolls, and that he rose up without delay and followed Jesus.

Some have supposed that the feast which S. Matthew made for Jesus and His disciples, was not immediately on his call, but some time after. Against this must be set the fact that the three Evangelists who record S. Matthew's call, all place their account of the feast that he made immediately after his call.

In the following narrative there are several indications which lead to the conclusion that Matthew was a person of considerable worldly substance. We may fairly infer this from the gains that were usually made by publicans; from the expression, "he left all;" from the various expressions here used, implying that this feast was on a scale of unusual greatness. It was a great feast, in his own house; and there were many publicans and sinners, a great company of publicans and of others; for there were many, and they followed Him.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. ix. 9; vol. vii. p. 55.

^a Sitting at the receipt of custom.—"The people of this country sit at all kinds of work. The carpenter saws, planes, and hews with his hand-axe, sitting on the ground, or upon the plank he is planing. The washerwoman sits by the tub; and, in a word, no one stands, where it is possible to sit. Shopkeepers always sit; and Levi sitting at the receipt of custom is the exact way to state the case."—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 132.

^b "The Publicans, properly so called (publicani), were persons who farmed the Roman taxes; and they were usually, in later times, Roman knights, and persons of wealth and credit. They employed under them inferior officers, natives of the province where the taxes were collected, called properly portitores, to which class Matthew no doubt belonged."—SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

JESUS IS ENTERTAINED IN THE HOUSE OF LEVI.

S. MATTHEW ix. 10-13.

- 10 And it came to pass,
as Jesus sat at meat
in the house,
behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down
with Him and His disciples.
- 11 And when the Pharisees saw it,
they said unto His disciples,
Why eateth your Master
with publicans and sinners?
But when Jesus heard that,
He said unto them,
They that be whole
need not a physician,
but they that are sick.
But go ye and learn
what that meaneth,
"I will have mercy, and not sacrifice:"
for I am not come
to call the righteous,
but sinners to repentance.

S. MARK ii. 15-17.

- 15 And it came to pass,
that, as Jesus sat at meat
in his house, many publicans and sinners
sat also together with Jesus and His disciples:
for there were many,
and they followed Him.
- 16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw Him eat with publicans and sinners.
they said unto His disciples,
How is it that He eateth and drinketh
with publicans and sinners?
When Jesus heard it,
He saith unto them,
They that are whole
have no need of the physician,
but they that are sick:
- I came not
to call the righteous,
but sinners to repentance.

S. LUKE v. 29-32.

- 29 And Levi
made Him a great feast
in his own house:
and there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down
with them.
- 30 But their scribes and Pharisees murmured against His disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink
with publicans and sinners?
And Jesus
answering said unto them,
They that are whole
need not a physician;
but they that are sick.
- I came not
to call the righteous,
but sinners to repentance.

10. ¶ And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with Him and His disciples.

S*. and as they sat at meat: S*. omits came and.
Vulg. discumbentes in domo, ecce multi publicani et peccatores ventientes, discumbentes cum Iesu et discipulis ejus.

11. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto His disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?

12. But when Jesus heard that, He said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

S. When he heard: S.V. omit unto them: S. do not need physicians.
Vulg. At Iesus audiens, ait Non est opus valentibus medicis, sed male habentibus.

13. But go ye and learn what that meaneth,

"I will have mercy,
and not sacrifice;"

for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

S.V. omit to repentance.
Vulg. non enim veni vocare justos, sed peccatores.

Sinners, in the estimation of the Pharisees, need not necessarily be men of profligate lives. They were probably men who, from their intercourse with foreigners, had become lax in the observance of the Law of Moses, or at least of the traditions of the fathers, and so were on a par with publicans in the eyes of the Pharisees. Jesus explains the footing on which He mixes with these and all other men: it was not as the companion of their leisure hours, or as the associate in their pleasures, but as their physician; and a physician seeks out those who are diseased, and who are themselves conscious of their malady. All were more or less diseased, but all were not equally conscious of it. The most diseased were sometimes the least aware of it, as was the case with these Pharisees, and to them the great Physician came not.

He defends His conduct still further, by a quotation from the prophet Hosea, vi. 6: "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice," which He bids them go and consider. He does not by these words imply that God loves mercy, and that He does not love sacrifice, but that He loves mercy more than sacrifice. He is not underrating the value of sacrifice, but exalting that of mercy. The most acceptable of all things to God—that which He most delights to receive from man—is not sacrifice, as the Pharisees thought, but mercy. Acceptable as the offering of sacrifice was to God, there was one thing more acceptable even than that; namely, showing mercy to their fellow-men.

Shortly after their discomfiture by Jesus, as related above, the Pharisees induce the disciples of John the Baptist to make common cause with them, at least so far as to join them in laying an accusation before Jesus against His disciples, on the ground that they do not fast, as do both the Pharisees and John's disciples. They do not mean that His disciples do not observe any public fast appointed by the Law or by competent authority; but that they do not make a habit of fasting regularly, on certain days of the week, as a means of self-discipline. This time they express their dissatisfaction, not to His disciples as before, but to Jesus Himself; and it would appear that John's disciples are the spokesmen on this occasion.¹

JESUS EXCUSES HIS DISCIPLES FOR NOT FASTING.

S. MATTHEW ix. 14-17.

S. MARK ii. 18-22.

S. LUKE v. 33-39.

14 Then came to Him the disciples of John, saying,
Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft,

but Thy disciples fast not?
15 And Jesus said unto them,
Can the children of the bridechamber mourn,
as long as the bridegroom is with them?

but the days will come,
when the bridegroom shall be taken from them,
and then shall they fast.

16 No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment,
and the rent is made worse.

17 Neither do men put new wine into old bottles:
else the bottles break,
and the wine runneth out,
and the bottles perish:
but they put new wine into new bottles,
and both are preserved.

18 And the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast:
and they come and say unto Him,
Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast,

but Thy disciples fast not?
19 And Jesus said unto them,
Can the children of the bridechamber fast,
while the bridegroom is with them?
as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come,
when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them,
and then shall they fast in those days.

21 No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment:
else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old,
and the rent is made worse.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles:
else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled,
and the bottles will be marred:
but new wine must be put into new bottles.

33 And they said unto Him,
Why do the disciples of John fast often,
and make prayers,
and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees;
but Thine eat and drink?

34 And He said unto them,
Can ye make the children of the bridechamber fast,
while the bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will come,
when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them,
and then shall they fast in those days.

36 And He spake also a parable unto them;
No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old;
if otherwise,

then both the new maketh a rent,
and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles;
else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled,
and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles;
and both are preserved.

39 No man also having drunk old wine straightway desireth new:
for he saith, The old is better.

14. ¶ Then came to Him the disciples of John, saying, Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but Thy disciples fast not?

S. V. omit oft.
Vulg. quare nos et Pharisei jejunamus frequenter?

15. And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bridechamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 27; vol. iii. p. 1108.

16. No man putteth a piece^a of new cloth^b unto an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse.

Margin, raw or unwrought cloth.

Vulg. Nemo autem unumquod commissuram panni rudis in vestimentum vetus: tollit enim perfectiorem ejus a vestimento, et peior seorsum fit.

17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

S. But new wine must be put.

Vulg. Sed vinum novum in utroque novis mittunt.

It is not as Jews that they advocate this fasting, but as Pharisees, or as disciples of John the Baptist,—that is, as a company of men professing unusual strictness of life; and they express their surprise that the disciples of Jesus do not, in the character of His disciples, practise some similar system of fasting, and thus rise superior to the general laxity of the multitude. Jesus implies that so they will, but not at present. He first shows that it would be unbecoming for them at present to exercise that degree of fasting which as His disciples they will afterwards; and secondly, that at present they are unable to bear this.

1. It would be as unbecoming His disciples to fast, while He is with them, as it would for the children of the bride-chamber to mourn, so long as the bridegroom is with them. While the bridegroom is with them, it is a time of festivity and of rejoicing, not of mourning and affliction. In a short time, He, the Bridegroom, will be taken from them, and then they shall exercise that degree of mortification and self-discipline which is becoming His disciples.

2. He shows that at present they are unable to bear this.

An old garment must not be repaired with a patch of new cloth, because, if so, a worse rent is caused. His disciples are as an old garment. Their faith and endurance as yet are but slight. Too great a trial must not be put upon them; for this might cause them to despair, and perhaps to depart from Him altogether. By the descent of the Holy Spirit upon them, they shall be renovated; made new and strong, like a new garment. Then they will be able to endure such a degree of fasting and self-discipline as will become the disciples of Christ.¹

The same truth He shows in another way. New wine must not be put into old skins; lest it should stretch them too far, and the skins burst, and the wine be lost. His disciples are as old skins, unable to bear any great strain. Any great amount of affliction, either in the shape of persecution or self-discipline, would at present do them more harm than good. At present such a trial as rigid fasting implies would not only be useless to them, it would be positively injurious. After the descent of the Holy Spirit, His disciples will be renovated, and become, as new skins, able to bear any strain upon them, however great; any amount of persecution, of mortification, or self-discipline.

Though they did not fast then, as His disciples, Jesus says that, after His departure from them, they should. In accordance with this, we read that very early it was the custom for Christians in the East, in compliance with what they believed to be a regulation of the Apostles, to fast on all Wednesdays and Fridays in the year, except during Easter and Pentecost, and thus to mourn over the betrayal and the crucifixion of their Saviour. In the West it was the custom to fast on the Fridays and Saturdays, the days on which the Bridegroom was removed from them by His crucifixion and burial. The food allowed by the Church on these fasting days was bread, salt, and water.²

JAIROS APPLIES TO JESUS TO VISIT HIS DAUGHTER.

S. MATTHEW ix. 18, 19.

S. MARK v. 21-24.

S. LUKE viii. 40-42.

18 While He spake these things unto them, behold,	21 And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto Him: and He was nigh unto the sea.	40 And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received Him: for they were all waiting for Him.
22	And, behold,	41 And, behold,

¹ Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 16; vol. i. p. 44.

Euthymius, in Matt. ix. 16; vol. i. p. 361.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxiii. p. 221.

Maldonatus, in Matt. ix. 16; vol. i. p. 138.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ix. 16; vol. viii. p. 211.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxv. 7; vol. ii. p. 512.

S. Augustine, Epist. xxxvi. (alias 86) ad Casulanum; vol. ii. p. 136.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ix. 16; vol. viii. p. 210.

^a No man putteth a piece.—See note on Mark ii. 4.

^b New cloth.—“It is difficult to see why our translators should have abandoned the natural expression ‘undressed cloth,’ which occurs in the Geneva Testament, as a rendering of βάκος ἄγυατος.

for ‘new cloth,’ contenting themselves with putting ‘raw or unwrought’ in the margin.”—CAXON LIGHTFOOT on ‘Revision of New Testament,’ p. 143.

S. MATTHEW ix.

there came
a certain ruler,

and worshipped Him, saying, My daughter is even now dead :

but come and lay Thy hand upon her,
and she shall live.

19

And Jesus arose,
and followed him,
and so did His disciples.

23

24

S. MARK v.

there cometh
one of the rulers
of the synagogue, Jairus by name ;

and when he saw Him,
he fell at His feet,
and besought Him greatly,

saying, My little daughter
lieth at the point of death :
I pray Thee,
come and lay Thy hands
on her, that she may be healed ;
and she shall live.

And Jesus went with him ;

and much people followed Him,
and thronged Him.

S. LUKE viii.

there came a man named Jairus,

and he was a ruler of the synagogue :

and he fell down at Jesus' feet,
and besought Him
that He would come into his house :

42 for he had one only daughter about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying.

But as He went the people thronged Him.

18. ¶ While He spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler,* and worshipped Him, saying, My daughter is even now dead : but come and lay Thy hand upon her, and she shall live.

Vulg. dicens: Domine, filia mea modo defuncta est: sed veni, impone manum tuam super eam, et vivet.

19. And Jesus arose, and followed him, and so did His disciples.

It is while Jesus is still in the neighbourhood of Capernaum, and soon after He had been entertained in S. Matthew's house, and, as this Evangelist would seem to represent it, while He was engaged in making an apology for His disciples, and explaining to John's disciples and to the Pharisees why they did not fast, that is, so long as He was with them ; it was while thus engaged, that the ruler of the synagogue comes to entreat Him to go and heal his little daughter. S. Mark and S. Luke both concur in representing the shore of the lake and the neighbourhood of Capernaum as the scene of this event ; but they neither of them give any indications of the time, except that it was after He had recrossed the lake on His return from Gergesa or Gadara.

With respect to the following miracle, a very interesting question arises:—How comes it that S. Matthew has given a less full, and a less circumstantial account of it, than either of the other two? Of the three Evangelists, he was, in all probability, the only one who was present, the only eyewitness of what he here relates. When Jesus rose up from his house to go to Jairus's daughter, S. Matthew would naturally join in the throng that accompanied Him. Nor have we any reason to think that any of His Apostles, after they had been once elected, ever ceased to attend Him. It was evidently, then, not personal knowledge that always determined the amount of circumstantiality with which the Evangelists related their facts. We may fairly conclude that S. Matthew, who was present, for some reason or other gave but an outline of the story, his account as we now have it ; and that the other Evangelists, who wrote later, thinking his account too meagre for the interest centred in this miracle, filled it in with several additional particulars, which they had learnt from those who were also present.

A proof of the unusual interest excited by this miracle, may be seen in the number of attempts that were made, in the literature of antiquity, to identify the woman here mentioned. One old tradition says¹ that this woman was a native of Cæsarea Philippi, the ancient Dan or Paneas, and that after her recovery she erected a statue of Jesus, in brass, at Cæsarea. Eusebius says that he had himself seen such a statue still standing in Cæsarea. Another story² was,

¹ Eusebius, Historia Eccles. vii. 18 ; vol. ii. p. 679.

Sozomen, lib. v. 21.

Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 20 ; vol. i. p. 44.

² Maldonatus, in Matt. ix. 20 ; vol. i. p. 141.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. v. 25 ; vol. viii. p. 589.

* A certain ruler.—“The chazan, or bishop or overseer of the synagogue, is the minister: and the ruler of the synagogue is he by whose command the affairs of the synagogue are appointed ;

namely, who shall read the prophet, who shall recite the phylacteries, who shall pass before the ark.”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. ix. 18 ; vol. ii. p. 172.

that this woman was Martha, the sister of Mary and Lazarus; and a third tradition said that her name was Veronica, and that when Jesus was being led to crucifixion, she offered her veil to Him, to remove the drops of blood, &c., which suffering and exhaustion had caused to gather on His brow. Whatever might be the portion of truth existing in these ancient traditions, they all attested to the great interest which her case had created in early times.

HE HEALS A WOMAN WHO HAD AN ISSUE OF BLOOD.

S. MATTHEW ix. 20-22.

S. MARK v. 25-34.

S. LUKE viii. 43-48.

20 And, behold, a woman, which was diseased
with an issue of blood twelve years,

25 And a certain woman, which had an issue of blood twelve years,
and had suffered many things of many physicians,
and had spent all that she had,

43 And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians,

came behind Him,
and touched the hem
of His garment :
21 for she said within herself,
If I may but touch
His garment, I shall be whole.

and was nothing bettered,
but rather grew worse,
when she had heard of Jesus,
came in the press behind,
and touched
His garment.

neither could be healed of any,
44 came behind Him,
and touched the border
of His garment,

22 But Jesus
turned Him about,

28 For she said,
If I may touch but
His clothes, I shall be whole.
29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up :
and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

and immediately her issue of blood stanchd.

30 And Jesus, immediately knowing in Himself that virtue had gone out of Him, turned Him about in the press,
and said,
Who touched My clothes ?

45 And Jesus said,
Who touched Me ?
When all denied, Peter and they that were with Him said, Master,
the multitude
throng Thee and press Thee,
and sayest Thou,
Who touched Me ?

31 And His disciples
said unto Him,
Thou seest the multitude thronging Thee,
and sayest Thou,
Who touched Me ?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched Me : for I perceive that virtue is gone out of Me.

32 And He looked round about to see her that had done this thing.
33 But the woman

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid,
she came trembling,
and falling down before Him,
she declared unto Him

fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her,
came and fell down before Him, and told Him
all the truth.

before all the people for what cause
she had touched Him,
and how she was healed immediately.

and when He saw her,
He said,
Daughter, be of good comfort ;
thy faith hath made thee whole.

34 And He said unto her, Daughter,
thy faith hath made thee whole ;
go in peace,
and be whole of thy plague.

48 And
He said unto her,
Daughter, be of good comfort :
thy faith hath made thee whole ;
go in peace.

And the woman was made whole from that hour.

20. ¶ And, behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind Him, and touched the hem of His garment :

Vulg. et tetigit fimbriam vestimenti ejus.

21. For she said within herself, If I may but touch His garment, I shall be whole.

S*. omits but.

Vulg. Dicebat enim intra se: Si tetigero tantum vestimentum ejus, salva ero.

22. But Jesus turned Him about, and when He saw her, He said, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.

S*. But He turned.

Vulg. At Jesus conversus.

As a condition for the restoration to health, Jesus usually required a belief in His power to impart it. Life and health He generally imparted by touching the diseased with His hand. He made His humanity the medium to dispense the gifts which His divine power alone could bestow. But so overflowing is this woman's belief in His power, that she expects to acquire health not only through Jesus touching her, but through her touching Him; and when she cannot reach Him on account of the press, she still believes that she shall receive the blessing through touching His garment, nay, the extreme end or fringe of His garment. So unlimited does she believe His power to be, that she thinks the most distant approach to the means which He uses for communicating health will be sufficient. It is plain from the narrative, that she touched the hem of His garment, not in preference to any other part; not because it was more holy than the rest, as being specially ordered by God (Numb. xv. 38), but because she could more easily reach it.

We cannot fail to observe the marked difference between this woman and the crowd she accompanied. This difference is strikingly indicated in the narrative by the terms in which they are described. The believing, anxious woman touched (ἥψατο) Jesus; the indifferent, unthinking multitude only throng Him and press Him (συνέχουσι καὶ ἀποθλίβουσι). Led by curiosity, they follow Him to see His cures, or to hear His marvellous discourses; but they have no personal interest in them. They are not conscious of any disease to be cured. What different feelings, and what mingled feelings, would fill her bosom! Fear, desperation, and trust, would each in its turn direct her. She was seeking to touch Jesus, and yet she was afflicted with a malady which rendered her legally unclean, and disqualified her from touching anyone. For twelve years she had been incurable. Her one hope lay in Him, and she felt that her all was now at stake. What a moment of anxious trust!

Besides bodily health, Jesus most probably superadded the gift of spiritual health, the forgiveness of her sins.¹ The word which He spake to her, "Go in peace," was the usual formula in which He conveyed this blessing.

Jesus is still on His way to Jairus's house; and when a message which was not intended for Him reached His ear, to the effect that the child was dead, He encourages her father to hope and believe against appearances. The woman who had just been healed, and of which Jairus was himself an eye-witness, was an example and encouragement to him.

JESUS RAISES THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS TO LIFE AGAIN.

S. MATTHEW ix. 23-26.

S. MARK v. 35-43.

S. LUKE viii. 49-56.

35 While He yet spake,
there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house certain which said,
Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken,
He saith unto the ruler of the synagogue,
Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And He suffered no man to follow Him, save Peter, and James,
and John the brother of James.

38 And He cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth
the tumult,
and them that wept and wailed greatly.

49 While He yet spake,
there cometh
one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to Him,
Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master.
50 But when Jesus heard it,
He answered him, saying,
Fear not: believe only,
and she shall be made whole.

51 And when He came into the house,

23 And when Jesus came into the ruler's house,
and saw the minstrels
and the people making a noise,

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxi.; vol. i. p. 433.

S. MATTHEW ix.

S. MARK v.

S. LUKE viii.

- 24 He said unto them,
Give place:
for the maid is not dead,
but sleepeth.
And they laughed Him
to scorn.
- 25 But when the people were put forth,

He went in,

and took her
by the hand,

and
the maid arose.
- 26 And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.
- 39 And when He was come in,
He saith unto them,
Why make ye this ado, and weep?
the damsel is not dead,
but sleepeth.
40 And they laughed Him
to scorn.
- But when He had put them
all out,
He taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with Him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.
41 And He took the damsel
by the hand, and said unto her, TALITHA CUMI;
which is, being interpreted,
Damsel, I say unto thee, arise.
- 42 And straightway
the damsel arose,
and walked; for she was
of the age of twelve years.
And they were astonished with a great astonishment.
43 And He charged them straitly that no man should know it;
and commanded that something should be given her to eat.
- 52 He suffered no man to go in, save Peter, and James, and John,
and the father and the mother of the maiden.
And all wept, and bewailed her:
but He said,
Weep not;
she is not dead,
but sleepeth.
53 And they laughed Him
to scorn,
knowing that she was dead.
54 And He put them
all out,

and took her
by the hand, and called, saying,
Maid, arise.
- 55 And her spirit came again,
and
she arose straightway:
and He commanded to give her meat.
56 And her parents
were astonished:

but He charged them that they should tell no man
what was done.

23. And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise,

Vulg. et vidisset tibicines et turbam tumultuantem.

24. He said unto them, Give place: for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed Him to scorn.

S.V. omit unto them: S^a. to scorn; knowing that she was dead.
Vulg. dicebat, Recedite . . . et deridebant eum.

25. But when the people were put forth, He went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose.

26. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

Margin, This fame.

S. Her fame.

Vulg. Et exiit fama hæc in universam terram illam.

We need not interpret our Saviour's words, "she is not dead, but sleepeth," to mean that her soul was not actually separated from her body, or that she was asleep in such a sense that she would awake again, of her own accord, without the interposition of His divine, superhuman power. He uses the words "she sleepeth" to draw their attention to His purpose of raising her from the dead. Her soul, though already departed from the body, should be re-united, and she should live again on earth. His altercation with the minstrels, and with the people who were making a noise, so to speak of it, would cause them to observe the condition of the damsel more narrowly; and they would thus estimate more correctly the miraculous nature of her restoration to life. He excludes them from the room while He raises her from the dead, probably because of their unbelief and their mocking, and admits only the father and mother of the maiden, and His three Apostles Peter, John, and James. This was the first of those occasions, and there were several, on which Jesus specially selected these three Apostles to attend Him, and did not accord the same privilege to the other nine.

To prove the completeness of her restoration to life, and to vigorous, healthy life, He commands that something shall be given her to eat. Only three instances are related at length, where Jesus raised the dead to life; and this young girl is the first. As an event unheard of before, the fame of it would quickly fly throughout the whole district. All the country round could bear witness that the damsel was now alive; her father and mother, the minstrels, and the multitude, would all be witnesses that she had been dead. The dispute that had arisen, had caused them to examine and to ascertain that most carefully. Why Jesus charged them not to make it known; whether this was to prevent the premature machinations of the Pharisees, or to set them an example of silence after works of charity, or for some other reason, is not clear.

It may be well to recapitulate the contents of the chapter thus far, all of which happened in and around Capernaum; and all of which was the work, if not of a single day, at least of parts of two days. Seldom have we the events of one day recorded by the Evangelists so consecutively, and at the same time so fully, as we have here.

As He was preaching the word unto them in Capernaum, they brought to Him a man sick of the palsy, borne of four. When they could not come near Him for the press, they uncover the roof of the house where He was, and let the sick man down through it. Seeing their faith, Jesus takes occasion from this to prove to His audience that He was God. He then makes the highest claim that it was possible to make: He claims to do that which confessedly none can do but God. He declares that his sins are forgiven him, and goes on to say that His power to forgive this man's sins shall be tested by His power to heal his paralysis. If He can heal his paralysis, this shall be a proof that He can forgive his sins; and if He can forgive his sins, this will be a proof that He is God. He then heals the paralytic man before them all, and the people are convinced. The reasoning which He suggested was as perfect as the miracle that He wrought. No link in it was weak or defective.

From the house He removes to the shore of the lake, to teach the people; and as He went, He passed by the receipt of custom, and saw Matthew sitting there, engaged in his duty as publican or toll-taker, and He called him to be His disciple, and he left all and followed Him.

Either the same day, or on some future day, Matthew makes a great feast in his house for Jesus and His disciples, and invites a number of his friends, men in a similar calling to his own. The Pharisees find fault with Jesus for eating with these publicans and sinners. In the answer by which He silenced them, He taught all future generations the duty of charitable consideration for their fellow-men. The disciples of John Baptist, induced by the Pharisees, then make a charge against His disciples, because they did not, as appeared fitting for His disciples, pursue some system of regular fasting. He apologizes for His disciples, and explains that their present practice is only of temporary use, so long as He is with them.

While He is thus engaged, the ruler of the synagogue at Capernaum, Jairus by name, comes to entreat Him to go and heal his little daughter, who is at the point of death. He rises to go, and the people accompany Him, and the crowd gathers along as they go. On their way thither a woman who had had an issue of blood for twelve years, comes behind, and, unable to get nearer for the press, she secretly touches the hem of His garment, and is healed of her issue. He inquires who touched His clothes, and declares that virtue had gone out of Him by that touch. When the crowd which had pressed Him and thronged Him denied that they had touched Him with any object, and when she confessed all, He bids her go in peace.

While He is still on His way to the ruler's house, a messenger comes to the father to tell him that his daughter is already dead, and that there is no further need to trouble the Master. Famed as Jesus was far and wide for healing every kind of sickness, even He had never raised the dead. On that very day, it may be, He had forgiven the sins of the paralytic man and had healed his paralysis, and had thereby proved that He was God. On His way to this very house, but a few moments before, He had healed a woman who had been ill for twelve years and declared incurable. All this would be no comfort to Jairus if his daughter were dead; for Jesus had never yet raised the dead to life again. The thought of his daughter being raised to life, again could never cross the mind of the father, and yet Jesus bids him "fear not; believe only, and she shall be made whole." To the multitude and the minstrels, who persist in regarding her as a case for their office of mourning, He intimates that she shall live again, as assuredly as one who sleepeth shall awake again. He then excludes from the room all but the father and mother of the maiden and His three Apostles, Peter, James, and John, and raises her to life again.

What a day of mercy to man this was, even if we end the record of the day with the raising of Jairus's daughter! But some have thought that there is sufficient reason to connect what follows with what has gone before, and to believe that the two blind men follow Jesus on His return from Jairus's house; that when He reached the house, either His own or S. Matthew's, which He had left shortly before, He questioned them on their belief in His power, and then opened their eyes; that, as they went away, they brought to Him a man possessed with a devil, whom He healed also; and that the multitudes, seeing all these miraculous cures, marvelled and cried, "It was never so seen in Israel."

S. Matthew alone records the following miracle, verses 27-31.

27. ¶ And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed Him, crying, and saying, Thou Son of David, have mercy on us.

V. omits Him.
Vulg. secuti sunt eum duo cæci.

28. And when He was come into the house, the blind men came to Him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto Him, Yea, Lord.

*S, was entered: *S, the two blind men: *S, to do this unto you.
Vulg. accesserunt ad eum cæci. Et dixit eis Iesus: creditis quia hoc possum facere vobis?

29. Then touched He their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you.

30. And their eyes were opened; and Jesus straightly charged them, saying, See that no man know it.

Vulg. et comminatus est illis Iesus.

31. But they, when they were departed, spread abroad His fame in all that country.

*S, omits all.
Vulg. illi autem ex-entes, diffamaverunt eum in tota terra illa.

Jesus does not hearken to the prayer of these two blind men to open their eyes until He reaches the house. Even then He first asks if they believe that He is able to do this. At last, when He grants the blessing, it is in terms that imply that the gift is to be in proportion to their belief in His power. He may have put off their request to quicken their desire, or there may have been some grave defect in their faith. Was their conduct afterwards in disobeying His express injunction not to make Him known, any indication of self-will, or was it the effect of excessive zeal for His honour, and of gratitude for His mercy toward them? The character of their disobedience would depend very much on the motive from which it flowed, and many think they were influenced by feelings of gratitude.¹

S. Matthew alone records the following cure, verses 32-34.

32. ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought to Him a dumb man possessed with a devil.

S, omits man.
Vulg. ecce obtulit-ei unum hominem mutum, demonium habentem.

33. And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake: and the multitudes marvelled, It was never so seen in Israel.

34. But the Pharisees said, He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

Vulg. Pharisei autem dicebant. In principe demoniorum ejicit demones.

This is not the same dumb devil as S. Luke (xi. 14) speaks of.² S. Matthew elsewhere (xii. 22) describes that cure.

It would seem that the man was not dumb from any defect in his natural organs of speech or of hearing, but simply through the agency of the devil that possessed him.³ When the devil was cast out, the dumb spake.

The different judgment which the people and the Pharisees form of His actions on this occasion, is but a specimen of their conduct all through His ministry. The people are actuated in their opinion solely by the character of the action itself, by the blessing it is to man, and by its miraculous, unusual nature. None of the prophets, during the whole history of the children of Israel, had ever wrought deeds to be compared with these. Thus the people honestly praise His cures as miracles that had never before been performed, and as blessings that could not be surpassed. The Pharisees, by their judgment of His actions, only betray the malignity with which they pursue the author of them. They overlook the quality of the action altogether, and consider only that it was wrought by Jesus, the reputed son of a carpenter—He who had set at naught their traditionary interpretations, who at different times had exposed their hypocrisies, and had called in question their zeal for the Sabbath, and even for the Law itself. The beneficence of the deed cannot be denied, but doubts and suspicions can be thrown on its source, on its origin. Blinded by spite, they perceive not the inconsistency of their accusation,—a devil to cast out devils, the greatest of blessings to proceed from the most malignant of beings. On this occasion Jesus is not reported as answering their accusation. Heedless of the Pharisees and their machinations, He continues His work of mercy to the people.

S. Matthew alone contains verses 35-38.

35. And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

*S, omits and before preaching: V, omits among the peoples. *S, people, and they followed Him.
Vulg. et prædicans evangelium regni, et curans omnem languorem et omnem infirmitatem.

36. ¶ But when He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd.

Margin, were tired and lay down.
S.V., because they were harassed.
Vulg. quia erant vexati, et jacentes sicut oves non habentes pastorem.

37. Then saith He unto His disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few;

38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. ix. 30; vol. vii. p. 59.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxii.; vol. i. p. 442.

Theophylact, in Matt. ix. 30; vol. i. p. 45.

Janinensis, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxv. p. 241.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ix. 32; vol. viii. p. 215.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 63 and 44.

McClellan, New Testament, pp. 557 and 563.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxii.; vol. i. p. 442.

Among the Gentiles the seed was yet to be sown. The prophets had sown some seeds among the Jews, and the fruit produced by these must now be tended and gathered into the Church. He is the Lord of the harvest, not only as God, but as God and man. He laid down His life to purchase the Church with His own blood. He had but just before appointed the twelve Apostles to be the labourers in the harvest; and before He sends them to labour, He bids them pray the Lord of the harvest to qualify them, and prepare them with every gift suitable for such work. At present the labourers are few, Himself and John the Baptist. The scribes and Pharisees were in no true sense labourers, nor had they ever been faithful shepherds over the flock.

With this chapter S. Matthew concludes his record of our Saviour's early years and ministry up to the second Passover.¹ As already pointed out, this cannot be intended as a strictly chronological arrangement of events, but rather a grouping together of facts and discourses, sometimes as they succeeded each other in time, and sometimes because they happened at the same place, or were alike in their nature. S. Matthew's position, for instance, of the Sermon on the Mount, and of the healing of the man full of leprosy and of the centurion's servant, are striking breaches of the chronological order. These he places together after the Sermon, though the healing of the leper took place before the delivery of the Sermon, and the healing of the centurion's servant after, while the Sermon itself should not come in until the beginning of chapter x.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. xxxv. p. 231. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. ix. 38; vol. viii. p. 216.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Jewish Garments. — “Neither two coats (μηδὲ δύο χιτῶνας).’ Either my computation of times very much deceives me, or the winter was now coming on when the Apostles were sent forth, and yet Christ forbids that they should be clothed with a double garment. It was not much that they should be forbid to take money or provision for their journey, because they were to have their food administered to them as the reward of their preaching the Gospel. But to strive with the cold and winter without sufficient clothing seems something hard.

“I, It was not an unusual thing in that nation that some, out of a more religious severity, did clothe themselves but with a single garment

“Now it may be inquired whether our Lord prescribed this severity to His Apostles, not allowing them more than a single garment, when this journeying of theirs to preach the Gospel was a winter’s work. For they returned from this journey a little before the Passover. Compare the 10th verse of this chapter (Luke ix.) and so on, with John vi. 4 and so on.

“In both the Talmuds there are reckoned up eighteen several garments wherewith the Jew is clothed from head to foot

“The ordinary Jewish garment was Talith, the outward garment, and Chaluk, the inward.

“II. And now the question returns, namely, whether by those δύο χιτῶνας in the place before us should be meant those two kinds of garments, the Talith and the Chaluk—that is, that they should take but one of them; or those two kinds doubled—that is, that they should take but one of each: whether our Saviour bound them to take but one of those garments, or whether He forbade them taking two of each.

“I conceive He might bind them to take but one of those garments; for, although χιτῶν when joined with ἱμάτιον

may be applied to some particular garment, yet, when it is not so joined, it may signify only clothing in general. When our Lord commands them μὴ ἐνδύσασθαι δύο χιτῶνας, ‘not to put on two coats’ (Mark vi. 9), the foregoing words may best explain what He means by it. For when He cuts them short of other parts of garments and necessaries, such as a scrip, a staff, and sandals, we may reasonably suppose He would cut them short of one of the ordinary garments, either the Talith or the Chaluk.

“This may seem something severe, that He should send them out in the winter-time half naked. But, 1. This well enough became that providence which He was determined in a more peculiar manner to exert toward them, as may be gathered from Luke xxii. 35, and to the charge of which He would commit them. Of such a kind and nature was His providence in preserving them, as was shown towards the Israelites in the wilderness, which suffered not their garments to wax old, which kept their body from decay and diseases, and their feet unhurt by all their travel. 2. It suited well enough with the mean and low estate of that kingdom of heaven, and the Messiah, which the Apostles were to preach up and propagate, so that from the view of the first publishers the Jews might learn to frame a right judgment concerning both the Messiah and His kingdom; namely, they might learn to believe in the Messiah, when they should observe Him capable so wondrously to protect His messengers, though surrounded with such numberless inconveniences of life: and might further be taught, not to expect a pompous kingdom, when they see the propagators of it of so mean a degree and quality.

“The words of the Baptist, ‘he that hath two coats let him impart,’ &c. (Luke iii. 11), may be also understood in this sense, that he that hath both the Talith and the Chaluk may give to him that is naked and hath neither, either the one or the other.”—LIGHTFOOT on Luke ix. 3; vol. ii. p. 416.

CHAPTER X.

[1. Christ sendeth out His twelve Apostles, enabling them with power to do miracles, 5. giveth them their charge, teacheth them, 16. committeth them against persecutions: 40. and promiseth a blessing to those that receive them.]

[Vulg. Legatio et instructio duodecim apostolorum (quorum hic nomina recensentur) ad evangelizandum Iudæis, et demoniacos infirmosque curandos, qui adversus mala hic imminuentia persequentur et roborantur: Christus non venit ut mittat pacem, sed gladium, ipseque coram hominibus confitendus est, neque quidquam ejus amoris proponendum: honorans autem alios propter Christum, honorat Christum, et illa mercedem recipiet.]

RETAINING the artificial division of our Saviour's life into five portions, the history related in the following chapter naturally falls into the fourth; that is, between the Second and the Third Passover:¹ for S. Matthew is not here describing the first election of the Twelve, but their mission to preach and to heal the sick. Their election, as we learn from S. Luke (vi. 13), took place before He delivered the Sermon on the Mount, and their mission to preach as here related by S. Matthew and elsewhere by the two other Evangelists. The Sermon itself, in all probability, was delivered sometime between the Second and the Third Passover,² though S. Matthew, as already stated, has anticipated its proper order, and placed it among the events which occurred between the First and Second Passover of His ministry.

THE TWELVE INSTRUCTED AND SENT FORTH.

S. MATTHEW x. 1.

1 And when He had called unto Him His twelve disciples,

He gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.

S. MARK vi. 7.

7 And He called unto Him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits.

S. LUKE ix. 1, 2.

1 Then He called His twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils,

and to cure diseases.

2 And He sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

1. And when He had called unto Him His twelve disciples, He gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.

Margin, over.

Vulg. dedit illis potestatem spirituum immundorum, ut eicerent eos.

Having selected twelve to correspond with the twelve tribes, He sent them as His Apostles—a name which implies not only one sent, a messenger, but also a messenger who represents the sender. As His representatives He endows them with a portion of His superhuman power. He gives them power to heal all diseases, whether caused by natural agency or by supernatural, and He bestows this upon them all equally.

This power to work miracles they were to exercise, not only to relieve the bodily affliction of the people, but also with a view to their spiritual, eternal welfare. It would add confirmation to their own claim to be Christ's representatives, and it would incline the people to believe in the Gospel which they were sent to preach.

The prophets of old had occasionally wrought miracles, but for several hundred years this power had been suspended. The last prophet who had performed a miracle was Daniel, when in the den of lions. This power was now restored to man, and restored unlimited in its exercise, and chiefly that it might produce belief in the Incarnation and trust in the truth of the words of Jesus.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotax. Gest. Christi, vol. viii. p. 15.

² Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, vol. i. pp. 233, 235.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 64.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotax. Gest. Christi, vol. viii. p. 14.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, vol. i. pp. 221, 224, and 235.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 34.

McClellan, New Testament, pp. 552 and 556.

THE NAMES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

S. MATTHEW x. 2-4.

S. MARK iii. 16-19.

S. LUKE vi. 14-16.

ACTS i. 13.

2 Now the names of the twelve Apostles are these; The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother;	16 And Simon He surnamed Peter; 17 and James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and He surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder: 18 and Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddæus, and Simon the Canaanite,	14 Simon, (whom He also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, 15 Philip and Bartholomew, Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon called Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.	13 Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.
3 Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddæus;	and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed Him.
4 Simon the Canaanite,

2. Now the names of the twelve Apostles^a are these; The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee,^b and John his brother;

S.V. and James.

Vulg. Primus, Simon, qui dicitur Petrus, et Andreas frater ejus: Iacobus Zebedæi et Iohannes frater ejus.

^a The Twelve Apostles.—"It has, perhaps, often created surprise, that we know so little of the history of these persons. The Acts of the Apostles, as they are called, might with equal propriety be termed the first part of the life of St. Paul. The same work has also supplied us with a few events in the history of St. Peter; and something more may be collected of this Apostle from credible ecclesiastical traditions: but with these two exceptions, to which must be added the account of St. James's martyrdom in the year 44, we know very little of the personal history of all the other Apostles. If we could admit the evidence of supposititious acts and martyrologies, the ignorance of which I have complained would in a great measure be removed; and it might be rash to assert that these works, which though of a doubtful are frequently of an early date, have not been the means of preserving traditions which are really founded in truth. This, however, only brings us back to the same uncertainty as before; and the alternative is offered of either knowing nothing, or not knowing what to believe.

"The most ancient, and perhaps the most credible tradition, is that preserved by Eusebius upon the authority of Origen. This writer, who lived in the third century, beside speaking of Peter and Paul and John, mentions also Thomas and Andrew. He says that Thomas preached in Parthia, and Andrew in Scythia (Euseb. 'Hist. Eccles.' iii. 1; vol. ii. p. 216, Migne). The statement of Thomas having preached in Parthia is repeated by other writers; and the different nations which were subject to the Persian, or as it was then called, the Parthian dominion, are said to have had the benefit of his preaching. He is reported to have visited Ethiopia, by which we are perhaps to understand the eastern part of Arabia; and more than one ancient writer has stated that he travelled into India (S. Gregory Nazian. 'Homil. contr. Arianos,' 11; vol. ii. p. 228, Migne. Nicephorus, ii. 40). This latter tradition has appeared to receive some support in modern times by the interesting researches which have brought to light some Christian inhabitants on the coast of Malabar; and we are told that these persons appeal to the Apostle Thomas as their founder. There are, however, reasons to doubt the accuracy of this tradition. Theodoret speaks of Thomas, a disciple of Manes, who carried his master's doctrines into India; and since the religion of Christ always formed part of Manichæism, it is possible that this Thomas may have been confounded with the Apostle. There is also evidence of another Thomas having been sent about the year 800 by the Patriarch of Babylon to carry the Gospel into India; and since the Christians who have lately been discovered in that country are Nestorians, it is not improbable that the Nestorian patriarchs of Babylon were the original founders of their Church. There is, therefore, very little evidence of the Apostle Thomas having penetrated as far as India, if we take that term in its literal signification; but the tradition which Origen had heard in the third century, may perhaps incline us to believe that the Gospel was carried by this Apostle into the interior of Asia. On the same principle, I would admit the still earlier tradition, preserved by Clement of Alexandria (Strom. iv. 9; vol. i. p. 1281, Migne), that Thomas the Apostle did not suffer martyrdom; and the stories which are told of his being put to death and buried in India, do not rest on any authority. Rufinus (Hist. Eccles. ii. 5; p. 513, Migne), who wrote at the end of the fourth century, states positively that his body was at Edessa, a city on the east bank of the Euphrates; and this is another confirmation of his having preached in Parthia."—DR. BURTON, 'Lectures on Eccles. Hist.,' p. 245.

^b James the son of Zebedee.—"James, or Jacob, is commonly called James the Great, in contradistinction from James the son of Alphaeus, who is called the Less, not for any dignity or superiority of Apostleship that the one had above the other; but either because this James was the elder, or because he was first called, or because of the singular privacy that Christ admitted him to with Himself, as He also did Peter and John."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' sect. xix. vol. i. p. 634.

3. Philip, and Bartholomew;^a Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus,^b and Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddæus;^c

^a S. omits and Lebbaeus, whose surname was: V. omits Lebbaeus, whose surname was.

^b Vulg. omits Lebbaeus, whose surname was.

4. Simon the Canaanite,^d and Judas Iscariot,^e who also betrayed Him.

All MSS. the Cananite.

Vulg. Simon Chananæus.

Bartholomew.—See this Commentary on S. John i. 44.

^b James the son of Alphaeus.—"The word 'son' is not in the Greek, neither here (Acts i. 13), nor Matt. x. 3, nor Mark iii. 18, nor Luke vi. 15; but it is only thus, James of Alphaeus, and so reads the Vulgate. But the Syrian, Arabic, Beza, our English, and divers others, have very warrantably put in the word 'son.'"

"Now this Alphaeus and Cleopas, mentioned Luke xiv. 18, were but one and the same man; the Syrian $\alpha\lambda\phi\alpha\iota\varsigma$ serving indifferently to frame his name into Hebrew, or into a Greek pronunciation, Chalphi and Cleaphi, as Paul's double name sounded after these two languages. This Cleopas or Alphaeus was the husband of Mary (John xix. 25), and she the mother of James the Less, and of Jesus (Matt. xv. 40), and of Judas and Simon (Mark vi. 3); and from hence is warrant sufficient to call James the son of Alphaeus, though the text hath not spoken out the word 'son.'"

"This James is he that was commonly called James the Less, mentioned Acts xii. 7, and xv. 3, and xxi. 18; Gal. ii. 9, &c."—LIGHTFOOT on the Acts of the Apostles, vol. i. p. 742.

^c Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddæus.—"Thaddai was a name known also to the Talmudists. It is a warping of the name Judas, that this Apostle might be the better distinguished from Iscariot. He was called Lebbaeus, I suppose, from the town Lebba, a sea-coast town of Galilee, of which Pliny speaks."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. x. 3; vol. ii. p. 176.

"The name Judas only, without any distinguishing mark, occurs in the lists given by S. Luke vi. 16; Acts i. 13; and in John xiv. 22, where we find 'Judas, not Iscariot,' among the Apostles; but the Apostle has been generally identified with Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddæus (Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18). Much difference of opinion has existed from the earliest times as to the right interpretation of the words $\iota\omega\delta\alpha\varsigma$ Ἰουδᾶς . The generally received opinion is, that the Authorized Version is right in translating 'Judas the brother of James.' But we prefer to follow nearly all the most eminent critical authorities, and render the words, 'Judas, the son of James.' The name of Jude only occurs once in the Gospel narrative (John xiv. 22). Nothing is certainly known of the later history of the Apostle. Tradition connects him with the foundation of the Church at Edessa."—SMITH'S 'Bible Dictionary.'

^d Simon the Canaanite ($\Sigma\iota\mu\omega\delta$ δ Κανανίτης).—"Simon Zelotes is called Simon the Cananite (Matt. x. 4, Mark iii. 18), which in Hebrew signifieth 'zealous,' as is more apparent by the Syrian and Arabic writing of it, than the Greek. It is like he was so called from Canah in Galilee, the place of his abode; and the Evangelist translated this proper Hebrew name into a Greek appellation, as John doth Siloam (John ix. 7). This Simon was the son of Alphaeus also, and so likewise was Judas mentioned instantly after (Mark vi. 3). And so hath Alphaeus three sons that were Apostles."—LIGHTFOOT on the Acts of the Apostles vol. i. p. 742.

"Simon the Canaanite, one of the Twelve Apostles (Matt. x. 4, Mark iii. 18), otherwise described as Simon Zelotes (Luke vi. 15, Acts i. 13). The latter term, which is peculiar to Luke, is the Greek equivalent for the Chaldee term preserved by Matthew and Mark [Canaanite]. Each of these equally points out Simon as belonging to the faction of the Zealots, who were conspicuous for their fierce advocacy of the Mosaic ritual.

"The Canaanite,' the designation of the Apostle Simon, other-

We have four lists of the names of the Apostles, one in each of the Gospels of S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke, and one in the Acts of the Apostles. In all these S. Peter is placed first, and in S. Matthew he is expressly called "first" ($\pi\rho\omega\tau\omicron\varsigma$). With the exception of Judas Iscariot, who is always placed last, the others are not invariably placed in the same order. Is this the result of accident? He would be a bold commentator who would maintain this. But it may be easier to state what were not the reasons why, in the catalogue of the Apostles, Peter is wise known as 'Simon Zelotes.' The word does not signify a descendant of Canaan, nor a native of Cana; but it comes from a Chaldee or Syriac word, Kannein or Knonoy, by which the Jewish sect or faction of 'the Zealots' was designated. This Syriac word is the reading of the Peshito version. The Greek equivalent is Zelotes, and this St. Luke (vi. 15, Acts i. 13) has correctly preserved."—SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

"The correct form of the word is Κανανίτης , not Κανανίτης , in both passages where it occurs (Matt. x. 4; Mark iii. 18); but the latter stood in the text which our translators had before them. Yet this false reading certainly should not have misled them, for Κανανίτης , the word for the Canaanite in the LXX. and in Matt. xv. 22, is even farther from Κανανίτης than from Κανανίτης . The parallel passages in S. Luke (Luke vi. 15, Acts i. 13) point to the fact that this surname is the Aramaic word כנעני , corresponding to the Greek Κανανίτης , 'the zealot'; and this being so, it is somewhat strange that our translators should have gone astray on the word, seeing that the Greek form for כנעני , 'Canaanite,' is invariably spelt correctly with a X, corresponding to Caph, and not with a K, corresponding to Koph. The earlier versions, however, all suppose the word to involve the name of a place, though they do not all render it alike. Tyndale, Coverdale, and the Great Bible have 'Simon of Cane,' or 'Cana'; the Geneva Testament (1557) has 'of Canan' in the one place, and 'of Cane' in the other; the Geneva Bible, 'Canaanite' in both. The Bishops' Bible, so far as I have observed, first prints the word with a double a (Matt. x. 4), thus fixing the reference to Canaan."—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of N. T.,' p. 138.

^e Judas Iscariot.—What is the exact meaning of Iscariot is not known. Many conjectures have been made, such as ish Kerioth אִישׁ כְּרִיּוֹת , a native of Kerioth in Judah (Josh. xv. 25). Similar compounds can be produced, as, for instance, Ishbosheth, Ishtob. Nothing seems to be known for certain about Judas before his call to be an Apostle. Lightfoot says, "It may be inquired whether this name was given him while he was alive, or not till after his death. If while he was alive, one may not improperly derive it from סְכֻרְתָּיָא , Skortia, which is also written סְכֻרְתָּיָא , Iskortia." After showing by quotations from the Rabbinical writers, that this word is used to signify a leathern apron that tanners put on over their clothes, Lightfoot concludes, "so that Judas Iscariot may perhaps signify as much as Judas with the apron. But now in such aprons they had purses sown, in which they were wont to carry their money, as you may see in Aruck. And hence it may be Judas had that title of the purse-bearer, as he was called Judas with the apron.

"Or what if he used the art of a tanner, before he was chose into discipleship? Certainly we read of one Simon a tanner (Acts ix. 43), and that this Judas was the son of Simon (John xiii. 26).

"But if he were not branded with this title till after his death, I should suppose it derived from סְכֻרְתָּיָא , Iscara. He then shows by quotations from the Gemarists, that this word means death by strangling, and then concludes, "When Judas therefore perished by a most miserable strangling, being strangled by the devil (which we observe in its place), no wonder if this infamous death be branded upon his name, to be commonly styled Judas Iscariot, or that Judas that perished by strangling."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. x. 4; vol. ii. p. 176.

always placed first, than to say exactly why he was. For instance, it could not be because Peter was first called to be an Apostle; for Andrew was called before him (John i. 40, &c.). He was not placed first because he was the oldest; for, according to a common opinion in the primitive Church, there were others among the Apostles older than he.¹ He was not placed first because he was the first in love; for S. John was the disciple whom Jesus is especially said to have loved.

The interpretation most commonly received in the early Church on this point was, not that S. Peter was placed first because he was the source and centre of all authority and jurisdiction—for they held that all the Twelve were sent with equal authority to preach and to heal, and were endowed with equal power to work miracles; but that, equals though they were, S. Peter was intentionally, and not by accident, placed the first among them, as primus inter pares, the recognised head among brethren, with the authority of an elder brother in the Apostolic brotherhood. Some, anxious to escape from even this moderate conclusion, have endeavoured to throw doubts on the genuineness of the expression in S. Matthew's Gospel, "First, Simon," and have maintained that it is a mere interpolation. But no countenance is given to this theory by the best manuscripts. Modern research leaves the question very much where the ancients left it.

On inspecting the names of the Apostles, it is impossible to overlook the humility of S. Matthew. He alone of the three Evangelists records to all future generations what had been his former profession. After this long lapse of time it is not easy for us to realize the extreme degradation which the profession of a publican implied, or the disgust with which it inspired the respectable portion of the Jews. Such men had lost caste among their brethren, as traitors both to their nation and to their religion.

Jesus classes His Apostles in pairs, and sends them two and two to preach, probably as here given by S. Matthew. Among them there are at least three sets of brothers: Peter and Andrew, James and John, James (the less) son of Alphæus and Judas. Some also suppose that Simon the Canaanite was brother to the last two. The last five were probably related to Jesus through His mother. These had been His most intimate companions, and had probably heard more of His doctrine, both before He began His ministry and after, than the others; and in making them His Apostles, He chose them to toil and danger, and not to honour. Upon Peter, James, and John, He conferred new names, and the privilege of greater intimacy than upon the rest. They alone were selected to be present when He wrought some of His miracles, and to witness His transfiguration in the mount, and His agony in the garden.

JESUS INSTRUCTS THE TWELVE AND SENDS THEM FORTH.

S. MATTHEW x. 5-15.

S. MARK vi. 8-13.

S. LUKE ix. 3-6.

5 These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not:

6 But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

8 And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only;

3 And He said unto them. Take nothing for your journey, neither staves,

9 Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat.

11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy:

9 no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse: but beschool with sandals: and not put on two coats.

10 And He said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money: neither have two coats apiece.

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide,

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 17; vol. i. p. 921.

S. MATTHEW x.

- and there abide till ye go thence.
- 12 And when ye come into an house, salute it.
- 13 And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.
- 14 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet.
- 15 Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.

S. MARK vi.

- there abide till ye depart from that place.
- 11 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them.
- Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.
- 12 And they went out, and preached that men should repent.
- 13 And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.

S. LUKE ix.

- and thence depart.
- 5 And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.
- 6 And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the Gospel, and healing every where.

After Jesus had called the Twelve to Him, and had appointed them each his companion, He first gives them the necessary instructions for the regulation of their conduct, and then invites them to the performance of these by various promises and other motives and inducements.

His first charge relates to the people to whom they are to preach.

5. These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not:

S^a. omits saying.
Vulg. præcipiens eis, dicens.

6. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

His tender regard for the Jewish nation and for their salvation is apparent everywhere.¹ The Jews had been in His fold and had wandered from it: His first love was for them. The Gentiles had never yet been gathered into the fold. The Jews tenaciously remembered that the Messiah had been promised to them; and lest in their haste they should conclude that Jesus could not be the Messiah, if His Apostles were to preach to the Samaritans and to the Gentiles as well as to themselves, He forbids them to go to the Gentiles or to the Samaritans, who were looked upon as Gentiles, or as worse than Gentiles, by the Jews. This command, from its very nature, could only be of temporary duration; it would cease with His own ministry. That no prejudice to the belief in the Incarnation might arise in the minds of the Jews, because this was preached to the Samaritans and Gentiles as well as to themselves, it was withheld from the latter for a time; that is, until the Jews as a nation had rejected it, by crucifying the Son of Man Himself, but only until then. After the Resurrection, when He gives the Apostles a second commission to preach the Gospel of His kingdom, it is to all nations.

His second command is as to the nature of their preaching.

7. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Heaven, which had been closed to man by the fall of Adam, would be re-opened to him by the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of Jesus, God Incarnate. From that time the kingdom of heaven would begin. From the Ascension of the God-Man would date the possibility and the privilege of man's ascension thither. From that time and through the Incarnation, man, by a life of training and of preparation by supernatural aids, might secure for himself an everlasting rest in heaven. Such was to be the main subject of the Apostles' preaching to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

His third and fourth commands have respect to the use of their power to work miracles.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. x. 5; vol. vii. p. 62.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxii.; vol. i. p. 447.

Euthymius, in Matt. x. 5; vol. i. p. 385.

8. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

S.V. Raise the dead, cleanse the lepers: S. sanctis raise the dead.
Vulg. Infermorum curato, mortuos suscite, leprosos munda, demones ejicite.

They were to use the miraculous powers with which He had endowed them to the furtherance of His Gospel, as well as for the relief of their bodily afflictions. By healing their bodies and casting out devils, in the Name of Jesus—that is, by His power and authority—they would induce men to believe in His words, and to order their lives according to His commands.

These blessings they were to dispense without any return. The reason assigned for this was, that as they had received it freely, without any labour, so they were to distribute it freely, without any payment or return. This power to work miracles was the free gift of God, not the reward of their own labour or industry. So important is this, that He makes it the sole subject of a separate command.

His fifth command refers to provision for their journey.

9. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, Marg. Get.

Vulg. Nolite possidere aurum, neque argentum, neque pecuniam in zonis vestris.

10. Nor scrip^a for your journey, neither two coats,^b neither shoes, nor yet staves:^c for the workman is worthy of his meat.

Marg. nor yet a staff.
Vulg. neque virgam.

In forbidding gold, silver, and brass, He forbade money of every description. The modern word "purse" conveys little idea of the way in which the ancients carried their money. As this was always carried in the girdle, the term "girdle" is a more faithful representation of the Greek ζώνη than "purse" is, though the girdle is not with us a receptacle for money.

In Palestine the inhabitants used two kinds of protection for the feet in walking. 1. Shoes (ὑποδήματα), which in a manner covered and protected the upper part of the feet as well as the soles. These indicated a greater degree of comfort and luxury, and of leisure in travel. 2. Sandals (συνδάλια), which covered the soles only. In the rough, stony country of Palestine, sandals was a necessary protection to the feet, even where poverty or the necessity for great speed forbade the use of shoes. It has been shown that this distinction between the shoe and the sandal was commonly observed in the Rabbinical writings.¹

According to S. Matthew, our Saviour forbade His Apostles to wear shoes in this their journey through Judaea, though, according to S. Mark, He allowed them the use of sandals.

The staff (ῥάβδος) was used for two purposes, for defence against an enemy and for assistance in walking.

S. Matthew represents Him as forbidding His Apostles to provide a staff (μὴ κτήσασθε . . . ῥάβδον), and S. Mark as allowing them to carry a staff only, though they might not carry the other things here mentioned (ὅνα μὴδὲν αἰρώσιν . . . εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον). It may be that He wished them to rely so entirely on His protecting care, as not to carry with them even such a common means of defence as a staff, though they might carry a staff for the purpose of helping them on their way; or it may be that He forbade them to provide a special staff with a view to this particular journey. For this their journey through the cities belonging to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, they were to provide neither money, food, clothing, nor any means of defence. He forbids their making any of the provision which travellers usually make for a journey.

Two questions arise with respect to this command. 1. Was it one of perpetual obligation on the Apostles? 2. Is it still binding on their successors? In answer to the latter question, it may be said that the general spirit of moderation and reliance on Christ's care implied in the command is binding on His ministers now, though it is not binding on them in its strict literal sense. Neither would it appear to have been binding on the Apostles themselves, beyond the single journey throughout Judaea on which He was now sending them.² For afterwards He refers to this particular journey, and His words indicate that they are then pursuing a different course, and would continue to do so: "He said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then said He unto them, But now," &c. (Luke xxii. 35). It is plain from these very words that one reason of His command had been to give an instance to the people to whom He sent them, and perhaps also to the Apostles themselves, of His supernatural power to protect them, and thus of His being

¹ Lightfoot on Matt. x. 10; vol. ii. p. 178.

² S. Chrysostom, in Epist. ad Philipp. Homil. x. p. 108.

[Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lv. p. 431.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. x. 9; vol. viii. p. 224.

^a Scrip (σάκκος, Heb. galkūt) — "The Hebrew word thus translated appears in 1 Sam. xvii. 40, as a synonym for the bag in which the shepherds of Palestine carried their food or other necessities. The scrip of the Galilean peasants was of leather, used especially to carry their food on a journey, and slung over their shoulders (Matt. x. 10; Mark vi. 8; Luke ix. 3, xxii. 35). The English word 'scrip' is probably connected with σάκκος, sacculus, and was used in like manner for articles of food." — SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

"All shepherds have them, and they are the farmer's universal sale-meum. They are merely the skins of kids stripped off whole, and tanned by a very simple process." — THOMSON, 'The Land and the People,' p. 345.

^b Neither two coats. — See Introductory Note.

^c A staff. — In Matt. x. 10, the Twelve are instructed not to provide a staff (ῥάβδον); in Mark. vi. 8, they are told not to take anything save a staff only. Here Matthew refers to providing (κτᾶσθαι) beforehand for the journey; Mark to what they may actually take along with them." — ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 195.

more than mere man. Neither did He Himself, when He afterwards went about with His Apostles and disciples, act according to His command to them now. We read that He and His Apostles had a common fund, and a bag in which to carry it; that they purchased provisions; and that women who ministered to their necessities constantly followed them. Neither did the Apostles, after His Ascension, carry out this command in their daily life. Occasionally they had the distribution of large sums; for disciples sold their possessions and laid the money at the Apostles' feet. S. Paul was so far from depending on his flock for maintenance, that he wrought with his own hands in order to supply his necessities. These and many other considerations prove that this command was merely of a temporary nature, and was limited to this single journey through Judea.

His sixth command relates to the persons with whom they were to take up their abode on this mission.

11. And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence.

S. inquire in it who is worthy.
Vulg. interrogate quis in ea dignus sit.

To take up their abode in the house of a man who was an enemy to the faith might endanger their lives, and to do this in the house of a man of infamous character was the sure way to bring discredit on their cause. Having once entered a house, they were to remain in it until they removed from that neighbourhood. Several reasons have been suggested why this was commanded; such as, that they might not acquire the character of fickleness, or that they might not cause needless disappointment to their first host by removing from him to another, or that they might not be regarded as given to luxurious tastes, or be in danger of contracting such.

His seventh command was as to the way in which they were to ascertain whether a house was worthy to receive them or not.

12. And when ye come into an house, salute it.

S. salute it, saying, Peace to this house.
Vulg. Et si quidem fuerit domus illa diema, veniet pax vestra super eam; si autem non fuerit digna, pax vestra revertetur ad vos.

13. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

S.V. return upon you.
Vulg. Et si quidem fuerit domus illa diema, veniet pax vestra super eam; si autem non fuerit digna, pax vestra revertetur ad vos.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxii.; vol. i. p. 450.

Theophylact, in Matt. x. 11; vol. i. p. 47.

Euthymius, in Matt. x. 11; vol. i. p. 391.

Venerable Bede, in Matt. x. 11; vol. iii. p. 53.

* Shake off the dust of your feet.—“The schools of the scribes taught, that the dust of heathen land defiled by the touch. Therefore that rite of shaking the dust off the feet commanded the disciples, speaks thus much: Whosoever a city of Israel shall not

After they had made inquiry of the men of the place who in it was worthy, they should receive another proof of this, in the way in which their salutation was accepted. If their greeting was received in a spirit of good-will, they were to take this as a sign from God that the house was worthy to receive them. If their salutation was not accepted, this was to be to them an indication that they were not to abide in this house, but to carry their blessings elsewhere.

The blessings which the Apostles were especially to convey by the word “Peace,” would be spiritual blessings—peace between God and man, His forgiveness and favour. The sense in which the host would accept the salutation, would probably be peace between man and man. But the word “Peace” was the emblem and the medium of all blessings, human and divine.

His eighth command relates to the testimony and the warning which they were to lift up against those who rejected them and their message.

14. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet.*

S. house or city or town.
Vulg. exsentes foras de domo, vel civitate, excutite pulverem de pedibus vestris.

15. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrhah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

S. and the land of Gomorrhah.
Vulg. terrae Sodomorum et Gomorrhæorum.

On leaving the country of the heathen, it was a custom with the Jews to express their abhorrence of them as unbelievers and aliens from the house of Israel, by shaking off the dust from their feet. In like manner the Apostles are commanded, when rejected by the Jews, to shake off the dust from their feet for a testimony against them. This may be to express that in their eyes, and in the eyes of Him who sent them, these Jews are as heathens and aliens from His kingdom, and that in the day of judgment this act of the Apostles will rise up and bear witness against the Jews, that they had formally rejected Christ and His offers of salvation.²

As it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrhah in the day of judgment than for those Jews who reject Christ and His Apostles, we may conclude that, horrible as their sin appears to us and signal as was their punishment, in the eyes of God their sin, compared with their former advantages, receive you; when ye depart, by shaking off the dust from your feet, show that ye esteem that city, however a city of Israel, for a heathen, profane, impure city, and as such abhor it.”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. x. 14; vol. ii. p. 179.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. x. 14; vol. vii. p. 64.

S. Augustine, in Quest. Evang. ad Matt. vii.; vol. iii. p. 1366.

Theophylact, in Matt. x. 14; vol. i. p. 48.

was less than that of the Jews who refused to hear Christ's Apostles, in the face of the miracles which they wrought, and in spite of the previous teaching which they had received through the prophets, and last of all through John the Baptist. The sin of unbelief in God, and in His Revelation, will be punished with a greater punishment even than the sins which natural instinct teaches mankind to abhor.¹

Thus far His commands have a literal meaning, and a particular reference to their present mission to the cities of Judæa. In the following nine verses (16-23) they will bear a more general interpretation, and relate rather to the future preaching of the Apostles, which will be to both Jews and Gentiles. His ninth command relates to their behaviour in their daily intercourse with the adversaries of the Faith.

S. Matthew alone contains verses 16-42.

16. ¶ Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves.^a

^a as the serpent.

Vulg. prudentes sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbæ.

There is no allusion here to the wisdom of the devil, or to the serpent which seduced Eve in the garden of Eden, but to the natural properties of the serpent. Many of these have been described by ancient writers, some true to fact, others fanciful, and existing only in the imagination. The wisdom of the serpent in foreseeing danger, and by its skillful instinct avoiding the inconveniences incident to its mode of existence, was a common theme among the early Christian writers, so much so that it was embodied in their proverbial sayings.

Such wisdom as the serpent showed² in the many dangers peculiar to its life; such gentleness, forgetfulness of injuries, sweetness of disposition, and constancy of love, as the dove showed, or was said to show—such they were to display in the various persecutions to which they would be subjected, in the character of His Apostles and preachers of His Gospel.

He bids them call to mind who it is that is sending them, ἰδοὺ, ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω ὑμᾶς, the absolutely defenceless state of themselves who are being sent, and the violent furious nature of those to whom they are sent. In relation to the early preachers of the Gospel, the Jews in general, or particular classes of them, such as the scribes and Pharisees, would be as wolves ready to devour them; such, too, would be the Gentiles. The object on which they were sent, was to turn these wolves into sheep, to convert their infuriated persecutors into disciples of Jesus. This object would be effected only if they acted on the principles which He here lays down for them, by showing the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove. Such was the way in which He would manifest His power. Sheep should live in the midst of wolves, and should be bitten and torn by them on all sides, and yet they would at last transform the wolves into their own nature, tame and gentle like themselves. So long as they acted like sheep, they would overcome the wolves. Though wolves innumerable beset them on every side, yet in the end they were sure to gain the victory. But if, in their turn, they acted like wolves, and resisted like wolves, they would be overcome: for they were to succeed, not by their own strength and might, but by the power of Him who sent them. If by patient suffering they exercised love and gentleness, a victory would be gained by the power of Christ. If, relying on their own strength, they resisted and met them with carnal weapons, they would overshadow His divine power. Success would be ensured by their suffering wrongfully, and failure by their doing wrong.

His tenth command has a further reference to their behaviour in these persecutions.

17. But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues;^b

18. And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for My sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

He foretells the persecution and punishment that they would suffer, not merely from the irregular outbreak of individual passions, but punishment administered according to the usual forms of justice. Besides this, He warns them in separate and distinct terms to beware of men. This may mean that they are to have a special care of the guile and seductions by which men would attempt to withdraw them from their duty, and win them over to compliance with their own practice and opinions.

¹ S. Hilary Piet. in Matt. x. 15; vol. i. p. 970.

S. Jerome, in Matt. x. 15; vol. vii. p. 64.

Venerable Bede, in Matt. x. 15; vol. iii. p. 53. [Theophylact,

Theophylact, in Matt. x. 15; vol. i. p. 48.

² S. Basil, Regul. brevius tract. 245; vol. iii. p. 1245.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxiii.; vol. i. p. 462.

^a Harmless (ἀκέραιοι) as doves.—"In some cases the wrong rendering of our translators arose from a false derivation, which was generally accepted in their age. Thus ἀκέραιος is rendered 'harmless' (from κέρας, κεράϊω), Matt. x. 16, Phil. ii. 15, instead of 'simple, pure, sincere' (from κεράνναι, to mix, adulterate). The margin has, however, in the first 'or simple;' and in the second, 'or sincere.'"—CANON LIGHTFOOT, on 'Revision of N. T.' p. 157.

^b They will scourge you in their synagogues.—"In every synagogue there was a civil triumvirate; that is, three magistrates, who judged of matters in contest, arising within that synagogue.

So that fivefold scourging of St. Paul (2 Cor. xi. 24) was in the synagogue; that is, by that bench of three magistrates, such as was in every synagogue.

"It is something obscure that is said, προσέχετε δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, 'but beware of men.' Of whom else should they beware? But perhaps the word ἀνθρώποι, men, may occur in that sense as men in these forms of speech, 'the men of the great Assembly, and the men of the House of Judgment,' &c. But we will not contend about it."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. x. 17; vol. ii. p. 179.

No long time elapsed before there were many instances of persecution, as recorded in the Gospel narrative. Early in their career the Apostles in a body were beaten (Acts v. 40). S. Paul enumerates the several times he was beaten (2 Cor. xi. 24), and S. James was put to death (Acts xii. 2). But their constancy under punishment, and even under death itself, was a testimony unto them. To some it would be a testimony unto them for their good; for it would convince them of the truth of the faith which the Apostles preached, and for which they were content to suffer. To others it would be a testimony unto them for their condemnation. It would be a proof that the faith of Christ had been preached unto them and they had rejected it.

His eleventh command relates to their answer when brought before councils, and kings, and governors.

19. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak.

Vulg. nolite cogitare, quomodo aut quid loquamini.

20. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.

Anxious forethought (μέριμνα) was opposed to entire dependence on God's care for them. He had already forbidden this with respect to their daily food (vi. 31), and He now forbids it in the straits and perils into which preaching His Gospel would necessarily bring them, after His departure from them. Their counsellor then was to be the Holy Spirit. He would inspire them with an answer; nay, He would even dictate to them their answer, and such answer as was best. They on their part must be prepared to depend entirely on Him, and to act on His suggestions.

Deliverance from their persecutors would not always be the effect which the Holy Spirit had in store for them. At one time He would conduct them to freedom, at another to punishment, and at another to death. But implicit dependence on Him would never be misplaced. Whatever course He marked out for them was the one they were to pursue.

21. And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death.

The persecution foretold in the last few verses did not befall the Apostles on their first mission to preach the Gospel. Some¹ have therefore concluded that Jesus did not really include them in His instructions to the Twelve preparatory to their journey through Judæa, but that He foretold them later on, more towards the end of His own ministry, when He was teaching them what would be the effect of their preaching after His Ascension into heaven. This opinion receives some countenance from the fact that S. Luke does not describe Jesus as expressing these words when He sent the Twelve on their first mission to preach (ix. 1, &c.), though He does afterwards (xxi. 16, &c.). The more common and perhaps the more probable opinion is, that Jesus pronounced these predictions of persecution or portions of them twice, and that S. Matthew is the more accurate as well as the more full when he represents Him as uttering these words, or words very similar, to the Apostles on their first mission, and again (xxiv. 10 and 13) when He was approaching the end of His ministry.²

22. And ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

The term "all" is not to be interpreted strictly for every individual, but for many, or the greater part, in every place. The Jews from the beginning looked upon Jesus and His Apostles with jealousy, and finally with hatred. Though the early preachers of Christianity professed to worship the same one true God as the Jews, they proclaimed a further revelation of His divine will, which the Jews could not comprehend, especially as it superseded the worship offered by them. The Gentiles not unnaturally regarded the Christians as enemies, because they made no kind of compromise with them, but denounced their lives as unholy and their religion as false. Men who preached a religion which was to supersede all other religions and all other worship, would be regarded as the enemies of the world.

His twelfth command, if command it be, and not rather a permission, still relates to their conduct in persecution.

23. But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of Man be come.^a Margin, end or finish.

Vulg. Cum autem persequerentur vos in civitate ista, fugite in aliam. Amen dico vobis, non consummabitur civitas Israel, donec veniat Filius hominis.

Whether this verse was a command or a permission, and was limited to the Apostles and to their preaching in Judæa, or was applicable to all the preachers of Christ's Gospel in every age of the world, was a fruitful source of discussion among the writers of the early Church. In opposition to the opinion of Tertullian,³ the general conclusion that seems

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lv. p. 436.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. x. 21; vol. viii. p. 231.

³ Tertullian, de Fuga in Persecutione; vol. ii. p. 103, &c.

^a Till the Son of Man be come.—On the meaning of this expression generally, see Lightfoot on John xxi. 22, vol. ii. p. 625. See also this Commentary on S. John xxi. 23.

to have been arrived at was, that Jesus gave this not merely as a permission but as a command, and that He did this with a view to the more rapid spread of the knowledge of His Gospel.¹ A signal exemplification of this we see in the persecution that was raised against the Church at Jerusalem (Acts viii. 1). So long as the Apostles and disciples all remained at Jerusalem the Church received no great increase, but the same persecution that dispersed the disciples disseminated the knowledge of the Incarnation throughout all the regions of Judæa and Samaria. If we regard this verse as a command, and to all the ministers of the Gospel, it must be with some limitation of this kind, that the motive which influences and regulates their flight from city to city must not be fear for their own lives, but love of Christ, a desire to spread the knowledge of His Name to as many as possible. If it is a permission only, then we must regard it as a tender concession to the natural weakness and timidity of human nature.

Even by fleeing from one city to another, they would not have gone over all the cities of Israel before He would come to take vengeance on the Jews for their rejection of Him, by the destruction of Jerusalem, and by the utter dispersion of the Jews as a nation. This was a prophecy which He shortly repeats again and again in different words and as a type of the Day of Judgment, but which they would scarcely understand at the time, and which few of them would live to see, probably none of them but St. John.

This verse has also been interpreted so as to mean that they should not have finished, or converted to the faith in Him, the cities of Israel before the coming of the Son of Man to judgment.²

With this verse Jesus finishes the commands which He gives to the Apostles as instructions for their conduct during the mission on which He is now about to send them. Some of these He evidently meant for His servants in all ages, so far as they are applicable to their altered condition. In the following verses He adduces various considerations that should serve to kindle their zeal and to act as consolations and incentives to them, amidst all the drawbacks they would necessarily meet with.

The first motive which Jesus supplies for the encouragement of His Apostles is His own example.

24. The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

Vulg. Non est discipulus super magistrum, nec servus super dominum suum.

25. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

Margin, Beelzebub.
S.V. Beelzebub.

Vulg. Si patr*em* familias Beelzebub vocarunt, quid t*em*pl*um* domus*ti*c*um* Jesu*us*?

If they persecuted Jesus, who was the Lord and Master, much more would they persecute the Apostles, who were only His servants and disciples. If, in the face of all the wonders and miraculous cures that Jesus had wrought for them, they derided Him, and said that He cast out devils through Beelzebub—nay, if they even proceeded so far as to say to Jesus that He Himself was Beelzebub—much less would they scruple to say this to His disciples. But if Jesus bore all this meekly and patiently, to follow in His steps was of itself sufficient honour and glory to His Apostles.

His second source of encouragement is drawn from the fact that this persecution is only temporary, and arises from the ignorance which at present prevails respecting Jesus and His Gospel, but which after a while would be replaced by a more perfect knowledge, and a more ready acceptance of it.

26. Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known.

Vulg. Nihil enim est opertum, quod non revelabitur: et occultum, quod non sciatur.

27. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear,^a that preach ye upon the housetops.^b of the Sabbath. The first sound was, that they should cease from their works in the fields; the second, that they should cease from theirs in the city; the third, that they should light the Sabbath candle, &c.—Ibid.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. ii. 2, quæst. 185, art. 5; vol. iii. p. 1318.

² S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. x. 23; vol. i. p. 971.

Maldonatus, in Matt. x. 23; vol. i. p. 154.

^a At the present day local governors in country districts cause their commands thus to be published. Their proclamations are generally made in the evening, after people have returned from their labours in the field. The public crier ascends the highest roof at hand, and lifts up his voice in a long-drawn call upon all faithful subjects to give ear and obey. He then proceeds to announce, in a set form, the will of their master, and demand obedience thereto.—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 41.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxiv.; vol. i. p. 475.

S. Gregory Nazianzen, Orat. i. contr. Julianum; vol. i. p. 617.

S. Athanasius, Apologia de Fuga sua; vol. i. p. 657.

S. Augustine, Epist. cccxviii. (alias 180) ad Honoratum; vol. ii. p. 1013. [S. Thomas

^a What ye hear in the ear.—Allusion is here made to the manner of the schools, where the doctor whispered out of the chair into the ear of the interpreter, and he, with a loud voice, repeated to the whole school that which was spoken in the ear.

^b We cannot but suspect that that custom in the Church of Corinth, which the Apostle reproves, of speaking in the synagogue in an unknown tongue, were some footsteps of this custom.—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. x. 27; vol. ii. p. 180.

^c Preach ye upon the housetops.—Perhaps allusion is made to that custom when the minister of the synagogue, on the Sabbath eve, sounded with a trumpet, six times, upon the roof of an exceeding high house, that thence all might have notice of the coming in

What was hid should be known not only in the day of judgment, but also in this life. At present they called Him Beelzebub, and His Apostles the disciples of Beelzebub, but soon they would recognise in Him the Son of God, who came to redeem mankind from sin and death. The Gospel, which now sounded strange in their ears, would ultimately be received as the truth throughout the world. They were to shrink from nothing, but state unreservedly whatever He had taught them. What He had taught them in parables or in figures they were to expound plainly to the people. What He had said to them privately in the house they were to preach in the most public place in the street. What He had taught them in Judea they were to disseminate throughout the whole world.¹

His third incentive to their zeal is drawn from a comparison of the power of man who is their persecutor, and of God who sends them to preach.

28. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.²

The utmost risk that they would run in preaching the Gospel was the anger of man who could kill the body. But to shrink from preaching the Gospel was to incur the anger of God, who could kill both body and soul. Their persecutors had power only over the body, and over the body only while in this world, whereas God had power over both soul and body, and in the world to come as well as in this world. "He could cast both body and soul into hell."

Some modern commentators have explained the words "but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell," as referring not to God, but to Satan. But such an interpretation was unknown to the ancient commentators, and is inconsistent with the meaning of the context.

His fourth encouragement is the special care and providence that God has over them.

29. Are not two sparrows^b sold for a farthing?^c and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father.

30. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

31. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.

If sparrows, which are of such little value that two of them are sold for the very smallest coins current among men; if they are objects of God's daily care, and of such care that they cannot fall without His permission, how much greater must be His care for man, whom He made in His own image, after His own likeness, and to redeem whom from sin and death the Son of God became incarnate! If God's providential care is extended not only over men's lives, but even over the smallest thing that concerns their well-being, what cause have they for fear? If persecution awaits them, it is by God's permission; if death, it is because by His appointment their labour is finished and their reward ready.

His fifth incentive to zeal in preaching is drawn from the reward which will await them hereafter.

32. Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven.

33. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven.

The Apostles and preachers of the Gospel should be delivered up to councils, and be scourged in their synagogues, and should be brought before governors and kings for His sake; but if, in spite of the threats of punishment, and even of death itself, they should continue to declare their belief that Jesus the Son of Mary was the Messiah, the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world, He would also acknowledge them before the assembled angels for His disciples, and would reward them with an everlasting crown of glory. Some there were

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. x. 26; vol. vii. p. 65.

² Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxiv.; vol. i. p. 477. [Theoph.

^a In hell (ἐν γέεννῃ).—See note on chap. v. 22.

^b Sparrows.—"These birds are snared and caught in great numbers; but as they are small and not much relished for food, five sparrows may still be sold for two farthings; and when we see their countless numbers, and the eagerness with which they are destroyed as a worthless nuisance, we can better appreciate the assurance that our heavenly Father, who takes care of them, so that not one can fall to the ground without His notice, will surely take care of us, who are of more value than many sparrows."—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 43.

^c Farthing.—"Two names of coins in the New Testament are rendered in the A. V. by this word:—1. κοδράντης, quadrans (Matt. x. 26; Mark xii. 42), a coin current in Palestine in the time of our Lord. It is equivalent to two lepta (A. V. 'mites'). The name quadrans was originally given to the quarter of the Roman as, or piece of three uncie, therefore also called teruncius. 2. ἀσάριον (Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6), properly a small as, assarion, but in the time of our Lord used as the Greek equivalent of the Latin as. The rendering of the Vulgate in Luke xii. 6 ('di-pondio') makes it probable that a single coin is intended by two assaria."—SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

Theophylact, in Matt. x. 26; vol. i. p. 50.

Euthymius, in Matt. x. 26; vol. i. p. 411.

"As regards coins, the smaller pieces are more adequately translated than the larger. No better rendering than 'mite' is possible for λεπτόν, or than 'farthing' for κοδράντης, quadrans; and the relation of the two coins is thus preserved (Mark xii. 42, λεπτά δύο, ὅ ἐστιν κοδράντης). But from this point the inadequacy and inconsistency begin. Why ἀσάριον, the late Greek diminutive used for the as, of which therefore the κοδράντης is a fourth part, should still be translated a farthing (which elsewhere represents κοδράντης), rather than a penny, it is difficult to see (Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6). In Matt. x. 29, the Geneva Testament (1557) had rendered ἀσάριον by a half-penny (as Wycliffe), and similarly dio ἀσάριον, in Luke xii. 6, by a penny. The rest give it 'a farthing,' as in the A. V."—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of N. T.,' p. 165.

whose constancy could scarcely be maintained by this promise, glorious as it is; whose courage would fail at the sight of the refined tortures and excruciating pains prepared for the body. To give support to such and to strengthen their feeble resolution, He utters these awful words, "But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven."

History shows the wonderful effect that these words had in the time of persecution; how they nerved beings of the most gentle nature, and of the feeblest frames, to endure tortures too horrible to be expressed. The picture which He here draws of the day of judgment, and the Son of Man acknowledging some as His before the assembled angels, and disowning others as traitors in the hour of trial, decided many a sinking spirit to brave all that man could invent in the way of bodily pain, for the reward which awaited them.

Full of peace as the Gospel of Jesus was, of peace between God and man, He foretells that it would not always be made the occasion of peace between man and man, and He foretells this in the words of the prophet Micah (vii. 6).

34. Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword.

35. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

36. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.

Contradicting or superseding, as it did, all other systems of religion, of human or divine origin, the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven would be opposed by all that did not embrace it, as antagonistic to all. Preached in its integrity, there could not grow up alongside with it, either the Jewish or the manifold systems of heathenism, at least in peace. It must absorb them, or they it.

Even among the professors of Christianity, human passion and human imperfection would too often make it an occasion of strife, of dire and exterminating strife.¹ To express this, Jesus uses the words which Micah (vii. 6) had already used to foretell the dissensions and miseries that should befall the city of Jerusalem on their rejection of the Son of Man. These words would be familiar to the ears of the people. In the prophet's words He foretells the division, expressed by the term "sword," the instrument of division, to which the religion which brought peace and pardon to man would give rise. He does this in words that for happiness of expression and fertility of description have never been surpassed. By quoting these words of the prophet, He reminds them of the miseries that were soon to fall on their city and nation. He republishes, as it were, the prophecy, and sets His seal to the truth of its description.

He points out the division which belief in Him will cause, even among members of the same family, and declares that, however great the sacrifice is, it must be borne by those who would prove themselves His disciples.

37. He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me.

38. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me.

Carrying the cross from the place of condemnation to the place of crucifixion was the first step, and the usual preparation for a death by crucifixion. Of all kinds of death this was the most fearful, from its lingering, excruciating nature. In comparison with death by crucifixion, all other sufferings sank into insignificance. He who could make up his mind to face this, could bear every hardship. But he who would be Christ's disciple must be prepared for this; he must be content to undergo every insult, every species of pain and cruelty that man can contrive, even up to death on the cross. Nor in this, great as it seems, would he be doing more than imitating the example which his Master had set him; he would be simply following Him. Whether the Apostles understood that in these words Jesus was alluding to his own death, and to the nature of it, is uncertain. Probably they did not; for after events have thrown a light upon these words, which they would not then possess.

39. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it.

Vulg. Qui invenit animam suam, perdet illam; et qui perdidit animam suam propter me, inveniet eam.

In this verse the word "life" is used in two senses. In the first is meant the life of the body, that life which is spent in this world; and in the second the life of the soul, the life hereafter, the life of everlasting happiness.

He who denies Christ, who renounces his belief in Jesus as the Son of God, and who in the day of persecution denies that he is a follower of Him, by such act of denial he has gained his life in this world, but he has lost the life of eternal happiness in the world to come: he will be disowned at the day of judgment. But he who in the day of trial confesses his belief in Jesus, and openly declares himself His disciple, and thereby loses his life in this world, in the world to come he shall inherit life everlasting.²

In the early Church this verse, like verses 32 and 33, had a very definite and practical meaning. The persecution to which they were daily exposed, gave scope for putting their faith in these words of our Saviour's to the proof. Few of His sayings were more constantly in their mouth, or had more influence in the Church, than these. Confessors and martyrs and traditors were the commonest of terms, and these all indicated action in one of the modes here mentioned.

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. x. 34; vol. i. p. 155.

² Cornelius Lapide, in Matt. x. 34; vol. xiii. p. 2-7.

² Tertullian, in Scorpiano, chap. vi. vol. ii. p. 144.

Much of what He had said would apply to His disciples in all ages. In conclusion He turns to His Apostles whom He was now sending to preach in the cities of Judæa, and indicates how great will be the reward of those who receive them.

40. ¶ He that receiveth you receiveth Me, and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me.

and he : S^a. but he.
Vulg. et qui me recipit.

When a king wishes to confer honour upon anyone, he sends his ambassador to him, as his representative; and in receiving the ambassador he receives the king himself. In the same way, but in a much more real and supernatural sense, those who receive the Apostles whom Jesus is now sending as His representatives will receive Him, and those who receive Him will receive His Father that sent Him, for He is One with the Father.

41. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward.

42. And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.

Vulg. Et quicumque potum dederit uni ex minimis istis calicem aque frigide tantum in nomine discipuli : amen dico vobis, non perdet mercedem suam.

The office of the prophet was not merely to declare future events, but to declare God's will, whether as regarded the past, the present, or the future, and to teach this to the people. He, therefore, who received the Apostles, who were the prophets sent to preach the kingdom of heaven, in the name of an Apostle, or because they were the Apostles of Jesus, should receive a share in the Apostles' reward. As by receiving the Apostles they contributed towards their success in preaching the Gospel, they should share in the reward which the Apostles should receive for their labours. The reward of those who received the Apostles might not be equal to the reward which the Apostles themselves should receive for their preaching, but it should be in proportion to what they had done, to the share which they had contributed to such success.¹

He also who should receive a righteous man, though not a prophet or preacher, in the name of a righteous man, should receive a righteous man's reward: he should receive grace to repent of his sins and to become righteous himself.

In men of blameless life, simple admiration for goodness, pity shown towards the saints and confessors, often resulted in the receipt of grace to become martyrs for the faith themselves. The annals of the early Church in times of persecution furnish many instances of this.

Nay, the smallest act of kindness done to a disciple of Jesus, in the name of a disciple, or because he was His disciple, the giving the least portion of the commonest of all things, a cup of cold water, should not go without its reward.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. II. omil. xxxv. ; vol. i. p. 492.
S. Gregory Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. xx. ; vol. ii. p. 1168.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. x. 41 ; vol. viii. p. 239.

CHAPTER XI.

[2. John sendeth his disciples to Christ. 7. Christ's testimony concerning John. 18. The opinion of the people, both concerning John and Christ. 20. Christ upbraiddeth the unthankfulness and unrepentance of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum: 25. and praising His Father's wisdom in revealing the Gospel to the simple, 28. He calleth to Him all such as feel the burden of their sins.]

[Vulg. Ioannes de carcere nuntius mittit ad Iesum: quibus post Christi responsum abeuntibus, ipse coram turbis laudat Ioannem: Iudæis vero pueris in foro invicem exclamantibus assimilat, reprobrans civitatibus obstinatis in quibus plurimas fecerat virtutes: confessio Iesu ad Patrem: oneratos ad se vocat Christus, dicens iugum suum esse suave.]

I. And it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding His twelve disciples, He departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

Under the word "command" here the Evangelist includes the various instructions and promises and warnings which He gives them previous to their journey. With these S. Matthew concludes his narrative, and does not, like S. Mark (vi. 12) and S. Luke (ix. 6), give a short summary of the way in which they fulfilled their mission.

Two of the Evangelists, S. Matthew and S. Luke, record the message of John the Baptist to Jesus, with His answer and testimony to the character of John. S. Matthew's relation of this occurs immediately after Jesus had sent the twelve Apostles to preach in the cities of Judæa, and had Himself begun to preach to the Jews in another direction. It is probable that S. Matthew does not intend, by putting these two events together, to imply that this is the order in which they happened. It may be that this is one of those instances, so common in his Gospel, where he neglects the strict chronological order, and groups together events that have a certain similarity in their nature. Christ sending His disciples to preach, and John sending his disciples to question Jesus, might possess sufficient likeness to induce S. Matthew to place them next to each other. If S. Matthew meant his narration to be according to the exact order of events, he would make John's disciples come to Jesus when He was separated from all the Twelve.

It is much more probable that John the Baptist sent his disciples to Jesus, not immediately after Jesus had sent His Apostles to preach to the Jews, but some time before that.¹ S. Luke places the message of John the Baptist next after the raising of the widow's son in the village of Nain, which he alone of the Evangelists relates. He does not say that Jesus was still at Nain when He received John's messengers; nor does he say anything which might lead us to conclude where He was. Some have supposed that Jesus was at Jerusalem when the messengers of John came to Him. Nor is this very improbable. John would scarcely send his messengers to Jesus when He was on a mission preaching to the people, and moving about from city to city, and from village to village. In such a case the chances of not meeting with Him would be considerable. We may fairly conclude that John would send them to some place where he knew Jesus would certainly be found. No place would be more likely than Jerusalem, at one of the three great festivals. As the city of Nain lay on the road which was the common thoroughfare for travellers from Galilee to Jerusalem, it may be that Jesus was on His way from Galilee to Jerusalem, when as He passed along He met the procession carrying out a dead man from the gate of the city, on his way to be buried, and that the next event related in His ministry was His reception of John's messengers on His arrival at Jerusalem.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlvii. p. 359.
Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotaxis Gestorum Christi; vol. viii. p. 15.
————— in Matt. xi. 2; vol. viii. p. 241.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xxxi. vol. i. p. 226.

Tischenori, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. 42 and 156.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 41, 194.

JOHN THE BAPTIST IN PRISON SENDS TWO OF HIS DISCIPLES TO QUESTION JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xi. 2-6.

S. LUKE vii. 17-23.

2 Now when John had heard in the prison
the works of Christ, 3 he sent two of his disciples,
and said unto Him,
Art Thou He that should come,
or do we look for another?

Jesus answered and said unto them,
Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see:
the blind receive their sight,
and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them.
6 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me.

17 And this rumour of Him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about.

18 And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19 And John calling unto him two of his disciples sent them to Jesus, saying,
Art Thou He that should come?
or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto Him, they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto Thee, saying, Art Thou He that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in that same hour He cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind He gave sight.

22 Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard;
how that the blind see,
the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed,
the deaf hear, the dead are raised,
to the poor the Gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me.

2. Now when John had heard in the prison^a the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

S. V. he sent by his disciples.
Vulg. mittens duos de discipulis suis.

John sends his messengers to Jesus, from his prison in the castle of Machærus, in Perea, on the east of the Dead Sea.
How long he had now been in confinement it is impossible to say. Some conjecture about seven or eight months.

Many explanations have been given why John sent messengers with this particular form of message to Jesus. These may be classed under three heads.

1. Some¹ have held that John sent to inquire whether Jesus were He that should come, the Christ, or not, for his own satisfaction, because he himself still entertained doubts of this, which doubts had been increased by his unjust confinement. This opinion found very few supporters in early times, and when held it has chiefly been by modern interpreters. After the many demonstrations which John had received of Jesus, and after the ample and repeated testimony which he had himself given of Him, as recorded in S. John's Gospel (i. 34, 36; iii. 29, 30), it seems difficult to conceive how this can be the right explanation.

2. Another opinion² held by a few early writers and slightly akin to the last, is that John sent this inquiry to Jesus for his own satisfaction, but not because he was in doubt whether He were the Christ, but because he was uncertain whether He would suffer death and descend to the abode of the dead in order to redeem them. Some in modern times have held that John believed that Jesus the Son of Mary was the Christ, but made this inquiry because he was perplexed by His conduct. Different points have been assigned as causing this perplexity. Some think that, though John believed that Jesus was the Christ, he had become impatient at the slow course of His self-manifestation to the people. Another reason assigned for John's difficulty was why, if Jesus were the Christ, of which he had no doubt, He did not deliver him from his unjust captivity.

3. But the opinion which seems most probable, and which was almost universally held in the early Church,³ is that

¹ Tertullian, adv. Marc. iv. 18; vol. ii. p. 402.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. xi. 3; vol. vii. p. 70.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. vi. 1; vol. ii. p. 1095.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxvi. 1; vol. i. p. 501.

S. Cyril Alex. in Matt. xi. 3; vol. v. p. 398. [Theophylact, Theophylact, in Matt. xi. 3; vol. i. p. 52.

Euthymius, in Matt. xi. 3; vol. i. p. 425.

S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. xi. 3; vol. i. p. 979.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 360.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xi. 3; vol. viii. p. 242.

p. 491.

^a In the prison.—"Machærus, a place on the borders of the dominions of Aretas and Herod. . . Accordingly he (John the Baptist) was sent a prisoner, out of Herod's suspicious temper, to Machærus, the castle I before mentioned, and was there put to death."—JOSEPHUS, Antiq. xviii. 5, 1 and 2; Whiston's Trans.,

"I suppose Christ was at Jerusalem when John's messengers came to Him; and if it were at the feast of Pentecost, John had then been seven or eight months in prison."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. xxxi. vol. i. p. 226.

John did not make this inquiry for his own satisfaction, or to satisfy any doubts or misgivings that he himself had either as to Jesus being the Christ or as to the propriety of His conduct, either as to the mode of His own manifestation or in leaving him in the hands of Herod, but that John sent the messengers with this message solely that he might instruct his disciples, and might satisfy their doubts and scruples, and remove any feelings of jealousy towards Him which still lingered in their minds, and might thus prepare them to become Christ's disciples after his own death, which he saw was shortly to take place.

3. And said unto Him, Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?

Vulg. Tu es qui venturus es? an alium expectamus?

4. Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see:

Vulg. Euntes renuntiate Ioanni.

5. The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them.

S. and the dead.

Vulg. Cæci vident, claudi ambulant, leprosi mundantur, surdi audiunt, mortui resurgunt, pauperes evangelizantur.

6. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me.

Jesus does not give a direct, categorical reply to John's inquiry, but He proceeds to work a number of miracles in the presence of the disciples who had brought his message, and, in words quoted from the prophet Isaiah (xxxv. 4, 5), He bids them relate to John what they had seen. He does not quote the prophet's words literally, but sufficiently so to convey His meaning, that He was the Person there foretold by Isaiah. He says nothing respecting John so long as his disciples were present, but on their departure He gives His testimony to the character of John. Thus John's disciples were not able to repeat this to their master, and the people could have no ground to suspect any collusion between Jesus and the Baptist,¹ while at the same time He gives John's disciples to understand that He knows their feelings, the jealousy that lurked in their hearts towards Him, or their want of faith in Him as the Christ, or their dissatisfaction with Him because He did not release their master.

JESUS DISCOURSES TO THE PEOPLE CONCERNING JOHN.

S. MATTHEW xi. 7-19.

S. LUKE vii. 24-35.

- 7 And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 12 And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. 13 For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. 14 And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come. 15 He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

- 24 And when the messengers of John were departed, He began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet. This is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee. For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the Kingdom of God is greater than he.

S. MATTHEW xi.

S. LUKE vii.

- 16 But whereunto
shall I liken this generation?
- It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling 17 unto their fellows, and saying,
We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.
- 18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil.
- 19 The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!
- But wisdom is justified
of her children.

- 29 And all the people that heard Him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John.
- 30 But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.
- 31 And the Lord said, Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation?
and to what are they like?
- 32 They are like unto children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying,
We have piped unto you, and ye have
not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.
- 33 For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine;
and ye say, He hath a devil.
- 34 The Son of Man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a wine-
bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!
- 35 But wisdom is justified
of all her children.

7. ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

8. But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses.

S^a. Why went ye out? to see a man: S.V. omit raiment.
Vulg. Sed quid existis videre? hominem mollius vestitum?

The inner bank of the Jordan is lined with reeds which grow from six to eight feet in height, and when the wind blows these reeds are in constant motion, incessantly swayed about this way and that way. With these the people whom He is addressing would be perfectly familiar, and would easily understand His simile and the lesson which He intended to teach them. John Baptist was not like one of these reeds. They knew that some time ago John had proclaimed Jesus as "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29), and yet within the last few hours they had seen messengers come from John to ask of Jesus, "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" They must not therefore conclude that John had changed his mind, or that altered circumstances had rendered him uncertain or undecided. No, John was no reed shaken with the wind. He was naturally a man not given to change, and the manifestations which he had received of Him would not admit of this. His convictions of what was true and of what was false did not depend on popular clamour, or upon his own personal comfort or adversity. John's present message was not contradictory to his former acknowledgment of Jesus as "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."¹

Those who were clothed in soft raiment and lived delicately dwelt in kings' houses. But the Baptist's place of abode, the desert, was not in greater contrast to the kings' houses than his raiment of camel's hair and his leathern girdle and his locusts and wild honey were to their soft clothing and delicate food. All about him indicated a resolute will, acting on higher motives than influenced men generally.

9. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.

S^a. V. Why went ye out? to see a prophet?
Vulg. Sed quid existis videre? prophetam?

10. For this is he, of whom it is written,

"Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee."

S.V. omit For.
Vulg. Hic est enim de quo scriptum est.

Christ, and the kingdom of heaven which He should inaugurate, was the theme of all the prophets, the subject of all prophecy. In one sense, therefore, John Baptist was not a prophet, because he did not foretell, he did not speak of Christ and of the kingdom of heaven as future, but as present, as at hand. He was not a prophet who foretells the future coming of Christ, but rather the herald who announces the actual presence among them of the long-expected King. His office was to make Christ manifest to Israel, to point Him out, as it were, with the finger, as the Lamb of God

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxvii. : vol. i. p. 511.
Theophylact, in Matt. xi. 7; vol. i. p. 53.

Euthymius, in Matt. xi. 7; vol. i. p. 429.
V. Bede, in Matt. xi. 7; vol. iii. p. 57.

which taketh away the sin of the world, and not to foretell His arrival among them at some future time. In this John the Baptist was greater, was more honoured, than all the prophets who went before him.

In identifying the Baptist with the messenger foretold by Malachi (iii. 1), Jesus teaches them that He is the God of the Old Testament; and to call their attention to this the more, He alters the form of Malachi's prophecy. The prophet had represented the Godhead as speaking of Himself and His messenger, "Behold, I will send My messenger, and he shall prepare the way before Me" (Malachi iii. 1), and Jesus represents God the Father as uttering the words to Him, and promising the messenger to Him, "Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee" (Matt. xi. 10).¹

11. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven^a is greater than he.

Those born of women are here contrasted with the kingdom of heaven; that is, with those born of water and of the Spirit (John iii. 3, &c.). John the Baptist was the greatest of all in the Old Testament dispensation. He was greater than all the prophets who went before, because they merely foretold Christ's distant approach, while he manifested Him to Israel as present among them, baptized Him, and conversed with Him. But so far did the kingdom of heaven exceed the Economy previous to this, that one in the kingdom of heaven, though less in dignity and office than John, was greater than he.

Some² have supposed that in the words "he that is least or less (ὁ δὲ μικρότερος) in the kingdom of heaven," Jesus refers to Himself, and is reminding them that, great as John was, he was not the Messiah. In this sense the expression would mean that Jesus, though later in His birth than John, was greater than John, and would be equivalent to the Baptist's own words, "He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for He was before me." (John i. 15.)

But Jesus goes on to speak still further in praise of John the Baptist.

12. And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

Margin, is gotten by force, and they that thrust men.
Vulg. regnum celorum vim patitur, et violenti rapiunt illud.

13. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John.

Vulg. Omnes enim prophete et lex, usque ad Ioannem, prophetaverunt.

The Law by its rites, and the prophets in dark figures of speech, preached of the future coming of Christ, the Lamb who should take away sin, and to men who dimly, if at all, understood their meaning. This system continued until the days of John the Baptist. The subject which he was commissioned to preach, was that the kingdom of heaven had come, and that Christ was present among them. Such was the effect of his zeal, by his preaching, by the holy self-denying life that he led, and by the baptism of repentance and of preparation for admission into this kingdom, that men pressed into it in crowds, and showed the same eagerness to enter that men do who are besieging a city. So anxious were some to enter, who personally could have no claim upon the kingdom, that they are termed violent (βιασταί), and their action one of force or violence (βιζεῖται).³

14. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come.

Vulg. ipse est Elias, qui venturus est.

15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

V. omits to hear.
Vulg. qui habet aures audiendi, audiat.

The conclusion which the Jews had drawn from the prophecy of Malachi was, that before the coming of the Messiah, Elias would reappear on the earth as His messenger. Jesus shows that another proof that the Messiah had come, was that John the Baptist was the messenger indicated by Malachi as going before and preparing the way for Him. John was not Elias reappearing, but he was the Elias foretold by Malachi, who had really meant that a messenger should precede the Messiah, who should be endued with the same spirit and with the same power as was the Elias of old. They themselves were witnesses that John the Baptist was endued with the same spirit and with the same power as Elias had been. They had seen in him the same spirit to reprove sin in others, and to repress it in himself. The place

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Malachiam iii. 1; vol. vii. p. 831.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxvii.; vol. i. p. 514.

Theophylact, in Matt. xi. 11; vol. i. p. 54.

Euthymius, in Matt. xi. 11; vol. i. p. 433.

Jerusalem, in Concord. Evan. cap. xlviii. p. 363.

³ S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. xi. 12; vol. i. p. 981.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. vii. 28; vol. ii. p. 1667. [S. Jerome,

S. Jerome, in Matt. xi. 12; vol. vii. p. 72.

Epist. cxxi. (alias 151), ad Algasium, cap. i.; vol. i. p. 1009.

V. Bede, in Matt. xi. 12; vol. iii. p. 57.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxvii.; vol. i. p. 516.

Theophylact, in Matt. xi. 12; vol. i. p. 54.

Euthymius, in Matt. xi. 12; vol. i. p. 435.

^a He that is least in the kingdom of heaven (ὁ δὲ μικρότερος ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τ. οὐρ.)—The comparative is not unimportantly used when the object of comparison is not expressly mentioned. Here it is, ὁ μικρότερος (τῶν) ἄλλων; the comparative appears to have been designedly preferred, as corresponding to the preceding μέγας. . . . Other expositors after μικρότερος understand τῶν τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ. —WINNER'S Grammar of the N. T. p. 235.

of his abode, his dress, and his food, were all indications that he was animated with the same spirit as Elias. John the Baptist was also endued with the same power as Elias; not with his power to work miracles—for John did no miracle (John x. 41)—but with the power which Elias had possessed in an eminent degree, to turn the hearts of men to God (1 Kings xviii.). None had ever possessed like power, until John the Baptist appeared.¹

The words with which Jesus ushers in this statement imply that the Jews would have a difficulty in accepting it, a national positive disinclination to it. Some commentators have concluded from His words that Jesus did not intend this as a final and perfect fulfilment of Malachi's prophecy, but as the fulfilment which concerned them and their time, and that He leaves it unsettled whether Elias shall not reappear on the earth in his own person before the second coming of Christ.²

When Jesus had finished the various topics in praise of John the Baptist, He shows what had been the general effect of John's life and teaching, as well as His own, on this generation; as for instance on the scribes and Pharisees, whom S. Luke (vii. 30) in the verse before this speaks of as rejecting the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of John. Where they had not been indifferent, they had wilfully perverted it.

16. ¶ But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows,

S.V. calling to others.
Vulg. clamantes coequalibus.

17. And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.

S.V. omit unto you after mourned.
Vulg. lamentavimus, et non plangistis.

18. For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil.

19. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children.

S.V. of her works.
Vulg. Et justificata est sapientia a filiis suis.

The Pharisees and lawyers looked upon themselves as no otherwise concerned with the baptism unto repentance, or with the kingdom of heaven, for which it was a necessary preparation, than if they had been mere spectators, whose custom it was to criticise, while they took no active share in the matter. They felt no more practical interest in them than bystanders do in a drama acted before their eyes. But the failure to attract their regard did not arise from some flaw in the way in which salvation was offered to them. Every course, even the most opposite, had been tried. John came as an ascetic, an inhabitant of the desert, a stern reprover of sin, a preacher of repentance, himself an example of the life which he preached to others. His baptism they had rejected, and his life they denounced as the life of a madman, of one possessed with a devil. Jesus came as a friend to the social life; He mixed with them freely in the domestic circle, and joined them on occasions of innocent festivity. Him they termed "a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

Instead of endeavouring to identify the Baptist and Jesus with the two groups of children, and the scribes and Pharisees with the spectators in the scene, as some commentators have done, we may understand the scribes and Pharisees as represented by the two parties of children playing in the market, one of a happy joyous turn, and the other of a melancholy mood, and each complaining that the other did not fall in with their humour. So of these Jews: some found fault with John because he was too stern, too strict in his own life, and too exacting in his requirements from those who followed him. Others again took exception to the conduct of Jesus, because He was too sociable, too accessible to all. In one way or the other, each found some excuse, and an excuse suited to his own temperament, for not accepting the offers of salvation that were respectively made to them.³

In whatever way we may explain this passage, it is plain that this comparison, like many others, must not be applied too strictly, but only sufficiently so to furnish a general resemblance between what is compared.

Yet for all this, though the Pharisees and lawyers failed to be attracted by the provision which God made for their salvation, still His wisdom was not impugned by their conduct, but was justified, approved, and shown to be such, by the conduct of those who were, in the truest sense, the sons of wisdom.⁴

The word "justified" (ἐδικαιώθη) sometimes means "to render just," and sometimes "to declare just." It is in the latter sense in which it is used here.

S. Luke relates that the following verses, 20-27, were delivered when He sent the seventy disciples to preach. S. Matthew alone records them as first uttered on the mission of the twelve Apostles.

¹ S. Jerome, Epist. cxxi. (alias 151) ad Algasiam; vol. i. p. 1010.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1095.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Epist. ii. ad Thessal. iii. Homil. iv.; vol. v. p. 475.

Tertullian, de Anima, cap. l.; vol. ii. p. 735.

⁴ S. Augustine, in Joann. tractat. iv.; vol. iii. p. 1408.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 11; vol. vii. p. 124.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. vii.; vol. ii. p. 1100.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlvii. p. 369.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xi. 16; vol. i. p. 163.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xi. 16; vol. viii. p. 247.

⁴ S. Hilary Piet. in Matt. xi. 19; vol. i. p. 982.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xi. 19; vol. vii. p. 73.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxvii. p. 519.

Theophylact, in Matt. xi. 19; vol. i. p. 55.

Euthymius, in Matt. xi. 19; vol. i. p. 445.

20. ¶ Then began He to upbraid the cities wherein most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not :

Vulg. in quibus factæ sunt plurimæ virtutes ejus, quia non egissent penitentiam.

21. Woe unto thee, Chorazin ! woe unto thee, Bethsaida ! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented ^a long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

*S. sitting in sackcloth.
Vulg. olim in cilicio et cinere penitentiam egissent.*

22. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

23. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell : for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

*S.V. Capernaum, shalt thou be exalted unto heaven ? thou shalt be.
Vulg. Et tu Capernaum, nunquid usque in celum exaltaberis ? usque in infernum descenderis.*

24. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Either in this world, or at the day of judgment, all sin will be punished, and it will be punished justly, and proportionately to all other sin. Along with the actions, the motives and drawbacks and inducements will all be taken into account. Sin committed in Chorazin and Bethsaida and Capernaum, and sin committed in Tyre and Sidon and in Sodom, shall each receive its due punishment.

No works are recorded in the Gospels as having been done in Chorazin and Bethsaida, and yet He says that mighty works had been done in them, and that they had not produced in them the effect which they would have produced in the heathen cities of Tyre and Sidon.

Many explanations have been given of the exaltation of Capernaum. The best reason is most probably found in the privilege which it enjoyed as our Saviour's constant home—the scene of so many of His miraculous cures, and of so much of His teaching. The sin of their conduct, compared with their privileges, had been greater than the sin of Sodom, which had called down the vengeance of Heaven, in punishment of its violations of the law of nature.

Were such proof required, the woe denounced against these cities at the day of judgment would be rendered certain of execution by the complete fulfilment which the woe denounced against them in the present world has received. So amply have these denunciations been fulfilled in the case of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, that their very sites are now unknown, or known only by conjecture more or less certain.

In the form of a thanksgiving for it, Jesus goes on to declare the qualifications necessary for the rejection and the reception of His Gospel, and then to assert His own Oneness with the Father.

25. ¶ At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.

26. Even so, Father : for so it seemed good in Thy sight.

Vulg. Ita Pater : quoniam sic fuit placitum ante Te.

27. All things are delivered unto Me of My Father : and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father ; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him.

*S^a. unto Me of the Father.
Vulg. Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre Meo.*

The word “answered” (ἀποκρίθεις) is not here used in the sense of giving a reply to anyone, but rather as indicating the beginning of a new subject.

He had just before lamented the hardness and impenitence of the inhabitants of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, and He now shows¹ what was the reason why some believed in His Gospel and others did not. Those who embraced it acted in childlike forgetfulness of self, and those who rejected it did so from their own self-sufficiency. Thus their conversion to the faith of Christ, or their impenitence, becomes the fruit of their own actions, the natural result of their previous lives. This is represented as the arrangement of the Father, and it is also represented as the action of the Father through the Son ; for They are equal and one. The concurrence of the Son with the Father is also shown by His giving thanks for this.

He does not exclude the Holy Spirit here ; for the expression, “neither knoweth any man the Father, save the

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xxxviii. ; vol. i. p. 528.

^a They would have repented.—“When Christ saith, that if the things done in these cities had been done in Tyre and Sidon, and Sodom and Gomorrah, they would have repented, and would have remained till now ; He understandeth not saving grace and saving repentance in them, but such an external humiliation as would have preserved them from ruin. As the case was with Nineveh, they repented and were delivered from the threatened destruction. Their repentance was not to salvation of the persons, but to the preservation of their city ; as Ahab's humbling prevented the present judgment, and not his final condemnation.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. xxvii. vol. i. p. 226.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xi. 25 ; vol. vii. p. 75.

Son," &c., is intended to exclude men and not the Holy Spirit. In entire accordance with this interpretation is the rule of the old theologians, that, wherever particles of exclusion are joined to any Person in the Trinity respecting some essential attribute, these are not intended to exclude the other Persons in the Trinity, but only to exclude created beings.¹

Pride in themselves, in their own acquirements or possessions, contentment with their present state, naturally unfit men for believing in the Gospel; while a sense of weariness, of hardship, and oppression, predispose them to look to Jesus for help. To such He calls, and offers Himself as their refuge and as the example for their imitation.

28. ¶ Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

29. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart:^a and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

<sup>S^a, omits of Me.
Vulg. et discite a Me.</sup>

30. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light.

The following among other reasons have been assigned why the yoke of Christ—that is, of the Gospel—is easy compared with the yoke of the Law. The commands of the Gospel are fewer and easier of performance than were those of the Law. Under the Gospel, grace, or supernatural power to fulfil the commands, is promised, while under the Law the command was issued, and the punishment on disobedience threatened, but no power was given to assist in fulfilling it. The Law appealed to their fears, and the Gospel to their love and less to their fear of punishment.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Matt. xi. 27; vol. v. p. 403.

S. Augustine, de Trinit. vi. 9; vol. viii. p. 930.

Peter Lombard, Sentent. i. 21, 4; p. 71, Migne. [S. Thomas

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. i. quest. 31, art. 4; vol. i. p. 737.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlvii. p. 374.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xi. 27; vol. viii. p. 252.

^a For I am meek and lowly in heart.—“A third moral truism; Jesus Christ was humble. He might have appeared, even to human eyes, as ‘One naturally contented with obscurity, wanting the restless desire for eminence and distinction which is so common in great men; hating to put forward personal claims; disliking competition and disputes who should be greatest; . . . fond of what is simple and homely, of children, and poor people.’ It might have almost seemed as if His preternatural powers were a source of distress and embarrassment to Him; so eager was He to economize their exercise, and to veil them from the eyes of men. He was particularly careful that His miracles should not add to His reputation. Again and again He very earnestly enjoined silence on those who were the subjects of His miraculous cures. He would not gratify persons whose motive in seeking His company was a vain curiosity to see the proofs of His power. By this humility is Jesus Christ most emphatically distinguished from the philosophers of the ancient world. Whatever else they may have been, they were not humble. But Jesus Christ loses His individuality if you separate Him in thought for one moment from His ‘great humility.’ His humility is the key to His whole life; it is the measuring-line whereby His actions, His sufferings, His words, His very movements must be meted in order to be understood. ‘Learn of Me,’ He says, ‘for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls.’”—CANON LIDDON, ‘Bampton Lectures,’ iv. p. 195.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

At that time Jesus went.—“The time is determined by Luke in these words, ἐν αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, that is, on the Sabbath from the second-first.

“I. Provision was made by the divine Law that the sheaf of first-fruits should be offered on the second day of the Passover week (Levit. xxiii. 10, 11). On the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall shake (or wave) it. Not on the morrow after the ordinary Sabbath of the week, but the morrow after the first day of the Passover week, which was a Sabbatic day (Exod. xii. 16; Levit. xxiii. 7). Hence the Seventy, ἐναύριον τῆς πρώτης, the morrow of the first day: the Chaldee hath it, after the Holy day. The Rabbins Solomon and Menachen, on the morrow after the first day of the Passover feast: of which mention had been made in the verses foregoing.

“II. But now, from that second day of the Passover solemnity, wherein the sheaf was offered, were numbered seven weeks to Pentecost; for the day of the Sheaf and the day of Pentecost did mutually respect each other. For on this second day of the Passover the offering of the Sheaf was suppletory, and by way of prayer, beseeching a blessing upon the new corn and leave to eat it, and to put the sickle into the standing corn. Now the offering of the first-fruit leaves on the day of Pentecost (Levit. xxiii. 15–17) did respect the giving of thanks for the finishing and inning of barley harvest. Therefore, in regard of this relation, these two solemnities were linked together that both might respect the harvest: that, the harvest beginning; this, the harvest ended; this depended on that, and was numbered seven weeks after it. Therefore the computation of the time coming between could not but carry with it the memory of that second day of the Passover week; and hence Pentecost is called the Feast of weeks (Deut. xvi. 10). The true calculation of the time between could not otherwise be retained, as to Sabbaths, than by numbering thus, this is Σάββατον δευτεροπρώτον, the first Sabbath after the second day of the Passover. This is δευτεροδευτερον, the second Sabbath after that second day, and so of the rest.

“When they numbered by days, and not by weeks, the calculation began on the day of the Sheaf. ‘There is a place where it is said, that they died fifteen days before Pentecost, that is, thirty days after the Sheaf.’ . . . ‘This work was finished the three-and-thirtieth day after the Sheaf.’

“III. Therefore, by this word δευτεροπρώτῳ, the second-first, added by S. Luke, is shown—

“First, that this Sabbath was after the second day of the Passover; and so, according to the order of the Evangelic history, either that very Sabbath wherein the paralytic man was healed at the pool of Bethesda (John v.), or the Sabbath next after it.

“Secondly, that these ears of corn plucked by the disciples were of barley.

“IV. But was the standing corn ripe at the Feast of the Passover? I answer—

“1. The seed-time of barley was presently after the middle of the month Marheshvan, that is, about the beginning of our November Therefore the barley was sown at the coming in of the winter; and growing by the mildness of the weather in winter, when the Passover came in it became ripe. So that from that time (the Sheaf being then offered) barley harvest took its beginning.

“2. But if, when the just time of the Passover was come, the barley was not ripe, the intercalary month was added to that year, and they waited until it ripened. For for three things they intercalated the year (Maimon, in Kiddush Hodesh, cap. iv.)—for the equinox, for the new corn, and for the fruit of the trees. For the elders of the Sanhedrin do compute and observe, if the vernal equinox will fall out on the sixteenth day of the month Nisan, or beyond that, then they intercalate that year, and they make that Nisan the second Adar; so that the Passover might happen at the time of new corn. Or if they observe that there is no new corn, and that the trees sprouted not when they were wont to sprout, then they intercalate the year,” &c.—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 1; vol. ii. p. 184.

“The Law enjoined that the next morrow after the eating of the Passover should be kept holy like a Sabbath (Exod. xii. 16), and accordingly it is called a Sabbath (Levit. xxiii. 7, 11). And there the Law also enjoins that the next day after that Sabbatical day, they shall offer the sheaf of first-fruits to the Lord: and from that day they should count seven Sabbaths to Pentecost, which was their solemn festival and thanksgiving for that half harvest, viz. barley harvest, which they had then inned (Levit. xxiii. 15–17). That day, therefore, that they offered their first barley sheaf, and from which they were to count the seven Sabbaths or weeks forward, being the second day in the Passover week, the Sabbaths that followed did carry a memorial of that day in their name till the seven were run out: as the first was called Σάββατον δευτεροπῶρον, the first second day Sabbath; the next Σάββατον δευτεροδεύτερον, the second second-day Sabbath; the next Σάββατον δευτερότριτον, the third second-day Sabbath; and so the rest of all the seven through. Now let it be observed, 1. That no corn, no not ears of corn, might be eaten till the first-fruits sheaf was offered and waved before the Lord (Levit. xxiii. 14); 2. That it was waved the second day of the Passover week; 3. That this was the first Sabbath after that second day, when the disciples pluckt the ears of corn,—and it will plainly evince that we must look for a Passover before this story, and so it will show the warranty and justness of taking in the fifth of John next before it.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. xxv. vol. i. p. 222.

CHAPTER XII.

[1. Christ reproveth the blindness of the Pharisees concerning the breach of the Sabbath, 3. by scriptures, 9. by reason, 13. and by a miracle. 22. He healeth the man possessed that was blind and dumb. 31. Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven. 36. Account shall be made of idle words. 38. He rebuketh the unfaithful, who seek after a sign: 49. and sheweth who is His brother, sister, and mother.]

[Vulg. Discipulus spinas Sabbato volentes excutit, manum quoque aridam Sabbato curat: phariseorum machinationi facilius cedens, variisque a se curatos viliter præcipiens, implet Isaiæ vaticinium: demoniacos, cum et muto curato, pharisæis ipsorum in Bethsabee ejecere demonia blasphemantes convincit solum dicere: dicens, blasphemiam in spiritum sanctum irremissibilem, et de omni verbo otioso reddendam rationem: scribis autem et pharisæis signum petentibus, dandum dicit Ionnæ signum: et quæ sint mater et fratres ipsius.]

THE murmuring of the Pharisees against the disciples for plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath-day is related by three of the Evangelists, S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke. All the three relate it immediately before the healing of the man that had the withered hand. But S. Mark and S. Luke place it much earlier in the general course of events than S. Matthew does; for S. Matthew records it after the mission of the twelve Apostles to preach in the cities of Judæa, while S. Luke places it before the mission of the twelve, and probably before their election, and before the Sermon on the Mount. It is probable that S. Luke's order here is nearer the order of events than S. Matthew's.¹

In S. Luke's account of what took place on this same Sabbath he calls it δευτεροπόρω, a term which has perplexed commentators from the fourth century to the present time. What renders the meaning of this word obscure is partly because it is nowhere used in the Septuagint, or in the New Testament, except by S. Luke in this place, and partly because it appears to have been a term which was applied exclusively to the Jewish ecclesiastical year, and which was not retained by the Christian Church. Hence, as early as the fourth century, we find Christians, men of letters too, who were ignorant of the meaning of the word. S. Jerome² says that, when a young man, he questioned his master S. Gregory Nazianzen on the meaning of the word δευτερο- πόρω in S. Luke, and that he returned him an evasive answer.

Since that time commentators have exercised their skill in suggesting some five or six different meanings to the word, and all supported by men of learning and authority.³ The explanation adopted in this Commentary has been chosen chiefly because it has been advocated by men who have been distinguished for their intimate acquaintance with Jewish ritual and usages and with the terms used to express these, as gathered from the Talmudic writers.⁴ This explanation of Σαββάτω δευτεροπόρω, second-first Sabbath, would show that this was the first Sabbath after the second day in the Passover week, on which second day a sheaf of corn would be offered and waved before the Lord (Levit. xiii. 14). From this second day, on which the first-fruits sheaf was offered, they counted their weeks and Sabbaths until Pentecost. Until the offering of the first sheaf had sanctified the corn, it was not lawful either to put in the sickle or to pluck the ears of corn to eat: for plucking ears was reckoned as reaping. Nor do the Pharisees charge the disciples with a breach of this law, which they doubtless would have done had they been able; for grave as was the offence with which they did charge them, the other would have been still more serious, as being the breach of a positive commandment.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 1; vol. viii. p. 257. Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xxv. vol. i. p. 222.

Stroud, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. cxi. Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xxxi. and 32. Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 31. McClellan, New Testament, p. 553.

² S. Jerome, Epist. lii. (ad Nepot.), 8; vol. i. p. 534.

³ For these see Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. vi. 1; vol. viii. p. 715. Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 203, &c. McClellan, New Testament, p. 690.

⁴ J. Scaliger, de Emendat. Temp. vi. 6. Lightfoot on Matt. xii. 1; vol. ii. p. 184. Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 192. See also Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, Luke vi. 1.

THE DISCIPLES PLUCK EARS OF CORN ON THE SABBATH-DAY.

S. MATTHEW xii. 1-8.

S. MARK ii. 23-28.

S. LUKE vi. 1-5.

1	At that time Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn; and His disciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat.	23	And it came to pass, that He went through the corn fields on the sabbath day; and His disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.	1	And it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that He went through the corn fields; and His disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.
2	But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto Him, Behold, Thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath day.	24	And the Pharisees said unto Him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath day that which is not lawful?	2	And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?
3	But He said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungred, and they that were with him;	25	And He said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him?	3	And Jesus answering them, said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungred, and they which were with him;
4	How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests?	26	How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shewbread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?	4	How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?
5	Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?
6	But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple.
7	But if ye had known what this meaneth, "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice," ye would not have condemned the guiltless.	27	And He said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath: Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the sabbath.	5	And He said unto them, That the Son of Man is Lord also of the sabbath.
8	For the Son of Man is Lord even of the sabbath day.	28

1. At that time Jesus went on the sabbath an hungred,^a and began to pluck the ears of day through the corn; and His disciples were corn, and to eat.

Vulg. In illo tempore abiit Iesus per sata sabbato.

^a His disciples were an hungred.—"The custom of the nation, as yet, had held them fasting, which suffered none, unless he were sick, to taste anything on the sabbath, before the morning prayers of the synagogue were done."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 1; vol. n.

p. 185.

2. But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto Him, Behold, Thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath day.*

The offence with which the disciples are charged is not that of plucking the ears of corn in their neighbour's field, for it had been expressly said in the Law, "When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn" (Deut. xxiii. 25), but they were accused of doing this on the Sabbath-day, which was forbidden by their traditional laws. Nor was this considered a slight offence, but one by which the disciples had forfeited their lives. Death by stoning was the punishment to which they had rendered themselves liable. Hence, perhaps, the earnestness with which Jesus defends them.

S. Matthew and S. Mark represent the Pharisees as appealing to Jesus, and S. Luke as making the charge against the disciples themselves. Nor would anything be more likely than that the Pharisees would bring the matter home to both Jesus and to His disciples.

A more serious or a more penal charge, in the eyes of the Pharisees, was seldom if ever brought against the disciples, and never does Jesus defend them with greater zeal. He proves them clear of all guilt in the matter by four distinct arguments.

His first argument in their defence is on the ground of necessity.

3. But He said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungred, and they that were with him;

4. How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests?

S.V. and they did eat: V. a thing which it was not.
Vulg. et panes propositionis comedit, quos non licet ei edere, neque his qui cum euerant.

The following was the command of God respecting the shewbread (Levit. xxiv. 5-8): "And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth deals shall be in one cake. And thou shalt set them in two rows, six on a row, upon the pure table before the Lord. And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the Lord. Every sabbath he shall set it in order before the Lord continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant. And it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire by a perpetual statute."

Notwithstanding all this, namely, that the shewbread had been solemnly offered to God, that it was commanded to be eaten by the priests alone as the most holy of all the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and that it was expressly stated that this ordinance was to continue for ever; notwithstanding all this, David, when pressed by hunger, ventures to eat the shewbread himself, and to give a portion of it to those who were with him: and he is countenanced in this by the priest in charge. If David, who was allowed by all to be a man after God's own heart, and not one to detract from the honour due to God, thought the plea of hunger a sufficient justification for setting aside a positive command of God, and on a matter regarding His worship, surely the same plea would justify His disciples in setting aside not a positive command of God, but a traditionary custom of the Jews. Such is the force of His first argument.

His second apology for the disciples is drawn from the case of the priests in the Temple.

5. Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the Temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

6. But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the Temple.

S.V. That is something greater than the Temple is here.
Vulg. Dico autem vobis, quia tempus major est hic.

In order to be able to offer the sacrifices which God had commanded to be offered on the Sabbath-day (Numb. xxviii. 9), the priests must kill certain animals and make other preparations, the doing of which broke the rest of the Sabbath. In acting thus the priests are blameless, because these things were necessary for the accomplishment of God's other commands. The case of His disciples, as Jesus states it, is parallel to that of the priests in the Temple; for their breach of the Sabbath had been caused by their strict observance of the commands of God. At His command they had gone to preach to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, so that no time was left them to make ready beforehand the food necessary for the Sabbath: hence their hunger, and hence their plucking the ears of corn.

If the priests were to observe the Sabbath, the services of the Temple must cease. But this was a course not to be

* Not lawful to do on the Sabbath-day.—"They do not contend about the thing itself, because it was lawful (Deut. xxiii. 25), but about the thing done on the Sabbath. Concerning which the fathers of the traditions write thus (Maimon. Schabb. i. 8): 'He that reaps on the Sabbath, though never so little, is guilty. And to pluck the ears of corn is a kind of reaping: and whosoever plucks anything from the springing of his own fruit is guilty, under the name of a reaper.' Our Saviour, therefore, pleaded the cause of the disciples, so much the more eagerly, because now their lives were in danger: for the canons of the Scribes adjudged them to stoning, for what they had done, if so be it could be proved that they had done it presumptuously. From hence, therefore, He begins their defence, that this was done by the disciples, out of necessity, hunger compelling them, not out of any contempt of the laws."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 2; vol. ii. p. 185.

thought of. Their regard for the Temple, and for the Temple services, was therefore greater than their regard for the observance of the Sabbath. But One was present among them who was greater than the Temple, and for whom therefore a greater reverence should be paid than for the Temple or the Temple service. If the law of the Sabbath should give way for the law of the Temple, much more should it for Him, who was greater than the Temple.

His third argument is drawn from the declaration of God by the prophet Hosea (vi. 6), that He loved to have mercy more than sacrifice.

7. But if ye had known what this meaneth,

"I will have mercy,
and not sacrifice,"

ye would not have condemned the guiltless.

God had Himself declared, through His prophet, that He would rather that men showed mercy to their fellow-men than that they offered sacrifice to Him. If, therefore, it is lawful to break the Sabbath in order to offer the appointed sacrifice to God, much more would it be right to do so in order to show mercy to men suffering from hunger, such as were these disciples.

His fourth argument in their defence is drawn from His authority over the Sabbath.

8. For the Son of Man is Lord even of the sabbath day.

S.V. omit even.

Vulg. Dominus enim est Filius hominis etiam sabbati.

Jesus Himself is the Son of Man, the Word made flesh. He is Lord of all that concerns man and man's nature. He is Lord of the Sabbath in an especial sense. The Sabbath was ordained to prefigure His rest in the grave. In Him therefore the Sabbath would be accomplished, and would henceforth cease. Even now He could modify the observance of it, or dispense with it altogether.

This is the argument with which Jesus answered the cavils of the Jewish Sanhedrin (John v.). It is probable that it was on this very Sabbath, or on the Sabbath before it, that Jesus was taken before the Jewish council for healing the paralytic man. He then shows that He, the Son, was invested with the same authority, power, and dignity, in respect of the administration of the New Testament, as the Father was in the case of the Old.

S. Mark represents Him as adding another argument, namely, that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. If, therefore, the rest on the Sabbath was prejudicial to man, the Sabbath must be broken, and the requisite labour be resumed. Abstinence from plucking the ears of corn might result in the death or serious inconvenience of our Saviour's disciples; it must therefore be allowed.

S. Mark represents our Saviour as saying that this happened in the days of Abiathar the high priest. In the Old Testament (1 Sam. xxi.) it is said that Ahimelech was the priest from whom David received the shewbread. One way of explaining this apparent discrepancy is to suppose that Abiathar was a name borne by Ahimelech the father, as well as by his son, and that these words of S. Mark refer to the father, and not to the son. Another way is to translate the words ἐν ἡμέραις τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, not as meaning in the high priesthood of Abiathar, but in the time of Abiathar the high priest; that is, who afterwards became the high priest. If, as some think, the Greek will bear this rendering, many satisfactory reasons have been given why Jesus should refer to Abiathar the son, who was only a priest when this occurred, but who may have urged his father to consent to David's request, rather than to Ahimelech, who was the high priest. One only is here mentioned, that given by Lightfoot. He says that the name of Abiathar was rendered famous in after-ages by the frequency with which counsel was asked of God during his high priesthood, by means of the Urim and Thummim; any mention of which practice is seldom, if ever, made after his death. Hence the Jews were fond of referring to the days of Abiathar, as a time when their nation enjoyed special direction from God. That David was right in asking for the shewbread, and that the high priest was directed by God to give it, fell within the scope of our Saviour's argument.

JESUS HEALS A MAN WITH A WITHERED HAND ON THE SABBATH DAY.

S. MATTHEW xii. 9-14.

S. MARK iii. 1-6.

S. LUKE vi. 6-11.

9 And when He was departed thence,
He went into their synagogue:
10 and, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered.

1 And
He entered again into the synagogue;
and there was a man there
which had a withered hand.
2 And they watched Him,
whether He would heal him
on the sabbath day;

6 And
it came to pass also on another sabbath, that He entered into the synagogue and taught:
and there was a man whose right hand was withered.
7 And the scribes and Pharisees
watched Him,
whether He would heal
on the sabbath day;

S. MATTHEW xii.

S. MARK iii.

S. LUKE vi.

And they asked Him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath days? that they might accuse Him.

3 And He saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

4 And He saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? But they held their peace.

8 that they might find an accusation against Him. But He knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose and stood forth. Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

11 And He said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?

12 How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath days.

5 And when He had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, He saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

10 And looking round about upon them all,

13 Then saith He to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

He said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

14 Then the Pharisees went out, and held a council against Him, how they might destroy Him.

6 And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against Him, how they might destroy Him.

11 And they were filled with madness;

and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

9. And when He was departed thence, He went into their synagogue:^a

Some have conjectured from the words "and when He was departed thence" (καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἐξέειπεν) that Jesus left Jerusalem, and retired again into Galilee. But there is nothing to corroborate this beyond the words themselves, and these are omitted by the two other Evangelists. S. Luke furnishes an indication of the time when the following miracle was wrought. After relating our Saviour's answer to the Pharisees, who had murmured against the disciples for plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath-day, he goes on to say, "And it came to pass also on another Sabbath" (ἐν ἑτέρῳ σαββάτῳ), probably on the next Sabbath.

10. ¶ And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked Him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath days? that they might accuse Him.

11. And He said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?

12. How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath days.

13. Then saith He to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

S. omits like as the other.
Vulg. et restituta est sanitati sicut altera.

The Scribes and Pharisees draw His attention to the man who had the withered hand, and watch whether He will heal him, in order that they might be able to accuse Him. If Jesus did not heal him, they would represent to the people that He was unable to do it, or that He was a hard, unfeeling man. If He did heal him, they would accuse Him to the priests or to the Sanhedrin, as breaking the Sabbath. To their question,¹ whether it was lawful to heal on the Sabbath day, Jesus replies by another question, which S. Matthew omits, "whether it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath day, or to do evil; to save life, or to kill?" By this He intimates that not to do good when it was in their power, was to do evil; and that not to save life when they could, was to kill. He reasons that if it were lawful, as all admitted, to deliver a single sheep out of danger on the Sabbath-day, and that with considerable labour and exertion, it must be much more lawful and becoming to deliver a man from bodily disease on the Sabbath, especially when that could be done by a word. By His reasoning He silences them, and He confutes them still more by working the miracle. S. Mark adds that He first looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts.

^a See note on Matt. xiv. 14.

The conduct of the Scribes and Pharisees after the miracle was the natural result of the feelings which they entertained before it. They are unable to deny that a miracle has been wrought on the man; but so far was this from convincing them that Jesus was the Christ, that it only served as fuel for the most malignant feelings in which the mind of man can indulge.

14. ¶ Then the Pharisees went out, and held a council against Him, how they might destroy Him.

Margin, and took counsel.

S.V. and took counsel.

Vulg. Exeuntes autem Pharisei, consilium faciebant adversus eum.

They took counsel to destroy Jesus. S. Mark adds that they "took counsel with the Herodians," a political party in the state, who are mentioned once by S. Matthew (xxii. 15) and three times by S. Mark (iii. 6; viii. 15; xii. 13), and probably comprised all those who looked to Herod's line, aliens and usurpers though they might regard them, as the best guarantee for social order and a national government.

The Evangelist then goes on to relate other instances of our Saviour's compassion for the distressed. The reason why He forbade them to make known His miraculous cures, and of His whole conduct at this time, might be partly that He might not drive these Scribes and Pharisees into greater sin, by furnishing further materials for their wrath against Him, and partly that He might fulfil Isaiah's prophecy respecting Himself. The Evangelist quotes the prophecy, and takes it partly from the Septuagint and partly from the Hebrew.

JESUS ARRIVES AT THE SEA OF TIBERIAS, AND IS FOLLOWED BY MULTITUDES.

S. MATTHEW xii. 15-21.

- 15 But when Jesus knew it,
He withdrew Himself
from thence:

and great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them all;

- 16 and charged them
that they should not make Him known:
17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,
18 "Behold My servant, whom I have chosen;
My Beloved, in whom My soul is well pleased:
I will put My Spirit upon Him,
and He shall shew judgment to the Gentiles.
19 He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear His voice in the streets.
20 A bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall He not quench, till He send forth judgment unto victory.
21 And in His Name shall the Gentiles trust."

S. MARK iii. 7-12.

- 7 But Jesus withdrew Himself with His disciples to the sea:
and a great multitude from Galilee followed Him, and from Judæa, 8 and from Jerusalem,
and from Idumæa, and from beyond Jordan;
and they about Tyre and Sidon,
a great multitude, when they had heard what great things He did, came unto Him.
9 And He spake to His disciples, that a small ship should wait on Him because of the multitude, lest they should throng Him.
10 For He had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon Him for to touch Him,
as many as had plagues.
11 And unclean spirits, when they saw Him, fell down before Him, and cried, saying,
Thou art the Son of God.
12 And He straitly charged them
that they should not make Him known.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. li. 35; vol. iii. p. 1116.
Theophylact, in Matt. xii. 10; vol. i. p. 58.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxviii. p. 255.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 10; vol. i. p. 171.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 10; vol. viii. p. 259.

15. But when Jesus knew it, He withdrew Himself from thence : and great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them all ;

S.V. and many followed Him.
Vulg. et secuti sunt eum multi.

16. And charged them that they should not make Him known :

17. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

Vulg. Ut adimpleretur quod dictum est per Isaiam prophetam, dicentem :

18.

“ Behold My servant, whom I have chosen ;
My Beloved, in whom My soul is well pleased :
I will put My Spirit upon Him,
and He shall shew judgment to the Gentiles.

19.

He shall not strive, nor cry ;
neither shall any man hear His voice in the streets.

20.

A bruised reed shall He not break,
and smoking flax shall He not quench, till He send forth judgment unto victory.”

21.

And in His Name shall the Gentiles trust.”

The Evangelist shows that Jesus, in His manner of teaching and of dealing with obstinate men, fulfilled the words of the prophet to the very letter. His whole ministry was marked by an entire absence of harshness, while meekness and gentleness were conspicuous throughout. His reproofs were given but seldom, and always expressed in terms of love and mercy. The character of these Scribes and Pharisees might be well described as reeds, nay, as bruised reeds, but He would do nothing to break them. They might be as smoking flax, but He would not quench them. In His compassion, He would cherish the smallest degree of goodness, or promise of goodness.

What it is¹ not to break a bruised reed, what it is not to quench the smoking flax, may be seen in our Saviour's conduct towards these Pharisees. At first they watched Him to see whether He would heal on the Sabbath-day, that they might accuse Him. When He reasoned with them, and showed unanswerably that to heal on the Sabbath-day was not to do ill but good, and therefore was not wrong but right in the sight of God, they were too disingenuous to confess it, but were compelled to admit it in silence. When, by the exercise of superhuman power, He proved beyond any doubt, that both His reasoning and His acts must be right, they take counsel to destroy Him. Not to exasperate them more, and so render them desperate in their career of sin, He removes from their presence, and, though He continues His course of healing the sickness of the people, He forbids them to make it known, that the fame of His works might not be an occasion of additional sin to the Pharisees. Such was His forbearance towards men who appeared scarcely to possess any of the ordinary feelings of human fairness and sincerity.

Moses showed judgment and righteousness to the Jews only ; but He, the Word made flesh, the Beloved Son in whom the Father was well pleased, He would show judgment unto the Gentiles, until the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven should triumph in the world, and the Gentiles should trust in His Name.

Two questions will arise with respect to the following miracle. First, Is the miracle related by S. Matthew in the following verses the same as that recorded by S. Luke (xi. 14) ? Secondly, Which of the Evangelists has placed his narration of it in the order of the events in which the miracle was wrought ?

There has always been a difference of opinion respecting the identity of the miracle related by S. Matthew and S. Luke. Some suppose that the two Evangelists are giving an account of one and the same miracle ; others

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xii. 20 ; vol. i. p. 986.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 20 ; vol. vii. p. 79.

* Till He send forth judgment unto victory (ὥς ἄν ἐκβάλῃ εἰς νίκην τὴν κτλ.).—It is now generally agreed that κτλ., which in the Hebrew is וְעַד (see Is. xlii. 3), is here used, like that word, to signify a divine law or rule of life ; and it has been well shown by Hapfel, vol. i. ad loc., from Polybius and Plato's Epistles, that ἐκβάλλειν εἰς νίκην may mean ‘to render victorious ;’ whence the whole will signify, ‘Till He make His Gospel triumphant.’—MIDDLETON, ‘On Greek Article,’ p. 154.

† The Hebrew and LXX. in Isaiah read it thus, ‘He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.’ The words in both places mean thus much, That Christ should make no sound in the world, or noise of pomp, or applause, or state, but should manage His affairs in humility, silence, poverty, and patience, both while He Himself was on earth, and by His Apostles, after His Ascension, labouring under contempt, poverty, and persecution ; but at last, ‘He should bring forth judgment to victory,’—that is, that He should break forth and show Himself a judge, avenger, and conqueror against that most wicked nation of the Jews, from whom both He and His suffered such things ; and then also ‘He sent forth judgment unto truth,’ and asserted Himself the true Messiah, and the Son of God, before the eyes of all ; and confirmed the truth of the Gospel, by avenging His cause upon His enemies, in a manner so conspicuous and so dreadful. And hence it is that that sending forth and execution of judgment against that nation, is almost always called in the New Testament, ‘His coming in glory.’ When Christ and His kingdom had so long lain hid under the veil of humility and the cloud of persecution, at last He brake forth a revenger, and cut off that persecuting nation, and showed Himself a conqueror, before the eyes of all, both Jews and Gentiles. Let it be observed in the text before us, how after the mention of that judgment and victory (against the Jews) presently follows, ‘And in His Name shall the Gentiles trust.’—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 20 ; vol. ii. p. 188.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xl. ; vol. i. p. 547.

that they are describing two different miracles, wrought at different times. Though it is not at all unlikely that the Pharisees might repeat their accusation, that Jesus cast out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils, on different occasions, and after several of His miracles, yet from the great similarity between these two accounts, commentators generally have been led to regard them as relations of one and the same miracle, and have held this in spite of several discrepancies between the two Evangelists.¹ They maintain that the miracle is the same in each, the casting out of a devil; that the cavil of the Pharisees is the same; and that our Lord's answer is the same. The points in which the Evangelists agree, and in which they differ, will best be seen by examining them in juxtaposition.

If we regard the Evangelists as giving an account of the same miracle, we may, with many commentators,² place it before the mission of the Twelve to preach to the Jews. This is not the order in which S. Luke places the miracle, but it is the order indicated by S. Mark, and, in a manner, by S. Matthew: for S. Matthew relates this miracle immediately after the murmuring of the Pharisees against the disciples for plucking the ears of corn, and their dissatisfaction with Jesus for healing the man that had the withered hand on the Sabbath-day; both of which, as before stated, happened before the Sermon on the Mount, and therefore before the mission of the Apostles to preach. S. Matthew, as usual, may have put these three narratives together, though they were a little divided in time—two of them being before the Sermon on the Mount, and the other after—because they were in one respect similar in character, all three being instances of the murmuring of the Pharisees against Jesus or His disciples.

If we regard the Evangelists as relating two distinct miracles, we must place that recorded by S. Matthew before the mission of the Twelve to preach, and that related by S. Luke after.

JESUS HEALS A DEMONIAK, BLIND AND DUMB.

S. MATTHEW xii. 22-32.

S. MARK iii. 22-30.

S. LUKE xi. 14-23.

- 22 Then was brought unto Him one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb: and He healed him, inasmuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw.
- 23 And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David?
- 24 But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils.
- 25 And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand: and if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?
- 27 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

- 22 And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth He out devils.
- 23 And He called them unto Him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan?
- 24 And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.
- 25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.
- 26 And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

- 14 And He was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake: and the people wondered.
- 15 But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.
- 16 And others, tempting Him, sought of Him a sign from heaven.
- 17 But He, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth.
- 18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.
- 19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 37; vol. iii. p. 1117. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlix. p. 386. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 22; vol. viii. p. 260. Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, Luke xi. 14. Dean Alford, Greek Testament, Luke xi. 14.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 44, 194. McClellan, New Testament, p. 557. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlix. p. 385. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 22; vol. viii. p. 261. Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 44, 194.

S. MATTHEW xii.

S. MARK iii.

S. LUKE xi.

28 But if I cast out devils
by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

29 Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house,
and spoil his goods,
except he first bind the strong man?
and then

he will spoil his house.
He that is not with Me
is against Me;
and he that gathereth not with Me
scattereth abroad.

31 Wherefore I say unto you,
All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men :

but the blasphemy
against the Holy Ghost
shall not be forgiven unto men.

32 And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man,
it shall be forgiven him :
but whosoever speaketh
against the Holy Ghost,
it shall not be forgiven him,
neither in this world,
neither in the world to come.

27 No man can enter
into a strong man's house,
and spoil his goods,
except he will first bind the strong man ;
and then

he will spoil his house.

28 Verily I say unto you,
All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever
they shall blaspheme :

29 but he that shall blaspheme
against the Holy Ghost
hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation :

30 because they said,
He hath an unclean spirit.

20 But if I with the finger of God cast out devils,
no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21 When a strong man armed keepeth his palace,
his goods are in peace :
22 but when a stronger than he shall come upon him,
and overcome him,
he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

23 He that is not with Me
is against Me :
and he that gathereth not with Me
scattereth.

22. ¶ Then was brought unto Him one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb : and He healed him, inasmuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw.

V. They brought : S. that the dumb spake and.
Vulg. Tunc blatus est ei demonium habens, cecus et mutus, et curavit eum, ita ut loqueretur et videret.

23. And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David ?

It would not appear that the man was born "blind and dumb," or that there was any natural defect in his organs of sight and speech, but that he had become possessed with a devil, that had for the time restrained him from the use of these organs. The devil was "blind and dumb" in the sense of causing the man to be so. When Jesus had expelled the devil, the man recovered his sight and speech, without any separate act on the part of our Saviour.¹ In S. Luke's account, there is no reference to the man's blindness ; he merely says that the devil was dumb. This is the reason why some have supposed that the Evangelists are relating different miracles.

Such and so many were the miracles that Jesus wrought, that the multitude, acting in the honesty of their hearts, ask whether He be not the Son of David, which was one of the ordinary titles of the promised Messiah. The Pharisees are unable to deny that He had cast out a devil, but, blinded by rage and malice, they accuse Him of having cast out the devil through Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. Jesus shows the groundless and absurd nature of this charge by several distinct arguments.

His first argument is taken from its impossibility, or rather from the contradiction involved in the very wording of such a charge.

24. But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils.

Margin, Beelzebub.

S.V. Beelzebub.

Vulg. Hic non eiecit demones nisi in Beelzebub principe demonum.

25. And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation ; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand :

S.V. And He knew.

Vulg. Iesus autem sciens cogitationes eorum, dixit eis.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 22 ; vol. vii. p. 79.

26. And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?

These evil spirits are under the dominion of Satan, and are all striving to increase his power, and to spread his worship throughout the world. But, according to the argument of the Pharisees, Satan enables Jesus to cast out these evil spirits, and to suppress their efforts to promote his worship. Satan, therefore, through his agents the evil spirits, is striving to increase his power in the earth; while through Jesus he is striving to diminish it, he is clearly opposed to himself, an impossible supposition.

His second argument is, that the judgment which they pass on Him is inconsistent with the judgment which they pass on others who cast out devils.

27. And if I by Beelzebub^a cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

Margin, Beelzebub.

S.V. Beelzebub.

Vulg. Et si ego in Beelzebub ejicio demones, filii vestri in quo ejicient?

28. But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

Two explanations have been given of the words "your children" or "your sons." Some of the older commentators¹ refer the words to the Apostles. But as yet the Apostles had not cast out any devils, if, as many suppose, who have given more attention to the order of events in the Gospel narrative than the early commentators were accustomed to do, Jesus uttered these words before He despatched the Twelve on their mission to preach. The other interpretation² is that Jesus here alludes to certain men who, by exorcism, either really did cast out devils, or at least were believed so to do, and whose power the Jews attributed not to the devil, but to God.

Josephus, the Jewish historian, relates that Solomon was skilled in exorcism.³ The exorcists that were among them laid claim to cast out devils, and the Jews allowed this claim, doubtful as it really was, and did not attribute their power to Satan. Much more ought they to allow that Jesus cast out devils, and that He cast them out by "the finger of God," or by "the Spirit of God." Nay more, the exercise of this supernatural power, the casting out devils by the Spirit of God, should be a proof to them of the truth of what both the Baptist and Himself had taught them, that the new kingdom—a state of union with Him and of obedience to Him, by grace here, preparatory for a state of glory with Him hereafter—was already begun.

He then goes on to argue, from the course pursued by men in similar cases, that what He is now doing, namely, casting out devils, is necessary for the accomplishment of His work, which is to destroy the power of the devil.

29. Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.

As applied to this case, the strong man is Satan: his house or palace, this world: his goods, the souls of wicked men, or the bodies of those possessed by evil spirits: his arms are the various deceits with which he entraps men, or his agents and instruments, such as evil spirits, riches, and pleasures. The stronger than he is the Son of Man, who shall vanquish him, and deliver those who are held captive by him.

30. He that is not with Me is against Me; and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad.

S. scattereth Me abroad.

Vulg. Et qui non congregat mecum, spargit.

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 27; vol. i. p. 175.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlii. p. 388.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 27; vol. viii. p. 262.

⁴ Antiq. viii. 2, 5; vol. i. p. 339.

Whiston's Translation, p. 216.

"prince of the power of the air" (Ephes. ii. 2), or as the prince of the lower world, or as inhabiting human bodies, or as occupying a mansion in the seventh heaven, like Saturn in Oriental mythology. Others derive it from zebel (dung), thus making Beelzebub, literally, the lord of dung, or the dung-hill; and in a secondary sense, as zebel was used by the Talmudical writers as = idol or idolater, the lord of idols, prince of false gods. It is generally held that the former of these two senses is more particularly referred to in the New Testament; the latter, however, is adopted by Lightfoot and Schleusner. We have lastly to notice the ingenious conjecture of Hug, that the fly under which Baalzebub was represented was the Scarabæus ptilularius, or dung-hill beetle, in which case Baalzebub and Beelzebub might be used indifferently . . . It is worthy of especial observation that the notices of Beelzebub are exclusively connected with the subject of demoniacal possession, a circumstance which may account for the subsequent disappearance of the name."—SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xii. 27; vol. i. p. 988.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 27; vol. vii. p. 80.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xli.; vol. i. p. 557.

Theophylact, in Matt. xii. 27; vol. i. p. 60.

Euthymius, in Matt. xii. 27; vol. i. p. 483.

[Maldonatus,

^a Beelzebub.—"The title of a heathen deity, to whom the Jews ascribed the sovereignty of the evil spirits (Matt. x. 25, xii. 24; Mark iii. 22; Luke xi. 15). The correct reading is without doubt Beelzebub, and not Beelzebub, as given in the Syriac, the Vulgate, and some other versions. The explanations offered in reference to the change of the name may be ranged into two classes, according as they are based on the sound or the meaning of the word. We should prefer the assumption, in connection with the former view, that the change was purely of an accidental nature. The second class of explanations carries the greatest weight of authority with it: these proceed on the ground that the Jews intentionally changed the pronunciation of the word, so as either to give a significance to it adapted to their own ideas, or to cast ridicule upon the idolatry of the neighbouring nations, in which case we might compare the adoption of Sychar for Sychem, Bethaven for Bethel. Some connect the term with zebel (habitation), thus making Beelzebub = εὐκαταστάσις (Matt. x. 25), the lord of the dwelling, whether as the

This may be another argument¹ to show the impossibility of His casting out devils through Beelzebub. Those who are really opposed to each other, cannot co-operate. None can be so much opposed as Jesus and Satan. That they should co-operate to work miracles is impossible.

Or this may be the enunciation of a general principle, with a special reference to the Pharisees. In a city the good and bad take opposite sides, and those who are neutral are suspected by both, and are regarded as the enemies of both. These Pharisees, who profess to praise the works of Jesus and at the same time to say that He accomplished them through the devil, were not His friends, and would not be judged as such.

Jesus then goes on to describe the fearful nature of the sin in which they are now indulging, and which He calls "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost."

31. ¶ Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.^a

V. shall be forgiven unto you men: S.V. shall not be forgiven (omit unto men).
Vulg. Omne peccatum et blasphemiam remittetur hominibus, spiritus autem blasphemiam non remittetur.

32. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.^b

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xii. 30; vol. i. p. 989.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 30; vol. vii. p. 80.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xli.; vol. i. p. 560.

Theophylact, in Matt. xii. 30; vol. i. p. 60.

Euthymius, in Matt. xii. 30; vol. i. p. 487.

² S. Athanasius, in Matt. xii. 31; vol. iii. p. 1386.

S. Basil, Regule, brevis tractat. 273; vol. iii. p. 1272.

^a But the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.—For mine own part, although where this blasphemy is mentioned, the cause why our Saviour spake thereof was the Pharisees' blasphemy, which were not afraid to say, 'He had an unclean spirit, and did cast out spirits by the power of Beelzebub;' nevertheless, I dare not precisely deny but that even the very Pharisees themselves might have repented and been forgiven, and that our Lord Jesus Christ peradventure might but take occasion at their blasphemy, which as yet was pardonable, to tell them further of an unpardonable blasphemy, wherein He foresaw that the Jews would fall. For it is plain that many thousands, at the first professing Christian religion, became afterwards wilful apostates, moved with no other cause of revolt but mere indignation that the Gentiles should enjoy the benefit of the Gospel as much as they, and yet not be burdened with the yoke of Moses' law. The Apostles by preaching had won them to Christ, in whose name they embraced with great alacrity the full remission of their former sins and iniquities; they received by imposition of the Apostles' hands that grace and power of the Holy Ghost whereby they cured diseases, prophesied, spake with tongues: and yet in the end, after all this, they fell utterly away, renounced the mysteries of Christian faith, blasphemed in their formal abjurations that most glorious and blessed Spirit, the gifts whereof themselves had possessed; and

All sin against the Holy Ghost is not the sin of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Nor is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same as blasphemy against the Son of Man. He draws a clear distinction between these sins, and also between the guilt that attaches to them. The latter consisted in speaking blasphemously against the works which Jesus did in His nature as Man, and the former against those which He performed by His power as God. The Pharisees were guilty of blasphemy against the Son of Man when they perversely attributed His associating with publicans and partaking of their meals, not to His desire to instruct and to influence them for good, but to His love of eating and drinking. But the Pharisees were guilty of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, when they deliberately and maliciously, and against the clearest evidence, imputed to the devil the miraculous works which Jesus wrought by the Spirit, or by His power as God, for the salvation of men.²

Our Saviour is not here annexing a new punishment to blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. He is rather showing the heinous nature of the sin, which is such that it is never forgiven. S. Mark says it has "never" forgiveness, and S. Matthew specifies more particularly, and says, "neither in this world, nor in that which is to come." Some sins which are not forgiven in this world, are forgiven in the world to come. But this is not the case with blasphemy against the Holy Ghost: for it is forgiven "neither in this world, nor in the world to come."

His last argument is drawn from the inconsistency of calling a tree good and the fruit of the same tree evil, or of calling a tree evil and the fruit of the same tree good.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xli.; vol. i. p. 561.

S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, i. 3; vol. iii. p. 717.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 31; vol. vii. p. 81.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. ii. 2, quest. 14, art. 1; vol. iii. p. 118.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlix. p. 392.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 31; vol. i. p. 176.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 31; vol. viii. p. 263.

by this means sunk their souls in the gulf of that unpardonable sin, whereof as our Lord Jesus Christ had told them beforehand, so the Apostle at the first appearance of such their revolt putteth them in mind again (Heb. vi. 6), that falling now to their former blasphemies, their salvation was irrecoverably gone. It was for them in this case impossible to be renewed by any repentance; because they were now in the state of Satan and his angels, the Judge of quick and dead had passed His irrevocable sentence against them," &c. &c.—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' vi. 15; vol. iii. p. 103.

^b It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor, &c.—"They that endeavour hence to prove the remission of some sins after death, seem little to understand to what Christ had respect, when He spake these words. Weigh well this common and most known doctrine of the Jewish schools, and judge." Lightfoot then brings many quotations to prove that the Rabbins held that repentance and the day of expiation expiate as to the third part of sin, and corrections another third part, and that death wipes off the rest. He then concludes, "Note this, which Christ contradicts, concerning blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, 'It shall not be forgiven,' saith He, 'neither in this world, nor in the world to come;' that is, neither before death, nor as you dream, by death."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 32; vol. ii. p. 190.

33. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit.

Some¹ have understood this "tree" of Jesus, and others of the devil. Both explanations are admissible. The Pharisees were willing to acknowledge, or rather they could not deny, that the works which Jesus wrought were good. Jesus Himself therefore could not be evil; He could not be, as they said, the agent of the devil. His works were good, as they themselves acknowledged; how then could He perform them in order to increase the power of the devil?

If the devil be evil, as the Pharisees could not deny, then his works could not be good; he could not, as they said, be the author, the source, of those miracles of mercy which Jesus went about to perform.

This has also been explained² as if Jesus meant by the "tree" the Pharisees themselves, and was endeavouring to show them their own inconsistency: for, while they wished to appear a good tree, they were bringing forth evil fruit; or though they were an evil tree, they wished to appear to bring forth good fruit, which was an impossibility, and opposed to the very nature of things.

He still goes on to set before them the fearful nature of the charge they had made in attributing His miraculous works to the power of Satan.

34. O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

35. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things.

S.V. omit of the heart.

Vulg. Bonus homo de bono thesauro profert bona.

36. But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

37. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

S. and by words.

Vulg. Ex verbis enim tuis justificaberis, et ex verbis tuis condemnaberis.

He here shows the intimate connection that exists between words and thoughts, both now and at the day of judgment. Now words are the index of the heart; then they will form the subject of examination. How could the Pharisees, being evil, do otherwise than give expression to their real affections? They are a brood of vipers; by natural descent they possess the power to inflict a wound, and by personal character they have the will to infuse into it a deadly poison. But if at the day of judgment "every idle word," that is, every word which unintentionally administers to evil, shall be judged and punished, how fearful will be the punishment of these Pharisees, who, with malicious spitefulness, impute the supernatural works wrought by Jesus to the devil.³

The Pharisees who charged Jesus with casting out devils through Beelzebub the prince of the devils, may have been silenced by His unanswerable reasoning, but others of them—for they belong to the same party, as we learn from S. Luke (xi. 16)—ask Him to prove His power to work these miracles not by argument, but by some sign, or, as S. Luke says, some "sign from heaven." The miracles themselves were signs of His divine power, but these were from earth, and of an earthly character, and God dwelt in heaven. They therefore ask from Him some sign from heaven; it may be, such as Elijah wrought, when, at his prayer, fire came down from heaven and consumed the sacrifice (1 Kings xviii.); or such as Samuel wrought, when, by means of thunder from heaven, he discomfited the Philistines (1 Sam. vii. 10).⁴

JESUS ANSWERS THE SCRIBES AND PHARISEES WHO SEEK A SIGN.

S. MATTHEW xii. 38–42.

S. LUKE xi. 29–32.

38 Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from Thee.

39 But He answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign;

and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas:

40 for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly;

29

And when the people were gathered thick together,

He began to say,

This is an evil generation: they seek a sign;

and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites,

30

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xii. 33; vol. i. p. 990.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 33; vol. vii. p. 81.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlii.; vol. i. p. 565.

Theophylact, in Matt. xii. 33; vol. i. p. 61.

Euthymius, in Matt. xii. 33; vol. i. p. 493.

² S. Augustine, Sermo lxvii. (alias 12 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 467.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 33; vol. i. p. 177.

³ S. Basil, Regula, brevis tractat., 23, 24; vol. iii. p. 1098.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlii.; vol. i. p. 568.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 36; vol. vii. p. 82.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. vi.; vol. ii. p. 1098.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. i. 2, quaest. 18, art. 9; vol. ii. p. 159.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xii. 38; vol. vii. p. 82.

S. MATTHEW xii.

- so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.
41 The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it :
because they repented at the preaching of Jonas ;
and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.
42 The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it :
for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth
to hear the wisdom of Solomon ;
and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

S. LUKE xi.

- so shall also the Son of Man be to this generation.
32 The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment
with this generation, and shall condemn it :
for they repented at the preaching of Jonas ;
and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.
31 The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them :
for she came from the utmost parts of the earth
to hear the wisdom of Solomon ;
and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

38. ¶ Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from Thee.

V. omits of the Pharisees : S.V. answered Him.
Vulg. Tunc responderunt ei quidam de scribis et pharisæis.

39. But He answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign ; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas :^a

40. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly ; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights^b in the heart of the earth.

* The Resurrection.—"The explicit denial of the literal Resurrection of Jesus from the grave is not compensated for by some theory identical with, or analogous to, that of Hymenæus and Philletus respecting the general Resurrection, whereby the essential subject of Christ's Resurrection is changed ; and the idea of Christianity, or the soul of the converted Christian, as distinct from the Body of the Lord Jesus, is said to have been raised from the dead. For such a denial, let us mark it well, of the literal Resurrection of the Human Body of Jesus, involves nothing less than an absolute and total rejection of Christianity. All orthodox churches, all the great heresies, even Socinianism, have believed in the Resurrection of Jesus. The literal Resurrection of Jesus was the cardinal fact upon which the earliest preachers of Christianity based their appeal to the Jewish people. St. Paul, writing to a Gentile Church, expressly makes Christianity answer with its life for the literal truth of the Resurrection. 'If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain . . . Then they also, which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perished.' Some modern writers would possibly have reproached St. Paul with offering a harsh alternative instead of an argument. But St. Paul would have replied, first, that our Lord's honour and credit were entirely staked upon the issue, since He had foretold His Resurrection as the 'sign' which would justify His claims ; and secondly, that the fact of the Resurrection was attested by evidence which must outweigh everything except an a priori conviction of the impossibility of miracle, since it was attested by the word of more than two hundred and fifty living persons who had actually seen the Risen Jesus. As to objections to miracle of an a priori character, St. Paul would have argued, as most Theists, and even the French philosopher, have argued, that such objections could not be urged by any man who believed seriously in a living God at all. But, on the other hand, if the Resurrection be admitted to be a fact, it is puerile to object to the other miracles of Jesus, or to any other Christian miracles, provided they be sufficiently attested. To have admitted the stupendous truth that Jesus, after predicting that He would be put to a violent death and then rise from the dead, was actually so killed and then did actually so rise, must incapacitate any thoughtful man for objecting to the supernatural Conception, or to the Ascension into heaven, or to the more striking wonders wrought by Jesus, on any such ground as that of intrinsic improbability. The Resurrection has, as compared with the other miraculous occurrences narrated in the Gospels, all the force of an à fortiori argument ; they follow, if we may use the term, naturally from it ; they are fitly complementary incidents of a history in which the Resurrection has already made plain, that we are dealing with One in whose case our ordinary experience of the limits and conditions of human power is altogether at fault."—CANON LIDDOX, 'Bampton Lectures,' iv. p. 154.

^b Three days and three nights.—After several quotations from Rabbinical writers, Lightfoot goes on to say, "It is not easy to translate the word שְׁלוֹשָׁה, Onah, into good Latin. For to some it is the same with the half of a natural day ; to some it is all one with σὺν ἡμέρῃ, a whole natural day. According to the first sense, we may observe from the words of R. Ismael, that sometimes four שְׁלוֹשָׁה, Onath, or halves of a natural day, may be accounted for three days ; and that they also are so numbered that one part or the other of those halves may be accounted for a whole. Compare the latter sense with the words of our Saviour which are now before us. A day and a night (saith the tradition) make an onah, and a part of an onah is as the whole. Therefore Christ may truly be said to have been in His grave three onath, or τρεῖς σὺν-ἡμέραις, three natural days (when yet the greatest part of the first day was wanting, and the night altogether, and the greatest part by far of the third day also), the consent of the schools and dialect of the nation agreeing thereunto. For the least part of the onah concluded the whole. So that according to this idiom, that diminutive part of the third day upon which Christ arose may be computed for the whole day, and the night following it."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xii. 40 ; vol. ii. p. 192.

"Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (John ii. 19). "In three days, or after three days, i.e. the third from the day wherein it is destroyed, according to the expression immediately foregoing, 'He must rise again the third day,' counting the day wherein He suffered to be the first. And in this sense also He calls the space He was to continue in the state of death, 'three days and three nights' (Matt. xii. 40), though it was but one whole day and two pieces ; and herein He spake according to the dialect of the Jews themselves, to whom He spake. For both the Talmuds, disputing about the three days that the Israelites were not to come at their wives before the giving of the Law (Exod. xix. 15) say : but R. Eliezer Ben Azariah saith, 'A day and a night make a שְׁלוֹשָׁה ; and a part of a שְׁלוֹשָׁה is accounted as a whole,'

Some we cannot avoid seeing. When the Baptist was sent to prepare the way for the Son of God, the Pharisees reject the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized with the baptism of John. When the Son of God Himself came preaching the kingdom of heaven, healing the sick and casting out devils, they cannot deny the reality of His miracles, they are obliged to admit that He cast out devils, but they said that He cast out the devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils. From this sin of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost they by degrees proceed to the Crucifixion of the Son of God. After this, by internal dissensions and bloodshed, they prepare the way for the Roman army. In the end, which is rapidly advancing, their own wickedness and their own sufferings become greater than at any other time, or than history records in any other nation. No one who reads the history of the siege of Jerusalem under Titus can fail to see the truth of the prophetic description, "Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first," worse than at any period in their former history.

The sending for Jesus by His mother and brethren is recorded by three of the Evangelists, S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke. Of these, S. Luke alone places it after the parable of the Sower, while S. Matthew and S. Mark place it immediately before the parable of the Sower and after the parable of the wicked spirit who returned with seven other spirits. The latter is probably the right order.¹

JESUS STATES WHO ARE HIS RELATIONS.

S. MATTHEW xii. 46-50.

- 46 While He yet talked to the people, behold, His mother and His brethren stood without, desiring to speak with Him.
- 47 Then one said unto Him, Behold, Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with Thee.
- 48 But He answered and said unto him that told Him, Who is My mother? and who are My brethren?
- 49 And He stretched forth His hand toward His disciples, and said, Behold My mother and My brethren!
- 50 For whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is My brother, and sister, and mother.

S. MARK iii. 31-35.

- 31 There came then His brethren and His mother, and, standing without, sent unto Him, calling Him.
- 32 And the multitude sat about Him, and they said unto Him, Behold, Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, seeking for Thee.
- 33 And He answered them, saying, Who is My mother? or My brethren?
- 34 And He looked round about on them which sat about Him, and said, Behold My mother and My brethren!
- 35 For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is My brother, and My sister, and mother.

S. LUKE viii. 19-21.

- 19 Then came to Him His mother and His brethren, and could not come at Him for the press.
- 20 And it was told Him by certain which said, Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, desiring to see Thee.
- 21 And He answered and said unto them, My mother and My brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

46. ¶ While He yet talked to the people, behold, His mother and His brethren stood without, desiring to speak with Him.

S⁴.V. omits desiring to speak with Him.
Vulg. ecce mater ejus et fratres stabant foris, quærentes loqui ei.

47. Then one said unto Him, Behold, Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with Thee.

S⁴.V. omits this whole verse : S². Then said one of His disciples, Behold, Thy mother and Thy brethren without seek for Thee.
Vulg. Dixit autem ei quidam : Ecce mater tua et fratres tui foris stant quærentes te.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. l. p. 398.
Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotaxis gestorum Christi; vol. viii. p. 15.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xxxvi. and xxxvii. vol. i. p. 229.

48. But He answered and said unto him that told Him, Who is My mother? and who are My brethren?

49. And He stretched forth His hand toward His disciples, and said, Behold My mother and My brethren!

S². the hand.
Vulg. Et extendens manum in discipulos suos.

50. For whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is My brother, and sister, and mother.

Dean Alford, Greek Testament, Luke viii. 19.
Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xxxii. and 46.
Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 47.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 558.

The sense attached to these words by some early writers¹ is, that His mother and His brethren sent to speak with Jesus that they might gain honour and respect from the bystanders and others, by being known as His relations. There is nothing in the language itself that necessarily leads to this conclusion; nor does the context in any way require this sense. The Pharisees had just before been accusing Him of casting out devils through Beelzebub the prince of the devils. Jesus in return had convicted them, by the most unanswerable arguments, of inconsistency with themselves in this accusation, and in making it He had charged them with the greatest of all sins, blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. He had compared their nation to a man possessed with an unclean spirit, who, when he had been once delivered, willingly prepared for his return; who on that brings with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. His parable, with the application of it, "so shall it be also with this wicked generation," had doubtless wound them up to the highest pitch of rage against Him. If then His mother and His brethren wished to gain honour with the Pharisees and others by their relationship with Jesus, they would appear to have chosen their subject and their time ill.

But to suppose that relationship with Jesus would confer any honour in the eyes of men is to interpret this passage by modern notions, and not by those that were prevalent at that time. He was despised as a Galilean, and also for the lowliness of His birth, being supposed to be the son of a carpenter. He was hated by the Pharisees, and by those in any power or honour among the Jews, for His reproof of their sins. Even His brethren did not then believe in His claim to be the Son of God. Whatever honour therefore there was in being related to Jesus must be a subject for their private musings, but no claim would be pressed for the public recognition of this.

Some have supposed that this was the occasion, or one of the occasions, mentioned by S. Mark (iii. 21) earlier in the chapter, when "His friends went out to lay hold on Him: for they said, He is beside Himself" (ἰξέστην). They may have heard of His severe denunciation against the Jewish nation, and have concluded that His zeal was transporting Him beyond all the bounds of prudence, even so as to endanger His life. Their object therefore in sending for Him was to remove Him from the presence of the Pharisees, and so, as they thought, to secure Him from any danger that might arise from His words.²

The answer of Jesus is not meant to undervalue the human relationship of mother and brethren, but to teach them that, in taking upon Himself this relationship, He had a further object in view. He became flesh in order to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, and He valued the human relationships, the instruments by which He accomplished this, less than He did the fulfilment of the object for which He came. Human relationship, with its ties, was not to be thought of when it interfered with His work as the Messiah.

Who are meant by "His brethren," it is impossible to say for certain. The one point on this subject in which the Church from the very beginning has been unanimous, and in which it has been unanimous since its division into the Eastern and Western branches, is that our "Lord's brethren" were not the sons of the Blessed Virgin; that they were not "His brethren" in the usual acceptation of the term, as being the sons of Joseph and Mary.³ In a learned and almost exhaustive discussion, Canon Lightfoot⁴ has examined all the notices respecting our Lord's brethren in the most ancient writers of the Church. He states and weighs all the evidence that can be brought for or against the three principal opinions that have been held:—1. That our "Lord's brethren" were the sons of Joseph by a former marriage. This opinion was supported by Epiphanius, and prevails so extensively in the Eastern branch of the Church that it may be considered the interpretation held by the Eastern Church. 2. That our "Lord's brethren" were His cousins, sons of the Blessed Virgin's sister, Mary the wife of Alphaeus. Of all the ancient extant writers this opinion is found first in S. Jerome. It was embraced by S. Augustine, and through him became the received interpretation in the Western Church. 3. That our "Lord's brethren" were the sons of the Blessed Virgin. This opinion has found some favour in modern times, chiefly among men whose general views on the Incarnation are anything but exalted or reverent. It was broached in ancient times, but persistently rejected by the Church. No body of men in the early Church held it. There were a few among ancient writers whose works have come down to us, but they were either men of little note and influence or they were more than suspected of heretical opinions on other subjects. Canon Lightfoot examines these three interpretations of the words "the Lord's brethren," with the evidence that can be brought to bear on them. The third he pronounces untenable. The second, though much can be said in favour of it, he thinks is surrounded with so many difficulties that it must be given up; and he falls back on the first as the oldest interpretation, and the one that is least liable to objection.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlv.; vol. i. p. 587.

Theophylact, in Matt. xii. 46; vol. i. p. 63.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. i. p. 339.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 46; vol. i. p. 181.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 46; vol. viii. p. 272.

³ See authorities cited under Matt. i. 25.

⁴ Canon Lightfoot on the Epistle to the Galatians, pp. 240-273.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER XIII.

Our Lord's Parables.—"Let us consider such parables of our Lord as speak of the Christian state, to see what its characteristics are. These will be found not to recognise at all the case of instable, variable minds, falling repeatedly into gross sins, and saved by that state of grace in which they have been placed. The Christian state does not shelter a man who sins, but it lets him drop. Just as we cannot hold in our hands a thing in flames, but however dear it be to us, though it be a child, we are forced at length to let it go; so wilful sin burns like fire, and the Church drops us, however unwillingly, when we sin wilfully. Not our faith, not our past services, not God's past mercies, avail to keep us in a state of grace, if 'we sin wilfully after receiving the knowledge of the truth' (Heb. x. 26). Now I say, agreeably with this we shall find our Saviour's parables divide Christians into two states—those who continue in God's favour, and those who lose it; and those who continue in it are said to be, not those who merely have repentance and faith, who sin but ever wash out their sins by coming for pardon, but those who do not sin;—not those whose one great aim is to obtain forgiveness, but those who (though they abound in infirmities, and so far have much to be forgiven) yet are best described by saying that they aim at increasing their talents, aim at laying up for themselves a 'good foundation for the time to come, that they may lay hold of eternal life' (1 Tim. vi. 19).

"For example, in our Saviour's first parable, who is he who builds his house upon a rock? not he who has faith merely, but he, who having doubtless faith to begin the work, has faith also strong enough to perfect it: who 'heareth and doeth.'

"Again, in the parable of the Sower, the simple question considered is, who they are who profit by what they have received; what a Christian has to do is represented as a work, a process which has a beginning, middle, and end; a consistent course of obedience, not a state in which we have done nothing more at the end of our lives than at the beginning, except sin the oftener, according to its length. In that parable one man is said not to admit the good seed; a second admits it, but its root withers; a third goes further—the seed strikes root and shoots upwards, but its leaves and blossoms get entangled and overlaid with thorns. The fourth takes root, shoots upwards, and does more—bears fruit to perfection. This, then, is the Christian's great aim, lest he should come short after grace given him. This forms his peculiar danger and his special dread. Of course he is not secure from peril of gross sin; of course he is continually defiled with sins of infirmity; but whereas how to be forgiven is the main inquiry for the natural man, so how to fulfil his calling, how to answer to grace given, how to increase his Lord's money, how to attain, this is the great problem of man regenerate. Faith gained him pardon; but works gain him a reward.

"Again the Net had two kinds of fish—good and bad, just and wicked; they differ in character and conduct; whereas men allow themselves to speak as if, in point of moral condition, the saved and the reprobate were pretty much on a level; the real difference being that the one had faith appropriating Christ's merits, and a spiritual conviction of their own perishing state, and the other had not. And so I might go on to the parables of the Ten Virgins, the Talents, and others, and show in like manner that the state of a Christian, as our Lord contemplates it, is one in which he is, not lamenting the victories of sin, but working out salvation; beginning, continuing, and at last perfecting, a course of obedience."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN'S 'Parochial Sermons,' vol. v. p. 210.

Tares.—"Let me call your attention to these 'tares' which are growing among the barley. The grain is just in the proper stage of development to illustrate the parable. In those parts where the grain has headed out, they have done the same, and there a child cannot mistake them for wheat or barley; but where both are less developed, the closest scrutiny will often fail to detect them. I cannot do it at all with any confidence. Even the farmers, who in this country generally weed their fields, do not attempt to separate the one from the other. They would not only mistake good grain for them, but very commonly the roots of the two are so intertwined that it is impossible to separate them without plucking up both. Both, therefore, must be left to grow together until the time of harvest.

"The common Arabic name for the tare is zowan, and this, I presume, is the root of the Greek name zizanion. The tare abounds all over the East, and is a great nuisance to the farmer. It resembles the American cheat, but the head does not droop like cheat, nor does it branch out like oats. The grain, also, is smaller, and is arranged along the upper part of the stalk, which stands perfectly erect. The taste is bitter, and when eaten separately, or even when diffused in ordinary bread, it causes dizziness, and often acts as a violent emetic. Barn-door fowls also become dizzy from eating it. In short, it is a strong soporific poison, and must be carefully winnowed and picked out of the wheat, grain by grain, before grinding, or the flour is not healthy. Of course the farmers are very anxious to exterminate it, but this is nearly impossible. Indeed, grain-growers in this country believe that in very wet seasons, and in marshy ground, the wheat itself turns to tares. I have made diligent inquiries on this point, and find this to be their fixed opinion. Nor is this a modern notion, or one confined to the ignorant. It is as old at least as the time of our Saviour, and is met with both in heathen writers and in the expositions of the early Fathers. Still, I am not at all prepared to admit its truth. If it could be proved, as these old authors assert, that zizantion is merely a degenerated wheat or barley, it would be reasonable to allow that such degeneration might occur in a soil and season adapted to cause it; but I do not believe the fundamental fact in the question. Zovan differs so essentially from wheat, that it will take the very strongest evidence to establish their original identity. Besides, it does not accord with the general law of degeneracy that it is completed at once, and by a single process. Such changes are gradual, and require successive production and reproduction, each adding to the gradual deterioration, before such a radical change can be effected. The farmers, however, stoutly maintain that they 'sow good seed in their fields,' and in clean ground, and yet that the whole is turned to tares in consequence of extraordinary rains during winter,—that is, that perfect wheat is changed to perfect tares by one single process; and further, that this change is permanent. These extemporaneous tares ever after produce tares, and tares only, nor can you, by any legerdemain, reverse the process, and change tares back to wheat. If this be true, it is a species of original sin in the vegetable kingdom every way surprising.

"But how are you to answer a farmer who takes you to a field nearly all tares, and declares that he there sowed clean seed, and that in previous years he always reaped good harvests of pure grain? 'Whence the present crop of tares?' he asks, and so do you. I have repeatedly examined such fields with all the care in my power, and without finding an answer. It would be easy to say, as in the parable, 'An enemy hath done this;' but, though I have read in authors who never resided in Palestine, that bad men do thus injure their enemies, I have never found a person in the country itself who had either known or heard of such an act. It is certainly remarkable that Arab malice has never adopted this mode of injuring its victims; but the fact must be told,—it is altogether unknown at the present day. It must have been done, however, in the time of our Saviour, or He would not have mentioned it in His parable. At all events, the farmers of this day will not admit that their fields have thus been filled with tares; and I believe them. We must, therefore, find some other solution of a phenomenon which occurs so often that I have myself had frequent opportunities to verify it. I suppose that several separate causes conspire to bring about the result. First, very wet weather in winter drowns and kills wheat, while it is the most favourable of all weather for tares. In a good season the wheat overgrows and chokes the tares, but in a wet one the reverse is true. The farmers all admit this, but still they ask, 'Whence the seed of the tares? We sowed good seed.' To this it may be answered, The tare is a very light grain, easily blown about by the wind; that a thousand little birds are ever carrying it and dropping it over the fields; that myriads of ants are dragging it in all directions; that moles, and mice, and goats, and sheep, and nearly every other animal, are aiding in this work of dispersion; that much of the tares shell out in handling the grain in the field; that a large part of them is thrown out by the wind at the threshing-floor, which is always in the open country; that the heavy rains which often deluge the country in autumn carry down to the lower levels this outcast zovan, and sow them there; and these are precisely the spots where the transmutation is said to occur. It is my belief that in these and in similar ways the tares are actually sown, without the intervention of an enemy, and their presence is accounted for without having recourse to this incredible doctrine of transmutation."—"The Land and the Book," pp. 420-422.

"Our path now lay through fields of wheat of the most luxuriant growth; finer than which I had not before seen in this or in any other country. Among these splendid fields of grain are still found the tares spoken of in the New Testament. As described to me, they are not to be distinguished from the wheat until the ear appears. The seed resembles wheat in form, but is smaller, and black. In Beirût poultry are fed upon this seed, and it is kept for sale for that purpose. When not separated from the wheat, bread made from the flour often causes dizziness to those who eat of it. All this corresponds with the Lolium temulentum, or bearded darnel, the infelix lolium of Virgil, Georg. i. 154."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Res.' p. 55.

"Strange as it may appear, this is still literally done in the East. See that lurking villain, watching for the time when his neighbour shall plough his field: he carefully marks the period when the work has been finished, and in the following night, proceeding with stealthy steps, he casts in what the natives call the pandinellu, that is, 'pig-paddy.' This, being of rapid growth, springs up before the good seed, and scatters itself before the other can be reaped; so that the poor owner of the field will be some years before he can rid the soil of the troublesome weed. But there is another noisome plant which these wretches cast into the ground of those whom they hate; it is called perum-pirandi, and it is more destructive to vegetation than any other plant. Has a man purchased a field which another intended to buy? the disappointed person declares, 'I will plant the perum-pirandi in his grounds.'—ROBERTS'S 'Oriental Illustrations,' p. 530.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER XIII.

Our Lord's Parables.—"Let us consider such parables of our Lord as speak of the Christian state, to see what its characteristics are. These will be found not to recognise at all the case of instable, variable minds, falling repeatedly into gross sins, and saved by that state of grace in which they have been placed. The Christian state does not shelter a man who sins, but it lets him drop. Just as we cannot hold in our hands a thing in flames, but however dear it be to us, though it be a child, we are forced at length to let it go; so wilful sin burns like fire, and the Church drops us, however unwillingly, when we sin wilfully. Not our faith, not our past services, not God's past mercies, avail to keep us in a state of grace, if 'we sin wilfully after receiving the knowledge of the truth' (Heb. x. 26). Now I say, agreeably with this we shall find our Saviour's parables divide Christians into two states—those who continue in God's favour, and those who lose it; and those who continue in it are said to be, not those who merely have repentance and faith, who sin but ever wash out their sins by coming for pardon, but those who do not sin;—not those whose one great aim is to obtain forgiveness, but those who (though they abound in infirmities, and so far have much to be forgiven) yet are best described by saying that they aim at increasing their talents, aim at laying up for themselves a 'good foundation for the time to come, that they may lay hold of eternal life' (1 Tim. vi. 19).

"For example, in our Saviour's first parable, who is he who builds his house upon a rock? not he who has faith merely, but he, who having doubtless faith to begin the work, has faith also strong enough to perfect it: who 'heareth and doeth.'

"Again, in the parable of the Sower, the simple question considered is, who they are who profit by what they have received; what a Christian has to do is represented as a work, a process which has a beginning, middle, and end; a consistent course of obedience, not a state in which we have done nothing more at the end of our lives than at the beginning, except sin the oftener, according to its length. In that parable one man is said not to admit the good seed; a second admits it, but its root withers; a third goes further—the seed strikes root and shoots upwards, but its leaves and blossoms get entangled and overlaid with thorns. The fourth takes root, shoots upwards, and does more—bears fruit to perfection. This, then, is the Christian's great aim, lest he should come short after grace given him. This forms his peculiar danger and his special dread. Of course he is not secure from peril of gross sin; of course he is continually defiled with sins of infirmity; but whereas how to be forgiven is the main inquiry for the natural man, so how to fulfil his calling, how to answer to grace given, how to increase his Lord's money, how to attain, this is the great problem of man regenerate. Faith gained him pardon; but works gain him a reward.

"Again the Net had two kinds of fish—good and bad, just and wicked; they differ in character and conduct; whereas men allow themselves to speak as if, in point of moral condition, the saved and the reprobate were pretty much on a level; the real difference being that the one had faith appropriating Christ's merits, and a spiritual conviction of their own perishing state, and the other had not. And so I might go on to the parables of the Ten Virgins, the Talents, and others, and show in like manner that the state of a Christian, as our Lord contemplates it, is one in which he is, not lamenting the victories of sin, but working out salvation; beginning, continuing, and at last perfecting, a course of obedience."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN'S 'Parochial Sermons,' vol. v. p. 210.

Tares.—"Let me call your attention to these 'tares' which are growing among the barley. The grain is just in the proper stage of development to illustrate the parable. In those parts where the grain has headed out, they have done the same, and there a child cannot mistake them for wheat or barley; but where both are less developed, the closest scrutiny will often fail to detect them. I cannot do it at all with any confidence. Even the farmers, who in this country generally weed their fields, do not attempt to separate the one from the other. They would not only mistake good grain for them, but very commonly the roots of the two are so intertwined that it is impossible to separate them without plucking up both. Both, therefore, must be left to grow together until the time of harvest.

"The common Arabic name for the tare is zowan, and this, I presume, is the root of the Greek name zizanion. The tare abounds all over the East, and is a great nuisance to the farmer. It resembles the American cheat, but the head does not drop like cheat, nor does it branch out like oats. The grain, also, is smaller, and is arranged along the upper part of the stalk, which stands perfectly erect. The taste is bitter, and when eaten separately, or even when diffused in ordinary bread, it causes dizziness, and often acts as a violent emetic. Barn-door fowls also become dizzy from eating it. In short, it is a strong soporific poison, and must be carefully winnowed and picked out of the wheat, grain by grain, before grinding, or the flour is not healthy. Of course the farmers are very anxious to exterminate it, but this is nearly impossible. Indeed, grain-growers in this country believe that in very wet seasons, and in marshy ground, the wheat itself turns to tares. I have made diligent inquiries on this point, and find this to be their fixed opinion. Nor is this a modern notion, or one confined to the ignorant. It is as old at least as the time of our Saviour, and is met with both in heathen writers and in the expositions of the early Fathers. Still, I am not at all prepared to admit its truth. If it could be proved, as these old authors assert, that zizania is merely a degenerated wheat or barley, it would be reasonable to allow that such degeneration might occur in a soil and season adapted to cause it; but I do not believe the fundamental fact in the question. Zowan differs so essentially from wheat, that it will take the very strongest evidence to establish their original identity. Besides, it does not accord with the general law of degeneracy that it is completed at once, and by a single process. Such changes are gradual, and require successive production and reproduction, each adding to the gradual deterioration, before such a radical change can be effected. The farmers, however, stoutly maintain that they 'sow good seed in their fields,' and in clean ground, and yet that the whole is turned to tares in consequence of extraordinary rains during winter,—that is, that perfect wheat is changed to perfect tares by one single process; and further, that this change is permanent. These extemporaneous tales ever after produce tares, and tares only, nor can you, by any legerdemain, reverse the process, and change tares back to wheat. If this be true, it is a species of original sin in the vegetable kingdom every way surprising.

"But how are you to answer a farmer who takes you to a field nearly all tares, and declares that he there sowed clean seed, and that in previous years he always reaped good harvests of pure grain? 'Whence the present crop of tares?' he asks, and so do you. I have repeatedly examined such fields with all the care in my power, and without finding an answer. It would be easy to say, as in the parable, 'An enemy hath done this;' but, though I have read in authors who never resided in Palestine, that bad men do thus injure their enemies, I have never found a person in the country itself who had either known or heard of such an act. It is certainly remarkable that Arab malice has never adopted this mode of injuring its victims; but the fact must be told,—it is altogether unknown at the present day. It must have been done, however, in the time of our Saviour, or He would not have mentioned it in His parable. At all events, the farmers of this day will not admit that their fields have thus been filled with tares; and I believe them. We must, therefore, find some other solution of a phenomenon which occurs so often that I have myself had frequent opportunities to verify it. I suppose that several separate causes conspire to bring about the result. First, very wet weather in winter drowns and kills wheat, while it is the most favourable of all weather for tares. In a good season the wheat overgrows and chokes the tares, but in a wet one the reverse is true. The farmers all admit this, but still they ask, 'Whence the seed of the tares? We sowed good seed.' To this it may be answered, 'The tare is a very light grain, easily blown about by the wind; that a thousand little birds are ever carrying it and dropping it over the fields; that myriads of ants are dragging it in all directions; that moles, and mice, and goats, and sheep, and nearly every other animal, are aiding in this work of dispersion; that much of the tares shell out in handling the grain in the field; that a large part of them is thrown out by the wind at the threshing-floor, which is always in the open country; that the heavy rains which often deluge the country in autumn carry down to the lower levels this outcast zowan, and sow them there; and these are precisely the spots where the transmutation is said to occur. It is my belief that in these and in similar ways the tares are actually sown, without the intervention of an enemy, and their presence is accounted for without having recourse to this incredible doctrine of transmutation.'—The Land and the Book, pp. 420–422.

"Our path now lay through fields of wheat of the most luxuriant growth; finer than which I had not before seen in this or in any other country. Among these splendid fields of grain are still found the tares spoken of in the New Testament. As described to me, they are not to be distinguished from the wheat until the ear appears. The seed resembles wheat in form, but is smaller, and black. In Beirût poultry are fed upon this seed, and it is kept for sale for that purpose. When not separated from the wheat, bread made from the flour often causes dizziness to those who eat of it. All this corresponds with the Lolium temulentum, or bearded dandel, the infelix lolium of Virgil, Georg. i. 154."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Res.' p. 55.

"Strange as it may appear, this is still literally done in the East. See that lurking villain, watching for the time when his neighbour shall plough his field: he carefully marks the period when the work has been finished, and in the following night, proceeding with stealthy steps, he casts in what the natives call the pandinellu, that is, 'pig-paddy.' This, being of rapid growth, springs up before the good seed, and scatters itself before the other can be reaped; so that the poor owner of the field will be some years before he can rid the soil of the troublesome weed. But there is another noisome plant which these wretches cast into the ground of those whom they hate; it is called perum-pirandi, and it is more destructive to vegetation than any other plant. Has a man purchased a field which another intended to buy? the disappointed person declares, 'I will plant the perum-pirandi in his grounds.'"—ROBERTS'S 'Oriental Illustrations,' p. 530.

CHAPTER XIII.

[3. The parable of the sower and the seed : 13, the exposition of it. 21. The parable of the tares, 31, of the mustard seed, 33, of the leaven, 41, of the hidden treasure, 45, of the pearl, 47, of the dragnet cast into the sea : 53, and how Christ is condemned of His own countrymen.]

[Vulg. Sedens in navicula præponit turbis præstolans seminantis ac zizaniorum, quos etiam discipulis interpretatur; item parabolas de grano sinapis, de fermentis in farina occultato, de thesauro et margarita inventis; de reti in mare misso, quam parabolam etiam declarat; docens in patria, ait prophetam non esse sine honore nisi in propria patria.]

S. MATTHEW seems to imply that Jesus delivered the parable of the Sower on the same day on which His mother and brethren sent to request to speak with Him. If this be the meaning which he intended by the words "on that day" (ἐν δὲ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ), or, as the English Version renders them, "on the same day," and it appears highly probable, it will easily account for the apparent discrepancy between S. Luke and the two other Evangelists, in placing the attempt of His mother and brethren to see Jesus. For if this and the delivery of the parable took place on the same day, S. Matthew and S. Mark might record their attempt to see Jesus before the parable, and S. Luke after it, and still there would be no great difference between them, since both the events happened on the same day. This explanation does away with the necessity for supposing, as some have done, that His mother and brethren sought to see Jesus on two different occasions, and that S. Matthew and S. Mark describe the former of these, and S. Luke the latter.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

ST. MATTHEW xiii. 1-9.

1 The same day went Jesus out of the house,
and sat by the sea side.
2 And great multitudes were gathered together unto Him, so that He went into a ship, and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore.
3 And He spake many things unto them in parables, saying,
Behold, a sower went forth to sow;
4 and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side,
and the fowls came and devoured them up;
5 some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they sprang up, because they had no deepness of earth:
6 and when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root,

ST. MARK iv. 1-9.

1 And He began again to teach by the sea side:
and there was gathered unto Him a great multitude,
so that He entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.
2 And He taught them many things by parables, and said unto them in His doctrine, Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:
4 and it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.
5 And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:
6 but when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root,

S. LUKE viii. 4-8.

4 And when much people were gathered together, and were come to Him out of every city,
He spake by a parable:
5 A sower went out to sow his seed:
and as he sowed, some fell by the way side; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.
6 And some fell upon a rock:
and as soon as it was sprung up,

S. MATTHEW xiii.

S. MARK iv.

S. LUKE viii.

they withered away.

it withered away.

it withered away,

because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among thorns;
and the thorns
sprung up, and choked them:

7 And some fell among thorns,
and the thorns
grew up, and choked it,
and it yielded no fruit.

7 And some fell among thorns;
and the thorns
sprang up with it, and choked it.

8 but other fell into good ground,
and brought forth fruit,

8 And other fell on good ground,
and did yield fruit that sprang up
and increased;
and brought forth,
some thirty,
and some sixty,
and some an hundred.

8 And other fell on good ground,
and sprang up,

some an hundredfold,
some sixtyfold,
some thirtyfold.

and bare fruit

an hundredfold.

9 Who hath ears to hear,
let him hear.

9 And He said
unto them,
He that hath ears to hear,
let him hear.

And when He had said
these things, He cried,
He that hath ears to hear,
let him hear.

1. The same day went Jesus out of the house,
and sat by the sea side.

Vulg. In illo die exiens Iesus de domo.

2. And great multitudes were gathered together unto Him, so that He went into a ship,^a and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore.

Common as the parable is in the Gospels, Jesus was not the inventor of it. In using it to convey to the people His teaching on the kingdom of heaven, He was only making use of a national form of instruction; for among the Jews the parable, as Lightfoot shows, was one of the commonest modes of imparting knowledge. A kindred form, though inferior in many ways, is found among Gentiles in the fable. In each of the following parables, the sower, the tares, the grain of mustard seed, the leaven, the hidden treasure, the precious pearl, and the net cast into the sea, Jesus sets before them the same kingdom of heaven, in one of its manifold aspects.

The principal object in the parable of the sower is to show that Jesus is the sower of the seed (ὁ σπειρών), and that He sows His seed with various degrees of success, differing according to the nature of the soil into which it is sown. But besides this primary truth, the parable contains many other collateral lessons, such as, 1. That not all of those who have the Gospel preached to them will believe it. 2. That of those who believe it at first, many will afterwards fall away in the time of temptation. 3. That some will continue to believe in the Gospel, who will not succeed in bringing forth any fruit. 4. That all these various failures will happen, not from any fault in the doctrine, but from defects in the hearers themselves, and from their inability to resist the temptations with which they are surrounded.

3. And He spake many things unto them in parables, saying, Behold, a sower went forth to sow;^b

4. And when he sowed, some seeds fell by ^a Into a ship (εἰς τὸ πλοῖον).—"Mr. Wakefield observes in his New Testament, 'A particular vessel is uniformly specified. It seems to have been kept on the lake for the use of Jesus and His Apostles. It probably belonged to some of the fishermen (see iv. 22), who, I should think, occasionally at least, continued to follow their former occupation (see John xxi. 3). Thus far Mr. W., whose solution carried with it an air of strong probability; and when we look at Mark iii. 9, which appears to have escaped him, his conjecture becomes absolute certainty: for there our Saviour is said to have directed that a small vessel should constantly be waiting for Him (προσκαρτερῇ αὐτῷ). Moreover, I think we may discover to whom the vessel belonged. In one Evangelist, Luke v. 3, we find a ship used by our Saviour for the very purpose here mentioned, declared expressly to be Simon's: and afterwards in the same Evangelist, viii. 22, we have τὸ πλοῖον definitely, as if it were intended that the reader should understand it of the ship already spoken of. It is, therefore, not improbable that in the other Evangelists also, the vessel so frequently used by our Saviour was that belonging to Peter and Andrew."—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 158.

^b A sower went forth to sow.—"There is a nice and close adherence to actual life in the form of expression 'went forth to sow.' The expression implies that the sower, in the days of our Saviour, lived in a hamlet, or village, as all these farmers now do; that he did not sow near his own house, or in a garden fenced or walled, for such a field does not furnish all the basis of the parable. There are neither roads, nor thorns, nor stony places in such lots. He must go forth into the open country as these have done, where there are no fences; where the path passes through the cultivated land; where thorns grow in clumps all round; where the rocks peep out in places through the scanty soil; and where also, hard by, are patches extremely fertile. . . .

"Here we meet with verbal accuracy; the sower goes forth—that is, from the village. The people of Ibel and Kheim, in Merj Avyün, for example, have their best grain-growing fields down in the 'ard Hüleh, six or eight miles from their homes, and just that much nearer the lawless border of the desert."—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' pp. 82 and 84.

the way side, and the fowls came and devoured them up :

The first kind of soil that He instances is the highway, or the paths along the edges of the field which are incessantly trodden by the foot of men. So hard is this soil, that the seed, unable to gain any admission into it, lies exposed on its surface, until the birds of the air carry it off.

Thus from the soil,¹ which is the most unlikely to be productive, He rises, by a regular gradation, to that which is less unlikely, and then to that which is more likely ; and lastly, to that which is the most likely to yield a crop. The second kind of soil that He mentions, is less unlikely to bear a crop than the former.

5. Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth : and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth :

Vulg. Alia autem ceciderunt in petrosa.

6. And when the sun was up, they were scorched ; and because they had no root, they withered away.

The cause of failure is here subjoined. The seed having been sown where there was too much rock, and too little deepness of soil, with the usual hot rays of the sun, it shoots up prematurely, and dies as prematurely, without coming to perfection.

7. And some fell among thorns ; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them :^a Vulg. Alia autem ceciderunt in spinas.

As at present, so also in the time of our Saviour, the natural fertility of the land of Palestine is shown, if by nothing else, at least by its thorns. Ages of misrule and oppression and neglect have not sufficed to eradicate all traces of its marvellous productiveness. This, as in the human heart, so in the land, is shown by its power to produce a crop of good or evil. The thorns are here described as springing up (ἀνέβησαν), perhaps before the seed, or higher than the seed, and so choking it. The stems of the corn, dwarfed at first by the withdrawal of nourishment from their roots, and then shaded from the light and air, soon dwindle and die from want of the proper nutriment.

Only one part out of the four that are sown brings forth fruit. This He divides into three, to show the different degrees of fruitfulness that may exist in different parts of the same crop. This difference in productiveness may arise either from the nature of the soil, or from a difference in the cultivation of it.

8. But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixty-fold, some thirtyfold.

Vulg. Alia autem ceciderunt in terram bonam : et dabant fructum, aliud centesimum, aliud sexagesimum, aliud trigesimum.

9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

S^c. V. omit to hear.

Vulg. Qui habet aures audiendi, audiat.

That His words had a meaning beyond what they appeared to have, Jesus shows by His use of His own formula on such occasions, which implies that more than the usual power to discern is here required. In answer to the inquiry of His disciples He also shows why He employs this form of speaking.

JESUS INTERPRETS THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

S. MATTHEW xiii. 10-23.

S. MARK iv. 10-20.

S. LUKE viii. 9-15.

10 And the disciples came,
and said unto Him, Why
speakest Thou unto them in parables?
11 He answered and said unto them,
Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries
of the kingdom of heaven,
but to them it is not given.

10 And when He was alone, they that were about Him with the Twelve asked of Him the parable.
11 And He said unto them,
Unto you it is given
to know the mystery
of the kingdom of God :
but unto them that are without,
all these things are done in parables :

9 And His disciples
asked Him, saying,
What might this parable be?
10 And He said,
Unto you it is given
to know the mysteries
of the kingdom of God :
but to others
in parables ;

12 For whosoever hath, to him shall be given,

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiii. 4 ; vol. viii. p. 275.

^a And the thorns sprung up, and choked them.—“ Four hours together this day we travelled through fields of weeds, briars, and thorns, such as we never saw anywhere else. Sometimes the weeds were as plentiful and stronger than the barley amongst which they grew. Often there was nothing but weeds . . . The variety of thistles was very great. We counted ten or eleven different species in the course of the afternoon. . . .

“ We were traversing the vast plain of Esdraelon, the greater part of which is covered over with almost impenetrable thickets of weeds, thorns, briars, and thistles . . . ‘Briars and thorns’ include all kinds of thorny growth, whether the common brier, or the thorn, or the thistle ; perhaps it might take in even the prickly pear, now so common as a hedge throughout the country.”—“ Mission to the Jews from Scotland,” 1839, pp. 117, 119.

S. MATTHEW xiii.

S. MARK iv.

S. LUKE viii.

and he shall have more abundance :
but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

13 Therefore speak I to them in parables :
because they seeing see not ;

and hearing

they hear not, neither do they understand.

14 And in them is fulfilled
the prophecy of Esaias, which saith,
"By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand ; and seeing ye shall see,
and shall not perceive :

15 for this people's heart is waxed gross,
and their ears are dull of hearing,
and their eyes they have closed ;
lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears,
and should understand with their heart,
and should be converted, and I should heal them."

16 But blessed are your eyes, for they see :
and your ears, for they hear.

17 For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see,
and have not seen them ;
and to hear those things which ye hear,
and have not heard them.

18 Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19 When any one heareth
the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not,

then cometh the wicked one,
and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart.

This is he which received seed by the way side.

20 But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon
with joy receiveth it :

21 yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth
for a while ;

for when tribulation
or persecution ariseth
because of the word,
by and by he is offended.

22 He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth
the word ;

and the care of this world,
and the deceitfulness of riches,

12 that seeing they may see, and not perceive ;
and hearing

they may hear, and not understand ;
lest at any time they should be converted,
and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And He said unto them, Know ye not this parable ? and how then will ye know all parables ?

14 The sower soweth the word.

15 And these are they
by the way side,
where the word is sown ;

but when they have heard,

Satan cometh immediately,
and taketh away the word
that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground ; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness ;

17 and have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time ;
afterward,
when affliction
or persecution ariseth
for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown
among thorns ;
such as hear
the word,

19 and the cares of this world,
and the deceitfulness of riches,

that seeing
they might not see,
and hearing
they might not understand.

11 Now the parable is this :
The seed is the word of God.

12 Those
by the way side
are they that hear ;

then cometh the devil,
and taketh away the word
out of their hearts,
lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They
on the rock and there, which, when they hear,
receive the word with joy ;
which
for a while believe,
and in time of temptation

14 fall away.
And that which fell among thorns are they,
which, when they have heard,
go forth,
and are choked with cares and riches

S. MATTHEW xiii.

23 choke the word, and
 he becometh unfruitful.
 But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word,

 and understandeth it;
 which also beareth fruit,
 and bringeth forth,
 some an hundredfold,
 some sixty, some thirty.

S. MARK iv.

 and the lusts of other things entering in,
 choke the word, and
 it becometh unfruitful.
 20 And these are they which are sown
 on good ground;
 such as hear the word,

 and receive it,
 and bring forth fruit,

 some thirtyfold, some sixty,
 and some an hundred.

S. LUKE viii.

 and pleasures of this life,

 and
 bring no fruit to perfection.
 But that on the good ground are they, which
 in an honest and good heart, having heard the word,
 keep it,
 and bring forth fruit
 with patience.

10. And the disciples came, and said unto Him, Why speakest Thou unto them in parables?

11. He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

S. omits unto them.

Vulg. Qui respondens ait illis.

12. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

Vulg. Qui enim habet, dabitur ei, et abundabit: qui autem non habet, et quod habet auferetur ab eo.

13. Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand.

Vulg. quia videntes non vident, et audientes non audiunt, neque intelligunt.

To understand the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, or the Gospel dispensation, was the gift of God, but it was given according to certain fixed laws or general rules. To the Apostles it had already been given to understand these mysteries, but to the people it had not. As yet they were incapable of receiving them. Some, from want of faith in Jesus, would despise and ridicule them; others, from want of knowledge, would fail to understand them.

Every new gift of God is given in the way of reward, as the natural fruit on the right use of former gifts. Those who had not obeyed God under the Old dispensation, could not receive the New. To them it was not given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. Those who had despised the preaching of the Baptist, could not receive the teaching of Jesus. There was a regular gradation in God's gifts, and also in their power to apprehend them.

His teaching by parables was another instance of the same system of giving more, in proportion as the former gift was improved. Among the crowds who listened to Him, some, like the Scribes and Pharisees, who were acting in disbelief of His miracles against the clearest evidence, would by His teaching receive only a confirmation of their former resolution, of their former blindness, hardness, and unbelief. The good which they once had, the power to appreciate Him and His mysteries, would gradually be taken away from them. The patient souls among them, who were striving to do what they knew to be right, would receive even from these parables, dark as they appeared, additional light and instruction; they would be led on to a fuller knowledge of the mysteries of His kingdom. Nor had this state of things come upon them unexpectedly. The prophet Isaiah had long ago foretold it.

14. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith,

"By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand;
 and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive:

15.

For this people's heart is waxed gross,
 and their ears are dull of hearing,
 and their eyes they have closed;
 lest at any time they should see with their eyes,
 and hear with their ears,
 and should understand with their heart,
 and should be converted, and I should heal them."

S.V. And by them is fulfilled.

Vulg. Et adimpletur in eis prophetia Isaie dicentis.

The Evangelist quotes this prophecy of Isaiah from the Septuagint. In the Hebrew it is expressed imperatively, and God is represented as bidding the prophet "make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes" (Isaiah vi. 10). God may be said to harden men's hearts, and close their eyes, when, in punishment for their sin, He deserts them, and gives them over to their own wicked inclinations. Man may be said to harden his own heart, and to close his own ears, when he refuses to obey God's commands.

After describing the blessedness of the Apostles, in the privilege which they enjoyed in seeing the things which they saw, and, it may be, also on their right use of this privilege, Jesus proceeds to explain the parable of the sower.

16. But blessed are your eyes, for they see : and your ears, for they hear.

17. For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them ; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

S. omits For.
Vulg. Amen quippe dicis vobis.

18. ¶ Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the way side.

In this parable, the word "sown" is applied both to the seed and to the land. The seed is sown and the land is sown ; the word is sown and the hearer is sown.

* But he that received the seed into stony places.—"In the explanation of the parable of the sower in S. Mark iv. 16, οὗ ἐν τῇ τῇ περὶ τὴν σπείρουσαν is properly translated 'they which are sown on stony ground,' and the corresponding expressions are treated similarly ; but in S. Matthew xiii. 20, ὁ ἐν τῇ τῇ περὶ τὴν σπείρουσαν becomes, 'He that received the seed into stony places,' where (besides minor variations) the person is substituted for the seed, and the corresponding expressions throughout the parable are manipulated similarly in defiance of grammar. This rendering is unhappy on many accounts. Besides making the Evangelists say different things, it has the still further disadvantage, that it destroys one main idea in the parable, the identification (for the purposes of the parable) of the sower with the person himself, so that the life and growth and decay of the one are coincident with the life and growth and decay of the other. The form of expression in S. Luke (viii. 14, τὸ δὲ ἐς τὰς ἀνθρώπων καρδίας οὐκ ἐκείνους) brings out this identity more prominently ; but it is expressed not obscurely in the other Evangelists, and should not have been obliterated by our translators in one of them by an ungrammatical paraphrase."—CAXON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 48.

† And anon with joy.—"In Biblical language neither of the expressions instantly and by and signifies what it would signify to ourselves. Instantly has not a temporal sense at all, but means 'urgently,' as in Luke vii. 4, 'They besought Him instantly' (σπουδαίως) ; while, on the other hand, by and signifies a tem-

The word "understandeth" (συνείητος) evidently implies to understand its meaning so fully as to realize its value. Its importance being underrated, it takes but slight hold on the affections, and the devil meets with little or no opposition in his attempt to steal it away. This class of hearers includes all those whose minds, like the beaten highway, are hard, impenetrable, inaccessible to conviction ; the thoughtless and trifling, who are entirely taken up with the concerns of this present life.

Seed sown on the highway seldom or never takes root, and brings forth fruit. It lies exposed and unguarded from all accident. The sun burns it, the frost bites it, the wind disperses it, the rain washes it away, the foot of the passenger tramples on it, and the birds of the air carry it off. It is almost an utter impossibility for seed in this state to bear fruit. So the word, even uttered by the lips of the Son of Man Himself, unless it be understood, will not even take root, much less spring up and bear fruit.

20. But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy^b receiveth it ;

Vulg. Qui autem super petrosa seminatus est.

21. Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while : for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended.

The expression "stony places" (τὰ περὶ τὴν) does not mean stones scattered among the soil, but places with a stony or rocky bottom, and covered with but a sprinkling of soil.

The second class of hearers goes further than the first. The former neglected the word altogether ; these receive the seed with joy, and it soon begins to show forth life, but having no poral sense, denotes not deferred but immediate action, standing most frequently for εὐθύς or εὐθέως, and therefore corresponding to the modern sense of instantly. Thus in the Greek of the parable of the sower the instantaneous welcome of the word has its counterpart in the instantaneous apostasy under persecution (Matt. xiii. 20, 21), εὐθύς μετὰ χαρίος λαυβάνων αὐτόν, εὐθύς παραδίδίχαί : but in the English Version this appears, 'Anon with joy receiveth it,' 'By and by he is offended,' where partly through the archaisms and partly through the change of words the expressiveness of the original is blunted.

"The last passage contains another archaism, which is a type of a whole class. Words derived from the Latin and other foreign languages being comparatively recent had very frequently not arrived at their ultimate sense when our Version was made, and were more liable to shift their meaning than others. We have witnessed this phenomenon in instantly, and the same was also the case with offend, offence. 'If thy right eye offend thee,' 'Woe unto him through whom the offences come,' do not convey to any but the educated reader the idea which they were intended to express. By substituting 'cause to offend' (or perhaps 'cause to stumble' or 'to fall') for offend, we may in passages where the verb occurs bring out the idea more clearly ; but in the case of the substantive the right of prescription and the difficulty of finding an equivalent may plead for the retention of the word."—Ibid., p. 176.

root, no deep knowledge of God and of His holiness, of sin and of man's fallen condition, when tribulation or persecution for the word ariseth, they are offended and fall away.

22. He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

S.V. of the world.

Vulg. et sollicitudo seculi istius.

This class of hearers is better than the former, in proportion as seed is more likely to grow among thorns than on the rock.

We here learn in what light worldly cares, riches, and pleasures are held in the sight of God. He describes them as thorns, and their effect as choking the good seed. It is singular that our Saviour places riches in the midst between cares and pleasures. Cares go before the getting of riches, and when gained they draw men into pleasures and indulgences, thus wounding the soul on both sides.

Of the four parts that are sown, three fail to bring forth any fruit at all; the fourth brings forth fruit, but in three very unequal degrees.

23. But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty.

Vulg. Et fructum affert, et facit aliud quidem centesimum, aliud autem sexagesimum, aliud vero trigessimum.

Many different interpretations have been offered of the hundredfold, the sixty, and the thirty. Some¹ have supposed that these terms indicate the different degrees of fruit that different classes bear, or that men in different conditions of life bear; those in the more self-denying, as in the virgin state, bringing forth an hundredfold, and those in a less self-denying state bringing forth the sixty and the thirtyfold. Others have thought that they merely indicate the different degrees of fruit which different individuals in the same condition will bring forth.

The second parable is that of the field sown with wheat and tares, the object of which is to show that the Church, so long as it is militant, will always contain in it a mixture of good and bad, and that this is by the permission of God, and is not inconsistent with an absolute and eternal separation of them hereafter.

S. Matthew alone records this parable, verses 24-30.

24. ¶ Another parable put He forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field :

25. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way.

Vulg. et superseminavit zizaniam in medio tritici, et abiit.

26. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.

27. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?

S. the tares.

28. He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?

The servants : V. They : S.V. say.

Vulg. Et ait illis : Inimicus homo hoc fecit. Servi autem dixerunt ei.

29. But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them.

S.V. saith.

Vulg. Et ait.

30. Let both grow together until the harvest : and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them : but gather the wheat into my barn.

The comparison here made is not between the "kingdom of heaven" and a man who sowed good seed in his field, but between "the kingdom of heaven" and what takes place when a man sows good seed in his field, and when his enemy comes and sows tares among the wheat.

Modern travellers testify that, with respect to many of the particulars here mentioned, it is the same now as it was in the days of our Saviour. The wheat and the tares, until they bear fruit, are just as difficult to be distinguished now as they were then. The roots of the one are so intermingled with those of the other, that it is still impossible to gather up the tares without rooting up the wheat with them, and it is therefore never attempted. In one point here mentioned a change has taken place, if not in the East generally, at least in Palestine. A man now seldom shows his malice by sowing his enemy's field with tares. So rare is this, that residents in Palestine for more than twenty years have never heard of it, and question whether it is ever practised.

The third parable is that of the grain of mustard-seed, and is related by S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke. The object of it is to show the comparative insignificance of the Church in its beginning, the extent to which it will grow, and the shelter and protection it will afford to multitudes of God's creatures.

¹ S. Cyprian, de Habitu Virginum, xxi. p. 460.

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. i. 9; vol. iii. p. 1325.

de Virginit. 46; vol. vi. p. 424.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xiii. 23; vol. vii. p. 89.

S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 3; vol. ii. p. 213.

S. Thomas Aquinas, i. 2, quæst. 70, art. 3; vol. ii. p. 528.

S. Athanasius, Epist. ad Amunem; vol. ii. p. 1173.

S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio xxvi. (alias xxviii.); vol. i. p. 1233.

THE PARABLE OF THE MUSTARD SEED, AND OF THE LEAVEN.

S. MATTHEW xiii. 31-35.

S. MARK iv. 30-34.

S. LUKE xiii. 18-21.

31 Another parable put He forth unto them, saying,

30 And He said,
Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God?

18 Then said He,
Unto what is the kingdom of God like?

or with what comparison shall we compare it?
31 It is like

and whereunto shall I resemble it?
19 It is like

a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

which a man took, and cast into his garden;

32 but when it is sown, it groweth up,
and becometh greater than all herbs,
and shooteth out great branches;
so that the fowls of the air
may lodge under the shadow of it.

and it grew
and waxed a great tree;
and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

33 Another parable spake He unto them;

20 And again He said,
Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven,
which a woman took,
and hid in three measures of meal,
till the whole was leavened.

21 It is like leaven,
which a woman took
and hid in three measures of meal,
till the whole was leavened.

34 All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables;

33 And with many such parables spake He the word unto them,
as they were able to hear it.

34 But without a parable spake He not unto them;

and without a parable spake He not
unto them;

35 that it might be fulfilled which was spoken

by the prophet, saying, "I will open My mouth in parables;

I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world."

and when they were alone, He expounded all things to His disciples.

31. ¶ Another parable put He forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field:

32. Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree,* so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

* And becometh a tree.—"There was a stalk of mustard in Sichin, from which sprang out three boughs, of which one was broke off, and covered the tent of a potter, and produced three cables of mustard. R. Simeon ben Calapha said, 'A stalk of mustard was in my field, into which I was wont to climb, as men are wont to climb into a fig-tree' (Hieros Peah, fol. 20, 2)."—LIGHTFOOT on Matthew xiii. 32; vol. ii. p. 195.

"We met with Lord Claud Hamilton this morning; and obtained from him some information regarding Petra and Sinai. . . . In Upper Egypt he saw a mustard-tree higher than he could reach, and its stem as thick as his arm."—"Mission to the Jews from Scotland," 1839, p. 138.

"I have seen this plant (wild mustard) on the rich plain of Akkâr as tall as the horse and his rider. It has occurred to me on former visits that the mustard-tree of the parable probably grew at this spot, or possibly at Tabiga, near Capernaum, for the water in both is somewhat similar, and so are the vegetable productions. To furnish an adequate basis for the proverb, it is necessary to suppose that a variety of it was cultivated in the time of our Saviour, which grew to an enormous size, and shot forth large branches, so that the fowls of the air could lodge in the branches of it. It may have been perennial, and have grown to a considerable tree, and there are traditions in the country of such so large that a man could climb into them; and after having seen red pepper bushes grow on, year after year, into tall shrubs, and the castor bean line the brooks about Damascus like the willows and the poplars, I can readily credit the existence of mustard-trees large enough to meet all the demands of our Lord's parable.

"Irby and Mangles, going from the south end of the Dead Sea to Kerak, found a tree in great abundance, which had a berry growing in clusters like currants, and with the colour of a plum. The taste was pleasant, though strongly aromatic, and closely resembled that of mustard; and if taken in considerable quantity, it had precisely the same effects as mustard. The leaves had the same pungent flavour as the seed, although not so strong. They think this is the tree of the parable, and it may be so. They give Lightfoot shows from the Rabbinical writings, that the mustard-seed had passed into a proverbial expression for the smallest of all things. It may not be the smallest of all seeds absolutely; but it is the smallest of all that afterwards grow to such a size.

The point of difficulty in this parable is not to see how the kingdom of heaven in its rise, and in its future progress, is like to a mustard-seed, which grew into a tree, so that the birds of the air came and lodged in the branches of it; but rather to believe that the mustard-seed ever grows into such a tree. Do our Saviour's words imply that the normal growth of the mustard-seed is to become a tree, or does this apply only to the special grain of mustard-seed, to which He compares the kingdom of heaven? It may be that this was an unusual and exceptional case, and that the improbability that the mustard-seed would become a tree enters largely into the comparison; and that His words mean, that the beginning and the future growth of the kingdom of heaven, or of the Church of Christ, would be more marvellous than anything in nature, as wonderful as if a mustard-seed should become a tree, so that the birds of the air should come and lodge in the branches thereof. The objection to this interpretation is that our Saviour's words are not expressed in this hypothetical form.

Travellers, it is true, speak of mustard-trees of large size, but scarcely of trees large enough or common enough for a satisfactory explanation of this passage in its plain, literal, historical sense. Not only do the words of the Evangelists imply that it is a tree of large, perhaps very large size; but the very nature of the comparison requires that this should be the case. S. Matthew says, it "becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." S. Mark says, that it "shooteth out great branches, so that the fowls of the air may (δυνασθαι) lodge under the shadow of it;" and S. Luke says, "it waxed a great tree," &c.

The fourth parable is that of the leaven hid in three measures of meal, related by S. Matthew and S. Luke. The object of this is to show the power of the Gospel to affect and assimilate to its own nature everything that comes within reach of its influence.

33. ¶ Another parable spake He unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal,^a till the whole was leavened.

S. spake He unto them, saying.
Vulg. omits saying.

"Three measures of meal" is probably used as being the usual quantity for an ordinary baking. So Abraham bids Sarah make ready "three measures of fine meal, and knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth" (Gen. xviii. 6). Here it represents the world. Thus a woman who takes leaven and hides it in three measures of meal, and the effects that follow, represent the kingdom of heaven in its relation to the world, or the power of the Church of Christ over the world. The process is carried on in silence, unobserved; the influence of the leaven secretly penetrates the meal, till the whole is leavened, till the whole is reduced to the condition required for its proper use. No power has yet been found equal to the task of reforming the world, of regenerating society, but the Gospel of Jesus. Some of the ancient writers¹ interpreted the woman of the Church, and the three measures of meal of the three sons of Noah—Shem, Ham, and Japheth, who were the representatives of Asia, Africa, and Europe, the three then known quarters of the earth. Others² explained the no name to this remarkable plant, but it well deserves a more careful and scientific examination. At any rate, I should not be surprised to find in some such locality a mustard plant which, when grown, 'is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.'—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 414.

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo cxi. (alias 32 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 641.

^a Hid in three measures of meal.—"In our translation the treatment of measures is extremely loose. The μετρητής indeed is fairly rendered 'firkin' in John ii. 6; and the modius appears as 'bushel' (Matt. v. 15; Mark iv. 21; Luke xi. 33), where the English measure, though greatly in excess of the Latin, which is about a peck, may nevertheless remain undisturbed, since nothing depends on exactness. With these exceptions, the one word 'measure' is made to do duty for all the terms which occur in the original. Thus in Rev. vi. 6, already quoted, it stands for a χοῖνιξ, something under a quart; and in other passages it represents not less than three Hebrew measures,—the σάτον or seah (Matt. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 21), the βάτος, the bath or ephah, and the κόρος, the cor or homer (both in Luke xvi. 6, 7), though the seah is one-third of the bath, and the bath one-tenth of the cor. In the former of these two passages from the Gospels accuracy is unimportant, for the 'three measures of meal' in the parable will tell their tale equally, whatever may be the contents of the measure; though even here we may regret that our translators deserted the more precise 'peck,' which they found in some of the older versions. But in Luke xvi. 6, 7, where the bath and the cor are mentioned in the same context, they should certainly be distinguished. The κόρος σάτον might very well be rendered 'quarters of wheat' with Tyndale and several of the older versions. For the βάτοι ἐλαίου it is more difficult to find an equivalent. Wycliffe renders βάτους by 'barrels'; the Rheims Version by 'pipes.' In Rev. vi. 6, it is still more important to aim at precision, because the extremity of the famine only appears when the proper relation between the measure and the price is preserved. Here χοῖνιξ might very well be translated 'a quart.'—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 168.

² S. Ambrose, in Luc. xiii. 20; vol. ii. p. 1750.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xiii. 33; vol. vii. p. 91.

Theophylact, in Matt. xiii. 33; vol. i. p. 68.

three measures of the three parts of the individual man—body, soul, and spirit.

34. All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake He not unto them :

Not: S.V. nothing.
Vulg. et sine parabolis non loquebatur eis.

35. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet,* saying,

"I will open My mouth in parables;
I will utter things which have been kept secret
from the foundation of the world."

S*. Esaias the prophet; S*.V. omit of the world.
Vulg. Ut impleretur quod dictum erat per prophetam dicentem ... eructabo abscondita a constitutione mundi.

Jesus had already given several reasons why He spake unto the people in parables, and He now adds another, that He might fulfil the prophecies which the prophet had of old delivered respecting Him. The quotation is from Psalm lxxviii. 2, and is according to the Septuagint translation. The Psalmist is recounting the mercies of God towards His people Israel, and he says he will speak unto them in parables, and he then goes on to recount the mercies which God showed to His people Israel. These were historical facts well known to everyone who had studied the history of the children of Israel, and they were probably called parables because, though they were events already past, they prefigured other things that were still to come.¹

When He had dismissed the multitudes, He returned to the house which He had left in the morning, and there in private He explained to His disciples the parable of the sower.

S. Matthew alone contains the following verses 36-53.

36. Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and His disciples came unto Him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.^b

S.V. Then He sent: S. and entered into.
Vulg. Tunc dimissis turbis, venit in domum.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lii. p. 414.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xiii. 35; vol. i. p. 190.

^a Which was spoken by the prophet.—"Jerome observes that in the third century Porphyry, the antagonist of Christianity, had found fault with the Evangelist Matthew for having said, 'which was spoken by the prophet Esaias.' A writing of the second century had already witnessed to the same reading; but Jerome adds further that well-informed men had long ago removed the name of

37. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man;

S.V. omit unto them.
Vulg. Qui respondens, ait illis.

38. The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one;

39. The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels.

40. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.

S.V. of the world.
Vulg. sic erit in consummatione sæculi.

41. The Son of Man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity;

Margin, scandals.
S. the angels.
Vulg. Mittet Filius hominis angelos suos, et colligent de regno ejus omnia scandala.

42. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

S*. And they cast them.

43. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

S*.V. omit to hear.
Vulg. Qui habet aures audiendi, audiat.

Jesus had just delivered four parables, and His disciples ask Him to explain one of them, probably because it was the one which they least understood, and partly perhaps because it alone contained fearful threatenings of future judgment.

He that soweth good seed is the Son of Man, Jesus the Son of Mary. He purchased the Church, and purified it with His own blood. He is the Head of the Church, the Sower of the good seed. He sowed this seed Himself during the three years of His ministry; He sowed it by His Apostles and their successors, and by His written word.

He here speaks of the Church as co-extensive with the world. "The field is the world." Before the field is sown

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiii. 34; vol. viii. p. 285.

Esaias. Among all our MSS. of a thousand years old and upwards, there is not a solitary example containing the name of Esaias in the text referred to—except the Sinaitic, to which a few of less than a thousand years old may be added."—DEAN BURTON, "On the last Twelve Verses of S. Mark," p. 111.

^b See note on Matt. xiv. 14.

with the good seed, it is the world; after it is thus sown, it becomes the Church. It was necessary that the field or the world should be sown with good seed, in order that it might become the Church; it was not necessary that the enemy should sow it over with tares, but he did so. This is declared by our Saviour and confirmed by our bitter experience. The tares include both men who hold heretical doctrines and men who, holding the true faith of the Church, lead wicked lives.¹

In parables we are not to look for a close application of every single expression, but rather for the general illustration of the lesson which it was intended to teach. Thus the good seed are here called "the children of the kingdom," and not, as we might have expected, that which produces or gives life to the children of the kingdom.

The principal points in the parable are, that in the Church—the field when sown—the good and bad grow up together; that the one are the children of the Son of Man, and the other the children of His enemy the devil; that this mixture of good and bad is permitted by God, and will continue until the day of judgment; that then a distinction will be made, a perfect and final separation, the good for reward and glory, the bad for punishment.

Our Saviour does not by this parable forbid the exercise of discipline in the Church, in the case of individual offenders. This would be contrary to His own teaching elsewhere, and to the teaching and practice of the Apostles. S. Paul's action with respect to the incestuous Corinthian (1 Cor. v.) clearly forbids this interpretation of the parable. His object was to teach that a mixture of good and bad would be the normal condition of the Church until the day of judgment, when this would be rectified; that this was permitted by God, and that any attempt to remedy this state of things by eliminating all the bad would be premature, contrary to the arrangement ordained by God, and would end in failure.

Some² have thought that the words "bind them in bundles to burn them," imply that those who have committed like crimes will be punished with like punishment, and different crimes with different degrees of punishment.

In the four preceding parables³—namely, that of the sower, the wheat and the tares, the mustard seed, and the leaven—Jesus describes the nature of the Gospel, its power and efficacy among men. In the two following parables, those of the hid treasure and the merchantman seeking pearls, He shows its inestimable value; and in the last parable, that of the net cast into the sea, He shows the comprehensiveness of the Gospel dispensation. Unlike the Old dispensation, which was limited to the Jewish nation, the kingdom of Christ was intended to contain all nations.

44. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field;^a the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

S.V. omit Again: V. omits all.

Vulg. omits Again et vendit universa quæ habet.

45. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls:

S.V. omit man.

Vulg. homini negotiatori.

46. Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.

S.V. But when he.

Vulg. Inventa autem una pretiosa margarita, abiit.

In the parable of the merchantman seeking pearls the expression is peculiar. We should have expected that the kingdom of heaven would be compared to a pearl of great price, while it is compared to a merchantman who buys the pearl. He thus teaches us what eagerness we are to use to gain a knowledge of Him the Saviour, and of His Death and Passion: we are to seek it with as much zeal and eagerness as the merchantman seeks to acquire the precious pearl which he finds. As he sells all to gain the pearl, so we should part with all to gain the knowledge of Christ and of His Gospel.⁴

47. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind:

¹ S. Augustine, Quæst. in Matt. xi.; vol. iii. p. 1367.

Retract. ii. 28; vol. i. p. 642.

² S. Gregory Magnus, Dialog. iv. 35; vol. iii. p. 381.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlviii.; vol. ii. p. 21.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xiii. 1, &c.; vol. i. p. 994.

^a Treasure hid in a field.—"It is not difficult to account for this hid treasure. This country has always been subject to revolutions, invasions, and calamities of various kinds, and hence a feeling of insecurity hovers over the land like a dismal spectre. The Government robs, and so do the nobility and the clergy; Arabs rush in from the desert and plunder; warriors and conquerors from every part of the world sweep over the land, carrying everything away that falls into their hands. Then there are, and always have been, intestine commotions and wars, such as hid Lebanon in ruins in 1841, and again in 1845. At such times multitudes bury their Maldonatus, in Matt. xiii. 31; vol. i. p. 189.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiii. 44; vol. viii. p. 287.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xiii. 45; vol. vii. p. 94.

S. Augustine, in Matt. quæst. xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1371.

Theophylact, in Matt. xiii. 45; vol. i. p. 70.

gold and jewels, and in many cases the owners are killed, and no one knows where the treasure was concealed. Then, again, this country has ever been subject to earthquakes, which bury everything beneath her ruined cities. . . . We need not be surprised, therefore, to find that this country abounds, and ever has abounded, in hid treasure. No custom can be found among any people so firmly rooted as this, of searching for hid treasure, without some real foundation for it. Lay this aside as a rule, which may be safely applied on all occasions and to all questions."—THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 136.

48. Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.

49. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just,

50. And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

S. And they cast them.
Vulg. Et mittent eos in cinerum ignis.

The parable of the net teaches the comprehensive nature of the Church of Christ, which is not confined to one nation, but formed to embrace men of all nations. The fishers with the net take in fish of every kind. When the net was full, they drew to shore and separated the fish, not into their various kinds of fish, but into two divisions only, into good and bad. So the Church takes in men of every nation under heaven, but at the day of judgment these will be divided, not into nationalities, or into Jews and Gentiles, but into good and bad. The good will be gathered into the many mansions prepared for them, and the bad will be cast into the furnace of fire.

With the explanation which He had given, the disciples understood the parables, not perhaps in the fulness in which they afterwards understood them; but they comprehended their meaning sufficiently to satisfy their present capacity to understand them.

51. Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto Him, Yea, Lord.

S.V. omit Jesus saith unto them: S.V. omit Lord.
Vulg. omits Jesus saith unto them—omits Lord.

52. Then said He unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

The Scribes instructed unto the kingdom of heaven are the Apostles themselves. On their reply that they had understood His parables, He compares them to, and thus bids them act like, a householder that brings out of his storehouse, as required, the fruits of the present year, and the fruits of former years, that had been stored up. As applied to the Apostles the things new (καινα) and old (παλαια) might refer to God's revelations with respect to the New and Old dispensations. Out of this storehouse of truth they were to adapt, as He had done, their instruction to suit the capacity of their hearers.¹

After Jesus had finished these parables, He departed and went into Nazareth, here called His own country, not because He had been born in it, but because He had been brought up in it until He was thirty years of age.²

Many³ think that this was His visit to Nazareth when the inhabitants, exasperated at His teaching, endeavoured to cast Him headlong from the brow of the hill on which their city was built, which is recorded only by S. Luke (iv. 29). Others⁴ think that this outrageous attempt was made not on this visit, but on an earlier one.

The account which S. Luke gives of Jesus and of His teaching at Nazareth, when the inhabitants attempted to cast Him down headlong from the hill, exhibits many points of agreement, even of verbal agreement, with S. Matthew's narration in this passage. They represent Him to be teaching in the same place and on the same day of the week, in the synagogue and on the Sabbath-day. It need not have been on the Sabbath-day, because it was in the synagogue; for, as Lightfoot shows, there were two synagogue days in the week besides the Sabbath.⁵ If S. Matthew here, and S. Mark vi. 1, and S. Luke iv. 16-30, are not describing portions of the same transaction, then S. Matthew and S. Mark give nowhere any lengthened account of His visit to Nazareth, when the inhabitants endeavoured to hurl Him headlong from the hill; and, in like manner, S. Luke will give no account of this His visit to Nazareth.

An inspection of these three narrations of S. Matthew here, S. Mark vi. 1, and of S. Luke iv. 16-30, placed side by side, may help to show that these are three independent accounts of the same transaction, but not of the same portions of the transaction. The same principle of interpretation which reconciles so many of the apparent discrepancies between the Evangelists must be applied here; namely, that the Evangelists sometimes all relate the same parts of the

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlvii.; vol. ii. p. 23.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xiii. 52; vol. i. p. 996.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xiii. 52; vol. vii. p. 95.

S. Augustine, in Matt. quæst. xvi.; vol. iii. p. 1374.

Venerable Bede, in Matt. xiii. 52; vol. iii. p. 70.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. xiii. 54; vol. vii. p. 96.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlviii.; vol. ii. p. 27.

S. Cyril Alex., in Matt. xiii. 54; vol. v. p. 416.

Theophylact, in Matt. xiii. 54; vol. i. p. 71.

Euthymius, in Matt. xiii. 53; vol. i. p. 561.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 42; vol. iii. p. 1120.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. liv. p. 419.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xiii. 54; vol. i. p. 193.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiii. 54; vol. viii. p. 289.

Dean Alford, Greek Testament, Luke iv. 16.

⁴ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xvii. and xliii.; vol. i. pp. 215 and 233.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 40.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. 22 and 56.

Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, Luke iv. 30.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 22 and 189.

Stroud, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. cxxxix.

⁵ Lightfoot, Harmony of the Four Evangelists, Luke iv. 15; vol. i. p. 610.

same transactions, and sometimes one relates one portion of it, and another Evangelist a different one. Here the chief difference between them is, that S. Matthew and S. Mark say that He taught the people, "insomuch that they were astonished," and expressed their astonishment in various questions. S. Luke says much the same, but in addition he also relates what He taught, the passage of Scripture that He read to them, and His explanation and application of it to Himself. S. Matthew and S. Mark relate, that because of their unbelief, He did there scarcely any mighty works; and, in addition to this, S. Luke relates that He produced from the Old Testament several instances of the punishment of similar unbelief, and that this so exasperated the people in the synagogue, that they strove to hurl Him headlong down a precipice. There is nothing in S. Luke's narrative that is inconsistent with the supposition that he is only giving a fuller account of what happened on the same occasion of His preaching in the synagogue of Nazareth, as S. Matthew is here describing, and S. Mark v. 1, &c.

53. ¶ And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, He departed thence.

JESUS AT NAZARETH.

S. MATTHEW xiii. 54-58.

S. MARK vi. 1-6.

S. LUKE iv. 16-30.

54 And when He was come into His own country,

1 And He went out from thence,
and came into His own country;
and His disciples follow Him.

16 And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up:

He taught them in their synagogue,

2 And when the sabbath day was come,
He began to teach in the synagogue:

and, as His custom was,
He went into the synagogue
on the sabbath day,
and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto Him
the book of the prophet Esaias.

And when He had opened the book,
He found the place where it was written,

18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor;

He hath sent Me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives,
and recovering of sight to the blind,

to set at liberty them that are bruised, 19 to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And He closed the book, and He gave it again to the minister, and sat down.
And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him.

21 And He began to say unto them,
This day

is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth.
And they said,

insomuch that they
were astonished,

and many hearing Him
were astonished,

and said,
Whence hath this Man
this wisdom,

saying,
From whence hath this Man these things?

and these mighty works?

55 Is not this the carpenter's son?
is not His mother called Mary?
and His brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?

3 Is not this the carpenter, the Son of Mary,
the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon?
and are not His sisters here with us?

56 And His sisters, are they not all with us?
Whence then hath this Man all these things?

57 And they were offended in Him.

And they were offended at Him.

Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And He said unto them,
Ye will surely say unto Me
this proverb, Physician, heal Thyself:
whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in Thy country.

24 And He said, Verily I say unto you,

But Jesus said unto them,

4 But Jesus said unto them,

S. MATTHEW xiii.

S. MARK vi.

S. LUKE iv.

A prophet is not without honour,
save in his own country,
and in his own house.

A prophet is not without honour,
but in his own country,
and among his own kin,
and in his own house.

No prophet is accepted
in his own country.

58 And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

5 And He could there do no mighty work,
save that He laid His hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.
6 And He marvelled
because of their unbelief.

25 But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath,

29 And rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong.

30 But He passing through the midst of them went His way.

54. And when He was come into His own country, He taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this Man this wisdom, and these mighty works?

Vulg. Unde hinc sapientia hæc et virtutes.

55. Is not this the carpenter's son? ^a is not His mother called Mary? and His brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? ^b

Joses: S. John, V. Joseph.

Vulg. Joseph.

56. And His sisters, are they not all with us?
Whence then hath this Man all these things?

^a Is not this the carpenter's son?—Among other things to be performed by the father for his son, this was one, to bring him up in some art or trade. 'It is incumbent on the father to circumcise his son, to redeem him, to teach him the Law, and to teach him some occupation' (Tosapht in Kiddush, cap. 1). R. Judah saith, 'Whosoever teacheth not his son to do some work, is as if he taught him robbery.' R. Meir, 'Let a man endeavour to teach his son an honest trade,' &c. Joseph instructs and brings up Christ in his carpenter's trade.—LIGHTFOOT on Mark vi. 3; vol. ii. p. 343.

^b All have been struck, I suppose, with S. Mark's proneness to substitute some expression of his own for what he found in the Gospel of his predecessor S. Matthew, or, when he anticipates something which is afterwards met with in the Gospel of S. Luke, his aptness to deliver it in language entirely independent of the later Evangelist. I allude, for instance, to his substitution of ἐπιβαλὼν ἐκλαίει (xiv. 72) for S. Matthew's ἐκλαύσε πικρῶς (xxvi. 75); and of ὁ τέκτων (vi. 3) for ὁ τοῦ τέκτονος υἱός (S. Matt. xiii. 55).
'The woman of Canaan' in S. Matthew's Gospel (γυνὴ Χανααν), ch. xv. 22) is called 'a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation,' in
S. Mark's (Ἑλληνίς, Συροφονισσα τῇ γένει, ch. vii. 26). At the Baptism, instead of the 'opened heavens' of S. Matthew (ἀνεῳχθῆσαν, ch. iii. 16) and S. Luke (ἀνεῳχθῆναι, ch. iii. 22), we are presented by S. Mark with the striking image of the heavens 'cleaving' or 'being rent asunder' (σχιζομένους, ch. i. 10). What S. Matthew calls τὰ ὄρια Μαργαρίτα (ch. xv. 33), S. Mark designates as τὰ ὅρια Δαλιμανθῆ (ch. vii. 10). In place of S. Matthew's ὕλην Σαδδουκαίων (ch. xvi. 6) S. Mark has ὕλην Ἡρώδου (ch. viii. 15).
In describing the visit to Jericho, for the δύο τυφλοὶ of S. Matt.

(ch. xx. 29), S. Mark gives υἱὸς Τιμαῖον Βαπτίσματος ὁ τυφλὸς . . .
προσαϊτῶν (ch. x. 46). For the κλάδους of S. Matt. xvi. 8,
S. Mark (xi. 8) has σποιβάδας; and for the other's πρὶν ἀλέκτορα φῶνῃσαι (xxvi. 34) he has πρὶν ἢ δῖς (xiv. 30). It is so throughout.—DEAN BURGON, 'On the last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,'
p. 177.

^b And Judas.—'In the English Version there is the greatest confusion in the forms of the name, Judah, Judas, Juda, Jude.
Thus the patriarch is called both Juda and Judah in the same context (Heb. vii. 14, viii. 8), and Judas and Juda in parallel narratives (Matt. i. 2, 3; Luke iii. 33); and again, the brother of Jesus is called Judas in one Evangelist (Matt. xiii. 55) and Juda in another (Mark vi. 3). The principle of familiarity suggests Jude for the writer of the Epistle; Judah for the patriarch and the tribe and country named from him; and Judas for Iscariot and for the other less known persons bearing the name; while Juda, which occurs for the patriarch or tribe (Luke iii. 33; Heb. vii. 14; Rev. v.
5, vii. 5) and the country (Matt. ii. 6; Luke i. 39), as well as for other unknown persons (Luke iii. 26, 30), ought to disappear wholly. And so far as regards Judah and Judas, it would be well to follow this principle; but when the name is used of the author of the Epistle, though Jude might (if it were thought fit) be retained in the title, yet Judas should be substituted for Jude in the opening verse, so as not to preclude the identification of this person with the Lord's brother (which is highly probable), or again with his namesake in S. Luke's lists of the Apostles (which has commended itself to many).—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of
New Testament,' p. 160.

57. And they were offended in Him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.

S. But He said: V. in his country.
Vulg. Iesus autem dixit eis. Non est propheta sine honore, nisi in patria sua et in domo sua.

58. And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

S. Matthew and S. Mark call Joseph an artisan or craftsman (τέκτων), but do not state the material in which he wrought. Some¹ early writers supposed that he was a worker in iron. But the opinion which has been generally received in the Church is, that he was a carpenter, or a worker in wood.² Some have thought that Jesus also wrought at Joseph's trade until He was thirty years of age, and others, that during those years He led a life of contemplation and communion with His Father.

It is impossible to make out with any degree of certainty who the Lord's brethren were from the names here mentioned. These four names were common to many Jewish families. As already stated, the two opinions as to the Lord's brethren that were the most ancient and the most widely diffused, were either that they were the children of Joseph by a former marriage, or that they were the cousins of our Saviour, and the sons of the Blessed Virgin's sister, Mary the wife of Alphæus. (See comment on S. Matthew xii. 46, p. 223.)

Such was the impiety and unbelief of the inhabitants of Nazareth, that He could not, consistently with the conditions which He usually required, perform many mighty works there.³ S. Matthew says that "He did not," and S. Mark, that "He could not."

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xiii. 55; vol. i. p. 996.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. iii. 23; vol. ii. p. 1589.

Venerable Bede, in Marc. vi. 3; vol. iii. p. 185.

² S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. p. 333.

Sozomen, Hist. Eccles. vi. 2.

S. Chrysostom, as cited by S. Thomas Aquinas in Matt. i.; vol. i. p. 16.

³ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 43, 2; vol. iv. p. 390.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

Herod Antipas.—"About this time Aretas (the king of Arabia Petræa) and Herod had a quarrel, on the account following. Herod the tetrarch had married the daughter of Aretas, and had lived with her a great while: but when he was once at Rome he lodged with Herod, who was his brother indeed, but not by the same mother; for this Herod was the son of the high-priest Simon's daughter. However, he fell in love with Herodias, this last Herod's wife, who was the daughter of Aristobulus their brother, and the sister of Agrippa the Great. This man ventured to talk to her about a marriage between them; which address when she admitted, an agreement was made for her to change her habitation, and come to him as soon as he should return from Rome. One article of this marriage also was this, that he should divorce Aretas's daughter. . . .

"So Aretas made this the first occasion of his enmity between him and Herod, who had also some quarrel with him about their limits at the country of Gamalitis. So they raised armies on both sides, and prepared for war, and sent their generals to fight instead of themselves; and, when they had joined battle, all Herod's army was destroyed by the treachery of some fugitives, who, though they were of the tetrarchy of Philip, joined with Aretas's army. . . .

"Now some of the Jews thought that the destruction of Herod's army came from God, and that very justly, as a punishment of what he did against John that was called the Baptist: for Herod slew Him. . . . Accordingly he was sent a prisoner, out of Herod's suspicious temper, to Macherus, the castle I before mentioned ['on the borders of the dominions of Aretas and Herod'], and was there put to death. Now the Jews had an opinion that the destruction of this army was sent as a punishment upon Herod, and a mark of God's displeasure against him. . . .

"It happened that within the revolution of a hundred years the posterity of Herod, who were a great many in number, were, excepting a few, utterly destroyed."

Herodias and Salome.—"Herodias was married to Herod [Philip], the son of Herod the Great, who was born of Mariamne, the daughter of Simon the high-priest, who had a daughter Salome: after whose birth Herodias took upon her to confound the laws of our country, and divorce herself from her husband while he was alive, and was married to Herod [Antipas], her husband's brother by the father's side: he was tetrarch of Galilee; but her daughter Salome was married to Philip, the son of Herod and tetrarch of Trachonitis; and, as he died childless, Aristobulus, the son of Herod, the brother of Agrippa, married her; they had three sons, Herod, Agrippa, and Aristobulus." . . . —JOSEPHUS, 'Antiq.' xviii. v.; Whiston's Trans. p. 491.

" . . . So he [the Emperor Caius] took away from him [Herod Antipas] his tetrarchy, and gave it by way of addition to Agrippa's kingdom: he also gave Herod's money to Agrippa, and, by way of punishment, awarded him a perpetual banishment, and appointed Lyons, a city of Gaul, to be his place of habitation. But when he was informed that Herodias was Agrippa's sister, he made her a present of what money was her own, and told her that it was her brother who prevented her being put under the same calamity with her husband. But she made this reply:—"Thou, indeed, O Emperor! attest after a magnificent manner, and as becomes thyself, in what thou offerest me: but the kindness which I have for my husband hinders me from partaking of the favour of thy gift. For it is not just that I, who have been made a partner in his prosperity, should forsake him in his misfortunes." Hereupon Caius was angry at her, and sent her with Herod into banishment, and gave her estate to Agrippa." . . . —JOSEPHUS, 'Antiq.' xviii. vii.; Whiston's Trans. p. 500.

CHAPTER XIV.

[1. Herod's opinion of Christ. 3. Wherefore John Baptist was beheaded. 13. Jesus departeth into a desert place: 15. where He feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes: 22. He walketh on the sea to His disciples: 34. and landing at Gennesaret, healeth the sick by the touch of the hem of His garment.]

[Vulg. Caput Ioannis datur puellæ saltatrici: Iesus quinque virorum millia in deserto quinque panibus et duobus piscibus satiat, sublati duodecim reliquiarum copiam: et super mare ambulans discipulos tempestate agitados confortat, Petrumque a submersione liberat: in terra Genesari variis curantur languores tactu vestimenti ipsius.]

A SLIGHT difference exists as to the order in which the Evangelists have arranged the several events here. All three, S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke, agree in placing their relation of the death of John the Baptist immediately before Jesus retires with His disciples into the wilderness, where He miraculously feeds the five thousand. Immediately before these two transactions S. Mark and S. Luke place the mission of the Apostles to preach to the cities of Judæa, which S. Matthew has related earlier. If S. Mark be correct, as seems probable, in placing these three narratives immediately after the account of the rejection of Jesus by His own countrymen, the inhabitants of Nazareth, then the account which S. Matthew has given of the mission of the Apostles to preach, in chapter x., should, in the order of events, have come in here.¹

The Herod spoken of in the following chapter was Herod

Antipas, son of Herod the Great, who by his last will had left him tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa. In this account of Herod Antipas by the three Evangelists, he is sometimes called "the tetrarch," and sometimes "the king" or "Herod the king." He was tetrarch as succeeding to a fourth part of Herod the Great's dominions; he was king as ruling his own tetrarchy with absolute power. It was this Herod to whom Pilate afterwards sent Jesus, who with his men of war set Him at nought, and mocked Him, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe, and sent Him again to Pilate (Luke xxiii. 11). He was tetrarch² over Galilee and Peræa for the long period of forty-two years, from the death of Herod the Great until A.D. 38, during which time he built Tiberias and called it after the name of the reigning Roman Emperor. Here he lived and held his court.

HEROD ANTIPAS TAKES JESUS TO BE JOHN THE BAPTIST.

S. MATTHEW xiv. 1, 2.	S. MARK vi. 14-16.	S. LUKE ix. 7-9.
1 At that time Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus,	14 And king Herod heard of Him; (for His name was spread abroad:)	7 Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by Him:
		and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;
		8 and of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.
		9 And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but who is this, of whom I hear such things?
2 and said unto his servants, This is John the Baptist; he is risen from the dead; and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.	and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.
	15 Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.	And he desired to see Him.
	16 But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lv. p. 426, and cap. lvi.

p. 448. Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotaxis gestorum Christi, vol. viii.

p. 14. ————— in Matt. xiii. 58: vol. viii. p. 291.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xlv. vol. i.

p. 233.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xxxiii. and 56.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 63-66.

² Wiesener, Chronolog. Synopsis, pp. 59 and 117.

1. At that time^a Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus,

2. And said unto his servants, This is John the Baptist;^b he is risen from the dead; and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

Margin, are wrought by him.
Vulg. et ideo virtutes operantur in eo.

There is reason to believe that Herod Antipas was a Sadducee; for Jesus is recorded by S. Matthew (xvi. 6) to have said, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees," which S. Mark (viii. 15) expresses, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod." If he were a Sadducee, he would profess to believe that there was no resurrection (S. Matt. xxii. 23). But such is his terror, through the sting of his guilty conscience, that in spite of his own professed belief that this could not possibly, under any circumstances, happen, he still believes and fears that John, whom he had beheaded, is risen from the dead, and will execute on him the vengeance due to his crime. Even supposing that Herod Antipas were of the sect of the Pharisees, the resurrection in which he would believe would be a general resurrection at the end of the world, and not the migration of souls, so that the same soul could inhabit a second body after the death of the first and pass another term of existence in this world. These dreams and terrors his guilty conscience had stirred up, even beyond, or in contradiction to, his own calm convictions.

The impression which the narrative of the three Evangelists conveys is that Herod was in a state of great fear, doubt, hesitation, and perplexity, at the reports which he heard of Jesus. It is probable, when he first discussed the subject with his servants, and they suggested that Jesus must be John the Baptist risen from the dead, that Herod combated this explanation, though half believing, or rather fearing that it was true, on the ground that he had beheaded John, and that, when they continued to press this as the most likely solution of the matter, he at length acquiesced in it, and assented that it must be so.¹

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlviii.; vol. ii. p. 29.

* At that time.—"There are two times regardable in this section—namely, the time of John Baptist's death, and the time of Herod's hearing of the fame of Jesus; and the juncture of the stories is very close. As the disciples were preaching up and down according to Christ's mission, Herod beheaded the Baptist; and by their preaching in the name of Jesus, the fame of Jesus cometh to Herod's hearing; and the disciples again hearing of the murder of John, get in to their master. So that the story of John's death is related here in the proper place and time when it did occur.

"And from one passage in John the Evangelist in the next following section, there is the ground of a fair conjecture of the time of his beheading. For we shall see, in the beginning of the next section, that all the four do speak of Christ departing privately into a desert place. Matthew particularly gives the reason, namely, because he had newly heard, by John's disciples, of the death of their master. Now John the Evangelist, in giving that story of Christ's retiring, hath inserted this passage, 'And the Jews' passover was nigh,' whereby we may conclude that the Baptist's death was a little before the time of the Passover. And from hence we may take up the whole space of his ministry and imprisonment. He began to preach and to baptize in the year of Christ 29, at the spring of that year, or about Easter. Half a year after Jesus is baptized by him, about the feast of Tabernacles. Till after the feast of Tabernacles come twelve months, viz. in the year of Christ 30; he is still abroad baptizing in Bethabara and Ænon. About October in that year he is imprisoned, and so lieth in restraint till almost Easter twelvemonth, which was in the year of Christ 32. And so his story is of three years' space, the better half of which he preached at liberty, and the other half he lay in prison."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. xlvii.; vol. i. p. 234.

"While the Twelve are absent preaching in the name of Christ, Herod causes John the Baptist to be beheaded in the Castle of Machabrus, at the southern extremity of Perea, near the Dead Sea (Joseph. Ant. xviii. 5, 2). In consequence of the preaching of the Apostles, Herod hears the fame of Jesus; is conscience-smitten; and declares Him to be John, risen from the dead. The disciples of John come and tell Jesus; and the Twelve also return with the same intelligence; upon which Jesus retires to the north-eastern coast of the lake. All these events seem to have taken place together.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 43; vol. iii. p. 1122.

"Matthew and Mark relate the death of the Baptist in explanation of Herod's declaration.

"According to John vi. 4, the Passover was at hand, viz. the third during our Lord's ministry. John, therefore, had lain in prison not far from a year and six months; and was beheaded about three years after entering upon his ministry."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 195.

This is John the Baptist.—"Was not Herod of the Sadducean faith? For that which is said by Matthew, 'Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees' (xvi. 6), is rendered by Mark, 'Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod' (viii. 15); that is, of their doctrine.

"If, therefore, Herod embraced the doctrine of the Sadducees, his words, 'This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead,' seem to be extorted from his conscience, pricked with the sting of horror and guilt, as though the image and ghost of the Baptist, but newly brought by him, were before his eyes. So that his mind is under horror, and, forgetting his Sadduceism, groaning and trembling he acknowledgeth the resurrection of the dead, whether he will or no.

"Or let it be supposed, that with the Pharisees he owned the resurrection of the dead; yet certainly it was unusual for them, that confessed it, to dream of the resurrection of one that was but newly dead. They expected there should be a resurrection of the dead hereafter; but this which Herod speaks, believes, and suspects, is a great way distant from that doctrine, and seems indeed to have proceeded from a conscience touched from above."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xiv. 2; vol. ii. p. 196.

Bishop Middleton concludes his learned note on this passage, thus: "It can hardly be doubted, then, that the passage under review, and consequently the parallel one, Mark vi. 14, should be rendered, 'The Powers or Spirits are active in Him' (ai dynameis ενεργοουν εν αυτω). . . . We are to consider that Herod was a Sadducee, and that he had hitherto believed neither in a resurrection nor in the agency of Spirits. His remorse, however, and his fears, for the moment at least, shake his infidelity; and he involuntarily renounces the two great principles of his sect."—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 164.

HEROD ANTIPAS FIRST IMPRISONS JOHN, AND THEN BEHEADS HIM.

S. MATTHEW xiv. 3-12.

S. MARK vi. 17-29.

S. LUKE iii. 19, 20.

- 3 For Herod
had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake,

his brother Philip's wife.
- 4 For John said unto him,
It is not lawful for thee
to have her.
- 5 And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, because they counted him as a prophet.
- 6 But when Herod's birthday was kept,

the daughter of Herodias danced before them,
and pleased Herod.
- 7 Whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask.
- 8 And she, being before instructed of her mother,

said,
Give me here
John Baptist's head in a charger.
- 9 And the king was sorry:
nevertheless for the oath's sake,
and them which sat with him at meat,
he commanded it to be given her.
- 10 And he sent,

and beheaded John in the prison.
- 11 And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel:
and she brought it to her mother.
- 12 And his disciples
came, and took up
the body, and buried it,
and went and told Jesus.
- 17 For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison

for Herodias' sake,
his brother Philip's wife:
for he had married her.
- 18 For John had said unto Herod,
It is not lawful for thee
to have thy brother's wife.
- 19 Therefore Herodias had a quarrel against him,
and would have killed him; but she could not:
- 20 for Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.
- 21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;
- 22 and when the daughter of the said
Herodias came in, and danced,
and pleased Herod
and them that sat with him,
the king said unto the damsel,
Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt,
and I will give it thee.
- 23 And he
swore unto her,
Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me,
I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.
- 24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask?
And she said, The head of John the Baptist.
- 25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king,
and asked, saying,
I will that thou give me
by and by
in a charger the head of John the Baptist.
- 26 And the king was exceeding sorry;
yet for his oath's sake,
and for their sakes which sat with him,
he would not reject her.
- 27 And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought:
and he went and beheaded him in the prison, and brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel:
and the damsel gave it to her mother.
- 28 And when his disciples heard of it,
they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.
- 19 But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias

his brother Philip's wife,

and for all the evils which Herod had done,

added yet this above all,
that he shut up John in prison.

3. ¶ For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife.

V. For Herod had then.
Vulg. Herod enim tenuit Ioannem, et alligavit eum; et posuit in carcerem propter Herodiam uxorem fratris sui.

4. For John said unto him, It is not lawful for thee to have her.

S. omits unto him.
Vulg. dicebat enim illi Ioannes.

5. And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, because they counted him as a prophet.

The persons that were chiefly concerned in bringing about the death of the Baptist, and in weaving the web of domestic sin, that was the occasion of it, were all of them the immediate descendants of Herod the Great. Herod Antipas and Philip were his sons by different wives; Herodias was his granddaughter, the daughter of his son Aristobulus; and Salome, the daughter of Herodias, was his great granddaughter.

Josephus¹ says that the Philip here mentioned was not Philip the tetrarch, but another Philip, son of Herod the Great by his wife Mariamne. By his father's will this Philip had been excluded from all share in his kingdom, and he was now living in a private station, having married his step-niece Herodias, the daughter of his half-brother Aristobulus, by whom he had one daughter, named Salome. Herodias was sister to Herod Agrippa, who put James the son of Zebedee to death, and then imprisoned Peter, and who afterwards died a most miserable death by the judgment of God (Acts xii.).

Herod Antipas had married the daughter of Aretas, the king of Arabia. He afterwards persuaded Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, to desert her own husband, and to live with him, on condition that he would put away his own wife, the daughter of Aretas.

The family history of the Herods, and their relations one to another, were so intricate that it need not cause much surprise if a considerable amount of ignorance and uncertainty prevailed among the early writers in the Church, respecting the historical facts in this case. Hence some² of them, believing that Philip was dead when Herod took his wife Herodias, concluded that John the Baptist reproved him because he had broken the Levitical law, which permitted a man to marry his brother's widow only in case he had left no children (Deut. xxv.). Others, with a more accurate knowledge of the Herod family, understood that the Baptist reproved Herod Antipas because he had taken to himself his brother Philip's wife during the lifetime of her husband. Others,³ again, being in doubt, mention both explanations. The Jewish historian Josephus,⁴ who was almost a contemporary, and who bears an independent testimony to the imprisonment and to the beheading of John the Baptist, says that Philip, the husband of Herodias, was living when his brother Herod Antipas induced her to desert her own husband and to live with him. The explanation⁵ which has been the most generally received in the Church, is that Philip was living when Antipas took from him his wife Herodias.

6. But when Herod's birthday was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleased Herod.

M. ante, in the midst.
Vulg. Die autem natalis Herodis saltavit filia Herodias in medio.

7. Whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask.

8. And she, being before instructed^a of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger.

Vulg. At illa promissa a matre sua. Tu mihi, inquit, hic in disco caput Iohannis Baptiste.

9. And the king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10. And he sent, and beheaded John in the prison.

11. And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.

¹ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 6; vol. i. p. 804.
Whiston's Trans. xviii. v.; p. 491.

² Tertullian, adv. Marc. iv. 34; vol. ii. p. 443.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlviii.; vol. ii. p. 32.

³ S. Augustine, de Fide et Operibus, cap. xix.; vol. vi. p. 221.
Theophylact, in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. i. p. 73.

⁴ Josephus, ut supra.
⁵ Origen, in tomus x.; vol. iii. p. 892.

[Eusebius,

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. i. 11; vol. ii. p. 113.
Euthymius, in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. i. p. 575.
S. Hilary Piet., in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. i. p. 997.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. vii. p. 97.
V. Bede, in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. iii. p. 70.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxii. p. 168.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xiv. 3; vol. i. p. 196.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. vi. 17; vol. viii. p. 594.

^a Being before instructed (προβιβασθεῖσα) of her mother.—
Instances of impossible renderings occur from time to time (in the A. V.), though the whole number of these is not great. By impossible renderings, I mean those cases in which our translators have assigned to a word a signification which it never bears elsewhere, and which therefore we must at once discard without considering whether it does or does not harmonize with the context . . . an instance of this occurs in προβιβασθεῖσα in Matt. xiv. 8; προβιβασθεῖσα ὑπὸ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῆς, 'being before instructed,' for 'being put forward, urged,' by her mother; for there is no instance of this temporal sense of the preposition in this compound.—(CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 144.)

12. And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus.

8*. his body, and buried him.

Vulg. Et accedentes discipuli ejus, tulerunt corpus ejus, et sepelierunt illud.

Among the Jews, as we read, from the earliest times, dancing was a national expression of joy. In compliance with this custom, this damsel's dancing may have been an innocent indication of her delight at Herod's continued life and prosperity.

Whether the grief which Herod expressed at the rash oath which compromised John's life, was sincere or pretended, it is impossible to say. His respect for John and his grief for his death may have been sincere, but it was evidently less than his desire to get rid of John's reproofs. Many have thought that there was some collusion in this matter between Herod and Herodias, and that all this was arranged beforehand, in order to compass the death of John, and at the same time to make his principal nobles a party to it, by holding out the fulfilment of his unguarded promise as a concession to his respect for their presence. Herod was now holding his court at Tiberias, on the west coast of the sea of Galilee, and John was imprisoned in the Castle of Machærus,* across the Jordan, in the south of Peræa. Some time must therefore have elapsed, before the head of the Baptist could be presented to the damsel. John could not be executed, and his head brought to her, the same hour or the same night in which the promise was made. Between the promise and its fulfilment, there must have been a delay of several days.

It has been supposed that the words "And his disciples took up the body and buried it," rather imply that his body had been cast out, and left unburied as a mark of disrespect and indignity. Nor would it be inconsistent with the known depravity of human nature, as observed in other cases, if Herodias in her rage against John had ordered his body to be

* Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. vi. 25; vol. viii. p. 594.

* Machærus.—"A place on the borders of the dominions of Aretas and Herod." . . . "Accordingly he [John the Baptist] was sent a prisoner, out of Herod's suspicious temper, to Machærus, the castle I before mentioned, and was there put to death."—JOS. PHUS, 'Antiq.' xviii. 5, 1 and 2; Whiston's Trans. p. 491.

For a very full and minute account of Machærus, as it was in the time of Herod, up to its capture by the Roman general L. Bassus, see Josephus, Wars, vii. 6. The following, by a well-known modern traveller, is an interesting description of it in its present ruinous condition:—

"Mounting the next ridge, which runs westward from the backbone range of Moab, we soon came on an old Roman road, which had formed a paved way from the Callirhoe to the Herodian forresses, but which is now merely a rugged line of upturned squared stones.

"Following by its side, we passed a bold, prominent cone, with flattened top, and an immense heap of stones, the remains of some old city on the ridge at its shoulder, and soon after reached the ruins of M'khaur—the town, not the fortress. They covered, perhaps, a larger area than any site we had yet visited. But, though we rode through and through, we could not find a single relic worth photographing.

"The ruins occupy a group of undulating hillocks, and cover, in solid mass, more than a square mile of ground. The place can never have been strategically defensible, and must have depended for its security on the castle above. Round the ruins, on all sides, are gentle slopes, rising into the surrounding and higher hills. . . .

"The citadel was placed on the summit of the cone, which is the apex of a long flat ridge, running for more than a mile from west to east. The whole of this ridge appears to have been one extensive fortress, the key of which was the keep on the top of the cone, an isolated and almost impregnable work; but very small, being circular, and exactly 100 yards in diameter. The wall of circumvallation can be clearly traced, its foundations all standing out for a yard or two above the surface, but the interior remains are few: one well of great depth, a very large and deep oblong cemented cistern, with the vaulting of the roof still remaining; and—most interesting of all—two dungeons, one of them deep and its sides scarcely broken in, were the only remains clearly to be defined. That these were dungeons, and not cisterns, is evident from there being no traces of cement, which never perishes from the walls of ancient reservoirs, and from the small holes still visible in the masonry, where staples of wood and iron had once been fixed. One of these must surely have been the prison-house of John the Baptist.

"Descending on the western side 150 yards, by a very steep slope, we reach the oblong flat plateau which formed the fortified city, at the east end of which, just under the keep, is the wonderful pile of stones, the carefully-collected material of the once formidable fortress.

"There is a weird-like desolation about it, though not the savage nakedness of Sebbek (Masada); for vegetation is abundant, and the hills are all covered with herbage. Yet that heap stands out most spectrally, 3800 feet above the Dead Sea. Behind us rose several higher, but rounded and featureless, summits, and Jebel Atarus was hid by intervening hills. The view in front, of the west side of the Dead Sea and the hill-country of Judæa, with Jerusalem and Nebi Samwil, was simply grand.

"Walking along the ridges to the west, we found, at the distance of a mile, the foundations of two square towers, which had evidently been the outworks of Herod's citadel. . . .

"But its all-absorbing interest to us is, of course, its connection with the imprisonment and death of John the Baptist. It is curious to note that Josephus records it as the fortress to which Herod relegated his wife, the daughter of Aretas, king of the Arabians, when she discovered and resented his guilty passion for his sister-in-law, Herodias; and that it was also selected by him as the prison of the Baptist, persecuted on her account.

"There has been some difficulty raised as to the correctness of this statement, because Josephus immediately afterwards (Antiq. xviii. 5, 2) adds that Machærus, at the time Herod sent away his wife, was subject to Aretas. He had before stated that it was on the frontier of the kingdoms of Aretas and Herod. But as the Queen immediately fled from it to her father's residence at Petra, the probable explanation would seem to be that Herod, during the time of his connection with Aretas, had allowed him to occupy it, though he soon afterwards resumed it. We have seen already that he had fortified it, and laid in great stores of warlike materials, and he visited it in his last illness. It is, therefore, in the highest degree improbable that he ever allowed it to pass completely out of his hands; and the account of John's imprisonment is too precise to admit of the supposition of a mistake on the part of Josephus, respecting an event which must have attracted the deepest interest and attention. We cannot, therefore, relinquish the conviction that, standing on Machærus, we are on the scene of one of the most thrilling and tragic events in Gospel history."—TRISTRAM, 'The Land of Moab,' p. 257, &c.

treated with all the indignity that was usually offered to the bodies of infamous malefactors. There was a tradition in the early Church to that effect.¹ In the fourth century it was a very common opinion that the body of John the Baptist was buried in the city of Samaria.² S. Jerome alludes to this belief more than once in his writings.

Between the death of John and the departure of Jesus with His disciples into the wilderness, some little time must have passed; for otherwise the fame of His teaching and of His miracles would not have been spread sufficiently wide to reach the ears of Herod, and to arouse his suspicions and fears, and thus to endanger the safety of Jesus. It is to avoid experiencing at the hands of Herod the same fate that the Baptist had met with, or even a similar attempt on His life, that Jesus withdraws with His disciples into the wilderness.

It is probable that the disciples of the Baptist—who, after they had taken up his body and buried it, came and told Jesus—attached themselves to Him as His disciples for the future, agreeably to the instructions of John.

JESUS FEEDS THE FIVE THOUSAND.

S. MATTHEW xiv. 13–21.

- 30 And the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told Him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.
- 31 And He said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.
- 13 When Jesus heard of it, He departed thence by ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed Him on foot out of the cities.
- 14 And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and He healed their sick.
- 32 And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.
- 33 And the people saw them departing, and many knew Him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto Him.
- 34 And Jesus, when He came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and He began to teach them many things.

S. LUKE ix. 10–17.

- 10 And the apostles, when they were returned, told Him all that they had done.
- And He took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida.
- 11 And the people, when they knew it, followed Him: and He received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

S. JOHN vi. 1–13.

- 1 After these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.
- 2 And a great multitude followed Him, because they saw His miracles which He did on them that were diseased.

¹ S. Jerome, Apolog. adv. Rufin. iii. 42; vol. ii. p. 488.

² S. Jerome, Epist. cviii. (ad Eustochium) 13; vol. i. p. 889. Theodoret, Hist. Eccles. iii. 3; vol. iii. p. 455.

S. MATTHEW xiv.

S. MARK vi.

S. LUKE ix.

S. JOHN vi.

15 And when it was evening,
His disciples came to Him, saying,
This is a desert place,
and the time is now past;
send the multitude away,
that they may go
into the villages,
and buy themselves victuals.

16 But Jesus
said unto them,
They need not depart;
give ye them to eat.
17 And they say
unto Him,

We have here but five loaves,
and two fishes.

18 He said,
Bring them hither to Me.
19 And He commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass,
and

35 And when the day was now far spent,
His disciples came unto Him, and said,
This is a desert place,
and now the time is far passed:
36 send them away,
that they may go
into the country round about,
and into the villages,
and buy themselves bread:
for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and
said unto them,
Give ye them to eat.
And they say
unto Him,
Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?
38 He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew,

they say,

Five,
and two fishes.

39 And He commanded them to make all sit down
by companies upon the green
grass, 40 And they sat down
in ranks,
by hundreds, and by fifties.
41 And when

12 And when the day began to wear away,
then came the twelve,
and said unto Him,
Send the multitude away,
that they may go
into the towns
and country round about,

and lodge,
and get victuals:
for we are here
in a desert place.
But He
said unto them,
Give ye them to eat.
And they said,

We have no more but five loaves
and two fishes;

except we should go and buy meat
for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men.
And He
said to His disciples, Make them
sit down
by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so,
and made them
all sit down.
16 Then

3 And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there He sat with His disciples.

4 And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

5 When Jesus then lifted up
His eyes, and saw a great company come unto Him, He saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6 And this He said to prove him: for He Himself knew what He would do.

7 Philip answered Him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him, 9 There is a lad here, which hath
five barley loaves,
and two small fishes:
but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus
said,
Make the men
sit down.

Now there was much grass in the place.
So the men sat down,
in number about five thousand.

11 And

S. MATTHEW xiv.

S. MARK vi.

S. LUKE ix.

S. JOHN vi.

took
the five loaves,
and the two fishes,

and looking up to heaven,
He blessed,
and brake,

and gave the loaves
to His disciples,
and the disciples
to the multitude.

20 And they did all eat,
and were filled :

and they took up
of the fragments that remained twelve (κοφίους) baskets full.

21 And they
that had eaten
were about five thousand men,
beside women and children.

He had taken
the five loaves
and the two fishes,

He looked up to heaven,
and blessed,
and brake
the loaves,
and gave them
to His disciples to set before them ;
and

the two fishes divided He among them all.
42 And they did all eat,
and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve (κοφίους) baskets full
of the fragments,
and of the fishes.

44 And they
that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

He took
the five loaves
and the two fishes,

and looking up to heaven,
He blessed them,
and brake,

and gave to the disciples
to set before
the multitude.

17 And they did eat,
and were all filled :

and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them
twelve (κόφιοι) baskets.

Jesus took
the loaves ;

and when He had given thanks,

He distributed
to the disciples,
and the disciples
to them that were set down ; and likewise of the fishes
as much as they would.

12 When they were filled,
He said unto His disciples, Gather up
the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled
twelve (κοφίους) baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

13. ¶ When Jesus heard of it, He departed thence by ship into a desert place apart : and when the people had heard thereof, they followed Him on foot out of the cities.

14. And Jesus went forth,^a and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and He healed their sick.

S.V. And He went forth.
Vulg. Et exiens vidit turbam multam.

15. ¶ And when it was evening, His disciples came to Him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past ; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals.

S.V. the disciples : S. send therefore.
Vulg. accesserunt ad eum, discipuli ejus dicentes, desertus est locus, et hora jam præterit : dimitte turbas.

16. But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart ; give ye them to eat.

S. But He said.
Vulg. Jesus autem dixit eis.

^a And Jesus went forth.—^a In S. Matt. xii. 9, xiii. 36, and xiv.
14, Cod. C. inserts δ' ἰγροῦς ; a reading which on all three occasions is countenanced by the Syriac and some copies of the old Latin, and on the last of the three, by Origen also. And yet there

17. And they say unto Him, We have here but five loaves, and two fishes.

Vulg. Responderunt ei.

18. He said, Bring them hither to me.

19. And He commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, He blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to His disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

20. And they did all eat, and were filled : and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full.

Vulg. et tulerunt reliquias, duodecim cophitas fragmentorum plenas.

21. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children.

For an explanation of this miracle, the scene of it, the position of Bethsaida, and the course which the disciples took in their subsequent voyage, see this Commentary on S.
John vi.

can be no doubt that it is only because Ecclesiastical lessons begin at those places, that the Holy Name is introduced there.—DEAN BURGON, 'On the last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 221.

JESUS WALKS ON THE WATER.

S. MATTHEW xiv. 22-33.

S. MARK vi. 45-52.

S. JOHN vi. 14-21.

- 22 And straightway
Jesus constrained His disciples to get into a ship, and to go before Him unto the other side, while He sent
the multitudes away.
- 23 And when He had sent
the multitudes away,
He went up into a mountain apart
to pray:
and when the evening
was come,
- 24 He was there alone.
But the ship was now
in the midst of the sea,
tossed with waves;
for the wind was contrary.
- 25 And in the fourth watch
of the night
Jesus went unto them,
walking on the sea.
- 26 And when the disciples saw Him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying,
It is a spirit;
and they cried out for fear.
- 27 But straightway
Jesus spake unto them,
saying,
Be of good cheer;
it is I; be not afraid.
- 28 And Peter answered Him and said, Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water.
- 29 And He said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.
- 30 But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.
- 31 And immediately Jesus stretched forth
His hand, and caught him, and said
unto him,
O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

- 45 And straightway
He constrained His disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before unto Bethsaida, while He sent away the people.
- 46 And when He had sent them away,
He departed into a mountain
to pray.
- 47 And when even
was come,
the ship was
in the midst of the sea,
and He alone on the land.
- 48 And He saw them toiling in rowing;
for the wind was contrary unto them:
- and about the fourth watch
of the night
He cometh unto them,
walking upon the sea,
and would have passed by them.
- 49 But when they saw Him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit,
and cried out:
for they all saw Him,
and were troubled.
- 50 And immediately
He talked with them,
and saith unto them,
Be of good cheer:
it is I; be not afraid.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world.

- 15 When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take Him by force, to make Him a king,

He departed again
into a mountain Himself alone.

- 16 And when even
was now come,
His disciples went down unto the sea, 17 and entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum.
And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

- 18 And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

- 19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs,

they see Jesus
walking on the sea,
and drawing nigh unto the ship:

- 20 and they were afraid.
But He saith unto them,
It is I; be not afraid.

S. MATTHEW xiv.

S. MARK vi.

S. JOHN vi.

21 Then they willingly received
Him into the ship:

32 And when they were come into the ship,
the wind ceased.

33 Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped Him, saying,
Of a truth Thou art the Son of God.

51 And He went up unto them
into the ship;
and the wind ceased:

and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.
52 For they considered not the miracle of the leaves:
for their heart was hardened.

22. ¶ And straightway Jesus constrained His disciples^a to get into a ship, and to go before Him unto the other side, while He sent the multitudes away.

S. And He constrained the disciples: V. And straightway He constrained
His disciples: S. into the ship.
Vulg. Et statim compulsi Iesus discipulos ascendere in naviculum.

23. And when He had sent the multitudes away, He went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, He was there alone.

S*. omits when He had sent the multitudes away.
Vulg. Et dimissa turba ascendit in montem solus orare.

24. But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

V. was now many furlongs distant from the land.
Vulg. Navicula autem in medio mari jactabatur fluctibus.

25. And in the fourth watch of the night^b
Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea.

S.V. He came.
Vulg. venit ad eos ambulans super mare.

26. And when the disciples saw Him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear.

S*. But when they saw Him: S.V. But when the disciples saw Him.
Vulg. Et videntes eum super mare ambulantes, turbati sunt.

27. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid.

S*. He spake.
Vulg. Statimque Iesus locutus est eis.

28. And Peter answered Him and said, Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water.

S. if it be Thou, Lord.
Vulg. Domine, si tu es, jube me ad te venire super aquas.

29. And He said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

to go to Jesus: V. and came to Jesus: S*. to come. Therefore he came to Jesus.
Vulg. ambulabat super aquam ut veniret ad Iesum.

30. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

Margin, strong.
S*. V*. omit boisterous.
Vulg. Videns vero ventum validum, timuit.

31. And immediately Jesus stretched forth
His hand, and caught him, and said unto him,
O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

Vulg. et ait illi: Modice fidei, quare dubitasti?

^a And straightway Jesus constrained His disciples.—In Matt. xiv. 22, δ' Ἰησοῦς are words which Origen and Chrysostom, as well as the Syriac versions, omit; and which clearly owe their place in twelve of the uncials, in the Textus Receptus, in the Vulgate, and some copies of the old Latin, to the fact that the Gospel for the ninth Sunday after Pentecost begins at that place.—DEAN BURTON, 'On the last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 216.

^b In the fourth watch of the night.—The night was divided by the Jews into four watches of three hours apiece. The first, or beginning of watches, is mentioned Lam. ii. 19; the second and third, Luke xii. 38; the fourth, Matt. xiv. 25—this was called also the morning watch (Exod. xiv. 24). Howbeit, the Talmud, from Judg. vii. 19, divideth it only into three.—LIGHT-FOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' Luke ii. 8; vol. i. p. 428.

"The Jews acknowledge only three watches of the night . . .
Not that they divided not the night into four parts, but that they esteemed the fourth part, or the watch, not so much for the night as for the morning. So Mark xiii. 35, that space after cock-crowing is called πρωί, the morning. (See also Exod. xiv. 24.)
There were therefore, in truth, four watches of the night, but only three of deep night. When therefore it is said that Gideon set upon the Midianites in the middle watch of the night (Judg.
vii. 19), it is to be understood of that watch which was indeed the second of the whole night, but the middle watch of the deep night;
namely, from the ending of the first watch to midnight."—LIGHT-FOOT on Matt. xiv. 25; vol. ii. p. 198.

32. And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped Him, saying, Of a truth Thou art the Son of God.^a S.V. omit came and.

Vulg. Qui autem in navicula erant, venerunt, et adoraverunt eum, dicentes:
Vere Filius Dei es.

The Jews divided the night into three watches, the Romans into four, consisting of three hours each, at each of which they changed their guards, and this mode of reckoning had become familiar to the Jews. As this happened about the Passover, or Easter, it would be about the vernal equinox, when the night would consist of twelve hours. Probably the storm had lasted during the three first watches, or nine hours. The fourth watch would begin about three o'clock in the morning, and last until six, and in the fourth watch Jesus comes to them.

After such a storm, and such a long continuance of it, the disciples would be well-nigh in despair of their lives. It was probably some feeling of this kind that influenced Peter to ask permission to go to Jesus. He was confident that where Jesus was, there was safety, and he felt none in the ship. Peter was not in a state of mind to be presumptuous. Fear for his life was then his ruling motive. It has been said that Peter was the only one of the disciples in the ship that requested to go to Jesus, because his belief that it was Jesus, or his faith in His power to save him, was greater than that of the others.¹

The words of Peter, "If it be Thou, Lord," taken by themselves, might seem to imply that, in spite of His words, Peter still continued to entertain a doubt whether it was really Jesus who was walking on the sea, or whether it was not some phantom or apparition of Him; but, coupled with Peter's other words and with his whole conduct on this occasion, there can be no question that he was convinced that it was really Jesus Himself and no mere apparition of Him.

When Peter receives permission, he goes out of the ship upon the sea. His body for the time seems to have been endued with the properties that the body will have after the resurrection. The normal condition of the body after the resurrection is not to be impeded, or perhaps influenced at all, by matter. Such were the effects that were seen in our Saviour's Body after His resurrection. The closed doors offered no obstruction to Him. In the case of Peter, his external relation to the waters depended on his internal feeling of trust in the power of Jesus. So long as he trusts in Him, he is kept from sinking. But when the strength of the wind begins to fill him with fear, then fear causes distrust, and distrust causes danger.

The language of the Evangelists would seem to imply that in this one transaction Jesus wrought, so to speak, four distinct miracles—1. in walking upon the sea Himself, 2. in causing Peter to come to Him on the sea, 3. in calming the winds as soon as He had entered the ship, and 4. in immediately bringing the ship to its destination.² So great is this display of His divine power, that the men in the ship, by which is probably meant the sailors, are compelled to acknowledge His superhuman character.

S. Matthew alone relates the incident of Peter's walking on the sea, but in this and in the other particulars of the narrative his account is easily reconciled with that of the other Evangelists.³

JESUS RETURNS TO CAPERNAUM.

S. MATTHEW xiv. 34-36.		S. MARK vi. 53-56.		S. JOHN vi. 22-24.
34	And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Gennesaret.	53	And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew near to the shore.	22	The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one wherein His disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with His disciples into the boat, but that
35	And when the men of that place had knowledge of Him, they sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto Him all that were diseased;	54	And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew Him,		His disciples were gone away alone: (howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the place where
		55	and ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick,	23

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. i. ; vol. ii. p. 59.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xiv. 28 ; vol. i. p. 1002.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xiv. 28 ; vol. vii. p. 102.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiv. 32 ; vol. viii. p. 299.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 47 ; vol. iii. p. 1127.

^a Of a truth Thou art the Son of God (ἀληθῶς Θεοῦ υἱός εἶ). — "Had the form been δὲ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, the words would have conveyed simply an acknowledgment of Messiahship; and, accordingly, unless a dropping of the article by licence be supposed, it is the full attribute of a superhuman sonship that is predicated. That no such licence, however, is really present, may be safely concluded from the emphatic position of Θεοῦ."—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on New Testament,' p. 18.

S. MATTHEW xiv.

S. MARK vi.

S. JOHN vi.

36 and besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment: and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.

56 where they heard He was. And whithersoever He entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought Him that they might touch if it were but the border of His garment: and as many as touched Him were made whole.

24 they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks: when the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither His disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

34 ¶ And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Gennesaret.^a

S.V. they came to land unto Gennesaret.
Vulg. Et cum transfretassent, venerunt in terram Genezar.

35 And when the men of that place had knowledge of Him, they sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto Him all that were diseased;

S. of the place.
Vulg. Et cum cognovissent eum viri loci illius.

36 And besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment: and as many as touched^b were made perfectly whole.

Vulg. Et rogabant eum ut vel fimbriam vestimenti ejus tangerent. Et quicumque tetigerunt, salvi facti sunt.

S. Matthew says, that after the wind had ceased, they came to the land of Gennesaret; and S. John, that on the day after their landing Jesus was at Capernaum, a town in the land of Gennesaret, and that in the synagogue of this place He delivered to the people His discourse on the Bread of Life (S. John vi.).

When Jesus saw that the people believed that, through His touching them or through their touching Him, He had the power to heal them; when He saw this, in consideration for their number and their many infirmities, He granted that the benefit which was derived from communication with His Body should also be imparted through contact with the garment which He wore. The qualification necessary for this beneficial touch was a conviction that through it they should receive from Him the blessing of health. This conviction did not depend entirely on the evidence which they had for it, but partly also on their own moral nature, on their prior obedience to the commands of God. This was undoubtedly so in some instances, and it was probably the case in all.

With this and His discourse in the synagogue at Capernaum (John vi.), ends the public work of Jesus in what is called the second year of His ministry; that is, between the second and third Passovers.¹

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. liv. p. 479.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiv. 35; vol. viii. p. 300.

p. 15. Chronotaxis gestorum Christi. vol. viii. [Lightfoot, Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xlix. vol. i. p. 236.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. xxxiv.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 73.

^a Gennesaret.—“The country also, that lies over against this lake, hath the same name of Gennesareth: its nature is wonderful as well as its beauty; its soil is so fruitful that all sorts of trees can grow upon it, and the inhabitants accordingly plant all sorts of trees there; for the temper of the air is so well mixed, that it agrees very well with those several sorts: particularly walnuts, which require the coldest air, flourish there in vast plenty; there are palm-trees also, which grow best in hot air; fig-trees also and olives grow near them, which yet require an air that is more temperate. One may call this place the ambition of nature, where it forces those plants that are naturally enemies to one another to agree together; it is a happy contention of the seasons, as if every one of them laid claim to this country: for it not only nourishes different sorts of autumnal fruit beyond men's expectation, but preserves them a great while; it supplies men with the principal fruits, with grapes and figs continually, during ten months of the year, and the rest of the fruits as they become ripe together, through the whole year; for besides the good temperature of the air, it is also watered from a most fertile fountain. The people of the country call it Capernaum. Some have thought it to be a rein of the Nile, because it produces the Coracin fish as well as that lake does which is near to Alexandria. The length of this country extends itself along the banks of this lake, that bears the same name, for thirty furlongs, and is in breadth twenty; and this is the nature of the place.”—JOSEPHUS, Wars, iii. x. 8; Whiston's Trans. p. 673.

“A green, crescent-shaped plain extends along the shore for three miles; its greatest breadth is about one mile. The plain is called by the Arabs el-Ghuweir, ‘The Little Ghôr,’ but to the traveller its Scripture name, the land of Gennesaret (Matt. xiv. 34, Mark vi. 53), sounds more familiar. The eye follows its wavy coast-line—here a tangled thicket of nubk and oleander, and there revealing a stretch of white sand—until at the southern end it rests on a little hamlet, still retaining in an Arabic form its ancient name Magdala.”—Handbook to Palestine, p. 406.

“The shore-line, for the most part regular, is broken on the north into a series of little bays of exquisite beauty; nowhere more beautiful than at Gennesareth, where the beaches, pearly white with myriads of minute shells, are on one side washed by the limpid waters of the lake, and on the other shut in by a fringe of oleanders, rich in May with their ‘blossoms red and bright.’—‘The Recovery of Jerusalem,’ p. 338.

^b And as many as touched.—See note on Mark xv. 6.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XV.

A Woman of Canaan (γυνὴ Χανααία).—"In Mark it is Ἑλληνὶς Συροφοίνισσα τῇ γένει, 'a Greek woman, a Syrophenician by nation' (vii. 26).

"I. Χανααία, 'of Canaan.' It is worthy observing, that the Holy Bible, reckoning up the seven nations which were to be destroyed by the Israelites, names the Perizzites, who were not at all recited among the sons of Canaan, Gen. x., and the Canaanites as a particular nation, when all the seven indeed were Canaanites. (See Deut. vii. 1; Josh. ix. 1, and xi. 3; Judges iii. 5, &c.)

"The reason of the latter (with which our business is) to be fetched thence, that Canaan himself inhabited a peculiar part of that northern country with his first-born sons, Sidon and Heth, and thence the name of Canaanites was put upon that particular progeny, distinguished from all his other sons; and that country was peculiarly called by the name of Canaan, distinctly from all the rest of the land of Canaan. Hence Jabin, the king of Hazor, is called the king of Canaan (Judg. iv. 2), and the kings of Tyre and Sidon, if I mistake not, are called the kings of the Hittites (1 Kings x. 29).

"II. Ἑλληνὶς Συροφοίνισσα, 'a Greek woman, a Syrophenician.' Although Judæa, and almost the whole world, had now a long while stooped under the yoke of the Romans, yet the memory of the Syro-Grecian kingdom, and the name of the nation, was not yet vanished. And that is worthy to be noted, 'In the captivity they compute the years only from the kingdom of the Greeks' (Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 10, 1). They said before, 'That the Romans for a hundred and four-score years ruled over the Jews before the destruction of the Temple;' and yet they do not compute the times to that destruction by the years of the Romans, but by the years of the Greeks. . . .

"Therefore that woman that is here spoken of, to reduce all into a short conclusion, was a Syro-Grecian by nation, a Phenician in respect of her habitation, and from thence called a woman of Canaan."—LIGHTFOOT on Matthew xv. 22; vol. ii. p. 202.

"In the New Testament 'Grecian' is reserved for Ἑλληνιστής, while 'Greek' represents Ἕλλην. This distinction is good, as far as it goes; but in order to convey any idea to an English reader Ἑλληνιστής should be translated by 'Grecian Jew,' or by some similar phrase.

"As Ἕλλην is translated 'Gentile' without hesitation elsewhere (e.g. 1 Cor. x. 32; xii. 13), it is strange that this rendering is not adopted for Ἑλληνίς, where it would have avoided an apparent contradiction, Mark vii. 26, 'a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation.'—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 157.

"Syro-Phœnician occurs only in Mark vii. 26. The coinage of the words Syro-Phœnicia and Syro-Phœnicians seems to have been the work of the Romans, though it is difficult to say exactly what they intended by the expressions. They denoted perhaps a mixed race, half Phœnicians and half Syrians. In later times a geographic sense of the terms superseded the ethnic one. The Emperor Hadrian divided Syria into three parts—Syria Proper, Syro-Phœnice, and Syria Palestina; and henceforth a Syro-Phœnician meant a native of this sub-province, which included Phœnicia Proper, Damascus, and Palmyrené. It is perhaps most probable that St. Mark really wrote Σύρα Φοίνισσα, 'a Phœnician Syrian,' which is found in some copies."—SMITH'S 'Bible Dictionary.'

"The plain of Phœnicia Proper extends from Ras el-Abyad to Nahr el-Arwaly, one hour north of Sidon—giving a total length of 28 miles. Its average breadth is about half a mile; but opposite Tyre and Sidon the mountains retreat to a distance of nearly two miles, while in other places they approach the shore. The surface of the plain is undulating, the soil fertile, water abundant—nothing, in fact, is wanting that nature can bestow."—'Handbook to Palestine,' p. 374.

CHAPTER XV.

[3. Christ reproveth the scribes and Pharisees for transgressing God's commandments through their own traditions: 11. [weeth how that which goeth into the mouth doth not defile a man. 21. He healeth the daughter of the woman of Canaan, 30. and other great multitudes: 32. and with seven loaves and a few little fishes feedeth four thousand men, beside women and children.]

[Vulg. Pharisæorum de levandis manibus aliisque rebus traditiones, quas Dei mandatis præponant: et quæ sint coarctantes hominem: mulier Chananæ perseveranti fide et supplicatione impetrat filii curacionem. Jesus curatis juxta mare Galilee variis languoribus, quatuor vicibus millia regem panibus præcipue pisciculis satiat, sublati septem sportarum reliquiis.]

If the Evangelists had given any record of our Saviour's observance of this the third Passover; if they had given any notice either of His journey to Jerusalem, or of His teaching or miracles, or of the persecution of the Scribes and Pharisees while there, it would have come in between this chapter and the last.¹ But not one of the four Evangelists has left any such record. Some² have therefore concluded, that Jesus did not go up to Jerusalem for the observance of this Passover. But the Law was express on this point, that every male should go up at this feast. Against the improbability that He would go up to Jerusalem for the Passover, and no relation be given by the Evangelists of His journey, or of His conduct while at Jerusalem, is to be set the improbability of His not obeying the express command of the Law.³

When at Jerusalem for the second Passover, He had healed the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, and had opened the eyes of the man born blind on the Sabbath-day, and had thus narrowly escaped the machinations of the Sanhedrin. On this the third Passover, another year had been added to His ministry; His fame throughout the country had more than proportionately increased. Since the last Passover, He had given His twelve Apostles a mission to preach throughout Judæa, and to work the same kind of cures as He had wrought Himself. The report of His mighty works had even reached the ears and disturbed the peace of Herod.

The only record of this Passover is the incidental notice of it by S. John (vi. 4), "And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh." These words occur just before his narrative of the miracle of feeding the five thousand, and may have been given partly to account for the assemblage of so large a multitude, who were gathering for their journey to Jerusalem to keep the Passover.

It is not beyond the limits of probability that, after He had delivered His discourse on the Bread of Life in the synagogue of Capernaum, Jesus went to Jerusalem for the Passover; that when there He taught the people and healed their sick, and that the Scribes and Pharisees sought, as usual, to put Him to death, but were unable to find against Him a charge of violating either the Law of Moses or the laws of the country. The very next words that S. John uses, after his relation of the discourse at Capernaum, would seem to point to this conclusion: "After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for He would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill Him" (vii. 1). Unable to find against Him any sufficient ground for either a legal or a civil prosecution, the authorities send down Scribes and Pharisees from Jerusalem to watch Him, and thus to get up an accusation against Him.

JESUS DEFENDS HIS DISCIPLES AGAINST THE COMPLAINTS OF THE PHARISEES.

S. MATTHEW xv. 1-20.

- 1 Then came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees,
which were of Jerusalem,

S. MARK vii. 1-23.

- 1 Then came together unto Him
the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.
2 And when they saw some of His disciples eat bread with defiled, that is to say, with unwashed, hands, they found fault.
3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.
4 And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and pots, brassen vessels, and of tables.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 4.
² Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotaxis gest. Christi; vol. viii. p. 15.
Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xlix.; vol. i.
p. 256.
³ Bengel, in Matt. xv. l. p. 80.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 74.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 570.
² Maldonatus, in Joan. vii. 1; vol. ii. p. 639.
³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 1; vol. viii. p. 978.
⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 4.

S. MATTHEW xv.

saying,
 2 Why do Thy disciples transgress
 the tradition of the elders?
 for they wash not their hands
 when they eat bread.
 3 But He answered and said unto them,
 Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God
 by your tradition?
 4 For God commanded, saying,
 Honour thy father and mother:
 and, He that curseth father or mother,
 let him die the death.
 5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother,
 It is a gift,
 by whatsoever thou mightest be profited
 by me;
 6 and honour not his father or his mother,
 he shall be free.
 Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites,
 well did Esaias prophesy of you,
 saying, This people 8 draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth,
 and honoureth Me with their lips;
 but their heart is far from Me.
 9 But in vain they do worship Me,
 teaching for doctrines the commandments
 of men.
 10 And He called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear,
 and understand:
 11 Not that which
 goeth into the mouth defileth a man;
 but that which cometh out of the mouth,
 this defileth a man.

12 Then came His disciples, and said unto Him, Knowest Thou that the Pharisees were offended,
 after they heard this saying?
 13 But He answered and said, Every plant, which My heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.
 14 Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind.
 And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.
 15 Then answered Peter and said unto Him,
 Declare unto us this parable.
 16 And Jesus said, Are ye also yet without understanding?
 17 Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth

goeth into the belly,
 and is cast out into the draught?

S. MARK vii.

5 Then the Pharisees and scribes
 asked Him,
 Why walk not Thy disciples according to
 the tradition of the elders, but eat bread
 with unwashen hands?
 9 And He said unto them,
 Full well ye reject the commandment of God,
 that ye may keep your own tradition.
 10 For Moses said,
 Honour thy father and thy mother;
 and, Whoso curseth father or mother,
 let him die the death:
 11 but ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother,
 It is Corban, that is to say, a gift,
 by whatsoever thou mightest be profited
 by me;
 he shall be free.
 12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother; 13 making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.
 6 He answered and said unto them,
 Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites,
 as it is written, This people
 honoureth Me with their lips,
 but their heart is far from Me.
 7 Howbeit in vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments
 of men.
 8 For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men,
 as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.
 14 And when He had called all the people unto Him, He said unto them, Hearken unto Me every one of you, and understand: 15 There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him;
 but the things which come out of him,
 those are they that defile the man.
 16 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.
 17 And when He was entered into the house from the people,
 His disciples asked Him
 concerning the parable.
 18 And He saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also?
 Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man,
 it cannot defile him;
 19 because it entereth not into his heart.
 but into the belly,
 and goeth out into the draught,

S. MATTHEW xv

- 18 But these things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart;
and they defile the man.
- 19 For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts,
false witness,
blasphemies:
20 these are the things which defile a man:
but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man,

S. MARK vii.

- 20 purging all meats:
And He said,
That which cometh out
of the man,
that defileth the man.
- 21 For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts,
22 covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye,
blasphemy, pride, foolishness:
23 all these evil things come from within,
and defile the man.

1. Then came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees, which were of Jerusalem, saying,

S.V. Then came to Jesus from Jerusalem Pharisees and scribes.
Vulg. Tunc accesserunt ad eum ab Ierosolymis scribae et pharisei.

2. Why do Thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands
when they eat bread.

S.V. the hands.
Vulg. non enim lavant manus suas.

God had commanded that whosoever should touch a dead body, or the carcase of certain unclean animals (Levit. xi.), should be disqualified for a time from partaking in the worship offered to Him by the children of Israel, and that this disqualification should only be removed after a washing of the body. The intention of this command evidently was, to impress upon the Jews by a ritual act how odious defilement was in the sight of God, and how displeasing was any service rendered to Him by those who were in this state of defilement. Missing the moral teaching of this command, the Jews built upon it their elaborate system of purification.
Numberless acts, besides those indicated by the Law, were looked upon as rendering them impure, and this impurity was regarded not as a ceremonial impurity, or a disqualification from religious service for a time, but as a moral impurity, a defiling of the soul. The purity of the soul was regarded, or was in danger of being regarded, as depending on the washing of the body. It was to prevent this, and as a protest against this, that the disciples of Jesus, doubtless at the command of their Master, neglected to observe the custom of the Jews with respect to their ritual washings. Hence arose the appeal of the Scribes and Pharisees to Jesus.

3. But He answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God
by your tradition?

S. omits also.
Vulg. Quare et vos.

4. For God commanded, saying,

"Honour thy father and mother:"

and

"He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death."

V. For God said: S.V. Honour thy father.
Vulg. Nam Deus dixit. Honora patrem et matrem.

5. But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me;^a

S. by me, it is nothing.
Vulg. Manus quodcumque est ex me, tibi proderit.

^a It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me.
—'Beside the Law alleged by Christ, 'Honour thy father and thy mother,' &c., they acknowledged this also for law (Tosaphta, in Kiddushin, cap. 1). 'The son is bound to provide for his father meat and drink, to clothe him, to cover him, to lead him in and out, to wash his face, hands, and feet.' Yea, that goes higher (Hierosol. Kiddu-shin, fol. 61, 2, 3), 'A son is bound to nourish his father, yea to beg for him.' Therefore it is no wonder if these things which are spoken by our Saviour are not found verbatim in the Jewish Pandect: for they are not so much alleged by Him to show that it was their direct design to banish away all reverence and love towards parents, as to show how wicked their traditions were, and into what ungodly consequences they oftentimes fell. They denied not directly the nourishing of their parents, nay, they commanded it, they exhorted to it; but consequently by this tradition they made all void. They taught openly indeed that a father was to be made no account of in comparison of a Rabbi that taught them the Law (Maimon. in Gezelah, cap. 12); but they by no means openly asserted that parents were to be neglected, yet openly enough they did, by consequence drawn from this foolish and impious tradition.

I.

"Vows were distinguished [by the Talmud] into two ranks:
(1) vows of consecration; and (2) vows of obligation, or of prohibition. A vow of consecration was, when any thing was devoted to holy uses, namely, to the use of the Altar or the Temple; as when a man by a vow would dedicate this or that for sacrifice, or to buy wood, salt, wine, &c., for the Altar, or for the reparation of the Temple . . .

"But above all such like forms of vowing the word Kopßar,

8

6. And honour not his father or his mother,^a he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.^b

And honour not: S.V. He shall not at all honour: S.V. omit or his mother: V. the word of God.

Vulg. Et non honorificabit patrem suum, aut matrem suam: et irritum fecistis mandatum Dei propter traditionem vestram.

Some¹ think that the words "And honour not his father or his mother," &c., are the words of the Scribes and Pharisees; others that they are the words of Jesus.²

It is not the principle of traditional usage, or of traditional interpretation, that Jesus here reprehends, but the character of their traditions. He does not blame them because they observed certain forms and ceremonies not commanded by God but recommended by the practice of the ancients, but because they retained such interpretations, or gave such importance to the observance of certain ceremonies as destroyed the spirit and intention of God's commands. There were many things, good and necessary, that these very Jews had learnt by tradition, such as which were the canonical books of the Old Testament, or that there were three Persons in one Godhead. The expression "your tradition" (παράδοσιν ὑμῶν) probably includes all kinds of oral teaching, whether received from their forefathers or invented by themselves.

The instance which He selects as a specimen of their corrupt oral teaching, is the duty of children towards their parents. The Law of Moses was very minute and positive on this subject. There could be no possibility of mistaking its meaning, except by minds trained in deceit and evasion. The Law said, "Honour thy father and thy mother," and this honour naturally included support and assistance or maintenance, as well as reverence and obedience. To show more clearly the mind of the Law on this point, Jesus quotes another precept from it, "He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death" (Exod. xxi. 17). Not only was evil forbidden to be shown towards a parent by actions, it was to be punished by death, even if shown in words only. So

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xv. 6; vol. i. p. 205.

Corban, was plainest of all, which openly speaks a thing devoted and dedicated to sacred uses. And the reader of those tracts, which have been mentioned, shall observe these forms frequently to occur, 'Let it be Konem, whereby I am profitable to thee,' and, 'Let it be Corban, whereby I am profitable to thee.' Which words sound the very same thing, unless I am very much mistaken, with the words before us, 'Let it be Κορβάν, Corban, or Δάρον, a gift, by whatsoever thou mayest be profited by me.'

"Which words, that they may be more clearly understood, and that the plain and full sense of the place may be discovered, let these things be considered:—

"First, that the word Δάρον is rather to be rendered, 'Let it be a gift,' than 'It is a gift.' For Konem and Corban, as we have noted, signified not, 'It is something devoted,' but 'Let it be as something devoted.'

"Secondly, this form of speech, Δάρον, δ' εἰς ἐμοῦ ὠφελήσῃς, 'A gift by whatsoever thou mayest be profited by me,' does neither argue that he who thus spake devoted his goods to sacred uses, nor obliged him (according to the doctrine of the Scribes) to devote them, but only restrained him by an obligation from that thing, for the denying of which he used such a form; that is, from helping him by his goods, to whom he thus spake. He might help others with his wealth, but him he might not.

"Thirdly, the words are brought in as though they were pronounced with indignation; as if when the needy father required food from his son, he should answer in anger and with contempt, 'Let it be as a thing devoted, whatsoever of mine may profit thee.' But now, things that were devoted were not to be laid out upon common uses.

"Fourthly, Christ not only cites the law, 'Honour thy father and mother,' but adds this also, ὁ καταλογίζων πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, ὃς ἐστιν ὁ καταλογίζων πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, 'he that curseth father or mother.' But now there was no κακολογία, 'cursing,' here at all, if the son spoke truly and modestly, and as the thing was; namely, that all his estate was devoted before.

"Fifthly, therefore although these words should have been spoken by the son irreverently, wrathfully, and inhumanely towards his father, yet such was the folly, together with the impiety, of the traditional doctrine in this case, which pronounced the son so obliged by these his words, that it was lawful by no means to succour his needy father. He was not at all bound by these words to dedicate his estate to sacred uses, but not to help his father he was inviolably bound.

"Sixthly, the words of the verse, therefore, may thus be rendered, without any addition put between, which many interpreters do, 'Whosoever shall say to his father or mother, Let it be a (devoted) gift in whatsoever thou mayest be helped by me: then let him not honour his father and mother at all.'—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xv. 5; vol. ii. p. 200.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 8.

"And honour not his father (καὶ οὐ μὴ τιμήσῃ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ).—The structure of this passage may be viewed differently according to the meaning assigned to the grammatical form οὐ μὴ τιμήσῃ.

"If the form be taken as expressing a preterpitory prohibition, in which way it is used in the Septuagint and New Testament, the clause necessarily becomes part of the dictum introduced by the words ὁμοῖς λέγεται.

"On the other hand, the clause sets forth the practical issue of the preceding dictum, if, according to proper Greek usage, it is used to convey an affirmation of certain non-performance, arising in the present case from positive disability; for the votive formula was operative not simply in freeing a person from filial obligation, but in debarring him in case he should be disposed to render aid to his parents; and thus not merely evading, but overriding the divine command. 'You, however, say, "Whoever shall have said to his father or his mother, Korban, whatever thou mightest get in aid from me?"—and he will be utterly unable to honour his father or his mother.'

"The various reading τιμήσῃ is immaterial as regards the sense, according to the practice of the New Testament."—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on the New Testament,' p. 18.

"By your tradition (διὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν).—"Though in the renderings of διὰ with the genitive we are confronted by archaisms rather than by errors, and it might be difficult and perhaps not advisable in many cases to meddle with them, the same apology and the same impediment do not apply to this preposition as used with the accusative. Here our translators are absolutely wrong, and a correction is imperative. Though they do not ever (so far as I have noticed) translate διὰ with a genitive as though it had an accusative, they are frequently guilty of the converse error, and render it with an accusative as though it had a genitive. Thus Matt. xv. 3, 6, 'Why do ye transgress the commandment of God? . . . Ye have made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition' (διὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν, ἰ.ε. for the sake of your tradition, or as it is expressed in the parallel passage, Mark vii. 9, διὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν τηρήσατε).—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 123.

stringent was the Law of Moses in this matter, that it would have appeared almost impossible to have escaped its plain meaning. But the ingenuity of the Scribes had found out a way to avoid even this, and by a piece of hypocritical piety. By formally dedicating, or pretending to dedicate, their goods to the service of God, they rendered them sacred, or unalienable for secular purposes, or for that particular purpose which they had in their intention. This form, which was rather one of prohibition than of consecration, took effect, according to their teaching, whether uttered in anger or in cold blood. Such was a specimen of the many ways in which the Scribes of our Saviour's day counteracted the law of God by their oral teaching.

7. Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying,

8.

"This people draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth,
and honoureth Me with their lips;
but their heart is far from Me."

9.

But in vain they do worship Me,
teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

*S.V. omit draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth, and.
Vulg. omits draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth, and.*

He calls them "hypocrites," because their claim to superior strictness and sanctity was but a cloke for an unusual degree of pride and avarice. It may be that Jesus did not intend to imply that Isaiah had these very Scribes and Pharisees in view when he uttered his prophecy, or that his prophecy had any special reference to them, but that Isaiah's general description of hypocrites expressed the case of these Scribes and Pharisees in a remarkable manner.¹ The prophecy is quoted more according to the Septuagint than the Hebrew.

To their question, "Why do Thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders?" Jesus returns no direct reply. He goes deeper than that, and strikes at the root of the misconception which had given rise to their question. He justifies the conduct of His disciples by unfolding to them the whole doctrine of defilement. In a few simple words He lays bare the absurdity of their oral and traditional teaching, the effect of which teaching was to make void the plainest and most express commands of God.

He does not confine the explanation of what defiles a man, and of what does not defile a man, to the ears of the Scribes and Pharisees: He calls the multitude to hear this; thus imparting the right doctrine to those who had been deceived by the corrupt teaching, as much as to those who had been the instruments in this deception. He then shows them that it is the soul, and the emotions of the soul, which alone can defile the man, and that the actions of the body, without the corresponding affections of the soul, have no power to defile the man.

10. ¶ And He called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand:

11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

12. Then came His disciples, and said unto Him, Knowest Thou that the Pharisees were offended, after they heard this saying?

S.V. the disciples: V. and say.

Vulg. Tunc accedentes discipuli ejus dixerunt ei.

13. But He answered and said, Every plant, which My heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

S.V. omit of the blind.

Vulg. caeci sunt, et duces excoecum: cæcus autem si cæco ducatur præter, ambo in foveam cadunt.

It is clear from S. Mark that it was when they were alone, after they had withdrawn from the people into the house, that the disciples refer to the effect which His words had had on the Pharisees. The disciples themselves may have thought His words too sharp and pointed. The saying which they speak of as having offended or turned away the Pharisees, might refer both to His exposure of the reckless way in which, by their use of the word Corban, they had set aside the commandment of God, and also to His complete refutation of their doctrine of purification. But He is not deterred from declaring the truth in its fulness, by the fear of offending, or driving away from Him, those who had abused the opportunity which God had given them, to acquire the power to appreciate the truth. As in other similar cases, He re-states the truth, and, instead of softening down the apparent harshness of the statement, He expresses it in fuller terms than before. God's revelation to man is at all times a test of their loving obedience to Him. Their reception or their rejection of it depends, perhaps, as much on their moral as on their reasoning faculties.

The words "Every plant which My heavenly Father hath not planted," &c., have been understood in different ways. Some² have explained the term "plant" as referring to the

¹ Janseius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 5.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xv. 7; vol. i. p. 205.

² S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xv. 13; vol. i. p. 1003.

³ For a clear statement of the evidence for and against the reading in verse 8, as given in the Authorized Version, see Hammon's "Textual Criticism," p. 74.

corrupt teaching of the Pharisees, which, it is intimated, should be rooted out. Others¹ refer it to the Pharisees themselves, or to the Pharisees as well as to their doctrines. The latter would appear to be the preferable sense in this passage, and it would be in perfect keeping with John the Baptist's address to the Pharisees (S. Matt. iii. 7, &c.). By their disobedience, deceitful dealing, and general misuse of God's gifts under the Levitical dispensation, they had forfeited the privilege of becoming plants in the kingdom of heaven. They were plants that should be rooted out. For it was a law of God's providence, as seen in the case of all the Jews who believed in Jesus, that power to believe in Him should be given in proportion to their former obedience to God. When men were drawn to Jesus, and to embrace His Gospel, it was the reward—the natural result, so to speak—of their former zeal for God under the Law. The object of these Pharisees through life had been, not the service of God, but the praise of men, power over their brethren, and self in some form or other, and they were now to reap the reward of their conduct: they were not to become plants in the new kingdom, but to be rooted out.

15. Then answered Peter and said unto Him, Declare unto us this parable.

S.V. the parable.
Vulg. Edissere nobis parabolum istam.

16. And Jesus said, Are ye also yet without understanding?

S.V. And He said.
Vulg. At ille dixit.

17. Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught?

V. omits yet.
Vulg. omits yet.

18. But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man.

19. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies:

20. These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

In explaining what He had briefly stated, as to what defiled the man, and which Peter calls "a parable," or a dark and obscure saying, the meaning of which was but imperfectly comprehended by them, He does not disparage, or in any way undervalue, the Law of Moses, but shows that the Scribes and Pharisees had grossly misrepresented it. To see the full force of His reasoning, as well as the nature of the abuse of which the Pharisees were guilty, we must bear in mind that there were two kinds of defilement. One of these is actual and real, the defilement of the soul, which can be caused only by sin; the other judicial, so to speak, and consists in a disqualification from partaking in certain religious or social rites. The latter, under the Law of Moses, was caused by contact with things that were reckoned unclean, which could only be removed after certain prescribed washings of the body. The object of the judicial defilement was partly to teach the people how odious in the sight of God was the real, actual defilement, that of the soul. If bodily contact with any thing that was reckoned unclean debarred a man from the worship and the presence of God, how much more would the soul's contact with sin, which was a real, actual defilement. But the Scribes and Pharisees, in their teaching, confounded these two, and represented the defilement of the soul to be caused, not by sin in any of its manifold forms, but by contact with the things which the Law accounted unclean. This is the error He here refutes.

Unscrupulous as the Scribes and Pharisees showed themselves on other occasions, and enraged, as they were sure to be, at His triumphant exposure of their corrupt teaching, we may fairly conclude that it would be no longer safe for Jesus to remain in the same neighbourhood with them, at least for a time. Either to avoid the machinations of the Pharisees against His life, or for some other reason, such as to afford the blessing of His presence to some other district, He withdraws from the land of Gennesaret, and retires westward, toward the sea-coast. Here, in a narrow strip of land, extending from Tyre in the south to Sidon in the north, and called by the Greek name Phœnicia, still lingered the descendants of the ancient inhabitants of the land, the seven nations of Canaan whom the children of Israel had been commanded to exterminate. After being driven from the interior of the country, they maintained their existence on the sea-coast, as a separate people, idolaters in religion, uninfluenced by the example of the Jews.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. ii.; vol. ii. p. 74.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xv. 13; vol. i. p. 207.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xv. 13; vol. viii. p. 304.

HE HEALS THE DAUGHTER OF A SYRO-PHœNICIAN WOMAN.

S. MATTHEW xv. 21-29.

- 21 Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.
 22 And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, Thou Son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.
 23 But He answered her not a word. And His disciples came and besought Him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us.
 24 But He answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

- 25 Then came she and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, help me.
 26 But He answered and said,
 It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs.
 27 And she said,
 Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table.
 28 Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt.
 And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

- 29 And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there.

S. MARK vii. 24-31.

- 24 And from thence He arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but He could not be hid.
 25 For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of Him, and came and fell at His feet:
 26 the woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation; and she besought Him that He would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.
 27 But Jesus said unto her,
 Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.
 28 And she answered and said unto Him,
 Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.
 29 And He said unto her,
 For this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.
 30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.
 31 And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, He came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

21. ¶ Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.*

* Into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.—“You will see in some maps the Syrophenician woman pictured making her supplication to our Saviour for her possessed daughter, almost at the gates of Sidon. But by what right, I fear the authors will not tell me with solidity enough. . . .

“It is not credible that Christ ever passed the bounds of the land of Israel. For when He said of Himself, ‘I am not sent but to the lost sheep of Israel only;’ and to His disciples, ‘Go not into the way of the Gentiles;’ and ‘If these wonderful works had been done in Tyre and Sidon;’ you will never persuade me that He ever went as far as the gates of Sidon.”

After a learned and interesting discussion to show that ἡ θύρα was the term used by the Septuagint translators to denote the district, consisting of twenty cities in Galilee, which Solomon gave to Hiram, king of Tyre (1 Kings ix. 11, 12), Lightfoot thus concludes, “So that in this sense Christ might be within ‘the coasts of Tyre and Sidon,’ and yet be within the limits of the land of Israel. We must therefore suppose, and that not without reason, that He, when He healed the possessed maid, was in that country, in the outermost coasts of Galilee, which formerly was called Chabul, in the Seventy called ἡ θύρα, the coast; in the Talmudists החומה, the border, which anciently was given by Solomon to the king of Tyre; and from that grant in the following ages it belonged to the right and jurisdiction of Tyre and Sidon, however it were within those boundaries wherein the land of Israel was circumscribed from the beginning; yea, wherein it was circumscribed under the second Temple.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Chorographical Decad.’ vi. 1; vol. ii. p. 310, &c.

“Among misleading archaisms the word coast for ‘border’ or ‘region’ is perhaps the most frequent. It would be unreasonable to expect the English reader to understand that when S. Paul ‘passes through the upper coasts’ (τὰ ἀνωτερικὰ μέρη) on his way to Ephesus (Acts xix. 1) he does in fact traverse the high land which lies in the interior of Asia Minor. Again in the Gospels, when he reads of our Lord visiting ‘the coasts of Tyre and Sidon’ (Matt. xv. 21, Mark vii. 31), he naturally thinks of the sea-board, knowing these to be maritime cities, whereas the word in one passage stands for μέρη, ‘parts,’ and in the other for θύρα, ‘borders,’ and the circumstances suggest rather the eastern than the western frontier of the region. And perhaps also his notions of the geography of Palestine may be utterly confused by reading that Capernaum is situated ‘upon the sea-coast’ (Matt. iv. 13).”—

CANON LIGHTFOOT, ‘On Revision of New Testament,’ p. 174.

22. And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, Thou Son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.

S.V. omīt unto Him.
Vulg. clamauit, dicens et.

23. But He answered her not a word. And His disciples came and besought Him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us.

24. But He answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

25. Then came she and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, help me.

26. But He answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs.^a

27. And she said, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table.

Vulg. At illa dixit: Etiam Domine: nam et cælli edunt de micis quæ cadunt de mensa dominorum suorum.

28. Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

If we compare the accounts of S. Matthew and S. Mark together, who alone relate this miracle, it will appear that part of what they relate took place in the open air and part of it in a house. S. Matthew relates the whole story, both what occurred on the road and what occurred in the house, without indicating where the one part ceases or where the other begins, while S. Mark records only that which happened in the house. The woman receives two apparent repulses from our Saviour. The first of these was when she cried after Him without receiving a word of reply, and when He answered the intercession of His disciples with the words that He was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." The second was when He answered her that it was "not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs." Of these two repulses S. Mark relates only the latter, and distinctly says that it took place when they were in the house. It would thus appear that the woman first came and cried after Jesus when He and His disciples were on the road, and that, to get rid of her importunity and to escape the observation of passers-by, the disciples request Him to grant her petition, and send her away; that Jesus, not prepared as yet to yield to her prayer, and wishing to try her faith still further, and perhaps also to avoid the crowd that was gathering, enters into a house; that the woman, still following, also enters, and again presses her petition, and then receives the fulfilment of her wishes, together with a signal commendation of her faith.¹

Some² think that the woman first addresses Jesus in the house, and afterwards in the way; but the former is the more approved explanation.

S. Mark represents our Saviour as especially anxious to escape observation on this occasion. This might either be to avoid for a time the Scribes and Pharisees, whom He had incensed against Him; or it might be for the sake of the repose necessary for the body; or it might be in tenderness to the Jews, that He might not, by openly relieving this woman of Canaan, give them the least grounds for drawing the false inference that He could not be the Messiah, because the Messiah was promised to the house of Israel.

Though the words of the disciples, "Send her away (ἀπόλυσον), for she crieth after us," do not of themselves necessarily imply that they request Him to grant her petition, it is plain from His answer to them that this was what they had in their thoughts.³

The feeling which influenced this woman to seek out Jesus and which prepared her to believe that He was what common rumour reported Him to be, the Son of David, the promised Messiah, was her maternal affection. The affliction of her daughter had purified this feeling from all the selfishness that occasionally attends it. This it was that induced her not to despair when at first she was received with silence and apparent disregard; for it was not to her, but to His disciples, that Jesus addressed the explanation that He was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. When she followed Jesus into the house and renewed her cry for help in a still more earnest manner, and was then reminded of the nation to which she belonged and of the estimation in which it was held by the Jews, her maternal affection enabled her to bear all this and eagerly to claim the share, small as it appeared, which fell to the dogs. The greatness of her faith would seem to have consisted in her belief that Jesus had the power to grant her petition; and in her hope, even against all ground

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxi. p. 13.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xv. 23; vol. viii. p. 307.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 49; vol. iii. p. 1130.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xv. 23; vol. i. p. 210.

³ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xv. 23; vol. i. p. 1004.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xv. 23; vol. vii. p. 110.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 49; vol. iii. p. 1130.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lii. 1; vol. ii. p. 83.

Euthymius, in Matt. xv. 23; vol. ii. p. 623.

^a The children's bread and cast it to the dogs.—The Greek diminutive (ταῖς κυνᾶραις) requires an English diminutive—"little dogs" or "whelps." Thus the rendering of the earliest English versions, from Wicliffe, has here "whelpes," and to such a rendering Chaucer evidently alludes in his Friar's Tale—

"Think on the woman Canaane, that sayde
That whelpes eat some of the crumbes all That from the Lorde's table i-falle."

—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876; p. 131.

for hope, that He would be prevailed upon to exert it in her behalf.

It is sad to reflect that the term "dogs" with which the Jews stigmatized these nations of Canaan, as a brand of their ignorance and unbelief in God as revealed to man, should in popular use have now for ages been applied to the Jews themselves, and for the same purpose.

Whether Jesus healed others of the heathen on this occasion, or how long He remained in their neighbourhood, there is nothing to show. Probably it was not long before He returned to the sea of Galilee, and began again to act on the principle which He had Himself stated to the Syro-phenician woman, namely, to distribute to "the children" bread in the greatest fulness, not forgetting to give crumbs to "the dogs."

29. And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there.

30. And great multitudes came unto Him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and He healed them:

S. blind, maimed, dumb: V. maimed, blind, dumb: S.V. at His feet.
Vulg. habentes secum mutos, cecos, claudos, debiles, et alios multos: et prosternebant eos ad pedes ejus.

31. Inasmuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and they glorified the God of Israel.

V. the dumb to hear: S. omits the maimed to be whole: S. and the lame to walk.
Vulg. Ita ut turbe mirarentur, videntes mutos loquentes, claudos ambulantes, cecos videntes.

Both S. Matthew and S. Mark record His return from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon to the sea of Galilee, and S. Mark notes minutely the route by which He returned.

Some have concluded that Jesus left the land of Israel and passed over into the land of the heathen. Others think that this is more than the words of the Evangelists will warrant. However this may be, having accomplished His work of mercy in these parts by healing the daughter of the Syro-phenician woman, He returns to the sea of Galilee, but not to Capernaum, the scene of His late dispute with the Pharisees, or to any other place on the west side of the lake. In His way from the country east of Sidon He would probably cross the Jordan to the north of the lake, and, passing through the midst of Decapolis, would come to the east side of the lake; for S. Mark says that, "departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, He came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis." The ancient writers Pliny, Ptolemy, and Josephus, agree in placing all the cities of Decapolis on the east of the Jordan, with the single exception of Scythopolis, though they do not agree as to the names of the cities included in Decapolis.

Beyond the notice of His return to the sea of Galilee these two Evangelists exhibit no further similarity in their first record of His work after His return; for S. Matthew goes on to relate that a great multitude came unto Him, bringing with them their sick to be healed. He then recounts, one by one, the different kinds of sickness and diseases that He healed. But S. Mark gives not the least intimation, either of the number or of the variety of diseases, that Jesus healed at this time, but selects a single instance, the case of a man that was deaf and had an impediment in his speech, and relates with great particularity all the circumstances connected with his cure.

After the multitude had shown their eagerness to hear, by continuing with Him three days on the desert mountain, and when they had now exhausted the provisions which they had brought with them, Jesus has compassion on them. He had fed their souls with His instruction, and He now works a miracle to satisfy the hunger of their bodies. The scene of this miracle is a mountain on the east side of the lake of Gennesaret.

WITH SEVEN LOAVES AND A FEW FISHES HE FEEDS FOUR THOUSAND MEN, &c.

S. MATTHEW xv. 32-38.

S. MARK viii. 1-9.

32 Then Jesus called His disciples unto Him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with Me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

33 And His disciples say unto Him, Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Jesus saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven, and a few little fishes.

1 In those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called His disciples unto Him, and saith unto them, I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with Me three days, and have nothing to eat:
2 and if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way:
3 for divers of them came from far.
4 And His disciples answered Him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?
5 And He asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

S. MATTHEW xv.

- 35 And He commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground.
- 36 And He took the seven loaves and the fishes,
and gave thanks, and brake them,
and gave to His disciples,

and the disciples to the multitude.
- 37 And they did all eat, and were filled:
and they took up of the broken meat
that was left seven baskets (σπυρίδας) full.
- 38 And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children.

32. ¶ Then Jesus called His disciples unto Him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with Me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

S. the disciples: S². said to them: V. omits now.
Vulg. Iesus autem, convocatis discipulis suis, dixit: Misereor turbe, quia triduo jam perseverant mecum.

33. And His disciples say unto Him, Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude?

S.V. the disciples.
Vulg. Et dicunt ei discipuli unde ergo nobis in deserto panes tantos.

34. And Jesus saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven, and a few little fishes.

35. And He commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground.

36. And He took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to His disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

S². the two fishes: S.V. the disciples.
Vulg. Et accipiens septem panes, et pisces, et gratias agens, fregit, et dedit discipulis suis.

37. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets full.

38. And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children.

S. beside children and women.
Vulg. extra parvulos et mulieres.

S. MARK viii.

- 6 And He commanded the people
to sit down on the ground:
and He took the seven loaves,

and gave thanks, and brake,
and gave to His disciples
to set before them;
and they did set them before the people.
- 7 And they had a few small fishes: and He blessed,
and commanded to set them also before them.
- 8 So they did eat, and were filled:
and they took up of the broken meat
that was left seven baskets (σπυρίδας).
- 9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand:
and He sent them away.

39. And He sent away the multitude, and took ship, and came into the coasts of Magdala.*

S.V. of Magadan.
Vulg. in fines Magedan.

This miracle of feeding a multitude, and that related in chapter xiv., have some things alike; in others they present striking differences. The chief differences between the two miracles lie in the number of men that were fed, in the number of the loaves with which they were fed, and in the amount of the fragments which remained after they had all eaten and were filled. The difference between the amount of the fragments that were left in the two miracles, though apparently trivial, is prominently put forth by the Evangelists who record the two miracles. In the first miracle (chapter xiv.) Jesus feeds five thousand men, with five loaves and two fishes, and they took up the fragments that remained twelve baskets (κοφίνους) full. All the four Evangelists record this miracle, and they each say that there were twelve baskets (κοφίνους) full of fragments. Of the four Evangelists two, S. Matthew and S. Mark, record the second miracle, where He feeds four thousand men with seven loaves and a few little fishes, and they each say that they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets (σπυρίδας) full. S. Matthew and S. Mark represent our Saviour as referring to these two miracles, and asking how many baskets (κοφίνους) remained in the one miracle, and how many baskets (σπυρίδας) in the other (Matt. xvi. 9; Mark viii. 19). The difference between the two words κοφίνους and σπυρίδας is consistently kept up, wherever the subject is mentioned, and it is implied that there is a difference between them. The English Authorized Version has rather obliterated this difference, by rendering the two Greek words by the same term, "basket." What the exact difference between them is, it is not easy to see. Some have supposed that the σπυρίς was a two-

* Magdala.—"From a comparison of Matt. xv. 39, and Mark viii. 10, we may conclude that Dalmanutha was a town on the west side of the sea of Galilee, near Magdala. The latter stood close upon the shore, at the southern end of the little plain of Gennesaret. About a mile from Magdala is a narrow glen to the south, at the mouth of which are the ruins of a village. The place is called Ain-el-Bairideh, 'the cold Fountain.' Here in all probability is the site of the long lost Dalmanutha."—SMITH'S 'Biblical Dictionary.'

handed basket, and contained twice as much as the κόφινος. That the σπυρίς was large seems certain, because it was in one of these that the disciples let down S. Paul by the wall at Damascus (ἐν σπυρίδι, Acts ix. 25).

In the first miracle the number of baskets, full of fragments that remained, was twelve, and corresponded with the number of the disciples who distributed the bread. In the second miracle the number of baskets was seven, and corresponded with the number of the loaves at first.

The difference in the two miracles, between the number of the loaves, the number of the men that were fed, the number and the kind of the baskets, full of fragments that remained, serves to distinguish the two miracles, one from the other, and to show that our Saviour's power was not limited to certain numbers.

In most of the other circumstantial details, the two miracles are much alike. In both, the multitude had continued with Him some considerable time, two or three days, before He fed them, until the provisions which they had brought with them were exhausted. In both, He prayed or blessed the bread; in both, He distributed the bread to the disciples, and the disciples to the multitude; and in both the fragments that remained were carefully taken up.

After Jesus had wrought this miracle, and had sent away the multitude, He crossed the lake with His disciples, and came to the neighbourhood of Magdala, situated at the south-west corner of the lake, or, as S. Mark says, to Dalmanutha, near the same place. Some think that Magdala and Dalmanutha are one and the same place, with two names.¹

The 39th verse of chapter xv. has such little reference to what has gone before, and such intimate connection with what follows, that it would more naturally stand as the first verse of chapter xvi. than as the last of chapter xv.²

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 51; vol. iii. p. 1131.

V. Bede, in Matt. xv. 39; vol. iii. p. 77.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xv. 39; vol. viii. p. 310.

Greswell, Harmonia, p. 168.

Tischendorf, Synopses Evangelica, p. 70.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 78.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XVI.

The keys of the kingdom of heaven.—"I assert that in these words (Matt. xvi. 19) Jesus Christ committed to His Church a full power of excommunicating.

"It is, if I am not mistaken, sufficiently agreed among Protestants, that the power which is comprehended in these words, whatsoever that power be, was not delivered to S. Peter alone, as the Papists maintain, but did likewise belong to all the rest of the Apostles without exception.

"It will also be granted me, that this power did not expire with the Apostles; but is to continue to the end of the world. Having premised this, I shall now apply myself to explain the words themselves. But, for the more clear understanding of our Saviour's meaning, we must remember that these words, which He made use of in this place, were taken from Isaiah's (xxii. 22) prophecy, where there is this passage: 'And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open and none shall shut: and he shall shut and none shall open.' The prophet speaks of Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, who the Lord foretold should come to the kingdom of Israel. Isaiah describes to us the kingdom, or the right of governing, by the key of the house of David, and the power of opening and shutting. It is very manifest that these expressions denote the highest exercise of royal authority. And therefore what man in his senses can doubt but these very words, used by our blessed Saviour, since they are so apparently taken from this passage of Isaiah, do signify a certain royal authority in that spiritual kingdom the foundation of which He was going to lay in His own Blood?

"What, I beseech you, can be understood by the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and by the power of opening and shutting, but the highest exercise of government? If the passage be taken in this sense, there is nothing in it but what is clear and perspicuous; but if the words are wrested to any other meaning, they will appear harsh, foolish, and ridiculous.

"But the followers of Erastus object that the expressions of loosing and binding do signify nothing else but the explanation of what is lawful or not lawful. And this is explained by preaching the Gospel of Christ. Such expressions occur very frequently in the Mishnah and Talmud, and in the Rabbinical writers, as Dr. Lightfoot, an author of very great knowledge in that kind of learning, has by a long induction of examples shown upon this very text. I own that this is the common subterfuge to which all our adversaries have recourse. This objection is made by Erastus, and Selden, and all the other writers against the Christian priesthood; but as plausible as it may appear, I make no doubt of utterly overthrowing it.

"I acknowledge that the expressions of binding and loosing are used by the Talmudists in this sense: but I positively deny that these words, as they are used by our Saviour, are to be interpreted the same way: for—

"1st. It is to no purpose to produce so many examples of this kind out of the Rabbins, as Dr. Lightfoot has done . . .

"Such declarations as these are derived from the 630 precepts, and from that power which the Jewish priests had of explaining and determining all things which the Law of Moses had not determined, as may be seen in Deuteronomy. But since these 630 precepts are abolished by the Gospel of Christ, and that power which was exercised by the Jewish priests does nowhere appear, it is not any way possible that we should thus interpret this passage. Nay, it is necessary that we find out another interpretation of it, and that altogether different from this.

"2ndly. Besides, it ought to be observed (for it is certainly most observable) that this power of binding or loosing is the power of the keys. As often as the priest either binds or looses a sinner, he uses the keys of the kingdom of heaven, he shuts and opens. I desire therefore that we may be allowed to explain the expressions of binding and loosing, which may seem obscure, by that of the keys of the kingdom of heaven, which is most clear and perspicuous. And then nothing can be more evident, than that by the keys of the kingdom of heaven is meant the government and power of the Christian Church: for which reason I must insist upon it, that the expressions of binding and loosing be so understood as to agree with this power of the keys. This is farther confirmed by that passage of S. John, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them: and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.' To bind therefore and to loose is the same as to remit sins and to retain them. And indeed in all the New Testament 'to remit or forgive sins' signifies nothing else but to wipe out sins, to abolish both the punishment and guilt of them, and that authoritatively. 'Son, be of good cheer,' says our blessed Saviour to the man sick of the palsy; 'thy sins be forgiven thee.'

"3rdly. I am thoroughly persuaded that the explication which I have given of this place is true; because it is confirmed both by the opinion and by the practice of the primitive Church. The Catholic Church has always claimed this authority from the times of the Apostles down to ours; and as often as occasion required has exercised it.

"The primitive Church always laid claim to this power of excommunication; and claimed it as committed to the Church by Jesus Christ in this very passage: and which is yet more, did not only always exercise this power, but accused all those of heresy who attempted either to take it away or to weaken it. This is most evidently attested both by the Montanists and by the Novatians.

"That the primitive Church claimed this authority will appear: 1st. From the most express testimonies of the Fathers. 2ndly. From the penitential canons, which almost all councils, as well general as provincial, have made. 3rdly. From the schisms which in the most ancient times were formed upon this occasion, viz. those of Montanus and Novatian."

[In proof of this the writer, Dr. Hughes, then proceeds to quote the following among other authorities:—Tertullian, 'Apolog.' 39; vol. i. p. 468, Migne. S. Cyprian, 'de Lapsis,' xvi. p. 479, xxix. p. 489; Epist. x. 1, 'ad Presbyt.' p. 251, Migne. S. Irenæus, 'contr. Hæres.' i. 13, 5; p. 588, Migne. Hermas Pastor, i. 4, 1; p. 171, Hefele. 'Canon Apost.' xii. Bp. Beveridge's works, vol. xi. p. xli.]

Dr. HICKES, 'On the Christian Priesthood,' vol. iii. p. 388.

On this subject see also Canon Churton, 'On the English Ordinal and the Power of the Keys,' p. 79, &c. (Rivingtons, 1872.)

CHAPTER XVI.

[1. The Pharisees require a sign. 6. Jesus warneth His disciples of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. 13. The people's opinion of Christ. 16. and Peter's confession of Him. 21. Jesus foresheweth His death, 23. reproving Peter for dissuading Him from it: 24. and admonisheth those that will follow Him, to bear the Cross.]

[Vulg. Iesus signi petitione ipsum tentantes arguit, quod signa temporum non dijudicarent: jubet discipulos cavere a fermento pharisaeorum ac sadduceeorum: ipsosque interrogat quem ipsum esse dicant, et Petro post illius responsionem promittit claves regni caelorum: suam autem passionem predicans, a Petro increpatur: propter quod Satanam ipsum appellat, docens quemque propriam crucem tollere, et Deum unicuique juxta sua opera redditurum.]

THE Pharisees had already on a former occasion (xii. 38) requested a sign from Jesus. They now repeat their request, but vary the form of it, and ask for a sign from heaven. It is probable that His miracle of feeding the four thousand men with seven loaves and a few fishes gave rise both to the renewal of their demand, and also to the form in which it was expressed. They¹ might reason, that secretly or invisibly to multiply a few loaves, so as to feed a vast multitude, was not a sign from heaven such as the giving of the manna was; that it was not a sign from heaven at all, and therefore no proof of His divine power, as it might be wrought by some demon, an inhabitant of earth. Considering the character of those who request the sign, Sadducees and Pharisees, we may fairly conclude that they ask for it with no hope or expectation of receiving it, but rather with a view to discredit Jesus with the multitude. The Sadducees were Atheists, and believed in neither spirit nor angels, nor the resurrection. They could have no expectation of a sign from heaven. The Pharisees, who believed in a world of spirits and in the ministration of angels, did not believe that Jesus was the Messiah and had the power to give them a sign from heaven; or if He could, that He would so satisfy their unbelief. In either case they could represent to the people, that the reason why He did not give such a sign, was because He could not.

JESUS COMES TO MAGDALA OR DALMANUTHA, WHERE THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES DEMAND OF HIM A SIGN.

S. MATTHEW xv. 39—xvi. 4.

- 39 And He sent away the multitude, and took ship,
and came into the coasts of Magdala.
xvi. 1 The Pharisees
also with the Sadducees came,
and tempting desired Him that He would shew them a sign from heaven.
2 He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.
3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day:
for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?
4 A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign;
and there shall no sign be given unto it,
but the sign of the prophet Jonas.

S. MARK viii. 10—12.

- 10 And straightway He entered into a ship
with His disciples,
and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.
11 And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with Him, seeking of Him
a sign from heaven, tempting Him.
12 And He sighed deeply in His spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you,
There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxiv. p. 21. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 1; vol. viii. p. 311.

1. The Pharisees also with the Sadducees came, and tempting desired Him that He would shew them a sign from heaven.

2. He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.

3. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?

S.V. omit When it is evening—the signs of the times?
Vulg. facto vespere dicitis: Serenum erit, rubicundum est enim cœlum: et mane: Hodie tempestas, rutilum enim triste cœlum. Faciem ergo cœli dijudicare nostis: signa autem temporum non potestis scire?

4. A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. And He left them, and departed.

S.V. the sign of Jonas.
Vulg. nisi signum Ionnæ prophete.

The signs in the heavens do not indicate more clearly, or more certainly, the weather that is approaching, than the signs of the times prove that the Messiah has come. The former they can see easily, the latter they cannot. Daniel (ix. 25, &c.) had foretold the time when the Messiah would come. This, according to their own calculation, was now completed. Isaiah had prophesied that when God should come upon earth, "then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing," &c. (xxxv. 5, 6). None but Jesus had ever professed to be able to perform the miracles indicated by Isaiah. They saw Him daily opening the eyes of the blind, healing the sick and lame, and causing the dumb to speak, but they could not from thence draw the only and necessary conclusion, that Jesus was the Messiah, the God-Man here foretold.

All this they fail to see is a proof of His divine power, and they ask for a further proof. The only further proof of His divine power which He will give them is that which Jonah prefigured, namely, His Resurrection. This would prove that He, Jesus, the Son of Mary, was the conqueror over death, the Saviour of mankind, the Lord of heaven and earth.

Leaving the neighbourhood of Magdala, Jesus and His disciples go by sea to the other side (eis τὸ πέραν). This may be either from one part of that indented coast to another, on the same west side of the lake; or it may mean from the west side to the east. From S. Mark we gather that they came to Bethsaida. If Bethsaida Julias, on the north-east of the lake, be ever referred to in the Gospels, under the name of Bethsaida, which is very doubtful,* it will be here; if not, Bethsaida on the west side of the lake will be meant.

JESUS WARNS HIS DISCIPLES AGAINST THE LEAVEN OF THE PHARISEES, &c.

S. MATTHEW xvi. 4-12.

S. MARK viii. 13-21.

4 And He left them,
and
departed.
5 And when His disciples were come to the other side,
they had forgotten to take bread.
6 Then Jesus
said unto them,
Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.
7 And they reasoned among themselves, saying,
It is because we have taken no bread.
8 Which when Jesus perceived,
He said unto them, O ye of little faith,
why reason ye among yourselves,
because ye have brought no bread?
9 Do ye not yet understand, neither remember

the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets (κοφίνους) ye took up?

13 And He left them,
and entering into the ship again
departed to the other side.
14 Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.
15 And He charged them, saying,
Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees,
and of the leaven of Herod.
16 And they reasoned among themselves, saying,
It is because we have no bread.
17 And when Jesus knew it,
He saith unto them,
Why reason ye,
because ye have no bread?
perceive ye not yet, neither understand?
have ye your heart yet hardened?
18 Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not?
and do ye not remember?
19 When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets (κοφίνους) full of fragments took ye up?
They say unto Him, Twelve.

* See this Commentary on S. John vi.

S. MATTHEW xvi.

- 10 Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand,
and how many baskets (σπιρδας)
ye took up?

11 How is it that ye do not understand that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees?

12 Then understood they how that He bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

5. And when His disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

S.V. the disciples.
Vulg. Et cum venissent discipuli ejus trans fretum.

6. ¶ Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and
of the Sadducees.

S. omits unto them.
Vulg. Qui dixit illis.

7. And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have taken no bread.

8. Which when Jesus perceived, He said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread?

S.V. omit unto them: S.V. ye have no bread.
Vulg. Sciens autem Jesus, dixit: Quid cogitatis intra vos modice fidei, quia panes non habetis?

9. Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets* ye took up?

Vulg. et quot ophinos sumpsistis?

10. Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

Vulg. et quot sportas sumpsistis?

11. How is it that ye do not understand that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees?

S.V. concerning bread? but beware of.
Vulg. quia non de pane dixi vobis: Cavete, &c.

12. Then understood they how that He bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of

S. MARK viii.

- 20 And when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets (σπιριδων) full of fragments
took ye up?

21 And they said, Seven.
And He said unto them,
How is it that ye do not understand?

the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

S*. not beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees, but.
Vulg. quia non dixerit cavendum a fermento panum, sed a doctrina pharise-orum et sadducaeorum.

It is probable that this conversation took place when they were in the ship, as they were crossing to the other side.¹
When Jesus said unto them, "Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees," &c., they understood His words literally, and then remembered that there was with them in the ship but one loaf, and that if Jesus landed in some desert place, as He sometimes did, they would be unable to procure more. When they thought upon this, they became troubled and anxious about it. They were in the neighbourhood of Bethsaida, where Jesus had fed five thousand men with five barley loaves, but even this did not bring to their recollection His divine power. The disciples showed ignorance in supposing that Jesus referred to the leaven of bread, and they showed want of faith in His power in fearing that they should want bread while He was with them.

The leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees was the corrupt doctrine, which, like leaven, permeated and influenced all their thoughts, all their teaching, all their actions. Jesus Himself said (S. Luke xii. 1) that the leaven of the Pharisees was hypocrisy—a punctilious performance of the outward acts of religion, in order to gain the reputation of sanctity among men, but with an utter disregard of God's will and favour. Somewhat akin to this, though showing itself in a different form, was the leaven of the Sadducees, which may be described in general terms as unbelief, either that God over-ruled the affairs of man in this present world, or that He would, in a future state, call him to account for his actions in this.

The Pharisees were a numerous body, and included men of all classes. The Sadducees were few in number, chiefly the rich and powerful,—men whose unscrupulous ambition led

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxiv. p. 23.

* Baskets.—"κόφινος is a sort of hand-basket carried by a man, and σπιρς, a pannier, or hamper, carried by a beast of burden. S. Paul made his escape in the latter—he could scarcely have done so in the hand-basket. In the older versions we find these terms confused by the common rendering of 'baskets,' with the exception of Wicliffe, who renders κόφινους by 'coffins,' evidently in the sense of a small basket."—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 133.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 5; vol. viii. p. 312.

them to aim at the highest offices in the State. Instead of the leaven of the Sadducees, S. Mark has "the leaven of Herod." The Sadducees were just the sort of men whom the Herods would be glad to employ to strengthen their position in the nation, and, in return for substantial advantages of this world, men like the Sadducees, who disbelieved in any other, might be able to render Herod real service. Thus the Sadducees and the Herodians might in some respects be almost synonymous terms.*

To correct their want of faith, in reasoning as if He had not the power to supply any lack of bread there might be, and thus to show them that by "leaven" he could not mean "the leaven of bread," He reminds them of the two occasions on which He had fed vast multitudes of men with a few loaves. By putting this into the form of questions, He makes them enumerate the two separate occasions—the number of men that were fed in the first, five thousand, and the number in the second, four thousand; the number of loaves with which He fed them—in the first case, seven, and in the second, five; the number of baskets that were filled with fragments that remained—in the first case, twelve, and in the second, seven; and also the different kinds of baskets that were used. In the first miracle the basket was a κόφινος, and in the second a σπυρίς. It would be impossible for language to distinguish more clearly between these two miracles, and it enabled the disciples to understand how He bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

Cæsarea Philippi was built on the site of the ancient Paneas by Herod Philip, and was called Cæsarea, in honour of the reigning Emperor Tiberius Cæsar, and Philippi, to distinguish it from Cæsarea on the sea-coast. Not far from this place, and, as some think, on this very spot, had once stood the ancient city of Dan, so often mentioned in the Old Testament as one of the seats of the idolatry established by Jeroboam. Situated, as it was, on the northern border of the land of Israel, and inhabited very much by Gentiles, Cæsarea Philippi might not be an inappropriate place for the following conversation. Here, perhaps, there would be less fear of the Pharisees, or Herodians, than in Jerusalem, or in any city in the interior. Among strangers, no accusation of aiming at the regal power could be founded on any words that might be overheard and tortured into a sense they were never intended to bear.¹

PETER AND THE REST AGAIN PROFESS THEIR FAITH IN CHRIST.

S. MATTHEW xvi. 13-20.

- 13 When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi,
- He asked His disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?
- 14 And they said, Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.
- 15 He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?
- 16 And Simon Peter answered and said,
- Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.
- 17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven.

S. MARK viii. 27-30.

- 27 And Jesus went out, and His disciples, into the towns of Cæsarea Philippi:
- and by the way He asked His disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?
- 28 And they answered,
- John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.
- 29 And He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?
- And Peter answereth and saith unto Him,
- Thou art the Christ.

S. LUKE ix. 18-21.

- 18 And it came to pass, As He was alone praying, His disciples were with Him:
- and He asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?
- 19 They answering said,
- John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.
- 20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am?
- Peter answering said,
- The Christ of God.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxvi. p. 27. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 13; vol. viii. p. 313.

* See note on chapter xxii. 16.

S. MATTHEW xvi.

S. MARK viii.

S. LUKE ix.

18 And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build My Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

19 And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

20 Then charged He His disciples that they should tell no man that He was Jesus the Christ.

30

And He charged them that they should tell no man of Him.

21

And He straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing.

13. ¶ When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi,^a He asked His disciples, say—ing, Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?^b

S.V. that the Son of Man is?

Vulg. Quem dicunt homines esse Filium hominis?

^a Caesarea Philippi.—"With Dan the Holy Land properly terminates. But the easternmost source of the Jordan, about four miles distant, is so intimately connected with it, both by historical and geographical association, that we must go forwards yet a little way into the bosom of Hermon. Over an unwanted carpet of turf—through trees of every variety of foliage—through a park-like verdure, which casts a strangely beautiful interest over this last recess of Palestine, the pathway winds, and the snowy top of the mountain itself is gradually shut out from view by its increasing nearness; and again there is a rush of waters through deep thickets, and the ruins of an ancient town—not Canaanite, but Roman—rise on the hill-side: in its situation, in its exuberance of water, its olive-groves, and its view over the distant plain, almost a Syrian Tivoli.

"This is Caesarea Philippi—chosen doubtless on this very account by Philip the Tetrarch, as the site of his villas and palaces, beside the temple here dedicated by his father, Herod, to the great patron of their family, Augustus Caesar. Yet this, though its chief historical name, is not its only one. At the outskirts of the Holy Land it combines in a tangled web all the associations of that land almost from first to last. High on the rocky slopes above the town still lingers the name of Hazor, in the earliest times, as we have seen, the capital of Northern Palestine—"the head of all those kingdoms." A few rude stone blocks on a rocky eminence mark the probable site of the capital of Jabin, and close beside it still remains a deep circular grove of ilexes—perhaps the best likeness which now exists of the ancient groves so long identified with the Canaanitish worship of Astarte. Hard by this height of Hazor, but commanding a nearer view of the plain, is the castle of Shubeibeh, the largest of its kind in the East, and equal in extent even to the pride of European castles at Heidelberg; built, as it would appear, in part by the Herodian princes, in part by Saracenic chiefs; famous in the days of the Crusades, as the residence of one of the chiefs of the Assassins, the 'old man of the mountain.'

" The cavern-sanctuary of Caesarea, unknown to Israelite history, was at once adopted by the Grecian settlers, both in itself and for its romantic situation the nearest likeness that Syria affords of the beautiful limestone grottoes which in their own country were inseparably associated with the worship of the Sylvan Pan. This was the Paneum or 'sanctuary of Pan,' within the limits of Palestine; which, before the building of Philip's city, gave to the town the name of Paneas, a name which has outlived the Roman substitute, and still appears in the modern appellation of Banias. Greek inscriptions in the face of the rock testify its original purpose: the reverence thus begun was continued by the Romans; the white marble temple built by Herod to Augustus crowned its summit; and in later times Jewish pilgrims mistook the traces of this Gentile worship for the vestiges of the altar of the Danites and Jeroboam; and Christian or Mussulman devotion has erected above it one of the numerous tombs dedicated to the mysterious saint whom the one calls St. George and the other Elijah.

"But amidst these Pagan recollections of Paneas or Caesarea Philippi, there is one passage which brings it within the confines of Sacred History. As it is the northernmost frontier of Palestine, so it is the northernmost limit of the journeys of our Lord. In the turning-point of His history, when 'from that time many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him,' where even the Twelve seemed likely 'to go away;' and He 'could no more walk in Judea because the Jews sought to kill Him;' then He left His familiar haunts on the sea of Galilee, to return to them, as far as we know, only once more. He crossed to the north-eastern corner of the lake, and passed, as it would seem, up the rich plain along its eastern side, and came into 'the parts,' into 'the villages,' of Caesarea Philippi. It is possible that He never reached the city itself; but it must at least have been in its neighbourhood that the confession of Peter was made: the rock on which the temple of Augustus stood, and from which the streams of the Jordan issue, may possibly have suggested the words which now run round the dome of St. Peter's."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 396.

^b Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?—"I. That phrase or title, 'the Son of Man,' which Christ very often gives Himself, denotes not only His humanity, nor His humility (for see that passage, John v. 27, 'He hath given Him authority of executing judgment, because He is the Son of Man'), but it bespeaks the seed promised to Adam, the second Adam; and it carried with it a silent confutation of a double ignorance and error among the Jews. 1. They knew not what to resolve upon, concerning the original of the Messiah, and how He should rise,—whether He should be of the living, as we noted before, the manner of His rise being unknown to them; or whether of the dead. This phrase unties this knot, and teaches openly that He, being a seed promised to the first man, should arise and be born from the seed of the woman. 2. They dreamed of the earthly victories of the Messiah, and of the nations to be subdued by Him; but this title, 'the Son of Man,' recalls their minds to the first promise, where the victory of the promised seed is the bruising of the serpent's head, not the subduing of kingdoms by some warlike and earthly triumph. [¶ II.

14. And they said, Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

Vulg. Alii Ioannem Baptistam, alii autem Eliam, alii vero Jeremiam, aut unum ex prophetis.

15. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?

16. And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

17. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona:^a for flesh and blood^b hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven.

S.V. But Jesus answered.

Vulg. Respondens autem Iesus.

The three expressions, "the Messiah," "the Son of David," and "the Son of Man," all conveyed to the Jews the same meaning; they were in a manner synonymous expressions for the seed of the woman promised to Adam, the Deliverer of Israel that should come.

The Jews expected that, when the Messiah did appear, He would be a full-grown man, that His descent would be unknown, that He would be a man of superior holiness and great power, sufficient to deliver them from their enemies. But they did not expect that He would be of a different nature from themselves; they had not the least idea that He would be God, the Second Person in the Godhead. The Messiah and the Son of God were not to the Jewish mind synonymous terms. This, then, was the lesson that the Jews had to learn, that Jesus the Son of Mary was the Messiah, and also that He was the Son of God.

It may be that our Saviour's question has reference to these two points. It may mean: 1. Whom do men in general say that I am? Do they say, that I am the Messiah, the Son of David? and, if not, whom else do they say that I am? Or it may mean: 2. Believing that I am the Messiah, whom do men say that I am? Do they believe Me to be a mere man like themselves, of the same nature with themselves? and, if not, whom do they believe Me to be?

His question is understood and answered in the first sense, when the disciples give the opinion of the Jews; and in the first and second sense, when Peter gives his own belief, or his own and that of the other disciples. It is in the first of these senses that the question is answered when they state the belief of the Jews. Some of the Jews believed, and some had already openly confessed, that Jesus was the Messiah, but the disciples do not make any allusion to them. Probably the disciples state only those opinions of the Jews which they knew to be incorrect. The Jews may have concluded that Jesus was John the Baptist, or Elijah, or Jeremiah, &c., from some general resemblance in their holy life and zeal. John was but lately dead, and the memory of his life and preaching would be fresh in their minds. Elijah, as they concluded from the Old Testament, had never died, and was at some future time to reappear on the earth again; they supposed therefore that Jesus might be Elijah, or that He might be one of the old prophets risen from the dead. There had been no prophet since Malachi, four hundred years ago, and they seem to have held that the list of prophets was closed, and that any new prophet would be but one of the old prophets risen again, and reappearing among men. Some have supposed that Jeremiah is selected as a representative of all the prophets, because he stood first in the Jewish canon of the prophets.¹

When Peter answers our Saviour's question, it is in both its senses: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." He was the Messiah, the promised Seed of the woman, the Son of David, and also the Son of God the Author of all life, Himself too the Author of life, from everlasting to everlasting. John the Baptist, Elijah, Jeremiah, and all the prophets, were in a sense the sons of God, but they were only created sons. As the Son of Mary, Jesus was created; as the Son of the living God, He was the Creator.

On several occasions the disciples seem to have had considerable knowledge as to the real nature of Jesus, as when Nathanael said, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel" (John i. 49). But it is plain from the description which Jesus gives of S. Peter's confession, and from the blessing which He bestows on it, that this con-

¹ Lightfoot, ii. 265, also quoted in S. Matthew xxvii. 9.

^a "H. When, therefore, the opinion of the Jews concerning the person of the Messias, what He should be, was uncertain and wavering; Christ asketh, not so much whether they acknowledged Him the Messias, as, acknowledging the Messias, what kind of person they conceived Him to be. The Apostles and the other disciples whom He had gathered; and were very many, acknowledged Him the Messias; yea, those blind men, chap. ix. 27, had confessed this also: therefore that question had been needless, as to them, 'Do they think Me to be the Messias?' But that was needful, 'What do they conceive of Me, the Messias?' and to this the answer of Peter has regard, 'Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God,' as if he should say, 'We knew well enough a good while ago that Thou art the Messias; but as to the question, what kind of person Thou art, I say, Thou art the Son of the living God.'

^b "Therefore the word trisa, Whom, asks not so much concerning the person, as concerning the quality of the person."—LIGHTFOOT on Matthew xvi. 13; vol. ii. p. 204.

^c Simon Bar-jona.—^d This form Yonah may represent two distinct Hebrew names: (1) יונה, 'A dove,' the prophet's name, Jonah; (2) יהונן, 'The grace of Jehovah,' Johanan or John. . . . Our Lord seems to allude to the meaning of the words in Matt. xvi. 17, 'Blessed art thou Simon Bar Jona (Son of the grace of God), for flesh and blood did not reveal it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven.' There is probably a similar allusion in all the passages in S. John."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 159.

^e Flesh and blood.—"The Jewish writers use this form of speech infinite times, and by it oppose men to God." After quoting the Talmud, he says, "This phrase occurs five times in that one column."—LIGHTFOOT on Matthew xvi. 17; vol. ii. p. 204.

fession of Him is greater than any that had been made before.¹ Peter was the son of Jonas, but this knowledge of Jesus was not such as could be gained by any faculties which he possessed as the son of Jonas. "Flesh and blood," mere human nature, unassisted by the power of God, could not reveal this to him. This knowledge, that Jesus was the Son of the living God, was supernaturally revealed to him, and was not acquired by an induction of his natural faculties; it was not the result of any human reasoning whatever.

18. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this Rock^a I will build My Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.^b Vulg. Quia tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram edificabo Ecclesiam meam.

In the earliest times a difference arose as to the meaning of the words, "Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build My Church," &c. But the passage was never regarded as one of those the right interpretation of which affects the Catholic faith. In general terms it may be said that two interpretations existed then as now; one to the effect that S. Peter was the Rock on which the Church should be built, and the other that Jesus Himself was the Rock, or Jesus confessed to be the Son of the living God, Jesus confessed to be the God Incarnate. But so far was this passage from being regarded as a test of orthodoxy that the greatest defenders of the Catholic faith held different opinions respecting it. S. Augustine, one of the greatest men in the early Church, confessed that in his younger days he believed that S. Peter was meant as the Rock on which the Church should be built, and that later in life, after more mature reflection, he changed his mind and believed that this was not the sense of the passage. These opinions were left to the individual judgment, and it was never attempted to uphold either of them as an article of the Christian faith, or to embody either of them in any creed of the universal Church. Neither of them was regarded as necessary for intercommunion between Christians.

The following are the three principal interpretations that have been held in the Church on this passage:—

1. That S. Peter is this Rock on which (ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ πέτρῃ) Jesus says that He will build His Church.

2. That Jesus is Himself this Rock.

3. That Jesus confessed to be the Son of the living God, or Jesus confessed to be the God Incarnate, is this Rock.

1. The first is the interpretation which is held by all, or almost all, the members of the Church of Rome, but which is held by comparatively few outside that communion. It is generally believed by them that this was the interpretation accepted by all or nearly all the Fathers in the primitive Church. Even so able and so fair a commentator as Cornelius a Lapidé, writing in the seventeenth century, says that, with

¹ S. Hilary Piet., in Matt. xvi. 16; vol. i. 1009.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. liv.; vol. ii. p. 107. [Theoph.

^a Upon this Rock.—"Our Saviour doth not say, Thou art Peter, and upon thee I will build My Church, but 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build My Church;' viz., upon Him whom thou hast now confessed to be the Son of God, or upon this confession which thou hast made of Him: and, howsoever the Church of Rome may force another sense upon the words, certainly this is the exposition which the primitive Church gave of them;—some of the Fathers expressly avouching Christ Himself to be the rock here understood, others Peter's confession of Christ and faith in Him; all which come to one and the same thing." [In proof of this he quotes, among others, S. Augustine, Sermo lxxvii. (alias 13 de verb. Dom.), vol. v. p. 479, Migne;—in Joan. xxi.; tract. 124, vol. iii. p. 1973;—in Epist. l. Joan. iv.; tract. x. 1, vol. iii. p. 205;—S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. liv.; vol. i. p. 108;—S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 18; vol. vii. p. 117, Migne;—BISHOP BEVERIDGE, 'On the Thirty-nine Articles,' art. xxvii. p. 581.

"The foundation and firmness which the Church of Christ hath, is placed not in, or upon, the person, much less the successor, of S. Peter: but upon the faith which, by God's Spirit in him, he so firmly possessed; which is the common received opinion both of the ancient Fathers and the Protestants. 'Upon this rock,' that is, upon this faith, 'will I build My Church.'—ARCHBISHOP LAUD'S 'Conference with Fisher,' vol. ii. p. 13; Oxford ed.

"The rock' even there spoken of is not S. Peter's person, either only or properly, but the faith which he professed. And to this, besides the evidence which is in text and truth, the Fathers come in with very full consent." [He then supports this with quotations from early writers.]—Ibid., vol. ii. p. 257.

"He still tells us, 'the Bishop of Rome is S. Peter's successor.' Well, suppose that, what then? What? Why, then, he succeeded in all S. Peter's prerogatives which are ordinary, and belonged to him as a bishop,—though not in the extraordinary, which belonged to him as an Apostle. For that is it which you all say, but no man proves. If this be so, yet then I must tell A. C., S. Peter in his ordinary power was never made pastor of the whole Church; nay, in his extraordinary, he had no more powerful principality than the other Apostles had. A primacy of order was never denied him by the Protestants; and an universal supremacy of power was never granted him by the primitive Christians."—Ibid., vol. ii. p. 208.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvi. 16; vol. i. p. 84.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 17; vol. ii. p. 651.

^b The gates of hell shall not prevail against it (πύλαι ᾧδου οὐ κατισχύσουσιν αὐτῆς).—"The reference of the pronoun αὐτῆς may be to either of the preceding terms πέτρα and ἐκκλησία; and if to the former, the purport of the sentence would be, that no death would ever come over that living truth, of which Peter had received a revelation and made an avowal."—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on N. T.,' p. 19.

"By πύλαι ᾧδου one class of critics understand simply death or destruction, so that the meaning will be, The Christian Church shall never be destroyed; whilst others contend that πύλαι refers to the Oriental custom of meeting and deliberating at the gates of palaces and cities; of which usage there are several vestiges both in the Old Testament and in the writings of modern travellers; and the name Ottoman Porte is deduced from this practice. According to this acceptance, the meaning will be, that the power and the machinations of Hell itself shall not be able to subvert the Church of Christ. This latter opinion is plausible, and it is espoused by Casaub. Exercit. p. 356, and also by Michaelis in loc.; but the objection is, that πύλαι ᾧδου is no other than שַׁעַר מוֹת of the Old Testament, which is used only to signify death, or the entrance into a new state of being; and the πύλαι ᾧδου of the classical writers has no other meaning."—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 171.

the exception of S. Augustine, all the Fathers are unanimous in holding that S. Peter is the rock here mentioned, "Verum ipsum Petrum hic dici petram, reliqui omnes Patres quasi universum conspirant."¹

It is not difficult to understand how, in an uncritical and unsuspecting age, even able writers came to believe that this was the real state of the case, and to be thoroughly honest in their defence of this. It is different in these days: for we know now that many of the passages that were then published as quotations from the writings of the Fathers are spurious, and utterly worthless for the purpose they are alleged to prove. To take the following as a specimen:—A competent scholar² and a distinguished ecclesiastic in the Church of Rome has lately declared that the publication of Hinschius's edition of the 'Decretales Pseudo-Isidorianæ'³ has brought to light the fact that out of twenty passages which Melchior Cano, in his celebrated work 'De locis Theologicis,' in the sixteenth century quotes as writings of the Fathers, to prove the authority of the Bishop of Rome on matters of the faith, only two are genuine, the rest being from writings now universally acknowledged to be spurious. Hence, in spite of the firm belief of many members of the Church of Rome, it can easily be shown that the principal Fathers in the primitive Church did not hold that S. Peter was here meant as the Rock on which Jesus would build His Church.

It is on this passage chiefly that modern Roman Catholic writers found the tremendous claims which they make for the Chair of S. Peter; namely, that, as the foundation on which the Church was built, Peter was in his time, as his successors are in their time, the source of all ecclesiastical power and jurisdiction, the supreme and infallible teacher in the Church. History shows that such claim was never made by S. Peter himself, or by others for him in his own lifetime, and that the further removed from him his successors in the Episcopal Chair have been the greater has been the claim made for them, on the ground that S. Peter was the Rock on which the Church was built.

2. The second interpretation of this passage is, that Jesus meant Himself when He spake of "this Rock." This is in substance the same as the third interpretation, but in the particular form in which it is expressed it has not been so generally held as the third, though advocated by S. Augustine.⁴ In support of this opinion the following are quoted as similar forms of expression used by our Saviour. Speaking of Himself, He says, "Destroy this Temple" (τοῦτον τὸν ναόν), John ii. 19; "Whoso falleth on this Stone" (τοῦτον τὸν λίθον), Matt. xxi. 44; "If any man eat of this Bread" (τοῦτον τὸν ἄρτον), John vi. 51. The expression "This man" or "this" (οὗτος) is often used in the New Testament to denote a third person, and, from the instances given above, it will be seen that it is often used by a speaker to denote himself, but it is seldom, if ever, used to denote a person to whom the person who uses it is speaking.

3. The third interpretation is, that the truth which Peter had just confessed—namely, that Jesus the Son of Mary was the Son of the living God—that Jesus confessed to be God and Man was the Rock on which He would build His Church. This⁵ was the interpretation adopted by the most eminent among the early Christian Fathers. How many of them held this opinion it is not easy to say, because it is impossible to speak for those who never expressed any opinion, or whose opinion has not come down to us. As it is, there remain the words of many who recorded their conviction that the Rock on which Jesus would build His Church is Peter's confession, Jesus confessed to be both God and Man.

From other portions of their writings we are warranted in saying, and in justice to them it ought to be said, that those Fathers of the primitive Church who interpreted this passage so as to make S. Peter the Rock on which the Church was built would have been shocked at the very thought of the assumptions that have been founded upon this interpretation in modern times.

Forming our judgment on the extant writings of those early writers who held that S. Peter was designated by Christ as the Rock on which He would build His Church, we find it impossible to believe that they held this in any sense compatible with the decree which was carried in the Vatican Council, July 18, 1870, to the effect that the Pope of Rome, when he speaks officially, ex cathedra, on the faith or on morals, is invested with Infallibility; and this on the ground that he is the successor of S. Peter, and that S. Peter was the Rock on which Christ promised to build His Church.*

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 18; vol. viii. p. 316.

² Deuxième Lettre à Mgr. Dechamps, par A. Gratry, p. 8.

³ Decretales Pseudo-Isidorianæ, by P. Hinschius; Leipsic, 1863.

⁴ S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. 124; vol. iii. p. 1973.

Retract. i. 21; vol. i. p. 618.

⁵ Sermo lxxvi. (alias 13 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 479.

⁶ S. Ambrose, in Epist. ad Ephes. ii. 20; vol. iv. p. 380.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 18; vol. vii. p. 117. [S. Chrysostom,

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. liv.; vol. ii. p. 108.

S. Cyril Alex. de Trinitat. iv.; vol. viii. p. 865.

Basil Seleuc., Orat. 25.

Eusebius Emisenus, Homil. in Natal.

S. Petri.

Pope Adrian I. Epist. ad Episcopos Gal. et Hispan.

Pope Felix III. Epist. ad Zen. Aug.

See also Dr. Pusey's note on Tertullian, de Præscript. ch. xxi. p. 492, Library of the Fathers.

See Bishop Beveridge, 'On the Thirty-nine Articles,' art. xxxvii. p. 582.

politian and an American. A protest against the proposed decree had been signed by sixty-three bishops the day before, who had then left Rome.

CANON I.

"Si quis dixerit, Beatum Petrum Apostolum non esse a Christo

Those who believe that whatever our Saviour promised by those words to S. Peter was fulfilled, will also believe that what really took place is a clue to the nature of His promise. But neither the history of the New Testament, nor what may be called contemporary ecclesiastical history—that is, the history of the times nearest that of the New Testament—anywhere records that S. Peter ever made any claim to such superiority over his brethren the Apostles, or to supremacy in the Church at large, or that this was ever accorded to him by the Church. What we certainly find recorded is, that S. Peter first, and in the presence of the other Apostles, declared the terms of salvation, and thus opened the door of the Church, to the Jews gathered on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards to the Gentiles; that he continued a zealous and faithful preacher of the Gospel, and ruler in the Church; and that if he was in any way personally or officially superior to the other builders in the Church, he was so in respect to his zeal. From the silence of the New Testament and of contemporary history, we are driven to conclude that, if Jesus meant that S. Peter was the rock on which the Church should be built, this was not fulfilled in S. Peter personally, but in his successors in the Episcopal Chair; that this claim was never made for S. Peter in his own lifetime, but that it was for the first time heard of long after his death; and that the longer the time since his death, the greater has been the claim made for his successors upon this supposed promise to him.*

In the Scriptures the term "the Rock" seems to be exclusively appropriated to God. In the Old Testament, in every variety of expression, God is represented as the Rock, as instances, "Who is a Rock, save our God?" (2 Sam. xxii. 32; Ps. xviii. 31;) "He only is my Rock" (Ps. lxi. 2). In the New Testament, Jesus Christ is represented as the Rock on which the Church is built. "Other foundation (θεμελίον) can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. iii. 11).

Some have supposed that "Petrus" is the same word as "Petra," only put into a masculine form, as being applied to a man; but grammatically there would be no necessity for such a change for this purpose; for proper names do not depend on their termination for their gender. The names of men, whatever may be their termination, are all masculine. Agrippa, for instance, stands as the name of a man as well as any word ending in us. Others have thought that "Petrus" is an adjectival form of "Petra," as Κηφᾶς of Κηφά, and that "Petrus" does not simply mean a Rock like "Petra," but one concerned with a rock, or a builder on a rock.

It had been supernaturally revealed to Peter that Jesus the Son of Mary was also the Son of God; that He was both God and Man, and in answer to the question of Jesus, "But whom say ye that I am?" he boldly confesses it. The question "But whom say ye that I am?" (ὅμοις δὲ τίνα με λέγετε εἶναι;) was not addressed to Peter as an individual, but to them all as a body, and it is not improbable that Peter answered as the spokesman, in the name of the rest.¹ Jesus then explains to him his blessedness in having such a revelation

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo lxxvi. (alias 13 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 479. [S. Ambrose,

S. Ambrose, de Incarnatione, iv.; vol. iii. p. 827. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. lxxi. p. 27.

Dominum constitutum Apostolorum omnium principem et totius Ecclesie militantis visibile caput, vel eundem honoris tantum, non autem vere propriæque jurisdictionis primatum ab eodem Domino nostro Jesu Christo directe et immediate accepisse, anathema sit.

CANON II.

"Si quis dixerit non esse ex ipsis Christi Domini institutione seu jure divino, ut Beatus Petrus in primatu super universam Ecclesiam habeat perpetuos successores, aut Romanum Pontificem non esse Beati Petri in eodem primatu successorem, anathema sit.

"Itaque nos traditioni a fidei Christiane exordio preceptæ fideliter inherendo ad Dei Salvatoris nostri gloriam, religionis Catholicæ exaltationem et Christianorum populorum salutem, sacro approbante concilio, docemus et divinitus revelatum dogma esse definitum Romanum Pontificem cum ex cathedra loquitur, id est cum omnium Christianorum pastorem et doctorum munere fungens, pro suprema sua apostolica auctoritate, doctrinam de fide vel moribus ab universa Ecclesia tenendam definit per assistentiam divinam ipsi in Beato Petro promissam ea infallibilitate pollere, qua divinus Redemptor Ecclesiam suam in definienda doctrina de fide vel moribus instructam esse voluit, ideoque ejusmodi Romani Pontificis definitiones ex sese, non autem ex consensu Ecclesie irrefragabiles esse. Si quis autem huic nostræ definitioni contradicere, quod Deus avertat, presumperit, anathema sit."—See 'Rome during the Vatican Council,' by Pomponio Leto, trans., pp. 213, 219, 338, 340.

* The Papal Supremacy.—The supremacy of the See of Rome began in the fourth century. Then for the first time the precedence among equals willingly conceded to Rome in early ages was turned into a claim of authority; which was demanded on a new ground, and from that time never ceased to advance in pretensions, until it assumed the form of The Supremacy—that is, absolute dominion throughout Christendom."—PROFESSOR HUSSEY, 'Rise and Fall of the Papal Power,' p. 1.

"The Church of the second century plainly contradicted many fundamental positions of the later doctrine of the Supremacy, as to the necessity of being in communion with and obedience to S. Peter, and that S. Peter's chair is the channel of all grace, order, and authority in the Church.

"Such contrast and opposition between the early ages and later times are to be found through the whole history of the Papacy. Not one of those successive accretions of power, or 'developments,' which have been pointed out above as the stages by which the Supremacy arose, can be reconciled with the principles and the practice of the early ages. On the contrary, they were in general resisted when they first appeared.

"So long as the Church was at liberty, the several acts of encroachment under the name of S. Peter met with continued opposition. The Churches of Greece, Asia, Syria, Africa, and even Britain, in turn protested against aggressions of various kinds.

"When the Oriental and the African Churches were crushed by the Mahometan conquests, and the Roman Church had obtained complete ascendancy over all the West, those doctrines were propounded as catholic truths, concerning S. Peter and his authority, on which the claim of the Supremacy as an Article of Religion is founded.

"But these doctrines are irreconcilably opposed to the doctrines of the early Church. Either, therefore, they must be abandoned, because the evidence of history is all against them; or else the authority of antiquity and history must be given up, and those who hold them must confess that they do not stand upon ancient usage and the consent of the primitive Church; but that the distinguishing principle and chief article of their system is of later growth."—Ibid., p. 203.

made to him, and that the name of Petrus, or a builder on the Rock, which He had given to him more than two years ago, had relation to this; that the truth which he had just confessed, namely, that Jesus was the Son of the living God, was the Rock on which He would have him build in His Church. All the Apostles in their degree were builders in the Church, but Peter was so in a pre-eminent degree, and this confession of Peter furnished the occasion for Jesus to declare to him what was the nature of the Rock on which He would have Him build in His Church. Probably no better comment can be found of these words than those of another builder in the Church: "According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. iii. 10, &c.) Here we see who is the Foundation, and who are the builders in the Church.

And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

In ancient times¹ "gates" generally implied a strongly built or fortified city, and hence the word "gates" came to stand alone for a city. Numberless examples of this occur in the Old Testament. Dividing the whole rational creation into two parts—the kingdom of God, or His Church, and the kingdom of Satan, or of hell—Jesus promises that the gates of hell, or the kingdom of Satan, shall never prevail against His kingdom, the Church founded on Jesus, God and Man.

But the Church against which "the gates of hell" shall never prevail, is not a society of men voluntarily associated for a longer or shorter time, according to inclination, for mutual help and instruction, and held together by the suppression of all definite belief. The Church of Christ is a corporate body, supernaturally united to each other in the closest of bonds; one condition of membership with which is the belief that Jesus is God and Man, with a provision made, from the very beginning, for the appointment of its rulers and officers, who are invested with almost unlimited spiritual and supernatural power, all of which is supplied for the eternal salvation of the members of this body.

19. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven:^a and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

S.V. omit And before I will give.
Vulg. Et tibi dabo.

Two questions arise with respect to these words: 1, as to their meaning; and 2, as to the person or persons to whom the promise is made.

Some commentators take the two propositions of this verse as two separate promises, and understand the giving of the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and the power to bind and to loose, as distinct and unconnected with each other. They then conclude that the keys of the kingdom of heaven were given to Peter alone, and that this promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when Peter first declared to the Jews, and afterward to the Gentiles, in the person of Cornelius, the terms of salvation and admission into the Church of Christ.

But in those passages of Holy Scripture where the key is emblematic, as in Isaiah xxii. 22, it is emblematic of an office, not of an act; of authority to execute, not a single act, or one kind of acts only, but any number, and of opposite acts. A key implies the power to shut as well as to open.

The older commentators held that the keys of the kingdom of heaven, the power to bind and to loose, have relation to the same subject, and are part of one and the same gift, and that the latter part is only an explanation of the former; and that this is explained by our Saviour's own words elsewhere, when He breathed on them and saith unto them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained." (John xx. 23.) It is probable that Jesus did not at this time confer this power either on S. Peter or on the other Apostles, but merely gave the promise of it, and that S. John (xx. 22, 23) afterwards records the actual fulfilment of His promise.

The keys of a city are the emblem of the governing power, whether this be the king, or his officers under him, one or many. The Church from the earliest times has interpreted the giving of the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and power to bind and to loose, as authority to govern and direct the Church, to convey through the Sacraments pardon and remission of sin to penitents, and also power to withhold this,

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lvi. p. 32.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 18; vol. i. p. 220.

[Cornelius

^a I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.—"Another foundation they would ground Peter's primacy, and so the Pope's supremacy upon, is the verse, 'And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven' (Matt. xvi. 19). From which words they conclude that the power of the keys was granted only to Peter; not considering that what is here said to Peter in the singular is elsewhere spoken to all the disciples in the plural number: 'Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven' (Matt. xviii. 18); and, 'Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained' (John xx. 23). So that the power of the keys was not only committed to Peter, but to all the disciples, and so not to the Pope only, but to all ministers rightly ordained." [In proof of this he quotes, S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. p. 247.—S. Pacianus, Epist. ad Sympron. i. 6; Migne's Patrol. vol. xiii. p. 1057.—S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi., tract. 124; vol. iii. p. 1973, Migne.—S. Basil, Constit. Monast. xxii. 5; vol. iii. p. 1409, Migne.—S. Cyprian, de Unitate Eccl. iv.; p. 499, Migne.—Theophylact, in Matt. xvi.; vol. i. p. 85.—S. Leo Magnus, de Natali, Sermo iv. 3; vol. i. p. 151, Migne.]—BISHOP BEVERIDGE, 'On the Thirty-nine Articles,' art. xxvii. p. 584.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 18; vol. viii. p. 319.

in the case of obstinate offenders. These words have always been looked upon as the Church's warrant for her whole system of penitential discipline.* In these words Jesus entrusts to His Apostles to carry out on earth the ministration which Isaiah had long before declared as His: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call My servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah: and I will clothe him with Thy robe, and strengthen him with Thy girdle, and I will commit Thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open." (Isaiah xxii. 20, &c.)

The second question is, To whom did our Saviour give this power? Undoubtedly He gave it to S. Peter, and the Church of Rome says that He gave it to S. Peter only, or, if to the other Apostles, to them in subordination to S. Peter, and by transmission from him. That this was not the doctrine of the primitive Church, which held that Jesus gave the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and power to bind and to loose to all the Apostles, and to all equally, many of the early writers bear witness.¹

If "to bind and to loose" is but an explanation of the power conveyed by giving the keys of the kingdom of heaven, as is generally admitted, then, though Jesus did not give the keys of the kingdom of heaven to the rest of the Apostles in the same express definite terms as He did to S. Peter, He gave the power implied by them to all the Apostles equally.

For S. Matthew relates that, but a short time after this, Jesus said to all the Apostles, "Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (xviii. 18).

It is most probable that our Saviour does not on this occasion confer the power of the keys, but gives the promise of it now and actually conferred the power after His Resurrection, when, as S. John relates, "He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained" (xx. 22). This we may conclude from the tenses of the verbs which He now uses, taken in connection with the circumstances of the case. They would not require this power, nor could they make use of it, until after the Resurrection: for it was not until then that they received their full commission to build up the Church. The tenses of the verbs which He now uses, all point to a future time. This is the case whether He is addressing S. Peter alone, as "I will give" (δώσω), "Whatsoever thou shalt bind" (ὃ ἐὰν δήσῃς), &c.; or the Apostles collectively, as "Whatsoever ye shall bind" (ὅσα ἐὰν δήσητε). The future time indicated here is most probably the time after His Resurrection, when by a formal and external act, namely, by breathing on them, He conveyed to them the power to forgive sins. But in this gift all the Apostles are represented as sharing equally with S. Peter.

Take into consideration the whole of this passage—our

¹ S. Cyprian, de Unitate Ecclesiae, iv.; p. 499.

S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. p. 247.

S. Augustine, in Jean. tract. 124; vol. iii. p. 1976.

S. Pacianus, ad Sympron. Epist. i. 6; Migne's Patrol. vol. xiii. p. 1057. [S. Leo,

S. Leo, Sermo de Nativit. iv.; vol. i. p. 151.

S. Basil, Constitut. Monast. xiii. 5; vol. iii. p. 1409.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvi. 19; vol. i. p. 85.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 19; vol. ii. p. 653.

* The penitential discipline of the Early Church.—"In the second century, among the lapsed were reckoned not only those who had apostatized, but those who had sacrificed to the heathen gods, or committed murder, adultery, theft, fornication, and the like. Excommunication was passed upon offenders with a view to induce submission. There were two kinds—suspension from Communion constituted the less, and a total exclusion from the Church, the greater. The last was commonly notified to the adjacent, and even foreign Churches; and till reconciled by his own bishop the offender was held universally excommunicate. When he had made his submission, he was admitted to the condition of a penitent; but the duration of his penance depended as well upon the depth of his contrition as upon the magnitude of his offence. The express laws regulating it, however, belong to a later age. Martyrs and confessors were heard in behalf of the culprit, and, by interceding for him, often alleviated the length or rigour of the discipline imposed upon him: hence what are called 'libelli pacis' were frequently supplicated in the prisons where they were confined, and in the time of S. Cyprian had actually grown into a great abuse.

"A public confession of the crime by the delinquent, ἐξομολογία as it is called, was indispensable to his restoration; but it was a privilege that was never allowed a second time." Prostration upon the earth, tears, fasting, entreaties to be forgiven, Tertullian adds sackcloth and ashes, were the accompaniments. Absolution and reconciliation were administered by the bishop in the face of the congregation, but not until the penitent had entreated pardon from the bishop, presbyters, deacons, and the whole assembly; it was tendered in a set form, and accompanied with imposition of hands and prayer. Those who were deemed incorrigible, or had lapsed a second time, were never restored to the communion of the Church, but continued under a perpetual anathema. The most solemn re-admission of penitents took place before Easter; other rites are mentioned, especially towards the close of the century."—E. S. FOULKE'S, 'Manual of Eccles. Hist.', p. 32.

"Excommunication was the sentence passed upon the lapsed, after which they were obliged to supplicate to be admitted as penitents in the most abject way. It was a favour not unfrequently refused, especially to those who had lapsed a second time, to murderers and idolaters. These were even allowed to die unreconciled to the Church. So greatly was penance valued, that S. Cyprian calls it a 'Sacrament'; and it was only to be obtained by the deepest contrition and humility, accompanied by the outward acts of fasting and weeping, prostration before the doors of the church, and a garb of sackcloth and ashes.

"But the first and principal act connected with it was the public confession already mentioned, made in the face of the Church from the earliest age. Private confession found its way into the Eastern Church after the Decian persecution, about A.D. 260, and a presbyter was added to the ecclesiastical roll, whose peculiar office it should be to take care of the penitents, and to receive confessions. Such a custom was, however, unknown to the African Church, though there can be no doubt that counsel and advice were asked privately of the bishops and presbyters, as the emergency required."—Ibid., p. 68.

Saviour's question to His disciples, Peter's answer to that question, and His charge to His disciples in consequence of that answer—and it will appear more than ever probable, that Peter spake not for himself alone when he made his confession, but for himself and the rest of the Apostles. Our Saviour's question was, "Whom say ye that I am?" (ὅμοις δὲ τίνα με λέγετε εἶναι;) To this they could not all twelve reply. Peter uses no prefatory words implying that he spoke in his own name only, such as, I say Thou art, but "Thou art." The reply to a question addressed to all, though uttered by one, would be taken for all, unless in some way restricted. Peter is the spokesman for the rest, and Jesus addresses him singly, and promises an office in the Church suitable to the faith expressed, "I will give to thee," &c. When He makes the promise of the office, He addresses Peter personally and singly; but when He makes good His promise, and confers the office, He confers it on them all. When, too, He charges them that they should tell no man that He was the Christ, He does not confine this charge to Peter, as if He alone had possessed this knowledge, or he alone had made this confession. To none of them could this knowledge be imparted by "flesh and blood," or through their natural faculties alone.

This had been supernaturally revealed to them, and they are charged not to tell to any man that He was the Christ.

20. Then charged He His disciples that they should tell no man that He was Jesus the Christ.

S.V. the disciples: S.V. that He was the Christ.
Vulg. Tunc præcipit discipulis suis, ut nemini dicerent quia ipse esset Jesus Christus.

It is not very clear why Jesus so strictly charged His disciples not to tell anyone that He was the Christ. He Himself continued to teach this to the people, and was at last put to death because He made Himself the Son of God. Some¹ have supposed that it was because the disciples were not sufficiently grounded in this truth to teach it efficiently to others. That they were still unable to reconcile His Passion with the fact that He was the Son of the living God, we learn in the next few verses.

The Evangelist is careful to mark the time when Jesus began to impart to His disciples the knowledge of His future Death and Passion. It was not until after He had drawn from them the confession that He was the Christ, the Son of the living God.

JESUS FORETELLS HIS SUFFERINGS: PETER EXPOSTULATES WITH HIM.

S. MATTHEW xvi. 21-28.

S. MARK viii. 31-38; ix. 1.

S. LUKE ix. 22-27.

21	From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.	31	And He began to teach them, that the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.	22	Saying, The Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.
22	Then Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him, saying, Be it far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee.	32	And He spake that saying openly. And Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him.
23	But He turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan: thou art an offence unto Me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.	33	But when He had turned about and looked on His disciples, He rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind Me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.
24	Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man will come after Me,	34	And when He had called the people unto Him with His disciples also, He said unto them, Whosoever will come after Me,	23	And He said to them all, If any man will come after Me,

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. liv.; vol. ii. p. 110.
Theophylact, in Matt. xvi. 20; vol. i. p. 85.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 20; vol. ii. p. 655.

S. MATTHEW xvi.

let him deny himself,
and take up his cross,
and follow Me.

25 For whosoever will save his life
shall lose it :
and whosoever will lose his life
for My sake

shall find it.

26 For what is a man profited,
if he shall gain the whole world,
and lose his own soul ?
or what shall a man give
in exchange for his soul ?

27 For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels : and then He shall reward every man
according to his works.

28 Verily I say unto you,
There be some
standing here,
which shall not taste of death,
till they see the Son of Man
coming in His kingdom.

S. MARK viii.

let him deny himself,
and take up his cross,
and follow Me.

35 For whosoever will save his life
shall lose it ;
but whosoever shall lose his life
for My sake
and the Gospel's,
the same shall save it.

36 For what shall it profit a man,
if he shall gain the whole world,
and lose his own soul ?

37 or what shall a man give
in exchange for his soul ?

38 Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of Me
and of My words
in this adulterous and sinful generation ; of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when He cometh

ix, 1 in the glory of His Father with the holy angels.
And He said unto them,
Verily I say unto you,
That there be some
of them that stand here,
which shall not taste of death,
till they have seen the kingdom of God
come with power.

S. LUKE ix.

let him deny himself,
and take up his cross daily,
and follow Me.

24 For whosoever will save his life
shall lose it :
but whosoever will lose his life
for My sake,

the same shall save it.

25 For what is a man advantaged,
if he gain the whole world,
and lose himself, or be cast away ?

26 For whosoever
shall be ashamed of Me
and of My words,

of Him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when He shall come in His own glory,
and in His Father's,
and of the holy angels.

27 But I tell you
of a truth,
there be some
standing here,
which shall not taste of death,
till they see
the kingdom of God.

21. ¶ From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.

S. V. *. Jesus Christ.
Vulg. Iesus.

Jesus had already given intimations both of His Death and Resurrection, as when He said, "He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me" (S. Matt. x. 38); or, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up" (S. John iii. 14); or, when He said, "Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (ii. 19); or, "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (S. Matt. xii. 40). It might have been difficult to reconcile these intimations, which Jesus had already given of His Death and Resurrection, with the statement of the Evangelist here, that "from that time forth (ἀπὸ τότε) He began to instruct His disciples in these things," but for an expression used by S. Mark, "And He spake that saying openly"

(παρρησία). Up to this time, when He had taught them this truth, He had done so, either by calling their attention to some portion in the previous history of their nation, which being a history of the past was also a prophecy of the future, a prophetic representation of His Death or Resurrection, or He had done this in language clothed in figure, which they could not easily understand. From this time forward He began to teach this truth "openly;" that is, nakedly, and without the use of any figurative expression or prophetic emblem.

22. Then Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him, saying, Be it far from Thee, Lord : this shall not be unto Thee.

Margin. Pity Thyself.
V. and saith unto Him, rebuking.
Vulg. coepit increpare illum, dicens : Absit a te, Domine.

23. But He turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan : thou art an offence unto Me : for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.^a Vulg. Vade post Me Satana, scandalum es mihi : quia non sapis ea quæ Dei sunt, sed ea quæ hominum.

^a See note on xviii. 6.

Peter, taking Jesus apart from the rest (προσλαβόμενος),¹ that he might speak to Him the more unreservedly, or, in his earnestness, laying hold of His hand or His robe, remonstrates with Him. This Peter does from no distrust of His power to avoid this, but in friendly entreaty to spare Himself. Probably he lays before Him the indignity, or the impropriety, of the Son of the living God suffering Death. But so entirely human is Peter's reasoning, and so little in accord with the economy of Redemption, that Jesus terms him His adversary, His hindrance in the accomplishment of His work, and bids him depart. He calls him by the same name as the devil, "Satan" or "adversary," because Peter, by his advice, would unwittingly bring about the same state of things to mankind as the devil sought to effect by his temptations. (See note on S. Matthew xvii. 6.)

When confessing Jesus to be the Son of the living God, Peter spoke by divine inspiration; when dissuading Him from His Death and Passion, his reasoning is human, his motives and principles are entirely human, and not only so, they are opposed to the economy of man's salvation. Jesus must pursue the path which God has appointed for Him, however distasteful it may be to His human nature. This must be the case not with Jesus only, but with Peter too, and with every real disciple of Him. There are three things necessary for every man who would be His disciple—to deny himself, to take up his cross, and to follow Jesus.

24. ¶ Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me.

S. Mark says that before He uttered these words, He called the people to Him with His disciples. This was not a subject to be imparted only to the Twelve; it was, as it were, an axiom, an elementary truth, to be learnt by all who would be His disciples.

1. Let him deny himself. He must refuse to gratify his own inclinations, just as much as if they were not his. His own judgment, his own will, his own natural desires, must always be given up, when they are opposed to the calls of God, and often when they are not, as a sacrifice well pleasing to Him. To deny oneself implies not merely to abjure one's desires or possessions, but life itself, if so required.²

2. Take up his cross. In these days "to take up the cross," like the word "crucifixion," has a meaning entirely metaphorical, and has little or no reference to its literal sense. In the days of our Saviour, these terms had a more definite and practical meaning. He who was condemned to death by crucifixion, had to carry his cross to the place of crucifixion, and as a preparatory act for crucifixion itself. This was the first in that series of indignities and cruelties which ended only with death—an excruciating, lingering death. With this cruel custom constantly before their eyes, even the metaphorical meaning of the words "take up the cross" would be much more vivid and real than it is with us. He who would be the disciple of Jesus, must be prepared to take up his cross in its plain, literal sense, with all the ignominy and torture that attended it.

That Jesus did not exclude the metaphorical or figurative meaning of these words is plain from S. Luke, who says, "Let him take up his cross daily." In this sense, each man's cross might be different from that of others. In the case of one man, the cross might arise from his family; of another, from the peculiarity of his own temperament; and of a third, from outward circumstances. Each man has his own cross to bear, that which is most suited to his infirmity, or which is most required for his correction, and which God has, in the course of events, appointed for him.

3. He must follow Jesus. He must follow Jesus bearing His Cross, through insult, indignity, torture, and through every species of humiliation to death, and through death to everlasting happiness.

The value and necessity of the three qualifications which He lays down as essentially requisite for His service, He explains and enforces by the following reflections:—1. That by not acting thus, a man loses that which is dearest to him, while by acting thus he gains it. 2. The incomparable, and therefore the inestimable, value of the soul. 3. That this same Son of Man, who now foretells His Death and Passion, and calls upon them to follow Him, will come to be the Judge of all mankind, and will requite to every man according to his work.

25. For whosoever will save his life^a shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it.

In this verse the word "life" (ψυχή) is used in two different senses, or perhaps it may more correctly be said to refer to two different stages of the same life. In the first part of the verse it refers to life, consisting in the union of the soul and the body as it now is; in the second, it refers to life, consisting in the union of the soul and the body glorified after the Resurrection, to everlasting life, to life passed in the presence of God.

He³ who with a view to save his life—that is, to avoid death by persecution, or in any way to prolong his life—shall

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 22; vol. vii. p. 119.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. liv.; vol. ii. p. 112.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 22; vol. ii. p. 659.

^a Life—soul (ψυχή).—"It might be necessary to vary the renderings of ψυχή between 'soul' and 'life,' and of σῶσαι between 'to save' and 'to make whole.' But in the case of the former word such variations as we find for instance in Matt. xvi. 25, 26, and the parallel passages, deserve to be reconsidered."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 58.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lv.; vol. ii. p. 122.

³ Origen, in Matt. tomus xii.; vol. iii. p. 1041.

disown Jesus and His truth shall lose the life everlasting; while he who sacrifices his life to promote the cause of Jesus, shall enter into the everlasting life. This consideration receives additional force from the following.

26. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?^a or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

S. shall a man be profited.

Vulg. Quid enim prodest homini.

In the A. V. the connection between this verse and the former is somewhat obscured, though the sense remains uninjured, by a change in the translation of the word $\psi\chi\eta$. In the former of these two verses, the same Greek word is rendered "life," and in the latter "soul;" and this fairly expresses the meaning of our Saviour's argument. If, to gain some worldly advantage, or even to save his present life, a man refuse to deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Jesus, he shall lose his life; that is, life everlasting. But what gain can compensate for the loss of life everlasting? or what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose the life everlasting?

The last of the three reflections by which He endeavours to incite them to deny themselves, and to take up their cross and follow Him, is that He, the Son of Man, will come to judge the world, and to reward men according to their deeds, and that He will especially reward such actions, as being the fulfilment of His own commands.

27. For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his works.

28. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom.

S.V. That there be.

Vulg. Amen dico vobis, sunt quidam de hic stantibus.

"The Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels;" "The Son of Man coming in His kingdom;" "The kingdom of God;" "The kingdom of God come with power;"—all these different expressions are made use of to reveal to man the same dispensation or economy of God; and they have generally been interpreted as admitting of at least two distinct fulfilments, a nearer and a more remote, but with different degrees of fulness. This will be most fully and perfectly fulfilled at the day of judgment, when the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels, and shall require to every man that ever lived according to his work. This is also interpreted as having received a partial fulfilment at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the overthrow of the Jewish polity, when the Son of Man took vengeance on the Jewish nation for their rejection of Him. This fulfilment, fearful as it was, but faintly foreshadowed that which is still to come.

It is certain that one among the Apostles, S. John, lived to see "the coming of the kingdom of God with power" in the destruction of Jerusalem, and some have concluded that, when Jesus said, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom," He alluded to His coming to punish the Jewish nation. Others,¹ and with a greater degree of probability, suppose that He then referred to His Transfiguration. Immediately after this promise, all the three Evangelists go on to relate His Transfiguration, as if that were the fulfilment of the promise which He had made.

It may be that the revelation of His glory in His Transfiguration was made to them to give them a foretaste of the glory of the kingdom of God, and thus to enable them to deny themselves, to take up the cross, and follow Him. Though this revelation was granted to three only among the Twelve, it was probably intended for the comfort and encouragement of all the disciples. Express permission was given to them to divulge "the vision," after a short interval; that is, after His Resurrection from the dead.

^a S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xvi. 28; vol. i. p. 1013.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. ix. 28; vol. ii. p. 1700.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 28; vol. vii. p. 121.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lvi.; vol. ii. p. 135.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvi. 28; vol. i. p. 87.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 28; vol. ii. p. 667.

* See note * in the preceding page.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Mount Tabor.—"On the 10th we left Nazareth, very early in the morning, to go eastward to Mount Tabor, called by the people Jebel Tour; and travelling two hours between low hills, we came into the plain of Esdraelon: the mount is on the west side of it, and about two leagues distant from Nazareth. A view of that hill may be seen in the fifth plate at I: it is one of the finest hills I ever beheld, being a rich soil, that produces excellent herbage, and is most beautifully adorned with groves and clumps of trees. The ascent is so easy, that we rode up the north side by a winding road. Some authors mention it as near four miles high, others as about two; the latter may be true, as to the winding ascent up the hill. This mountain is situated in the great plain of Esdraelon: the top of it, which is about half a mile long, and near a quarter of a mile broad, is encompassed with a wall, which Josephus built in forty days; there was also a wall along the middle of it, which divided the south part, on which the city stood, from the north part, which is lower, and is called the Meidan, or place, being probably used for exercises when there was a city here, which Josephus mentions by the name of Ataburion. Within the outer wall, on the north side, are several deep fosses, out of which, it is probable, the stones were dug to build the walls; and these fosses seem to have answered the end of cisterns, to preserve the rain-water, and were also some defence to the city. There are likewise a great number of cisterns underground, for preserving the rain-water. To the south, where the ascent to the hill or approach to the walls was most easy, there are fosses cut on the outside to render the access more difficult. Some of the gates also of the city remain, as Babel Houah (the Gate of the Winds), to the west, and Babel Kubbe (the Arched Gate), which is a small one to the south. Antiochus, king of Syria, took the fortress on the top of this hill. Vespasian also got possession of it, and, after that, Josephus fortified it with strong walls; but what has made it more famous than anything else, is the common opinion from the time of St. Jerome, that the transfiguration of our Saviour was on this mountain, when Moses and Elias appeared as talking to Him in the presence of Peter, James, and John.

"On the east part of the hill are the remains of a strong castle, and within the precinct of it is the grot in which there are three altars, in memory of the three tabernacles which St. Peter proposed to build, and where the Latin fathers always celebrate on the day of the Transfiguration. It is said, there was a magnificent church built here by St. Helena, which was a cathedral when this town was made a bishop's

see. Some late authors have thought that this was not the place of the Transfiguration; but as the tradition has been so universal, their opinion is generally exploded. There was formerly a convent of Benedictine monks here; and on another part of the hill a monastery of Basilians, where the Greeks have an altar, and perform their divine service on the festival of the Transfiguration. On the side of the hill, they show a church in a grot, where, they say, Christ charged His disciples not to tell what things they had seen, till He was glorified.

"Mount Tabor is not only a most beautiful hill in itself, but also commands a very glorious prospect, especially of many places famous in sacred writ: as, to the south, of the mountains of Samaria, and the hills of Engaddi; to the east, what they call the hill of Hermon, and at the foot of it, Nain and Endor; and north-east of that, the mountains of Gilboa, so fatal to the family of Saul. As to Hermon, a mountain of that name is mentioned by St. Jerome in this part; but it may be very much doubted whether this is really the hill that is meant in Scripture, for the reasons I shall give hereafter. At the south-west corner of the plain, one sees Mount Carmel. To the north, the mount on which our Saviour delivered His sermon to the people, and, near it, the place where He blessed and miraculously distributed the loaves to the multitudes. The sea of Tiberias is likewise seen from this height, and to the north-west of it, Saphet, on a very high mountain; to the north of which, a much higher is seen, called Gebel-Sheik, which seems to be Hermon, and is always covered with snow; at the foot of it the river Jordan rises, a little more than a day's journey distant from Damascus.

"At the foot of Mount Tabor, to the west, on a rising ground, there is a village called Debourah, probably the same that is mentioned in Scripture, on the borders of the tribes of Zabulon and Issachar. There is likewise a ruined church at that place, where, it is said, Christ left the rest of the disciples before His Transfiguration. Anyone who examines the fourth chapter of Judges may see that this is probably the spot where Barak and Deborah met at Mount Tabor with their forces, and went to pursue Sisera; and on this account, it might have its name from that great prophetess, who then judged and governed Israel; for Josephus relates, that Deborah and Barak gathered the army together at this mountain."—POCOCKE, 'Travels,' vol. ii. p. 64. See also THOMSON, 'The Land and the Book,' p. 433.

CHAPTER XVII.

[1. The transfiguration of Christ. 14. He heals the lunatic, 22. foretelleth His own passion, 24. and payeth tribute.]

[Vulg. Christi in monte transfiguratio, quam jubet discipulos silentio servare, donec a mortuis resurgat: Eliam dicit venturum, imo jam venisse, sed cognitum non fuisse, nempe Joannem Baptistam: puerum lunaticum curat, quem discipuli ob modicam fidem curare non poterant: ostendens quanta sint virtutis, fides similis grano sinapis, jejuniū, et oratio: Passionem suam prædicit: pro se quoque et Petro didrachma solvit, invento in ore piscis stater.]

THE words by which S. Matthew describes the interval between our Saviour's promise to His disciples and His Transfiguration before them, are "after six days" (μεθ' ἡμέρας ἕξ); those by which S. Luke describes it, are "about an eight days" after (ὥσπερ ἡμέραι ὀκτώ). It is plain that these are meant as equivalent expressions to indicate the same time, the difference between them being that S. Matthew implies six whole days, and S. Luke six whole days, with the addition of a part of a day at the beginning when the promise was made, and another at the end when it began to be fulfilled.¹ Even were the difference between the two Evangelists much greater in appearance than it is, the qualifying term used by S. Luke would be quite sufficient to reconcile their description of this interval.

It is uncertain what mountain it was on which Jesus was transfigured. Many think it was Mount Tabor. S. Cyril of Jerusalem and S. Jerome,² writing in the fourth century, speak of Mount Tabor as the scene of the Transfiguration; and they speak of it in such a way as to imply that this was the opinion then generally received by the Church. Travellers and commentators show that this continued to be the universal belief down to the sixteenth century.³ After that it began to be questioned whether Tabor was the Mount of Transfiguration, on the ground of its situation, as being too far distant from Cæsarea Philippi.⁴ In more modern times, an opinion has widely prevailed that Tabor could not possibly be the Mount of Transfiguration, because, from the nature of some ruins on its summit and from some passages in Josephus, it is conjectured that Mount Tabor was, at the time of the Transfiguration, the site of a fortified city.⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, who examines the objection to Tabor being the Mount of Transfiguration on the ground of its situation, and who was also aware of the ruins on its summit ("palatiorum et turrium"), still holds that the opinion expressed by S. Cyril and S. Jerome was the correct one. He says, "Hæc est sententia Patrum et fidelium ut videatur Ecclesie traditio." This was also the opinion of Pococke,⁶ who had examined Mount Tabor itself. But our uncertainty as to the mountain in no way affects the narrative of the Evangelists. For they have made use of no words to indicate either the name or the locality of the mountain.

Into this mountain Jesus retires with Peter, James, and John his brother—that is, James the son of Zebedee, who was afterwards the first Bishop of Jerusalem, and was put to death by Herod Agrippa I. (Acts xii.) These are the same three disciples whom Jesus had before selected to be witnesses of His power, when He raised the daughter of Jairus from the dead (S. Mark v. 37), and afterwards of His Agony in the garden of Gethsemane (S. Matt. xxvi. 37).

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 1-8.

S. MARK ix. 2-8.

S. LUKE ix. 28-36.

1 And after six days
Jesus taketh
Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up
into an high mountain

2 And after six days
Jesus taketh with Him
Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up
into an high mountain

28 And it came to pass
about an eight days after these sayings,
He took
Peter and John and James, and went up
into a mountaia

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 1; vol. vii. p. 121.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 56; vol. iii. p. 1133.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lvi.; vol. ii. p. 135.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvii. 1; vol. i. p. 88.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvii. 1; vol. ii. p. 669.

² S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. xii. 16, p. 744.

S. Jerome, Epist. cviii. (alias 27) ad Eustachium; vol. i. p.

³ Arculf, p. 9; Willibald, p. 16; Sawulf, p. 46—Early Travels in Palestine, Boha's ed.

⁴ Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. xvii. 2.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 2; vol. viii. p. 329.

Lightfoot, on S. Mark ix. 2; vol. ii. p. 346.

⁵ Robinson, Biblical Researches, vol. iii. p. 221, &c.

⁶ Pococke, Travels, vol. ii. p. 64.

S. MATTHEW xvii.

S. LUKE ix.

S. LUKE ix.

apart,

apart by themselves :

29

to pray.

2 and was transfigured
before them :
and His face did shine as the sun,
and His raiment was white
as the light.

and He was transfigured
before them.

And as He prayed,
the fashion of His countenance was altered,

3

And His raiment became shining,
exceeding white as snow ;
so as no fuller on earth can white them.

and His raiment was white
and glistering.

3

And, behold, there appeared unto them

4

And there appeared unto them

30

And, behold, there talked with Him
two men,
which were Moses and Elias :

Moses and Elias talking with Him.

Elias with Moses :
and they were talking with Jesus.

31 who appeared in glory, and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep :
and when they were awake,
they saw His glory, and the two men that stood with Him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from Him,
Peter said

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here :
if Thou wilt,
let us make here three tabernacles ; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

5

And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here :
and
let us make three tabernacles ; one
for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here :
and
let us make

three tabernacles ; one
for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias :
not knowing what he said.

5 While he yet spake,
behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them :

7

And
there was a cloud
that overshadowed them :

34

While he thus spake,
there came a cloud,
and overshadowed them :
and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

and behold a voice
out of the cloud,
which said,
This is My Beloved Son,
in whom I am well pleased ;
hear ye Him.

and a voice came
out of the cloud,
saying,
This is My Beloved Son :

35

And there came a voice
out of the cloud,
saying,
This is My Beloved Son :

hear Him.

hear Him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And
Jesus came and touched them, and said,
Arise, and be not afraid.

8

And suddenly, when they had looked round about,
they saw no man any more,
save Jesus only with themselves.

36

And when the voice was past,

Jesus was found alone.

1. And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart,

Vulg. Et post dies sex assumit Jesus Petrum et Iacobum et Ioannem fratrem eius, et ducit illos in montem excelsum secretorum.

2. And was transfigured before them : and

His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light.

Vulg. Vestimenta autem ejus facta sunt alba sicut nix.

3. And, behold, there appeared unto them
Moses and Elias talking with Him.

Jesus is transfigured before them; that is, He undergoes such a change in His form or appearance, that He exhibits to them not His Divine nature, but some property of His human nature, which should be to them an indication and a proof of His Divine nature.¹ We have no reason to think that He displayed before them all the supernatural properties of His human Body, but only that which is here specified, its glory. This was a foretaste of the glory which He will hereafter reveal to the blessed, when their power to receive it shall have been increased. This glory He communicates to His raiment, and to Moses and Elijah who attend Him. His face is particularly mentioned, but not so as to imply that the glory was confined to His face, and did not extend to His whole Body. S. Luke says that this glory came over Him as He prayed. The Son of Man prays to the Father; and while in the act of adoration, "His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light." It is probable that it is this glory to which S. John alludes, when He says, "We beheld His glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father" (i. 14). Prayer to God is the act which still assimilates man most nearly to God.

Moses and Elijah appeared as the representatives of the Law and the prophets, the one to bear witness that Jesus the Son of Mary was the Messiah foreshadowed and foretold by the Law, and the other by the prophets; and that in Him was fulfilled both the Law and the prophets.² In being attended by these two men, Jesus showed His power over the living and the dead. Elijah had never died, but had been removed from men in some miraculous manner. Moses had died, though a mystery attended the disposal of his body (Deut. xxxiv. 6; Jude 9).

Moses and Elijah are represented as standing. The posture of Jesus is not mentioned, and painters of the Transfiguration generally represent Him as raised above them in the air. Some have held this to be a mistake, and have concluded from the context that Jesus was also standing.³

The subject of their discourse was "the decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." It was but six days since Jesus had Himself forewarned His disciples of His Death and Passion at Jerusalem, and the Transfiguration was probably vouchsafed to three of their number, to strengthen them against the shock which their minds would naturally undergo, when they beheld Him, whom they had believed to be the Son of the living God, nailed to the Cross, by human hands, as a common criminal, and thus put to a death of cruelty and shame. The glory which emanated from Him would show that His Divine nature was united with the human, and was only veiled by the human; that He who could impart such glory to His Body, and even to His raiment, and to the persons of the two who attended Him, could not want the power to save Himself from crucifixion.

To see the glory of Jesus would prove His Divine nature, His power to save Himself from death; to see the glory of Moses and Elijah, fellow-servants, men like themselves, would inspire the Apostles with a desire to share in such a reward.

We gather from S. Luke (ix. 37) that the disciples were in the mount all night. How long they were cognizant of the glorious vision—whether during the whole time of its duration, or only the latter part of it—is uncertain. Some have so translated the passage, as to imply, that though their eyes were heavy with sleep, they awoke out of sleep, and then saw the vision; others, that though their eyes were heavy with sleep, they still kept awake, and thus saw the vision. Anyhow, they saw the vision when awake (διαγρηγορήσαντες δὲ εἶδον). It was not one which appeared to them in their sleep.

Many conjectures have been formed as to the way in which the disciples recognized Moses and Elijah. The Evangelists simply imply that they did so, without assigning any explanation how.

Peter, wrapt in ecstatic delight and at a loss how to express his wish for its continuance and for the retention of Moses and Elijah, whom he saw preparing to depart, proposes to build tabernacles for their perpetual abode on the mount.

4. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if Thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

S.V. let me make.

Vulg. Si vis, faciamus hic tria tabernacula, tibi unum, Moysi unum, et Elie unum.

5. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is My Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him.

6. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid.

8. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only.

S.V. save Jesus Himself only.

Vulg. neminem viderunt, nisi solum Iesum.

At the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai, there was also a cloud, but it was one of darkness. This was a cloud of light, a "bright cloud" (νεφέλη φωτεινή); "the excellent glory" (τῆς μεγαλοπρεποῦς δόξης), as S. Peter calls it (2 Pet. i. 17). This cloud of glory was an instrument or vehicle for the voice from the Father; it was a witness to the Divine nature of Jesus, for it brought honour and glory to Him from the Father: it was a means of departure to Moses and Elijah, ¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 45; vol. iv. pp. 406–412.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 3; vol. vii. p. 122.

³ S. Ambrose, in Luc. ix. 30; vol. ii. p. 1702.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lvi.; vol. ii. p. 136.

Euthymius, in Matt. xvii. 3; vol. ii. p. 677.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 2; vol. viii. p. 331.

and a covering to the disciples to moderate the excessive glory of the vision.¹

The same voice which was heard at the Baptism of Jesus is now repeated at the Transfiguration, with the addition of the words "Hear ye Him." This voice is addressed to Jesus in the presence of His three disciples, for Moses and Elijah had already departed, and it bears witness: 1. That Jesus, the Son of Mary, is the Son of God the Father; 2. That He is the source and medium of all reconciliation between man and God, and of all acceptable service from man to God; and 3. That Jesus, the Son of Mary, is the fulfilment of the Law and the prophets, which are now completed, save as they receive fresh and perpetual fulfilment in Him, and that He is the Legislator for all time to come. An instance of His all-prevailing power is immediately given in the restoration of His disciples, who had been struck to the ground, overpowered by fear at the sound of the voice which they had just heard.

The Transfiguration is commemorated by the Church on August 6th. The tradition which places it on that day cannot be traced back farther than the ninth century, though it may have had an earlier origin.² Those who believe that the Transfiguration took place between the Third Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles will consider August 6th a not unlikely time for it. According to the arrangements of the events in our Saviour's life adopted in this Commentary, the Transfiguration took place between the Feast of Tabernacles and the Fourth Passover, and therefore later than August by several months.³

JESUS EXPLAINS TO THE THREE DISCIPLES THE COMING OF ELIAS.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 9-13.

- 9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead.
- 10 And His disciples asked Him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?
- 11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.
- 12 But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed.
- Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them.
- 13 Then the disciples understood that He spake unto them of John the Baptist.

S. MARK ix. 9-13.

- 9 And as they came down from the mountain, He charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of Man were risen from the dead.
- 10 And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean.
- 11 And they asked Him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?
- 12 And He answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of Man, that He must suffer many things, and be set at nought.
- 13 But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

S. LUKE ix. 36.

- 36 And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

9. And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead.

It is probable that this command extended to their fellow-disciples, as well as to the people; and S. Luke adds that, "they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen." Thus no occasion would

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. lxvii. p. 48.
² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 5; vol. viii. p. 335.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 2; vol. viii. p. 330.
³ McClellan, New Testament, pp. 457, 577.

be given for envy at the preference shown to the three disciples, no ground for disbelief of the glorious vision as too great for their power to conceive. The Death and Passion of Jesus was such a searching trial of the real character of His disciples that no room was afterwards left for jealousy of each other. The Resurrection was such a display of His power and glory, that no degree of glory connected with Him would be incredible after that.

10. And His disciples asked Him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias^a must first come?

S. the disciples.

Vulg. et interrogaverunt eum discipuli.

11. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.^b

S.V. And He answered: V. omits unto them: S.V. omit first.

Vulg. At ille respondens, ait illis: Elias quidem venturus est, et restituet omnia.

12. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew Him not, but have done unto Him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them.

13. Then the disciples understood that He spake unto them of John the Baptist.

Four hundred years before the Transfiguration the prophet Malachi had declared, "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet (Septuagint, Ἡλίας τὸν Θεοβίβην) before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse" (iv. 5, 6). From these words the Jewish nation generally had gathered that Elijah the Tishbite should reappear before the coming of the Christ, and prepare the way for His reception. But they knew only of His coming once; they were utterly ignorant of the Messiah's twofold coming—first in humility, and afterwards in glorious majesty. The first of these opinions the disciples doubtless shared with the rest of the Jews; the second had been corrected by their daily intercourse with Jesus, and by His constant instruction. When they see Elijah present with Jesus on the Mount, they would naturally conclude that Malachi's prophecy was now fulfilled, that Jesus was shortly to appear in His glory, and that Elijah was here to attend Him. When they see Elijah depart, they are at a loss to understand the matter, and their perplexity is still more increased when, on coming down from the mountain, Jesus charged them to tell the vision to no man until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead. Hence their question, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?"

The belief current among the Jews, that Elijah would appear before the coming of the Messiah, or rather the belief that it was Elijah the Tishbite who should thus appear, was due partly to the rendering of the Septuagint translation, which would be the version of the prophet Malachi most commonly known to the Jews of our Saviour's time. Whether the words of the Septuagint, "Elijah the Tishbite," is a faithful rendering of the Hebrew or not, there it stood in the days of our Saviour, and He does not correct the impression which the disciples had gained from it. That which He does correct is their conception that there is only one Elijah intended, or that one Elijah would sufficiently satisfy the words of the prophet. There were two Elijahs, a literal and a mystical Elijah. One of these should go before Him when He came in humility, and the other when He came in glorious majesty. The mystical Elijah, John the Baptist, had already come in the spirit and power of Elijah the Tishbite, and they had done to him as they would shortly do to Jesus Himself. But the literal Elijah, Elijah the Tishbite, has yet to come: for this prophecy has still further to be fulfilled, for Jesus goes on to say, "Elijah indeed cometh and will restore (ἀποκαταστήσει) all things."¹

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii. ; vol. iii. p. 1096.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lvii. ; vol. ii. p. 150.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvii. 10 ; vol. i. p. 90.

Tertullian, de Anima, 35 ; vol. ii. p. 711.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 10 ; vol. vii. p. 124.

^a Elias.—"It is very difficult for an English reader who has not read or thought on the subject, to realize the fact that the Elias whom the Jews expected to appear in Messiah's days was not some weird, mythical being, or some merely symbolical person, but the veritable Elijah, who lived on earth, in flesh and blood, in the days of Ahab. 'Let us just seek to realize to ourselves,' says Archbishop Trench, 'the difference in the amount of awakened attention about a country congregation, which Matt. xvii. 10 would create, if it were read thus: And His disciples asked Him, saying, 'Why then say the Scribes that Elijah must first come?' as compared with what it now is likely to create.' And this argument applies, though in a less degree, to the scene of the Transfiguration. 'It is most important,' as the same writer has observed, 'to keep vivid and strong the relations between the Old and New Testament

S. Augustine, in Joan. tractat. iv. 5 ; vol. iii. p. 1408.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Ezechiel, Homil. 12 ; vol. ii. p. 921.

Janseus, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxvii. p. 49.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvii. 10 ; vol. i. p. 232.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 10 ; vol. viii. p. 337.

in the minds of the great body of English hearers and readers of Scripture.' I imagine that few would deny the advantage of substituting the more familiar Old Testament names in such cases for the less familiar Septuagint forms preserved in the New."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 152.

^b And restore all things (καὶ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα).—"With regard to the important term ἀποκαταστήσει, it must be remarked that the process primarily signified by the verb is settlement into a due frame and position; and thus the act, if coming upon a previous state of incompleteness, is one of consummation; if of impairment or disarray, it is restoration; if of moral misguidance, it is recovery into a right frame."—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on New Testament,' p. 20.

JESUS HEALS A DEMONIAC, WHICH THE DISCIPLES HAD BEEN UNABLE TO DO.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 14-21.

S. MARK ix. 14-29.

S. LUKE ix. 37-43.

- 14 And when they were come to the multitude, there came to Him a certain man, kneeling down to Him, and saying,
- 15 Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is lunatick, and sore vexed: for oftentimes he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.
- 16 And I brought him to Thy disciples, and they could not cure him. Then Jesus answered and said,
- O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to Me.
- 18 And Jesus rebuked
- 14 And when He came to His disciples, He saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.
- 15 And straightway all the people, when they beheld Him, were greatly amazed, and running to Him, saluted Him.
- 16 And He asked the scribes, What question ye with them?
- 17 And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto Thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;
- 18 and wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away:
- 19 He answereth him, and saith,
- O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto Me.
- 20 And they brought him unto Him: and when He saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.
- 21 And He asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child.
- 22 And oftentimes it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if Thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.
- 23 Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.
- 24 And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief.
- 25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, He rebuked
- 37 And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met Him.
- 38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech Thee, look upon my son: for he is mine only child.
- 39 And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him. And I besought Thy disciples to cast him out: and they could not. And Jesus answering said,
- O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither. And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him.
- 40 And I besought Thy disciples to cast him out: and they could not.
- 41 And Jesus answering said,
- O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither. And as he was yet a coming,

S. MATTHEW xvii.

the devil;

and he departed out of him:

and the child was cured from that very hour.

19 Then came the disciples to Jesus apart,
and said,

Why could not we cast him out?

20 And Jesus said unto them,
Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

21 Howbeit this kind goeth not out
but by prayer and fasting.

14. ¶ And when they were come to the multitude, there came to Him a certain man, kneeling down to Him, and saying,

15. Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is lunatick, and sore vexed: for oftentimes he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

S. omits Lord: S.V. and is sick.

Vulg. Domine, miserere filio meo: quia lunaticus est, et male patitur.

16. And I brought him to Thy disciples, and they could not cure him.

17. Then Jesus answered and said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to Me.

S*. But He answered and said unto them.

Vulg. Respondens autem ei Jesus, ait: O generatio incredula, et perversa, quousque ero vobiscum? usquequo patiar vos? afferite huc illum ad me.

18. And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour.

S. and he was cured.

Vulg. Et increpavit illum Iesus, et exiit ab eo demonium, et curatus est puer ex illa hora.

S. MARK ix.

the foul spirit, saying unto him,
*Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee,
come out of him, and enter no more into him.*
26 And the spirit cried, and rent him sore,
and came out of him:
and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And when He was come into the house,
His disciples asked Him privately,
Why could not we cast him out?
29 And He said unto them,

This kind
can come forth by nothing,
but by prayer and fasting.

S. LUKE ix.

the unclean spirit,

and healed the child,
and delivered him again to his father.
43 And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God.

19. Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out?

20. And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

S.V. And He saith unto them: S.V. Because of your little faith.

Vulg. Dixit illis Iesus; Propter incredulitatem vestram.

21. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.*

S.V. omit this verse.

Vulg. Hoc autem genus non ejicitur, nisi per orationem et jejunium.

All the three Evangelists declare that, though this child's malady varied, or was thought to vary, with the change of the moon, it was caused by demoniac possession, and they imply that the spirit which possessed him was one of unusual power and malignity, and which resisted the command of Jesus to come out of him with all the energy of despair. It is clear from various passages (Matt. ix. 33; xii. 22, &c.)
that it was considered almost impossible to cast out a deaf work in perfect good faith, however many errors they may have allowed to creep in through carelessness or ignorance. Among readings for which this cause has been suggested are . . . the insertion of a mention of fasting with praying: S. Matthew xvii.

21, S. Mark ix. 29, Acts x. 30, 1 Cor. vii. 5."—C. E. HAMMOND, 'Textual Criticism,' p. 22.

* Vers. 21 omittit Tischendorf, uncinis includit Tregelles."— SCRIVENER, N. T. 1877.

"A charge of altering the text of the Scriptures with a motive is so serious a matter, that we ought only to make it if supported by very strong grounds. Now, there is really no evidence that the transcribers of all our known manuscripts did not do their and dumb spirit; that is, a spirit that caused the man whom he possessed to become deaf and dumb. Jesus Himself also speaks of this kind as singularly difficult to cast out, and requiring an extraordinary degree of faith and devotional preparation.

It would appear from the context that the Scribes had questioned the power of the disciples to cast out the devil, and had challenged them to do it. The father of the child lays the blame of the failure on the inability of the disciples. Jesus assigns two reasons for this, and lays the blame on the disciples only partially. The first reason is the unbelief of the people who were present, the Scribes and the father of the child. It is to these that He addresses the words, "O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you?"¹

His usual rule before healing the sick was to require from them a belief that He had the power to heal them. "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" was the common question before a cure. In the case of those who were physically unable to entertain this belief, as with this lunatic, He seems to have required this faith in His power from those who brought the sick to be healed. But the Scribes openly dispute His power to heal this child through His disciples, and the father of the child himself questions it. Hence partly arose the failure.

The second reason why the disciples could not cast out the devil, was their own want of faith, not their want of faith that Jesus had the power to cast out the devil, but that they themselves had the power, that Jesus had entrusted them with this power. From the sick, or from the friends of the sick, He required faith in His power to heal them; from His disciples He required more than this. He required them to believe that He had the power to heal, and that He had also entrusted them with similar power. The absence of Jesus, and the absence of the three principal disciples, Peter, James, and John, the positive tone of the Scribes, and the difficulty of the case itself, may all have tended to cause the disciples to doubt their own power.

Jesus acknowledges the difficulty of the case, and He shows the remedy for this, and for all similar cases—prayer and fasting. But He does not here prescribe prayer and fasting as a duty for those who are the recipients of His divine power, but for those who dispense it.² To the former this would doubtless be beneficial, to the latter it was more than this—it was a necessary preparation, an absolute necessity for the exercise of His divine power; and the greater the opposition there was, the higher degree of supernatural power required, the greater He represents to be the necessity for prayer and fasting. There is every reason to believe that Jesus Himself was fasting when He cast out this devil: for this was the day after His Transfiguration. He had been in the mount all night, and He was met by this multitude as He was coming to His disciples.

Soon after the Ascension we find the Church acting on the rule that prayer and fasting was a necessary preparation in her ministers for the bestowal of God's spiritual gifts (Acts xiii. 3; xiv. 23). Ecclesiastical history also affords grounds for the belief that it was the rule of the primitive Church that her ministers should be fasting in the administration of the Sacraments generally.

Some have supposed that, in comparing faith to a grain of mustard seed, Jesus does not refer only to the small size of the seed, as He does in ch. xiii. 31, but also to the nature of the seed itself. The mustard seed, though small, is of a pungent, acrid taste, producing effects out of all proportion to its size. Such is faith, small though it be; it will accomplish wonders, it will remove mountains.³

"This mountain," to which Jesus here refers, and which He says they shall remove if they have faith, is the devil which possessed the child.⁴

JESUS FORETELLS HIS PASSION, DEATH, AND RESURRECTION.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 22, 23.

S. MARK ix. 30-32.

S. LUKE ix. 43-45.

	30	And they departed thence,
22 And while they abode in Galilee,		and passed through Galilee;
		and He would not that any man should know it.
	31	For He taught
		43 But while they wondered every one at all things which

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. lvii.; vol. ii. p. 155.

Theophylact, in Matt. xvii. 17; vol. i. p. 91.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxviii. p. 55.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvii. 17; vol. i. p. 234.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 17; vol. viii. p. 338.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1112.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxviii. p. 59.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvii. 20; vol. i. p. 237.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 20; vol. viii. p. 340.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxviii. p. 57.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvii. 20; vol. i. p. 235.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. 20; vol. viii. p. 339.

⁴ Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1112.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xvii. 19; vol. i. p. 1016.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 19; vol. vii. p. 126.

Trans. Homil. Origenis, in Jerem. Homil. ix.; vol. v. p. 657.

S. MATTHEW xvii.

Jesus said unto them,

23 The Son of Man shall be betrayed
into the hands of men:
and they shall kill Him,
and the third day
He shall be raised again.

32

And they were exceeding sorry.

S. MARK ix.

His disciples,
and said unto them,

The Son of Man is delivered
into the hands of men,
and they shall kill Him;
and after that He is killed,
He shall rise
the third day.

32 But they understood not that saying,

and were afraid to ask Him.

S. LUKE ix.

Jesus did, He said
unto His disciples,

44 Let these sayings sink down into your ears:
for the Son of Man shall be delivered
into the hands of men.

45 But they understood not this saying,
and it was hid from them,
that they perceived it not:
and they feared
to ask Him of that saying.

22. ¶ And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of Man shall be betrayed into the hands of men:

23. And they shall kill Him, and the third day He shall be raised again. And they were exceeding sorry.

Vulg. Et occidit eum, et tertia die resurgit. Et contristati sunt vehementer.

As the time drew near for His Death, Jesus made this the constant theme of His instruction to the Twelve. It is probably not more than ten or twelve days since Peter had confessed Him the Son of the living God, and it has been mentioned on three several occasions since that time, that His approaching Death and Passion was the subject of His conversation. The first time was immediately after Peter's confession, the second when they were in the Mount of Transfiguration, and the third after He had healed the possessed lunatic. But notwithstanding all this, the disciples were scarcely able to realize it as a certainty, or even as a possibility. They could not reconcile His being the Son of the living God, His being able to heal the sick, to cast out devils, and to raise the dead, with His suffering death Himself. Nor should it be a matter of surprise that they had such difficulty in comprehending this, when we consider that there had been no example of this before since the creation of the world. This perplexity of the Apostles may have been the reason why, as on the three occasions just mentioned, Jesus generally foretold His Death, after some fresh proof of His divine nature. The confession of Peter, the glory of the Transfiguration, the expulsion of the devil from the lunatic, had all prepared the way for a prediction of His future sufferings. To temper their excessive sorrow for His Death, He tells them that, though they should kill Him, He should rise again the third day. S. Mark and S. Luke distinctly assert that they did not understand what He meant by these words, and were afraid to ask Him.

Before Jesus left Galilee the collectors of taxes required from Him the payment of the annual tribute (τὰ δίδραχμα), which was now due. A difference of opinion exists among commentators as to the nature of this tribute money. Some¹ suppose that this was the half-shekel, which was required from every upgrown man for the maintenance of the Temple service, but which had been diverted from its original purpose, and was now paid, either for the support of the Roman government generally or for the special object of the Capitol at Rome. Others hold that this tribute money was still paid to defray the expenses of the Temple service, and that it was not diverted from this purpose until after the destruction of the Temple by Titus. The question is beset with some difficulty. Lightfoot, who, after an elaborate examination of the matter, inclines to the latter opinion, is still rather doubtful.

As it was considerably more than a year since Jesus had fixed His residence at Capernaum, He must have been called upon to pay this tax once at least before. S. Peter, probably remembering this, answers the collectors of the tax accordingly, though they seem themselves either to have forgotten the circumstance, or to have been new in their office, and so not to have known it; or they may ask with a view to ascertain whether Jesus was one of those who resisted the payment of this tax as an unrighteous exaction from the Jewish nation.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 24; vol. vii. p. 126.
V. Bede, in Matt. xvii. 24; vol. iii. p. 82.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxi. p. 61.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvii. 24; vol. i. p. 238.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvii. p. 341.

24. ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute money^a came to Peter, and said, Doth not your Master pay tribute?

Margin, called in the original, didrachma, being in value 15 pence.
S.V. Capernaum.
Vulg. Et cum venissent Capernaum, accesserunt qui didrachma accipiebant.

25. He saith, Yes. And when He was come into the house, Jesus prevented him,^b saying,

^a They that received the tribute money (οἱ τὰ διδραχμα λαμβάνοντες). — "Two things persuade me that this is to be understood of the half-shekel to be yearly paid into the treasury of the Temple.

"1. The word itself, whereby this tribute is called διδραχμα." This He illustrates by quotations from Josephus, Dion Cassius, the Seventy Interpreters, and the Targumists.

"II. The answer of Christ sufficiently argues, that the discourse is concerning this tax, when He saith, He is the Son of that King for whose use that tribute was demanded: for from thence were bought the daily and additional sacrifices, and their drink-offerings, the sheaf, the two loaves (Levit. xxiii. 17), the shewbread, all the sacrifices of the congregation, the red cow, the scapegoat, and the crimson tongue which was given for his horns, &c.

"But here this objection occurs, which is not so easy to answer. The time of the payment of the half-shekel was about the feast of the Passover; but now that time was far gone, and the feast of Tabernacles at hand. It may be answered: 1. That Matthew, who recites this story, observed not the course and order of time, which was not unusual with him, as being he, among all the Evangelists, that most disjoins the times of the stories. But let it be granted, that the order of the history in him is right and proper here.

"It is answered: 2. Either Christ was scarcely present at the Passover last past, or, if He were present, by reason of the danger He was in, by the snares of the Jews, He could not perform this payment, in that manner as it ought to have been. Consider those words which John speaks of the Passover last past, ch. vi. 4, 'The Passover, a feast of the Jews, was near;' and ch. vii. 1, 'After these things, Jesus walked in Galilee, for He would not walk any more in Judea, because the Jews sought to kill Him.'

"3. It was not unusual to defer the payment of the half-shekels of this year to the year following, by reason of some urgent necessity. Hence it was, when they sat to collect and receive this tribute, the collectors had before them two chests placed, in one of which they put the tax of the present year; in the other, of the year past.

"But it may be objected, Why did the collectors of Capernaum require the payment at that time, when, according to custom, they began not to demand it before the fifteenth day of the month Adar? I answer: 1. It is certain, there were in every city money-changers to collect it, and being collected, to carry it to Jerusalem. Hence is that, in the Tract. Shkalim cited, 'The fifteenth day of the month Adar, the collectors sit in the cities (to demand the half-shekel); and the five-and-twentieth, they sit in the Temple.'

"2. The uncertain abode of Christ at Capernaum gave these collectors no unjust cause of demanding this due, whenever they had Him there present; at this time especially, when the feast of Tabernacles was near, and they about to go to Jerusalem, to render an account perquisites of their collection.

"But if any list to understand this, of the tax paid the Romans, we do not contend. And then the words of those that collected the tribute, 'Does not your Master pay the didrachm?' seem to sound to this effect, 'Is your Master of the sect of Judas of Galilee?' — LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xvii. 24; vol. ii. p. 211.

"Everywhere out of Jerusalem, from those who had not yet paid, the Temple-dues began to be collected on the fifteenth day of Adar, the month before the Passover. The Talmud thus declares the custom: 'Out of Jerusalem, the rate-collectors sat everywhere

What thinkest thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

S. He was entering.
Vulg. Att. Entram. Et cum intrasset in domum, prevenit eum Jesus, dicens.

26. Peter saith unto Him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free.

V. Now when he said, Of strangers, Jesus said unto him, S. Now he said, Of strangers. Now when he said, Of strangers, Jesus said unto him.
Vulg. Et ille dixit: A foris. Dixit illi Jesus, Ergo liberi sunt illi.

on the fifteenth of Adar, and quietly demanded of anyone the amount of the rate, yet did they not forcibly compel anyone who by that time had not yet presented it' (Tract. Schek). . . . The narrative implies that, by reason of the absence from Capernaum, the Lord had not yet offered the dues for the current year; that, in consequence, those dues were quietly demanded of Peter by the collectors (οἱ τὰ διδραχμα λαμβάνοντες); that, within Peter's knowledge, the Lord was in the habit of regularly paying the tax; and that, from the Lord's own caution against present or future offence, there were certainly no arrears. There can be but one conclusion, and let it be well weighed: the Passover was at hand; and the antitypical Temple-tax, the true 'ransom of souls,' was about to be paid." — McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 461.

"Their shekel was of the value of our half-crown, and their half-shekel was half as much. And as our half-crown is either in one piece, or hath five pences to make it up in value; so they had their shekel either in one piece, or four pieces to make it up. Those four pieces in the Greek language were called drachmes, in the Hebrew zuzes, in Latin pennies. And so the Greek renders the half-shekel here two drachmes. And the two pennies that the good Samaritan gave (Luke x. 35) is the very same sum, viz. half a shekel; the Roman penny being sevenpence-halfpenny, and two of them making half a shekel, or fifteen pence."

"The money-changers' tables that our Saviour overthrew in the Temple, were the tables of the collectors and receivers of this half-shekel. And then why should He overthrow their tables, when the money they received was of God's appointment? It was indeed, but the wretched receivers made a base trade of getting gain by changing their money. And for giving them single money for their whole shekel, or half-crown piece, they must be paid some profit. This is that that made our Saviour kick down their tables, and not any crossness against the sum, which was of God's own appointment.

"In that story, Matt. xvii. 24, it is this half-shekel money that they come to demand, which Christ, rather than He will not pay, will fetch it by miracle out of a fish's mouth." — LIGHTFOOT, Sermon on Exod. xxx. 15; vol. ii. p. 1204.

"In the incident relating to the tribute-money (Matt. xvii. 24, &c.), mention is made of two different coins or sums of money, the didrachma (τὰ διδραχμα) and the stater (στατήρα), the latter being double of the former; and this relation of value is important, and should have been preserved if possible, because it explains our Lord's words, 'Take it' (the stater) 'and give unto them for Me and for thee.' In our Version, however, didrachma is rendered 'tribute-money, tribute,' and stater, 'a piece of money.' — CAXTON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 168.

Jesus prevented him (προέβαλεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς). — Words derived from the Latin and other foreign languages being comparatively recent, had very frequently not arrived at their ultimate sense when our Version was made, and were more liable to shift their meaning than others. . . . When He was gone into the house, Jesus prevented (προέβαλεν) him, saying, 'What thinkest thou, Simon?' in which passage, at all events, the original meaning of 'prevent' would not suggest itself to the English reader. We might with advantage recur to the rendering of Tyndale, 'spake first' for 'prevented.' — Ibid., p. 178.

27. Notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for Me and thee.

All MSS. a stater.

Vulg. invenies staterem.

Marg n, a stater. It is half an ounce of silver, in value 2s. 6d., after 5s. the ounce.

The point of our Saviour's argument does not turn on the nature of the tribute which He was required to pay, whether it was a civil or a religious one, but on the fact that He, the Son of Mary, is the Son of the living God. He reasons from the sons of earthly kings, and from the exemption from taxation which is by universal custom accorded to them, to Himself the Son of the King of kings, and to the exemption which He, as such, might claim from the payment of this tribute. But He does not claim His right or exemption from the payment of this tribute, in order that He may not give to His enemies any ground for concluding that He is hostile to the existing government. He came not to set right civil governments, or to redress the wrongs of injured subjects, but to establish a kingdom which should exist independent of the kingdoms of this world, yet in the very midst of them.

Different as this miracle was from those which Jesus generally wrought, it contains in it the usual characteristics of His work. It was the domain in which He wrought that was changed, not the nature of His work. For whether He exercised His power over the world of spirits or amongst men, or in the elements, or over the irrational part of the creation, we see the same obedience to His command, the same readiness to execute His will. He has only to command, and a fish comes first to Peter's hand, bringing with it the money required, the tribute for two.

Many conjectures have been offered why Peter, and why Peter alone, was raised to the high honour of sharing with the Son of God in the payment of the tribute. It may have been because Peter was the person to whom the collectors of the tribute had addressed themselves, or because the tribute was collected in the place of which each man was an inhabitant, and that Peter alone of the Twelve had his residence at Capernaum (Matt. viii. 5, 14; Luke iv. 31, 38), or that Jesus selected Peter to the honour of sharing with Him in the payment of the tribute because He had just before confessed Him to be the Son of the living God, or it may be from some other reason unknown to us.

How, or in what place, the other Apostles paid this tribute the Evangelist omits to record, probably as a matter of slight moment, and relates this because it was done by a miracle, and because it gave occasion to Jesus to state His reason for paying it. The conduct of Jesus in this matter, and His reason for it, will serve for all time to come as a guide to all His followers in a similar position.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The corruption of man's nature.—The following extracts may be sufficient to furnish an outline of the way in which writers in the Early Church explained the corruption of man's nature consequent on the Fall.

"In Adam all the parts of our nature were not only good in themselves, but they were happily co-ordinated, the one to the other (Gen. i. 31). Appetite was not rebellious against reason, nor passion against conscience. So that not only were the parts of his constitution excellent, as being the workmanship of God Himself, but the man who resulted from their union was good also. And this it is which is wanting in Adam's descendants, and which is expressed by that corruption of nature in which they are declared to be born (Ps. li. 5). Not, of course, that the constituents of our nature can change their character, since they are either indifferent, like the bodily appetites, or good, like the moral virtues; but they become evil in us, because the general disorganization of our constitution diverts each of them from their proper aim and service. To eat is not sinful, nor the appetite of hunger—but gluttony, whether in will or deed. How could the half-frozen inhabitants of Greenland have been affected, as the Moravians witness, at the declaration of our Lord's sufferings for the sins of men, unless there were some such principle as gratitude remaining in our constitution? And if these principles remain, they cannot have turned round and changed their nature; man's fault is, not that he feels gratitude or love, but that his love is so weak, and that his gratitude is not proof against temptation. The corruption of nature, then, does not lie in these separate portions of it, but in that perversion of man as a whole, by which their harmony is disturbed and their purposes frustrated. Therefore a woe is denounced in Scripture (Isaiah v. 20) against those who deny the truth of these constituent parts of the witness of man's conscience. For if there be no truth in such inward admonitions, what do we mean by speaking of good or evil; and why are we bound to adopt the one, and eschew the other? This was the result to which the Manichæans were led, by supposing human corruption to lie, not in the actings of man as a whole, but in the constituent parts of his nature. The source of evil was traced back from man to his author, and he was alleged to be the work of that evil spirit, whose impress was supposed to be visible in the elements of his nature.

"Human corruption then lies in man himself, in the compound creature, who was created good but chose evil. Adam, on the other hand, came from his Maker's hands in the purity of innocence. The compound creature was good. The whole being was in harmony with that higher part of it, which was intended to sway; while all the propensions and appetites moved along with it in happy subordination. He needed corroboration, but not improvement. Yet whence was it that he had light for the guidance of his being? Can man, who is a creature, have light in himself? Is not the light of the moral as well as of the physical world an emanation from the fountain of light? The very Heathen had a conviction that man's nature could not be developed in its fullest proportions, without such external aid: 'Nemo sine aliquo afflatu divino vir magnus unquam fuit.' Conscience, that is, appears to tell us, that a moral being cannot attain to perfection without the co-operation of that Infinite Being in whom perfection is innate. In Adam, therefore, there must have been superadded to those natural qualities which have been described, some supernatural gift, for the guidance of the whole. . . . 'Man's nature,' said the Anti-Pelagian Fathers, at the Council of Orange (canon 19), 'even if it remained in that entireness in which it was created, could never preserve itself without its Creator's help.' There must have been some divine principle in man—some supernatural gift, superadded to the constitution of his nature. And such we are told there was. For not only did God create 'man out of the dust of the earth,' thus giving him body, and breathe 'into his nostrils the breath of life,' whereby he 'became a living soul,' but He also created man in His own image—in the image of God created He him.' . . . Three effects are derived especially from the gift of God's image: first, lordship over the earth and lower animals (Gen. i. 28); secondly, knowledge of God's works in creation, with which the possession of language was intimately connected; thirdly, intercourse with God, from whom man received direct instructions respecting his conduct (Gen. ii. 16). Now, of these three things, the last seems to have been that of which sin most completely deprived him. . . .

"This effect of God's image was lost by sin, by which that image in general suffered detriment. . . . This partial loss of a principle which is not totally forfeited, led some of the ancient writers to discriminate between God's likeness, when en-was lost by sin, and His image, which was still retained. The distinction is especially maintained by the Alexandrian Fathers. And S. Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. xiv. 10; p. 836, Migne) says, 'God's image man received at the Creation; but His likeness he obscured through disobedience.' And so says Tertullian (de Anima, 41; vol. ii. p. 720, Migne), 'What comes from God is not so much extinguished as overshadowed. It can be overshadowed, because it is not God; it cannot be extinguished, because God gave it.' The image of God, therefore, remains as that principle of conscience which S. Paul vindicates even for the heathen world (Rom. ii. 15). . . . That which was bestowed as a peculiar attribute on the Son Incarnate, could belong to man only as an indwelling gift by supernatural communication. So that our first parents, as S. Chrysostom (De Gen. Homil. xv.) says, 'were clothed with glory from above.' And S. Athanasius (Oratio ii. contr. Arian, 68; vol. ii. p. 292; Oratio iii. 38; vol. ii. p. 405, Migne) speaks of the first man as 'having received grace from without, and having lost it.' That which guided him was an illumination from that exhaustless fountain which has its centre in Him, before whom the angels hide their faces, and 'who dwelleth in the light which nothing can approach unto' (1 Tim. vi. 16).

"The guiding light then of original humanity was not merely that perfection of natural understanding which resulted from the happy constitution of man's inherent powers, but a special and supernatural indwelling of the great Author of all knowledge. And as this results from the general testimonies of Scripture respecting that sole source of wisdom who dwells above, so it is confirmed by what is taught respecting the subsequent gifts bestowed upon mankind. For even the Heathen must have derived their remaining light of conscience, however darkened and confused, from Him who is 'the true light which lighteth every man' (John i. 9). And it is the peculiar blessing of Christians that, by their union with Christ, they may renew that connection with God which Adam lost. For it was through the intervention of the Word, or Eternal Son, that man was originally created in the image of his Maker: for it was by Him that 'the worlds were made.' He was that Word or Wisdom whose 'delights were with the sons of men' (Prov. viii. 31). Especially does

S. John tell us that it was through Him that the Light or guidance of man was given.

"Now, it is set forth in numerous places of Holy Writ, that the peculiar gift of the Holy Ghost, which is bestowed in the Gospel, is that through union with the Son of God we may regain the perfect image of the Creator. Christ 'became the head of man's race,' says S. Irenæus (contr. Hæc. iii. 18, 1; p. 932, Migne), 'that in Him we might recover the likeness of God, which in Adam we had lost.' Inasmuch, then, as the gift of union with Christ, which is bestowed by the Holy Ghost, is plainly a supernatural blessing, and that through it we are to recover that likeness to God which man originally possessed, it follows that the likeness of God must have been some Divine presence superadded to primitive nature. This presence of a superior Being was what gave perfection to that likeness of God in which man was created. . . .

"And this may lead us to some further appreciation of what has been already stated, that birth-sin does not lie in the depravation of those individual principles of right and wrong which constitute the witness of our conscience, but in the disorder and disarrangement which our being, regarded as a whole, has derived from sin. This is the 'fault and corruption' of every man's nature. For the very cause of this disorder is the withdrawal, or at least the obscuration, of that divine light by which man was originally guided. And hence arises the turmoil and confusion of clamorous appetites warring against the law of our mind, and bringing us into captivity to the law of sin which is in our members. . . . So that man's corruption consists, first, in the deprivation of the divine guidance which he has rejected, for 'the light shined in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not;' and secondly, in the consequent rebellion of the lower principles of his body and soul. Now, that this is the real nature of man's sinfulness is evidenced by the fact that Christ our Lord took our common nature; and it may also be shown to be most accordant with those principles of justice which the Most High has sanctioned in Holy Scripture. That Christ should have taken man's nature, shows that its corruption was not in such wise inherent in its existence, that to assume the nature was to adopt the sin.' . . . —R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Incarnation,' pp. 62-74.

CHAPTER XVIII.

[1. Christ warneth His disciples to be humble and harmless: 7. to avoid offences, and not to despise the little ones: 15. teacheth how we are to deal with our brethren, when they offend us: 21. and how oft to forgive them: 23. which He setteth forth by a parable of the King, that had account of his servants, 32. and punished him, who showed no mercy to his fellow.]

[Vulg. Proposito parabo docet quoniam maior sit in regno celorum, et quam sit a pusillo in scandalum cecidit: quomodo forte et nos peccatis debet corrigi, et Ecclesiam non audemus prophanos haberi, potestate ligandi atque solvendi discipulis tradita: docet etiam, quam sit opus bonorum ac sanorum petito sibi consentientium et quod fratri in nos peccati sit ignoscendum, accommodata ad hoc parabola de rege rationem cum servis suis, merenti.]

ONE of the greatest differences in the character of the Apostles before the Descent of the Holy Spirit, and after, was in their self-love, or in the value they put upon themselves and their labours. After the Descent of the Holy Spirit, and after years of unparalleled labours and persecution for the Gospel, we hear not a word among them of contention for place or power. During our Saviour's ministry on earth, when the Twelve had been called to be His disciples, but when as yet they had suffered no hardship or persecution for His sake, when they had undergone comparatively little toil, they dispute which of them should be the greatest in the new kingdom. They had the most indistinct notions as to the nature of His kingdom, but they had gathered that there would be in it different degrees of honour, and they each wished to be the first. We infer from the Gospels that this was a frequent subject of discussion among them. It was probably renewed whenever there arose any fresh occasion to remind them of it, and the last chapter contained an account of two circumstances which might give rise to the renewal of this dispute. Of the twelve Apostles Jesus had selected only three to accompany Him to the Mount of Transfiguration. Though the other nine were ignorant as yet what had taken place there, they felt that to be chosen to accompany their Master was an honour. One of these same three Jesus had chosen a little later to be joined with Himself in the payment of the tribute. It was probably such thoughts as these that gave rise to the following question.¹

THE DISCIPLES CONTEND WHO SHOULD BE THE GREATEST.

S. MATTHEW xviii. 1-3.

S. MARK ix. 33-37.

S. LUKE ix. 46-48.

33 And He came to Capernaum:

and being in the house He asked them,
What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.

46 Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

1 At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

2 And Jesus

35 And He

sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And He took a child,
and set him in the midst of them;
and when He had taken him
in His arms,

47 And Jesus,
perceiving the thought of their heart,

called a little child unto Him,
and set him in the midst of them,

took a child,
and set him by Him.

3 and said,
Verily I say unto you,
Except ye be converted,

He said unto them,

48 and said unto them,

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 1; vol. vii. p. 128.
Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii. vol. iii. p. 1129.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lviii. vol. ii. p. 167.
Euthymius, in Matt. xviii. 1; vol. ii. p. 703.

S. MATTHEW xviii.

S. MARK ix.

S. LUKE ix.

and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And whoso shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me.

37

Whosoever shall receive one of such children in My name, receiveth Me: and whosoever shall receive Me, receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me.

Whosoever shall receive this child in My name receiveth Me: and whosoever shall receive Me receiveth

Him that sent Me: for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

1. At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

V. Now at the same time.
Vulg. In illa hora accesserunt discipuli ad Iesum dicentes; Quis, putas, major est in regno celorum?

S. Matthew's habit sometimes of weaving two incidents into one relation, and sometimes of compressing into one utterance or formula what Jesus delivered in two, occasionally causes an appearance of discrepancy between the accounts of the Evangelists. In this chapter we have an example of both these. Of the first of these we have an example in verse 1, and of the second in verse 8. S. Mark says that the disciples had disputed by the way which of them should be the greatest, and that when they came to Capernaum Jesus called them unto Him, and that they held their peace. But, though they held their peace at the first from shame, we may fairly conclude that they afterwards stated the cause of their dispute, and referred the question, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" to Him, for He answers it. But S. Matthew puts both these—their disputing by the way, and their referring the question to Jesus—into one relation. Again, S. Mark represents Jesus as saying, "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off," &c. (43); "And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off," &c. (45). But S. Matthew, consistently with his usual habit, compresses these two injunctions into one, and says, "If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off," &c.

2. And Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them,

S.V. And He called.
Vulg. Et advocans Iesus parvulum, statuit eum in medio eorum.

3. And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

Jesus answered their question, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" but not in the sense in which they asked it, and in which they had disputed about it. They meant, who is the greatest, or first, in honour and rank—greatest according to man's estimate. Jesus showed them who was the greatest, or first, in personal graces, greatest in the eyes of God, greatest in the only sense in which it was right for them to strive to be great. This solution of their question He gives partly by His words, and partly by His action. Calling unto Him a child, He set him in the midst of the disciples; then taking him in His arms, He held him up as an example to them. The child which, according to the estimation of men, was morally and spiritually the least among them, was in reality, and in the sight of God, the greatest, as being the most free from thoughts of ambition, of guile and jealousy. The more they were able, by God's grace, to return to the state of innocence in which this child, by reason of its age, then was, the greater would they be in the kingdom of heaven, the greater would be their reward hereafter. Nay, unless they acquired this freedom from worldly ambition, the temper which belonged to children naturally, and which might be again acquired by them supernaturally, they should have no reward from His Father in heaven.¹

The change from children in age to children in disposition is easy. Having commended the humility, simplicity, and guilelessness of children, and the dignity and blessedness of those who most nearly resemble them in their temper, He next turns to the reward of those who receive or who in any way assist such children, whether children in age or disposition, who believe in Him. In appearance they receive poor, weak, friendless creatures, in reality they receive God; and their reward shall be accordingly.

5. And whoso shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me.

Between this verse and the next, S. Mark and S. Luke insert the question of S. John respecting the man who cast out devils in the name of Christ, but did not follow with

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1136.
Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lviii.; vol. ii. p. 168.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xviii. 3; vol. i. p. 1018.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 3; vol. vii. p. 128.

them, and whom they had on that account forbidden. When Jesus speaks of the reward of those who should receive one such little child in His name, a doubt seems to have arisen in the mind of S. John as to whether they had acted rightly in the case which he states. Jesus answers this, and then returns to the point on which He was speaking before their interruption. He had declared what should be the reward of those who assist the young, or the meek and gentle, who believe in Him, and He now lays down the punishment which he deserved who should cause such to falter or stumble, or wander from the path of rectitude which they were pursuing.

ON OFFENCES.

S. MATTHEW xviii. 6-9.

- 6 But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck,
and that he were drowned
in the depth of the sea.
- 7 Woe unto the world because of offences !
for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh !
- 8 Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee:
it is better for thee
to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.
- 9 And if thine eye offend thee,
pluck it out,
and cast it from thee:
it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes
to be cast into hell fire.

S. MARK ix. 42-50.

- 42 And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in Me, it is better for him that a millstone
were hanged about his neck,
and he were cast
into the sea.
- 43 And if thy hand
offend thee, cut it off:
it is better for thee
to enter into life maimed, than having two hands
to go into hell,
into the fire that never shall be quenched:
- 44 where their worm dieth not,
and the fire is not quenched.
- 45 And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off:
it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell,
into the fire that never shall be quenched:
- 46 where their worm dieth not,
and the fire is not quenched.
- 47 And if thine eye offend thee,
pluck it out:
it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes
to be cast into hell fire:
- 48 where their worm dieth not,
and the fire is not quenched.
- 49 For every one shall be salted with fire,
and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.
- 50 Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it?
Have salt in yourselves,
and have peace one with another.

6. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me,^a it were better for him

^a But whoso shall offend one of these little ones, &c.—“As this entire passage especially brings into notice the terms σκανδαλον, σκανδαλίζω, a statement may accordingly here be made of their various uses in the New Testament.

“One action signified by the verb consists in a jarring or shock given, by word or deed, to a frame of settled or rooted opinions (Matt. xv. 12; Rom. xiv. 21; 1 Cor. viii. 13; 2 Cor. xi. 29), or to feelings, true or false, of right and duty (Matt. xvii. 27). Another is that of thwarting the otherwise free drift of believing acceptance or constant discipleship, with its moral rule; as in the present place, and also Matt. xi. 6; xiii. 21, 57; xxiv. 10; xxvi. 31, 33; Mark iv. 17; vi. 3; xiv. 29; Luke vii. 23; John vi. 61; xvi. 1. Whatever things produce, or are of a kind to produce, any of these effects are σκανδαλα.

“It is at once clear, however, when the speaker is considered, that the words σκανδαλον εἰ ἐμοῦ (Matt. xvi. 23) do not exclude that a millstone^a were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

Vulg. expedit et ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo ejus.

To be cast into the sea with a millstone, such as was turned by cattle, round the neck, indicated certain death, and, as some think, also a death of shame and disgrace.

Jesus may have meant this as a general caution to all. If He had any special reference to the disciples, He may have intended it as a warning to them of the mischief they might cause, if by their disputes for power, or place, or supremacy, they should injure the faith of some weak, or of some sincere, believer in Him,—“of one of these little ones which believe in Me.”¹

In the next three verses He goes on to show (1) the fearful nature of offences; (2) the certainty of their coming; and (3) the desirability of avoiding them at any cost. Offences would be the cause of unutterable woe to the world, but such is the weakness of human nature, and the temptations to which man is exposed, that offences are as certain to happen as if they were sent by an unchangeable decree. No price, however great, is too great to pay for the cessation of an offence, or of an occasion to sin.²

7. ¶ Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!

8. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.

S.V. cut it off and cast it; S.V. maimed or halt.

Vulg. abscede eum, et projice ab eo: boni in tibi est ad vitam ingredi et tibi in, vel claudum.

9. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.

“An offence” is that which furnishes an occasion or temptation to sin. “To offend” is to cause another to sin, to be the occasion to another of falling into sin. The two last verses Jesus had uttered once before (ch. v. 29, &c.). If the eye, or the hand, or the foot furnish a temptation to sin, and this can only be avoided, or can best be avoided, by the sacrifice of these members, no wise man should hesitate to part with them.

Having answered John's question about the man whom they saw casting out devils in His name, Jesus resumes the instruction He was giving to them on “the little ones.” Before the interruption He had stated the blessing of those who should receive one such in His name. Now He goes on to show what would be the punishment of those who should cause such to offend against God, and to wander from the right path. Of the two Evangelists who record this S. Mark is the more particular, and adds several expressions omitted by S. Matthew. According to S. Mark Jesus describes their punishment in terms with which the Jews were already familiar: for He uses the very words in which Isaiah had long before described the punishment of those who have transgressed against God. The prophet said, “They shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against Me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched: and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh” (lxvi. 24). Jesus says, “They shall be cast into hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.” Of these two expressions, the former, “their worm dieth not,” may indicate the punishment arising from remorse, from the gnawings of their own conscience; and the latter, “the fire is not quenched,” may denote the pain inflicted on the body—or the description may be doubled merely to intensify the suffering, and not to distinguish between one portion and another, but to express pain and suffering to the highest possible degree. However these expressions may be used, whether separately or cumulatively, each is so worded as to declare that the punishment will be ceaseless, without intermission, and without end.

From the mention of the fire that never shall be quenched S. Mark represents Jesus as passing on to say, “For every man shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.” Of the many explanations that have been given of these words the three following are selected, as being the most in agreement with the context.³ The difference

Euthymius, in Matt. xviii. 7; vol. ii. p. 711.

² See Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxi. p. 73.

Maldonatus, in Marc. ix. 49; vol. i. p. 603.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. ix. 49; vol. viii. p. 604.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 6; vol. vii. p. 129.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 7; vol. vii. p. 129.

Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1156.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. I. omil. lix.; vol. ii. p. 177.

any of the above-mentioned meanings; and, further, that the Dative ἐπ' αὐτόν, not ἐκ αὐτοῦ, would be necessarily found in association with such meanings. Here the Genitive must be regarded as objective; and the resulting purport of the words in question is, that Peter's views and prejudices, and his avowal of them, run counter to the due acknowledgment and acceptance of the true character and work of his Master.—GREEN'S ‘Critical Notes on New Testament,’ p. 21.

* Millstone (μύλος ἀσινῶν).—“A cattle mill, mola asinaria, is mentioned by Cato (de Re Rustica, 10), in which human labour was supplied by the use of an ass or some other animal. The mill did not differ in its construction from the larger kinds of hand-mill.”—SMITH'S ‘Dictionary of Antiquities.’

“They had also a large mill on a very similar principle as the hand-mills; but the stones were of far greater power and dimensions: and this could only have been turned by cattle or asses, like those of the ancient Romans, and of the modern Carinens.”—WILKINSON, ‘Ancient Egypt,’ vol. ii. p. 118, &c.

between these three explanations depends on the sense in which the word "fire" is here taken.

1. Some have supposed that by the word "fire" here Jesus meant trials from self-denial and affliction, and that He is adducing a reason why they should cut off the offending hand, or foot, or eye. As, according to the Law of God (Levit. ii. 13), every sacrifice offered to God must be salted with salt, and thus preserved from corruption, and rendered acceptable for His service, so every one who would sincerely serve God must be so seasoned with divine wisdom as to endure every deprivation and self-denial rather than offend against God.

2. The word "fire" has also been understood as used in the same sense as it is above; namely, the fire by which the wicked will finally be punished. In this case the two clauses will be opposed to each other, and will refer to different persons, the former to the wicked and the latter to the righteous. Thus the sense will be, Every wicked man shall be salted with fire, as every sacrifice is salted with salt; but as salt preserves the victim from corruption and decay, so the fire shall have on the wicked a penal and a preserving power: it will inflict punishment, and will at the same time render the punishment everlasting. But, on the other hand, every victim acceptable to God—that is, every righteous man—shall be salted with wisdom and discretion, and shall thus be preserved from sin and evil.

3. The word "fire" may also be understood as referring to the fire of affliction in this life, and to the fire of punishment in the life to come. The sense will then be, "Every man must be salted with fire," just as every sacrifice is salted with salt. If he is salted with the fire of trial and affliction in this world, he will be preserved from corruption and will not sin against God; but if not, then he will be salted with the fire of punishment in the world to come.

Holy Scripture contains many references to salt, and to the property which it possesses to preserve from corruption. From the Law, which enacted that every sacrifice offered to God should be salted with salt (Levit. ii. 13), the Jews were more alive to such allusions than they would have been had salt been used only for domestic purposes. Our Saviour had already called the Apostles "the salt of the earth" (S. Matt. v. 13), because by their instructions and example they were to preserve the world from the corruption of sin. In allusion to this, and to their dispute about priority, He says, "Salt is good; but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith shall ye season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another." If the Apostles, who were sent to season the whole world with the doctrine of Jesus, were by their disputes and contentions for power to lose the spirit of Jesus, how could they season the world with it? how could they preserve the world from corruption? If the teachers were themselves corrupt, how could they save the world from corruption? Thus by their disputes for priority in office they were marring the very object for which they had been invested with their office.

In the sixth verse Jesus warns His hearers against offending the little ones, the humble and the lowly in heart, that believe in Him. In the three following verses He speaks of offences in general, and, in the tenth verse, He returns again to the little ones. In an earnest and solemn manner He bids His disciples take heed lest they despise them, and then subjoins two reasons, or, as others think, only one, why they should not do this.

The little ones themselves must not be despised because their angels are held in such honour. For they are continually in the presence of God, and enjoy the highest privilege and happiness accorded to created beings. This is the first reason.

10. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven.*

* Guardian angels.—Query. Whether every faithful person, during his life on earth, hath his particular guardian angel, more constantly to preside and watch over him? I answer, the affirmative hath been a received opinion, and seems to be confirmed by some very considerable texts of Scripture. It is an opinion that hath been entertained in former ages with a general consent, both among Jews and Christians, as hath been observed and fully proved by learned men; nay, the very heathens too had such a notion among them, though perhaps they went too far, assigning to every man his good genius universally. Thus Menander, "Every man, as soon as he is born, hath his genius to attend and assist him, as the good guide of his after-life." And Arrianus upon Epictetus, speaking of God, saith, "He hath given to every man his peculiar genius, as his keeper or guardian, to whose custody he is delivered; and that a watchful guardian, that cannot by any means be withdrawn from the faithful discharge of his office."

"As this opinion hath been generally received among Jews, Christians, and heathens, so it seems to be favoured by divers texts of Scripture. I shall take notice of some of them, as the time will permit. In St. Matt. xviii. 10, our Saviour cautions all men to take heed how they offend any of His little ones that believe on Him, subjoining this reason of that caution, "For I say unto you, their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven." They have their guardian angels to assist them, and to avenge all injuries done unto them; and therefore take heed how you offend them. The main force of the proof lies in the pronoun αὐτῶν, their angels, which plainly intimates that all Christ's little ones who believe in Him, i.e. all humble and faithful persons, have their proper angels assigned to them, as their guardians and protectors. And besides we are to consider (what the learned Grotius seasonably advises) that the persons to whom our Saviour spake these words were Jews, and consequently that the words ought to be interpreted in such a sense as may correspond with their conceptions and apprehensions. Now 'tis certain (as I have already noted) that the Jews generally believe every good man to have his genius or guardian angel more constantly to watch over him. Another text which seems plainly to countenance the opinion of guardian angels, is that known one, in the 12th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

* * * * *
"From these and the like texts of Scripture, seeming so plainly to favour the general belief of Jews, Christians, yea and of the wiser

S. Paul's definition or description of angels is that they are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. i. 14). "Their angels" (οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτῶν) therefore will be ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them and for their salvation. The belief of the early Church¹ was that to every man an angel was appointed to watch over him for his salvation, and who should be his representative, so to speak, before God. Nor does this in any way infringe on the belief that Jesus Christ is the only Mediator, the one source and cause of all reconciliation between man and God, the well-beloved Son in whom the Father is well pleased.

The question may be asked, What is the general relation of angels to men? S. Paul says that they are ministering spirits, and that the object of their ministering is the salvation of man. But what are the ways in which they endeavour to accomplish man's salvation? This question can best be answered, and the manifold nature of the services which angels render to man can only be learnt, by an examination of the passages in the Old and New Testaments in which angels are expressly recorded to have appeared to men. (1) The Lord God placed cherubims, the most pure and exalted order of angels, at the east of the garden of Eden to keep the way of the tree of life (Gen. iii. 24). (2) An angel brought back Hagar, and comforted her with promises of future prosperity when fleeing from her mistress (Gen. xvi. 7). (3) Three angels promised Abraham that he should have a son (Gen. xviii. 10). (4) Two angels delivered Lot, and destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. xix.). (5) An angel again appeared to Hagar, and showed her a well of water (Gen. xxi. 17). (6) An angel appears to Abraham when about to slay Isaac, and forbids him (Gen. xxii. 11). (7) Jacob in his dream sees a ladder from heaven and angels ascending and descending on it. (8) An angel instructs Jacob how to multiply the cattle that were to be his (Gen. xxxi. 11). (9) Angels meet Jacob on his way from Mesopotamia into Canaan (Gen. xxxii. 1). (10) An angel places himself between the host of Israel and the host of the Egyptians, to cause light and safety to the one and darkness and destruction to the other (Exod. xiv. 19). (11) God sent an angel to conduct the children of Israel through the wilderness into the land of Canaan (Exod. xxiii. 20). (12) An angel spake through the mouth of the ass, and reproved Balaam (Numb. xxii. 22). (13) An angel comforted the Israelites, when afflicted by their enemies (Judges ii. 1). (14) An angel stirreth up Gideon against the Midianites (Judges vi. 11). (15) An angel appears to Manoah and his wife, and promises them a son (Judges xiii.). (16) An angel destroys Israel by pestilence because of the numbering of the people by David (2 Sam. xxiv. 16). (17) An angel appears to Elijah, and supplies him with food and drink before his forty days' fast in the mount of God (1 Kings xix. 5). (18) An angel sends Elijah to meet the messengers of Ahaziah (2 Kings i. 3). (19) An angel smites the army of the Assyrians, and destroys 185 thousand (2 Kings xix. 35). (20) An angel delivers Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego out of the fiery furnace (Dan. iii. 19, &c.). (21) An angel delivers Daniel in the den of lions (Dan. vi. 22). (22) The angel instructs Daniel in the knowledge of the future (Dan. ix. 20, &c.). (23) An angel instructs Zechariah as to the future (Zech. i. 12, &c.).

In the New Testament it is related: (1) That angels announced the Birth of Jesus to the shepherds, and sang "Glory to God in the highest," &c. (Luke ii. 9, &c.). (2) An angel commanded Joseph to take the young Child into Egypt (Matt. ii. 13). (3) An angel commanded him to return with the young Child (Matt. ii. 19). (4) Angels ministered to Jesus after His Temptation (Matt. iv. 11). (5) In His agony an angel strengthened Him (Luke xxii. 43). (6) An angel announced His Resurrection (Matt. xxviii. 2). (7) An angel delivers Peter out of prison (Acts xii. 7, &c.). (8) An angel sends Philip to meet the eunuch (Acts viii. 26). (9) An angel appears to Cornelius (Acts x. 3). (10) An angel appears to S. Paul and promises him deliverance from shipwreck (Acts xvii. 23). (11) An angel appeared to S. John in the Isle of Patmos.

Thus in at least eleven places in the New Testament, and in upwards of twenty in the Old, the nature of the services which angels render to man is distinctly specified. Generalizing from these separate instances, we may fairly conclude that these instruments in carrying on God's gracious designs towards mankind are continually engaged in their office of shielding the body from evil and the soul from sin. They seek to defeat all suggestions and temptations to evil, and to substitute in their place others to good. They excite to prayer and to other acts of devotion, and present these to God. In all temptations they afford strength and support, and especially in the last great conflict with Satan in the

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1165.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lix.; vol. ii. p. 185.
Theophylact, in Matt. xviii. 10; vol. i. p. 95.
S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xviii. 10; vol. i. p. 1020.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 10; vol. vii. p. 130.
— in Isaiah lxvi. 20; vol. iv. p. 671.
S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. ii. 3; vol. i. p. 556.

[Peter

Peter Lombard, 2 sent. 11 dist. 1; p. 163. Migne.
S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. i. quest. 113, art. 1-7; vol. i. pp. 1366-1373.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxi. p. 74.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xviii. 10; vol. i. p. 243.
Grotius, in Matt. xviii. 10: Critici Sacri; vol. vi. p. 567.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 10; vol. viii. p. 347.

heathens, I cannot but judge it highly probable, that every faithful person at least hath his particular good genius or angel, appointed by God over him, as the guardian and guide of his life. But yet if any man shall look on our inferences from those texts as not demonstrative, and shall modestly doubt or dissent from so received an opinion; for my part I shall not quarrel with him, provided that in general he acknowledges the ministry of angels, for the good of those who shall be heirs of salvation, as need shall require."—BISHOP BULL, Sermon on Hebrews i. 14; vol. ii. p. 498.

hour of death. After death they conduct the soul to its future place of abode. It may be that all the communications of a soul and God, or between a soul and what we call the immaterial world, are made through the angel appointed to watch over it.

The second reason why the little ones must not be despised is because Jesus came to save them. He who was God was made Man, in order to save all that was lost—that is, all the race of Adam: to save that which was lost through the corruption of man's nature consequent on Adam's disobedience.

11. For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost.^a

S.V. omit this verse.

Vulg. Venit enim Filius hominis salvare quod perierat.

If the disciples, by their contention for place or power, throw any impediment or hindrance in the way of the little ones, either those who are physically weak and helpless, or those who are spiritually humble and meek and lowly,—if they, in any way, defeat the efforts of Jesus to save such, great will be their responsibility. He then goes on to illustrate the eagerness with which He seeks the salvation of such as these, by the following parable.

S. Matthew alone records verses 12-35.

12. How think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

S.V. omits into the mountains.

Vulg. nemine relinquit nonaginta novem in montibus, et vadit querere eam que erravit.

13. And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.

Vulg. quia gaudet super eam magis quam super nonaginta novem que non erraverunt.

14. Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Vulg. Sic non est voluntas ante Patrem vestrum qui in celis est, ut pereat unus de pusillis istis.

Jesus explains and illustrates the love of the Father for the little ones of the flock, and adds, as it were, another reason why they should not be despised, by what takes place among men, by the conduct of a shepherd towards his sheep.

If a shepherd have a flock of a hundred sheep, and only one of them be gone astray, and that the least and most weakly in the flock, and which has probably been led astray because it is young and weak and inexperienced, he does not on that account neglect it, but he leaves the ninety and nine to the charge of others, and goes himself after the little one that is lost.

He does not intend to assert that the shepherd receives more satisfaction from the safety of the one sheep than he does from the safety of the ninety and nine, but that the expression of joy and rejoicing is more called forth by the recovery of that which had been lost than it is by the continued safety of the others. By the very circumstances of the case the feelings of the shepherd had been more concentrated on the one sheep than on the ninety and nine; namely, those of anxiety by its loss, and those of rejoicing by its recovery.

Two explanations have been given of this parable. Some¹ have interpreted the whole flock of mankind, and explain the ninety and nine of those who, by their condition in life, are protected from any strong temptation to wander from the right path, and the one sheep of those who, by their weakness in one form or other, either of body or mind, are exposed to almost certain seduction.

Others² explain the parable of men and angels. According to them, the ninety and nine are the angels, who are secured by their state from temptation to sin; and the one sheep that wanders from the fold is man, who is tempted and led astray by the wiles of Satan. The Son of Man came to save that which was lost: He became Man in order to save lost, ruined, fallen man. From certain expressions in the parable some have conjectured that the number of angels is much beyond the number of men, as much so as ninety and nine exceeds one.

It may be that both these interpretations are comprehended under the terms of the parable. The point which Jesus especially set forth was the zeal of the Shepherd and His love for the lost.

In a land abounding with sheep like the East, the shepherd and his relation to his flock would naturally form a common source of illustration. Our Saviour again and again makes use of it. S. Luke (xv. 3, &c.) represents Him as on another occasion delivering this very parable, but at greater length, and to illustrate a kindred subject, or the same subject expressed in a slightly different form. Here the one sheep that wanders from the fold represents especially "the little ones." In S. Luke the one sheep represents sinners in general.

It has been pointed out³ that this is a specimen of a perfect

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xciv. p. 218.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xviii. 12; vol. i. p. 244.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 12; vol. viii. p. 350.

² S. Irenaeus, contr. Hæreses, in. 19 (alias 21), p. 941.

Origen, in Joshua, Homil. vii.; vol. ii. p. 862.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. xv. 24, p. 904.

³ Theophylact, in Matt. xviii. 12; vol. i. p. 95.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xviii. 12; vol. i. p. 1020.

S. Ambrose, in Apologia David v.; vol. i. p. 859.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxiv.; vol. ii. p. 1247.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 12; vol. viii. p. 349.

parable, and that it contains all the separate parts necessary to give perfect completion to it. First comes the introduction, expressed in the words, "For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost;" then the parable itself; and after that the conclusion, or application of the parable, in the words, "Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

From those who are offended Jesus passes on to those who cause the offence. The connection may be somewhat of this kind. So far should they be from being despised who are either physically or spiritually weak, and who are thereby offended and led into sin, that not even should they be despised who by their conduct give grave cause of offence, and even occasion of sin, to others.

15. ¶ Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

S.V. omit against thee: S.V. go, tell him.
Vulg. Si autem peccaverit in te frater tuus, vade, et corripce eum inter te et ipsum solum.

16. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

17. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

Five different steps or stages in the process of reconciliation are here indicated. 1. The offender must be remonstrated with privately. 2. Before two or three witnesses. 3. The matter must then be laid before the Church, or before the constituted authorities or representatives of it. 4. The Church must rebuke him. 5. If he refuse to hear the Church, he is to be treated as if he had never been admitted to communion with the Church; he is to be refused participation in the Sacraments of the Christian religion. All these measures must be undertaken in the spirit of love, and with prudence and discretion, and with a view to the offender's restoration. The object of even the last step, excommunication, is not punishment, but reformation.

One or two witnesses are to be taken for two reasons: partly that their presence and influence may prevail upon the offender to repent, and partly that they may be able afterwards to testify of his obstinacy to the Church.¹

Jesus is not here speaking to casual or general hearers, He is giving instruction to His twelve Apostles as to their future conduct in the settlement of disagreements that would arise between brethren in the Church (ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ), or in the congregation of men, in which they would have authority to bind and loose. What would be the nature of the Church, and what would be the nature of the authority delegated to them, they would only learn after the Descent of the Holy Spirit. At present the only conception which they would form of this would be from the constitution of the Sanhedrin. As natives of Palestine they would know that in every town the authorities of the Sanhedrin could decide upon all minor questions, while the graver ones were referred to the great Sanhedrin at Jerusalem.

Jesus evidently uses the expression "the Church" here in the sense of that portion of His Church existing in the place where this breach of love is supposed to take place. Instead of at once despising the aggressor for his wrong doing, they are to endeavour to remedy it, and to try every means to remove the cause of disunion. If private remonstrance, first alone, and then before one or two witnesses, fail, they are to bring the matter, still in the same spirit of love, before the Church; that is, before the constituted authorities or representatives of the Church in the place where the case arises. To interpret His words of the universal Church, or of the representative of the universal Church, would be to render His command impracticable and impossible.

Jesus then gives them a solemn promise, prefaced with words which amount to little short of an oath, "Verily I say unto you," that if they act thus according to His command their words and deeds shall have a force beyond that of private individuals. They had experienced enough already to know the nature of this promise, and to feel certain that, extravagant as others might think His promise, it would be fulfilled. When He had sent them to heal the sick, and to cast out devils, they found by experience that Jesus ratified their words; that they wielded a power, a supernatural power, which was not theirs but His, but of which they were the authorized ministers and dispensers. From this they would understand what He meant, and would have the fullest confidence in His promise when He said:

18. Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

The determination of the Church, acting on the command of Jesus and in simple reliance on His power, though He Himself had ascended into heaven, would be ratified, confirmed, and made good in heaven.² This would be the

¹ S. Augustine, Sermo lxxxii. (alias 16 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 506.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. ix.; vol. ii. p. 195.

Theophylact, in Matt. xviii. 16; vol. i. p. 96.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. ix.; vol. ii. p. 197.

Tertullian, Apolog. 39; vol. i. p. 469.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xviii. 18; vol. i. p. 1021.

S. Augustine, Sermo lxxxii. (alias 16 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 506.

⁴ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 84; vol. iv. p. 853.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxii. p. 78.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xviii. 17; vol. i. p. 246.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 18; vol. viii. p. 354.

case whether their determination was to convey the grace and the assurance of pardon by communicating with the offender, or by excommunication to deprive him for the time being of the privileges of a Christian. In the case of the incestuous Corinthian, we have an instance on record in which the Apostolic Church used the power with which they were entrusted for the salvation of offending members of Christ.

The power to bind and to loose was promised to the Church—to the twelve Apostles now, and after them to those who should occupy the same seat. The Church was to continue for ever; and so long as the Church should continue, so long would she require, and would possess, the power to deal with obstinate offenders for their good, and to cut them off from the mysteries of salvation, until in true repentance they should acknowledge and forsake their sins.

Jesus had given this same promise a short time before. Now He gives it to the assembled Twelve, and to all of them equally; then He gave the promise to Peter alone, and with an addition, which He here omits. When Peter confessed that He was the Son of the living God, Jesus said, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (xvi. 19). The power to bind and to loose is not an addition to the power of the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but an explanation,—an explanation in what the power of the keys consisted. These are two expressions to denote one and the same office or authority. In conferring this office—or, rather, when promising this office—on the assembled Twelve, Jesus omits the former expression which He had used in His promise to Peter, and restricts Himself to the latter clause, that which explains the nature of the office. Whether described by both these expressions, or by only one of them, the authority indicated is doubtless the same. It is also probable that Jesus did not confer this power on either S. Peter or the other Apostles until after His Resurrection, when He breathed on them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins," &c. (John xx. 22).

Signal as the honour would be to have this power conferred on him twice, first singly and then together with the other Apostles, it would not increase the extent of S. Peter's power: for the repetition of a grant does not extend the limits of it. But if the authority assigned to S. Peter was not increased by the repetition of its grant, he could not possess greater power and authority than the other Apostles, and he could not be to them the source of their power and authority. But if S. Peter in his own lifetime was not the source of authority to the Apostles, the successors of S. Peter could inherit from him no claim to be the source of authority to the successors of the other Apostles.

That Peter did receive unusual honour from our Saviour, sometimes together with James and John and sometimes alone, there can be no question. Along with James and John, Peter was taken to be a witness of His power over death when He raised Jairus' little daughter to life again; with them he was present at His Transfiguration, and with them he was admitted to a closer presence in the Agony in the garden. It was to Peter alone of the Twelve to whom Jesus had said, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." Peter was the only one of the Twelve whom He had joined with Himself in the payment of the tribute money. It was to Peter that He said, "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke xxii. 32). It was to Peter alone that He thrice gave the charge to feed His lambs or His sheep (John xxi. 15, &c.). Distinctly as the primitive Church recognized the honour paid to Peter—and she was no niggard in her praise of his zeal, or in her estimation of the honour to which he was exalted—she did not hold that this conveyed a higher degree of authority, either to S. Peter himself or to his successors after him.

From forgiveness of injuries and reconciliation of brethren the transition to the blessings of union was natural and easy, and Jesus proceeds to describe the wonderful power which harmony in their petitions has to prevail with God.¹

19. Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven:

*V. Agam veritatem loquar.
Vulg. Iterum dico vobis.*

20. For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them.

Even the smallest number that can be gathered together, even two, will receive, when they agree together to ask what is consistent with God's will, and with the conditions of the trial in which He has placed them. Whether this applies to the alteration or modification of natural objects, or of things relating to the body or not, it has mainly reference to such things as relate to that for which the Son of God was manifested in the flesh,—namely, the recovery of the lost, the salvation of man. The salvation of themselves and of others may be granted, while the particular points in their petition may not be granted, as not in reality contributing to that end, but only so in their opinion. The removal of certain supposed thorns in the flesh may be refused, while these, in answer to their prayer, may be made to contribute to their salvation.

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xviii. 19; vol. i. p. 1021.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xviii. 19; vol. vi. p. 112.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lx.; vol. ii. p. 198.

Theophylact, in Matt. xviii. 19; vol. i. p. 96.

Euthymius, in Matt. xviii. 19; vol. ii. p. 725.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 19; vol. viii. p. 355.

Men are gathered together in His name when they believe that He, the Son of Mary, is the Son of God; when the object of their meeting together is to increase His glory, to worship Him themselves and to spread the worship of His name among others, and with no private or selfish ends to gain beside.

It is on this and similar promises, and so far as they can conform to the conditions here laid down, that the Church in her public assemblies for worship, and in her synods and councils for deliberation, can claim among them the presence of Jesus and the guidance of His Holy Spirit. The nature of His presence, and how it is always associated with peace, we learn from the way in which He appeared to His disciples after His Resurrection. Though invisible to them, until He manifested Himself, it was a real, actual presence, as real as His presence among them at the time when He uttered these words, but after a different manner. He was not present after the conventional way of speaking common among men, when they say they are present with an absent friend, because their thoughts are with him. His presence before His Resurrection and His presence after are the only ways in which Jesus is ever recorded to have been present with His disciples, the only ways in which they had experienced His presence among them. In one of these ways alone could they afterward understand His words, when He said, "For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them."

Thus it is that Jesus instructs His Apostles how to deal with a Christian brother who commits an injury against another, whether he repent and acknowledge his offence, or whether He continue obstinate in refusing to acknowledge it. From this Peter takes occasion to inquire how often the offence is to be forgiven him, in case he repent and acknowledge it. S. Matthew does not, in so many words, represent Peter as asking Jesus how often he should forgive an offending brother who repented and acknowledged his offence, but the context seems to require this.

21. ¶ Then came Peter to Him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?^a

S*. Then came Peter and said: V. Then came Peter and said unto Him.
Vulg. Tunc accedens Petrus ad eum, dixit.

22. Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven.

Peter evidently thought that he had taken the extreme limit of forgiveness; that even Jesus would not extend the duty beyond seven times. But His answer proved that the duty of forgiveness could not be limited by numbers. Whether we interpret the expression seventy times seven figuratively for an indefinite number, or literally as meaning 490 times, the meaning will be much the same: for a command to forgive 490 times may fairly be taken as equivalent to a command to forgive indefinitely.¹

In His answer to Peter Jesus shows how unlimited the duty of forgiveness is in its nature; and to show the absolute necessity of it if we ourselves wish to obtain forgiveness from God, He delivers the following parable.

23. ¶ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants.

Vulg. Ideo assimilatum est regnum celorum homini regi.

24. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents.

S*. many talents.
Vulg. oblatus est ei unus qui debebat ei decem millia talenta.

25. But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made.

S.V. the Lord: S.V. and wife and children.
Vulg. Jussit eum dominus ejus venditari, et uxorem ejus, et filios.

26. The servant therefore fell down, and worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

Margin, besought him.
V. oravit Lord.
Vulg. Proci dens autem servus ille, orabat eum, dicens: Patientiam habe in me, et omnia reddam tibi.

27. Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

V. of the servant.
Vulg. Misertus autem dominus servi illius.

28. But the same servant went out,^b and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred pence: and he laid hands on him, and

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxi.; vol. ii. p. 202.

[S. Augustine,

^a Shall I forgive him? till seven times?—"This question of Peter respects the words of our Saviour, v. 15. How far shall I forgive my brother, before I proceed to the extremity? What? seven times? He thought that he had measured out by these words a large charity, being in a manner double to that which was prescribed by the schools." Lightfoot then shows this by quotations from the Rabbinical writings.—LIGHTFOOT on Matthew xviii. 21;

S. Augustine, Sermo lxxxiii. (alias 15 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 316.

vol. ii. p. 216.

^b But the same servant went out, and, &c. (ἐξελθὼν δὲ ὁ δοῦλος ἐκεῖνος).—"The prominence given to the participle ἐξελθὼν is not without its significance, indicating that the instant of his exit from the presence of his forgiving master was marked by the servant's harshness to his fellow."—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on New Testament,' p. 22.

took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

V. omittit eum; S.V. omittit me.
Vulg. Egressus autem servus ille . . . reddere quod debet.

29. And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

S.V. omittit at his feet; S.V. omittit all.
Vulg. Ut procedens conservus ejus, rogabat eum, dicens: Patientiam habet in me, et omnia reddam tibi.

30. And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

S. and went.
Vulg. Ille autem noluit: sed abiit.

31. So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

S. now they came.
Vulg. et venerunt et narraverunt domino suo.

32. Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

33. Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity^a on thee?

Vulg. Nonne ergo oportuit et te misereri conservi tui, sicut et ego tui miseris sum?

34. And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him.

Vulg. quoadusque redderet universum debitum.

35. So likewise shall My heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

S.V. omittit their trespasses.
Vulg. si non remiseritis unusquisque fratri suo de cordibus vestris.

The parable of the Scriptures is a short story, or a short account, either by way of history or fiction, of what takes place among men, or in the natural world, and is used by our Saviour to exemplify God's dealings with mankind, especially in His Church. It is not pretended that every particular in every parable has its counterpart in God's dealings with man, or in the economy of grace. It is sufficient if the main point or scope of the parable, which is generally indicated, has its counterpart. Many of the particulars are put into the narrative merely because they are necessary to bring out the main point of the parable, and not because they are intended to have any special meaning in it. In this parable there are several particulars which, in all probability, will have no counterpart in the future world.

In the parable¹ the lord exacts payment from his servant of the ten thousand talents, though he had formerly forgiven him the debt, because of his ingratitude. This is the way in which men act towards each other where they can; for nothing raises in a man a stronger feeling of anger against another than ingratitude. We have every reason to believe that, with God, a sin or debt once forgiven will not be reopened. The object of this parable, as seen in verse 35, is not to show how severely God punishes ingratitude, but how severely He punishes unforgiveness of injuries. Such will be God's anger against an unforgiving spirit that the punishment which He will inflict upon it will equal the punishment which men inflict on the basest ingratitude—that God will not exact a debt even of ten thousand talents in the case of a merciful man, but that He will in the case of one who refuses to forgive his brother.

The immense difference between the sins which we commit against God and those which one man commits against another is shown to be in the proportion of ten thousand talents to a hundred pence. Taking the talent of silver at 187*l.* 10*s.* and the penny at 7*d.* this will be as 1,875,000*l.* to 3*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, or in general terms as nearly 2,000,000*l.* to little more than 3*l.* To have incurred such a debt as this the servant must have occupied a place of trust about his master, and, impossible as it was for him ever to pay such a debt, yet, like all debtors, he promises to pay it all, if time be allowed him. In 2 Kings iv. 1 we have an instance of the practice of selling the children of a debtor to satisfy the demands of the creditor. Among the Jews the harshness of this law was mitigated by the year of jubilee (Levit. xx. 39), when all that had been sold, land or persons, returned to the original holder.

¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 88, art. i. and iii.; vol. iv. pp. 894-900.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxvii. p. 84. [Maldonatus,

Maldonatus, in Matt. xviii. 34; vol. i. p. 251.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 34; vol. viii. p. 359.

^a To have had compassion—had pity (ἐλεῖναι—ἡλεῖναι).—“Why should we read in Matt. xviii. 33: ‘Shouldest not thou also have had compassion (ἐλεῖναι) on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity (ἡλεῖναι) on thee?’—CANON LIGHTFOOT, ‘On Revision of New Testament,’ p. 34.

The principle on which our Translators acted in rendering one and the same Greek word, repeated in the same paragraph and even in the same verse, by two English words, has been defended with considerable success, on the ground that this different treatment is required by a difference in the genius of the two languages. (See ‘Quarterly Review’ for July 1872, p. 154, &c.)

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XIX.

Celibacy.—"Married men, it is clear, might be ordained; but there was a strong feeling against digamy, or second marriage, occasionally amounting to a prohibition. By the third Apostolical Canon, bishops, priests, and deacons are enjoined not to put away their wives; but by the nineteenth, of those who enter into the sacred profession single, readers and singers only are named to whom marriage is allowed. Celibacy clearly was not imposed by law; at the same time it would be unfair not to acknowledge that superior excellence was universally attributed to a virgin life. Widowhood, too, was a state highly commended in the time of the Apostles themselves; still, we find Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, objecting to a forced celibacy in a letter to the Church of Gnossum, in Crete, with the answer of Pinytus, their bishop, who upheld it (Euseb. 'Ecol. Hist.' iv. 23; vol. ii. p. 384, Migne). S. Ignatius would deprecate constraint even more strongly."—E. S. FOULKES, 'Manual of Eccles. Hist.' p. 40.

"Fourth century: Celibacy was not generally imposed upon the clergy; indeed, Socrates ('Ecol. Hist.' i. 11) styles it a new law that was brought forward at the Nicene Council, forbidding bishops, priests, and deacons to cohabit with wives married before ordination. And Paphnutius, who opposed it, says it would be contrary to the old tradition to separate them; still, it was a part of the same tradition, that those who entered holy orders unmarried should remain so (Sozomen, 'Ecol. Hist.' i. 23). The thirty-third Elviran Canon enjoins abstinence upon the three orders, and even subdeacons placed in the ministry; on the other hand, in the East, though married bishops did not ordinarily cohabit, still they were not inhibited: and Socrates ('Ecol. Hist.' v. 22) asserts that many, while bishops, had children by a lawful marriage. On the whole, it may be said that while marriage was not the slightest bar to the highest order, and abstinence was very generally practised by the married clergy but not enforced, it would be hard to find a clear instance of marriage after ordination, which was expressly prohibited priests in the first Neo-Cæsarean, deacons with one exception in the tenth Ancyran, and the higher orders generally in the nineteenth, or, according to others, the twenty-seventh Apostolical Canon."—Ibid. p. 122.

"The principle of the Church not to admit to the higher orders persons who have married again, is based notoriously upon the precept of S. Paul the Apostle (1 Tim. iii. 2; Titus i. 6). That the Apostle, in requiring that a bishop should be the husband of one wife, and likewise, in the parallel case of a widow, that she must be the wife of one husband, refers not to simultaneous but successive polygamy, is clear of itself to every unprejudiced person. The Church has always understood it so, and it is an exegesis external to the Church that has taken the trouble to obscure the question, and attribute this meaning to the Apostle,—that men living in polygamy might be members of the Christian community indeed, only they might not be chosen as bishops; and this in the Roman empire, where every simultaneous second marriage was null, and, according to the Prætor's edict, involved infamy, and was punished as adultery; so that the offence of polygamy, with which Justin Martyr (Dialog. cum Tryph., ed. Otto, ii. 442, 460) reproaches the Jews of his time, certainly only found tolerance when it was practised by stealth. In more recent times, however, that exegesis has become somewhat less prejudiced, and Schleiermacher, Heydenreich, Baur, De Wette, and Gilbert have acknowledged that the Apostle means to say that men who, after the death of their first wife, have taken a second or a third, are excluded from holding office in the Church.

"In the first centuries, there was no doubt about the meaning of the Apostle; his prohibition was always applied to those who had lived in successive polygamy. In the time of Callistus [first part of the third century] also it was the universal rule that, as Origen says (in Luc. Homil. xvii.; vol. iii. p. 1847, Migne), a Bishop, a Presbyter, a Deacon, and a Widow, should not have married a second time."—DÖLLINGER, 'Hippolytus and Callistus,' trans., p. 130.

"In the Apostolical Constitutions, vi. 17, and in the 17th Apostolical Canon, it is declared that one who has married a second time, cannot be received into the order of Clergy; yet the canon adds the condition, if he did not take his first as well as his second wife until after baptism. This has always remained the principle of the Greek Church, only he was looked upon as impeded by digamy who had married again as a Christian . . . In the Latin Church both theory and practice were different. Here it was merely affirmed that the cleric must be the most perfect example possible to his congregation; that, if he had married twice, he became useless as a preacher of continence."—Ibid. p. 134.

"The practice of the Church of the first three centuries has hardly been fairly dealt with by Protestant controversialists. It is easy to point to the examples of married apostles, of bishops and presbyters, who had wives, and to whom children were born long after their ordination; and these prove, of course, that marriage was not looked on as incompatible by the Church's law with ministerial duties. But it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to point to one instance in which the marriage was contracted after ordination. Hefele, a singularly fair and accurate writer, says ('Beiträge,' i. p. 123) that there is absolutely no example of such a marriage. The unwritten law of the ancient Greek Church was indeed like that of the Greek Church at the present day. Marriage was permitted in the clergy, but, as such, they were not allowed to marry. There were obviously many reasons for a rule which, at first sight, appears illogical and inconsistent. It carried into practice the principle that a man should abide in the state in which a sacred vocation had found him (1 Cor. vii.). It fulfilled the condition laid down by S. Paul, that the bishop-presbyter was to be the husband of one wife, and yet guarded against the risk, so imminent in all religious sects, of priestly influence being exercised to secure a wealthy marriage. It allowed the holiness of married life, yet tacitly implied the higher excellence of the celibate. Towards the close of the third century, the principle was formulated into a law, and both the so-called Apostolical Canons (c. 25) and Constitutions (vi. 17) rule that only the lower orders of the clergy—subdeacons, readers, singers, door-keepers, and the like—might marry after their appointment to their office. Those who disregarded the law, and the offenders were numerous enough to call for special legislation, were to be punished by deposition (Conc. Neo-Cæsar., c. 1). Another council, held about the same time, A.D. 314, at Ancyra, made a special exception (c. 10) in favour of deacons who, at the time of their ordination, gave notice to the ordaining bishop that they did not intend to remain single. If they did not give notice, and yet married, they were to lose their office.

"The growing feeling that celibacy was a higher state than marriage, affected before long what has been just described as the law of the Church for the first three centuries. The married clergy might, from various motives—genuine or affected aspirations after greater purity—desire to be free from what they had come to regard as an impediment to attaining it. The penalty of deposition pronounced by the Apostolical Canons (c. 6) on any bishop, presbyter, or deacon, who separated himself from his wife 'under the pretence of piety,' shows that so far the Church was determined to maintain the validity of the contract as still binding."—SMITH'S 'Dict. of Christian Antiquities,' p. 325.

CHAPTER XIX.

[2. Christ healeth the sick: 3. answereth the Pharisees concerning divorce: 10. sheweth when marriage is necessary: 13. receiveth little children: 16. instructeth the young man how to attain eternal life, 20. and how to be perfect: 23. teleth His disciples how hard it is for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God, 27. and promiseth reward to those that forsake any thing to follow Him.]

[Vulg. Matrimonium docet ex sua instituti ne esse indissolubile, nec uxorem extra causam fornicationis posse dimitti: inter varios eunuchos laudat illos qui se castrantur propter regnum colorum: parvulis manus imponit: adolescens qui omnia se servasse precepit dicebat, auditio Christi consilio de omnibus vendendis abijt tristis: difficile ergo assertit divitem intrare regnum colorum: et quid illis promissi sit qui omnibus relictis ipsum sequuntur.]

FROM S. JOHN

vii. 2, &c., we learn that during the last year of His ministry Jesus went up from Galilee to Jerusalem, to the Feast of Tabernacles.

x. 22, &c., that He was also present at Jerusalem at the Feast of Dedication.

x. 40, that He afterwards retired beyond Jordan, to the place where John at first baptized.

xi. 1, &c., that He again went into the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, that is, to Bethany, and raised Lazarus from the dead.

xi. 53-55, that to avoid the machinations of His enemies, He retired to Ephraim, a city of Judæa, and that the Passover was nigh.

FROM S. LUKE

ix. 51, &c., we learn that when the time of His Ascension was being fulfilled, He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem; that the Samaritans of a certain village refused to receive Him, because they concluded that He was on His way to the Temple at Jerusalem, to worship at one of the annual feasts.

xiii. 22, that He went through the villages and cities teaching as He journeyed toward Jerusalem.

xvii. 11, that as He went to Jerusalem, He passed through the midst of, or through the borders of, Samaria and Galilee (διὰ μέσου Σαμαρείας καὶ Γαλιλαίας); that He healed ten men that were lepers.

S. Matthew xix. 1, &c., and S. Mark x. 1, immediately after their relation of the Transfiguration and of the incidents and teaching connected with it, go on to say that Jesus departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan.

The question, and one of great importance to the right understanding of this subject, is raised: Does the departure of Jesus from Galilee into Judæa, recorded by S. Matthew xix. 1, and by S. Mark x. 1, refer to any of the journeys to Jerusalem mentioned by S. John and S. Luke; and if so, to which of them, and under what circumstances? The early commentators have left little to indicate in what way they harmonized and reconciled these several notices of our Lord's journeys to Judæa and Jerusalem. In the sixteenth century the subject received considerable attention, as we learn from Jansenius, bishop of Ghent,¹ and others. Among writers of the present century, it has been a still more fruitful source of discussion and of disagreement. In a very careful and minute examination, Mr. McClellan² has enumerated not less than ten different ways, including some minor differences, in which it has been attempted by modern writers to explain and to reconcile these passages. For instance, Lightfoot,³ in the seventeenth century, and many later commentators, have held that S. Luke (ix. 51), S. Matthew (xix. 1), and S. Mark (x. 1), all three referred to the same journey as S. John (vii. 2); that is, that the journey which Jesus is described as making with a view to His Ascension, was the Feast of Tabernacles, and not the Passover, and that He made it when it wanted at least six months before the Passover at which He suffered. After pointing out the great improbability of this explanation, as well as of the others, Mr. McClellan gives an explanation which is simple, and apparently very probable, and which, so far as I know, had escaped the observation of all previous writers. He suggests that the several notices of a journey by our Lord from Galilee to Jerusalem in S. Luke (ix. 51; xiii. 22; xvii. 11) do not refer to different journeys, but to different incidents or to different stages in one and the same journey—namely, His final journey from Galilee to Jerusalem for the Passover at which He should suffer, and after which He should ascend to the Father; that this is the same journey that S. Matthew (xix. 1) and S. Mark (x. 1) mention, and also the same as is referred to by S. John (x. 40; xi. 54); that though S. John does not state that Jesus returned to Galilee after His departure from it for the Feast of Tabernacles, or after His presence at Jerusalem at the Feast of Dedication, it is highly probable that He did return after one of these, and most probably after the Feast of Dedication, and that it was after the Feast of Dedication that He made the journey to Jerusalem, with a view to His Ascension.

If this explanation is correct, it would appear that Jesus is

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxiii. p. 85.

² McClellan, New Testament, p. 452.

³ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lvi.-lxiii; vol. i. pp. 242-248.

now preparing to make His final departure from Galilee, and to begin the journey up to Jerusalem which should lead to His Crucifixion and Ascension; that the beginning of this journey is recorded by S. Matthew (xix. 1, 2), S. Mark (x. 1), and S. Luke (ix. 51); that several incidents and subjects of instruction during various stages of this journey are mentioned by S. Matthew (xix. 3-30; xx. 1-34), by S. Mark

(x. 2-52), by S. Luke (ix. 51-62; xiii. 22; xvii. 11-37; xviii., xix. 1-27), and by S. John (x. 40; xi. 1-54); and that the journey to Jerusalem, which was now begun, was not completed until Jesus entered Jerusalem in triumph riding on an ass, as recorded by S. Matthew xxi., S. Mark xi., and S. Luke xix. 29, &c.

THE JOURNEY OF JESUS FROM GALILEE TO JERUSALEM WITH A VIEW TO HIS ASCENSION.

S. MATTHEW xix. 1, 2.

S. MARK x. 1.

S. LUKE ix. 51.

1 And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these sayings, He departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan; and great multitudes followed Him; and He healed them there.

1 And He arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judæa by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort unto Him again; and, as He was wont, He taught them again.

51 And it came to pass, when the time was come that He should be received up, He steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem.

1. And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these sayings, He departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan;*

2. And great multitudes followed Him; and He healed them there.

The question of divorce which the Pharisees submit to Jesus, was one of absorbing interest and constant discussion among the Jews. The rival schools of Shammai and Hillel, as Lightfoot shows, had taken opposite sides on this subject. The former limited the permission of divorce to the case of adultery; the latter not so. Probably in the crowd which stood around Jesus, there was not a single man whose sympathies had not already been enlisted on one side or the other. It was a subject which concerned every man there, and it was therefore the very question with which to tempt Jesus. Decide which way He would, as the Pharisees imagined, He must offend one side or the other.¹

The subject in dispute was not whether divorce was allowable or not. On that point they were all agreed, and their question to Jesus was not whether divorce was allowable at all, for all allowed it, but whether it was allowable in any case besides that of adultery. That Jesus would give a decision opposed to both parties among the Jews, and that He would denounce and prohibit divorce as contrary to the law of God, was a thought which had never entered their heads. Instead of answering their question, He shows that from the beginning divorce was not intended or allowed; that afterwards it was permitted merely as a concession to their weakness, in order to prevent a greater evil; and that henceforth He, the new Legislator, withdrew this concession.

PRECEPTS RESPECTING DIVORCE.

S. MATTHEW xix. 3-12.

S. MARK x. 2-12.

3 The Pharisees also came unto Him, tempting Him, and saying unto Him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

2 And the Pharisees came to Him, and asked Him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting Him.

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xiv. 16; vol. iii. p. 1225.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xix. 1; vol. vii. p. 133.

[Ven.

Ven. Bede, in Matt. xix. 1; vol. iii. p. 85.

* He came into the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan.—“If it were barely said ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, ‘the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan,’ by the coasts of Judæa one might understand the bounds of the Jews beyond Jordan. Nor does such a construction want its parallel in Josephus; ‘for Hyrcanus,’ saith he, ‘built a fortification, the name of which was Tyre, μεταξὺ τῆς τε Ἀραβίας καὶ τῆς Ἰουδαίας πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, οὐ μετὰ τῆς Ἑρσεβαντίδος, ‘between Arabia and Judæa beyond Jordan, not far from Essebonitis’ (Antiq. xii. 4, 11). But see Mark here, chap. x. 1, relating the same story with this our Evangelist, ἔρχεται εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας διὰ τοῦ πέραν Ἰορδάνου, ‘He came,’ saith he, ‘into the coasts of Judæa, taking a journey from Galilee along the country beyond Jordan.’—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xix. 1; vol. ii. p. 217.

S. MATTHEW XIX.

And He answered and said unto them,

Have ye not read, that He which made them at the beginning made them male and female,
and said, "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother,
and shall cleave to his wife:
and they twain shall be one flesh?"

Wherefore they are no more twain,
but one flesh.

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

They say unto Him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives:
but from the beginning it was not so.

And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

His disciples say unto Him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

But He said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

3. ¶ The Pharisees also came unto Him, tempting Him, and saying unto Him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

V. omits The: S.V. omit unto Him: S.V. omit for a man.
V le fit, cessant ad eum pharisei tentantes eum, et dicentes: Si licet hominem dimittere uxorem suam, quocunque ex causa?

4. And He answered and said unto them,
Have ye not read, that He which made them at the beginning

made them male and female,

S.V. omit unto them: V. He who created them.
Vulg. qui respondens, ait eis: Non legistis, quia qui fecit hominem ab initio, masculum et feminam fecit eos?

5. And said,

"For this cause shall a man leave father and mother,

S. MARK X.

3 And He answered and said unto them,
What did Moses command you?

4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5 And Jesus answered and said unto them,
For the hardness of your heart
he wrote you this precept.

6 But
from the beginning of the creation
God made them male and female.

7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

8 and they twain shall be one flesh:
so then they are no more twain,
but one flesh.

9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10 And in the house His disciples asked Him again of the same matter.

11 And He saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.

12 And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

and shall cleave to his wife:
and they twain shall be one flesh."

Vulg. et erant duo in carne una.

6. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

The union that existed between Adam and Eve, both from their formation from one and from the impossibility of their being united to others, because there was no other, was to be to man in the place of an express command from God, that the union between a man and his wife could never be dissolved except by death. In other words, in the union between Adam and Eve was seen an actual instance, and a prophetic figure, of the way in which God unites man and wife.

Jesus shows that marriage cannot be dissolved:—1. Because that would be contrary to nature; for a man and his wife are not two, but one. 2. Because it would be contrary to the original institution of marriage by God.

The reasons for the indissolubility of marriage between a man and his wife, as gathered from other parts of Scripture, are three:—1. That there might be the greater love and union between those thus united for ever. 2. That thus they might be the better able to bring up and educate their offspring. 3. That the indissolubility of marriage between man and wife might prefigure the indissoluble union of the Word with the flesh, and of His union, through the flesh, with the Church.¹

The command of God here expressed by the words "He said," which were really uttered by Adam, was the production or the description of a present effect, and the promulgation of a law for the future; that so it was in the case of Adam and Eve, and so it should be in the case of every man and his wife.²

By His reference here to the Mosaic account of the Creation and of the formation of man, contained in Genesis i. and ii., Jesus gives His testimony to the substantial accuracy of that account, and of its truth as an historical fact.

Jesus first shows that in the beginning, in the time of man's innocency, marriage was indissoluble. By the disobedience of Adam and Eve, their condition, and that of their posterity, was materially altered; the power which controlled their passions was diminished or withdrawn. Moses, the legislator for God's chosen people, is commanded to adapt His requirements from them to the altered state of their moral life. He knew that, if the only release from a hated wife was by her death, many among them would compass the death of their wives by violent means. To prevent this, he suffered a man to put away his wife in certain cases and under certain conditions (Deut. xxiv. 1), but he commanded him first to give her a writing of divorcement. What those cases were is the question which the Pharisees submit to Jesus. In the eagerness of discussion they overstate their case, and would appear to imply that in certain cases Moses had commanded a man to put away his wife. The correction to this, and which the words that Jesus used may have intentionally supplied, is, that Moses suffered him to put away his wife, but commanded him to give her a writing of divorcement. He commanded him first to give her a writing of divorce, partly that it might be a deliberate act, not done in haste and without sufficient reflection, and partly that it might be a protection to her.

Instead of answering their question, He reminds them of the original institution of marriage; of its actual indissolubility from necessity, and from the command of God; of the relaxation introduced by Moses, with the reason of it; and declares that He—the new Legislator, He who came to restore to man the power to regulate his passions—that He withdraws the concession made by Moses, and republishes the original law of God as to the indissolubility of marriage.

7. They say unto Him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

8. He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

S. Jesus saith unto them.
Vulg. Ait illis.

9. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

V. omits and shall marry another: V. causeth her to commit adultery.
S. omits and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.
Vulg. Quia quicumque dimiserit uxorem suam, nisi ob fornicationem, et aliam duxerit, moechatur: et qui dimissam duxerit, moechatur.

Those who have studied S. Matthew's style, will have observed that, when recording the same words of Jesus as S. Mark and S. Luke, he frequently varies the form of their expression, and often with a view to brevity. His conciseness, or rather his fulness of meaning, with the brevity of his expression, occasionally leads to obscurity as to his meaning. In the last chapter, verse 8, attention was called to an instance where S. Matthew and S. Mark record the same words of Jesus, and give the same meaning to His words, but which S. Matthew compresses into one proposition, while S. Mark relates them at greater length, and in two distinct propositions. In verse 9 of this chapter we have, in all probability, an instance where S. Mark on this occasion, and S. Luke on another (xvi. 18), records in one clear proposition that which S. Matthew divides into two, but so briefly as to have raised a question as to the sense in which he intended his words to be understood.

We may attribute the difference between S. Matthew's and S. Mark's relation of our Saviour's words to the difference in their two styles of writing; that is, to their different modes of correctly reporting the same observation. We may also explain it in another way. As Jesus repeated this His new law, delivering it once to the people, as recorded by S. Matthew, and again to His disciples in the house, as recorded by S. Mark, He may have varied His form of expression, without any change in His meaning. The difference between the two Evangelists will be seen at a glance.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xix. 6; vol. viii. p. 363.

² S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xix. 5; vol. i. p. 1023.

S. Augustine, de Genes. ad litteram ix. 13; vol. iii. p. 408.

Theophylact, in Matt. xix. 5; vol. i. p. 100.

Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 5; vol. ii. p. 743.

S. MATTHEW.

9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away
his wife,
except it be for fornication,
and shall marry another,
committeth adultery,
&c.

The question here is, In what sense did S. Matthew intend His words to be understood? Two interpretations have been given to His words.

I. The first of these may be expressed in S. Matthew's own words, with the addition of the single word "whosoever,"¹ and divided into two propositions, thus:

1. Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, committeth adultery, and

2. Whosoever shall marry another, committeth adultery. That is, whosoever shall marry another, having put away his wife on the ground of fornication, committeth adultery.

II. Others have thought that S. Matthew meant, that whosoever putteth away his wife, not convicted of fornication, and marieth another, committeth adultery; while whosoever putteth away his wife, convicted of fornication, and marieth another, does not commit adultery.

The difference between these two interpretations is simply this. The first implies that the adultery of a husband or wife cannot dissolve the marriage, though it may form a sufficient ground for the innocent one to separate from the guilty, but in no case to marry another—that marriage once contracted is indissoluble, except by death. The second interpretation regards the adultery of the husband or the wife as a dissolution of the marriage, and leaves the innocent party free to marry another. This makes marriage to depend, for its binding nature, on the will of the married, and not on the nature of marriage itself, or on the institution of God; it regards marriage as nothing more than a civil contract between two persons, which either of them can terminate by their own act at any moment.

That the former of these interpretations is the correct one is clear from the following and other considerations.

1. This, and this alone, is in keeping with the context, and in harmony with the whole drift of our Saviour's argument. He had been teaching them that to dissolve the union of the married, of two united into one flesh, was against nature, and against the institution of God. He had commenced His argument by reference to the beginning, to the time of man's innocency, as the time when marriage was in its normal condition. He then accounts for the relaxation introduced by Moses, and declares it a departure from the original institution. Then, as the Legislator of a new dispensation, He delivers His decree on the subject, He repeals the Mosaic relaxation, and restores marriage to its original dignity.

S. MARK.

11 And He saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away
his wife,
and marry another,
committeth adultery against her,
&c.

Both here and in His Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 31, 32) He uses the same formula in recalling this permission of Moses as He did in superseding the other Mosaic enactments, "But I say unto you" (ἀλλὰ ἐγὼ λέγω).

2. This interpretation is the only one that agrees with that of S. Mark and S. Luke (xvi. 18), who declare in the most absolute form, and without any limitation, that he who putteth away his wife and marieth another committeth adultery, and that he who marries her that is put away causeth her to commit adultery. They make no exception, as in the case of adultery. With them the marrying another while the husband or wife is still living, constitutes the adultery here spoken of. If the fornication of a man or woman united in marriage dissolve the marriage, they would be free to marry again, without committing adultery in so doing, which Jesus expressly declares that they do.

3. This interpretation alone removes all temptation to collusion between husband and wife, with a view to the dissolution of their union, in order to be married to others.

4. This is the doctrine taught in other portions of Holy Scripture, as by S. Paul (1 Cor. vii. 10, 11, 39). He shows that death, and not adultery, dissolves their union. The relation between husband and wife is a permanent one, and can be no more dissolved by anything but death than can the relation between father and child. The relation may be abused, but it cannot be dissolved.

5. This is the interpretation of this passage, and of the general teaching of Scripture, held by the most eminent fathers of the early Church who wrote on this question, and which has been ratified by various Councils in the Church.²

S. Matthew relates that Jesus delivered His decree on the subject of marriage first to the people, and then, as we learn from S. Mark, to the disciples: for, to convince themselves that they had not mistaken His meaning, they question Him respecting it privately in the house, when He again, in the most absolute and unrestricted form, declares, "Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery" (Mark x. 11, 12).

When Jesus had, in such strong and distinct terms, restricted the right of the married to put away each other to the single ground of fornication, and had denied them the permission in any case to marry again, the disciples were astonished at what was to them a doctrine so novel, and they cannot refrain from giving utterance to their surprise.

10. ¶ His disciples say unto Him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

S.V. The disciples say: S^a. omits unto Him.
Vulg. Dicunt ei discipuli ejus.

11. But He said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xix. 9; vol. viii. p. 364.

² For the authorities, see S. Matt. v. 32, p. 125.

12. For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb : and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men : and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

S. anitis For.
Vulg. Sancti in eunuchi.

Jesus here shows that all men cannot act on the disciples' conclusion; that all men cannot abstain from marriage; in fact, that there are only three classes of men that can, whom He calls eunuchs. The first two of these are led to abstain from marriage by a sort of natural compulsion, and the last by voluntary choice and by the special grace of God. The first class consists of those who possess the natural organic power, but who, from some physical weakness, lack the inclination for marriage. The second class consists of those who possess the inclination, but who have been deprived by man of the natural power. Such are the eunuchs found in Eastern Courts, and who are generally appointed to guard the harems of kings and nobles. The third class consists of those who embrace the celibate life for the kingdom of heaven's sake.

Our Saviour's words here virtually imply that, besides those who are physically unfitted, the only men who can live the life of the unmarried are among those who are earnestly striving for the kingdom of heaven, and only a few even among them. None but they have a sufficiently strong motive to induce them to enter on this lifelong struggle, and to none but them is supernatural strength supplied, to enable them to carry it on successfully to the end. Jesus does not prescribe this as the rule for the many; He only invites them to it as a state of eminence and excellence to which few will attain. Of those few some embrace the celibate life because they consider the task to which they are called, such as missionary work, incompatible with the cares and ties of a family; others, because they look upon it as a life of peculiar self-restraint and self-denial, and thwarting of the human will,—in short, as a life of sacrifice and of entire self-dedication to God, and therefore as more acceptable to God than a life which is less so.¹ It was doubtless these words of our Saviour, and the example of John the Baptist, which influenced so many in the early ages of the Church to devote themselves to a life of celibacy and of uninterrupted service of prayer and praise to God.

The value which the Early Church set upon celibacy, and which she learnt from this and similar passages of Scripture, may be gathered from the regulations that were made with respect to the clergy.

LITTLE CHILDREN BROUGHT TO JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xix. 13-15.		S. MARK x. 13-16.		S. LUKE xviii. 15-17.
13	Then were there brought unto Him little children, that He should put His hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.	13	And they brought young children to Him, that He should touch them: and His disciples rebuked those that brought them . But when Jesus saw it , He was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.	15	And they brought unto Him also infants, that He would touch them: but when His disciples saw it , they rebuked them.
14	But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto Me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.	14	But when Jesus saw it , He was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.	16	But Jesus called them unto Him , and said, Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.
		15	Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.	17	Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein.
15	And He laid His hands on them, and departed thence.	16	And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them , and blessed them.

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xix. 12; vol. i. p. 1024.
S. Augustine, de Virginit. 23; vol. vi. p. 408.
S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 12; vol. ii. p. 228.

Origen, in Matt. tomus xv. 1; vol. iii. p. 1253.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxii.; vol. ii. p. 222.
Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 12; vol. ii. p. 749.

13. ¶ Then were there brought unto Him little children, that He should put His hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto Me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

S. said unto them.
Vulg. Jesus vero ait eis.

15. And He laid His hands on them, and departed thence.

When they saw the blessing that followed the laying on of His hands upon those who were diseased, they concluded that some good would come to their children if Jesus laid His hands on them. What that blessing was, or how great it was, they may not have realized to themselves. The parents of these children were probably disciples of Jesus, and they may have wished, as far as in them laid, to make their children His followers too. The Twelve object on the ground that they were incapacitated by their age from possessing the faith that was necessary; S. Matthew and S. Mark calling them "young children" (παιδιά), and S. Luke "infants" (βρέφη).¹ But Jesus by His words and action settled for this and for all future time, that the immaturity of the reasoning faculties in children, as recipients of His blessing, was more than counterbalanced by their simplicity, candour, and absence of all guile—that the defect of their intellectual qualities was a less bar to their receiving His blessing, and becoming His disciples and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven, than was the abuse of these in upgrown men; nay, that the normal character of His followers was the confiding, guileless temper shown by children.²

It may be, as some have supposed, that it was the favourable decision which Jesus made respecting the case of little children, and their peculiar aptitude for the kingdom of heaven, that led the young man mentioned in the succeeding paragraph to come unto Him.

A CERTAIN RICH YOUNG RULER COMETH TO JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xix. 16–22.

S. MARK x. 17–22.

S. LUKE xviii. 18–23.

	17	And when He was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to Him, and asked Him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?
16	And, behold, one came and said unto Him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?	18	And a certain ruler asked Him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?
17	And He said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.	18	And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but one, that is, God.
18	He saith unto Him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness.	19	Thou knowest the commandments.
19	Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.	20	Thou knowest the commandments.
20	The young man saith unto Him,	21	And he said,

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xix. 13; vol. vii. p. 136.
V. Bede, in Matt. xix. 13; vol. iii. p. 86.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxii.; vol. ii. p. 222.
Theophylact, in Matt. xix. 13; vol. i. p. 101.
Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 13; vol. ii. p. 751.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xv. 8; vol. iii. p. 1276.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xix. 14; vol. vii. p. 136.
S. Augustine, de Peccatorum Meritis, i. 19; vol. x. p. 122.
V. Bede, in Matt. xix. 14; vol. iii. p. 86.

S. MATTHEW xix.

S. MARK x.

S. LUKE xviii.

All these things have I kept
from my youth up :
what lack I yet ?

21

Jesus

said unto him,

If thou wilt be perfect,
go and sell that thou hast,
and give to the poor,
and thou shalt have treasure
in heaven :
and come

and follow Me.

22

But when the young man heard that saying,
he went away sorrowful :
for he had great possessions.

Master,
all these have I observed from my youth.

21

Then Jesus beholding him loved him,
and said unto him,
One thing thou lackest :

go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast,
and give to the poor,
and thou shalt have treasure
in heaven :
and come,
take up the cross,
and follow Me.

22

And
he was sad at that saying,
and went away grieved :
for he had great possessions.

22

All these have I kept
from my youth up.

Now when Jesus heard these things,
He said unto him,
Yet lackest thou one thing :

sell all that thou hast,
and distribute unto the poor,
and thou shalt have treasure
in heaven :
and come,

follow Me.

23

And when he heard this,
he was very sorrowful :
for he was very rich.

16. ¶ And, behold, one came and said unto Him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life ?

S.V. one came to Him and said, Master, what : S. may inherit.
Vulg. Et ecce unus accedens, ait illi : Magister bone, quid boni faciam ut habeam vitam æternam.

17. And He said unto him, Why callest thou Me good ? there is none good but one, that is, God : but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.^a

S.V. Why askest thou Me concerning what is good ? He who is good is one.
Vulg. Quid Me interrogas de bono ? Unus est bonus, Deus.

18. He saith unto Him, Which ? Jesus said,

“Thou shalt do no murder,
Thou shalt not commit adultery,
Thou shalt not steal,
Thou shalt not bear false witness,

S. omits unto Him.

Vulg. Dicit illi.

19.
Honour thy father and thy mother :
and,
Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.”

S.V. Honour father and mother.
Vulg. Honora patrem tuum et matrem tuam.

20. The young man saith unto Him, All these things have I kept from my youth up : what lack I yet ?

S.V. omits from my youth up.
Vulg. Omnia hæc custodivi a juventute mea.

21. Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven : and come and follow Me.

V. saith : S*. become perfect.
Vulg. Aut illi Jesus : Si vis perfectus esse, vende, quæ habes et da pauperibus, et habebis thesaurum in celo : et veni, sequere me.

22. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful : for he had great possessions.

S. omits that saying : V. great riches.
Vulg. Cum audisset autem adolescens verbum, abiit tristis : erat enim habens multas possessiones.

That this young man was sincere in his application to Jesus, and in no sense a hypocrite, is clear from the whole tenor of the interview, and especially from S. Mark's observation that Jesus loved him. Two defects are visible in his character, but not that of hypocrisy. On the contrary, he appears to have been singularly sincere and earnest. His first defect was, that, much as he admired Jesus as an eminent teacher of the way in which to serve God, he had not the slightest conception of Him as God ; that He, the wandering Galilean, the associate of ignorant fishermen, was God, had never entered his thoughts. His second defect was, that he placed too high a value on worldly riches.

Jesus asked the question, “Why callest thou Me good ? there is none good but one, that is, God,” in order to correct the imperfect notion which this young man had formed, as to whom Jesus was. He meant that the title of good would not belong to Him if He were, as this young man thought, a mere man ; but that, inasmuch as He was God, One with the Father, it did belong to Him, and in the fullest sense.

^a τί με ἐρωτᾷς περὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ ; εἰς τὸν δὲ ἀγαθόν. Laehmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles. (Scrivener, N. T. 1877.) For a full statement of the evidence for the reading here, see Hammond's ‘Textual Criticism,’ p. 72.

Our Saviour's object in these words was often discussed by the early writers in the Church.¹

In answer to His inquiries, Jesus points out, first, what should be the life of the ordinary Christian; and, secondly, what was the saintly life. Every one who would attain eternal life must believe that He, Jesus, the Son of Mary, though only a man in appearance, was in reality God, and the author of all good to men; and, in addition to this, he must keep the commandments that God had given of old by Moses to man. Faith in Jesus, the God Incarnate, and a daily life in accordance with this, was expected from every one who would inherit eternal life. But from the man who would be perfect and saintly even a stricter life than this was necessary, and a life differing in its strictness according to the different circumstances of the individual. To one man the way to this saintliness was through continence, through the celibate life, as He had shown above in verse 12; to another it was through voluntary poverty. The latter was clearly the way in which this young man could become perfect for eternal life; and the counsel which Jesus accordingly gives him is, "Sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow Me" (Mark x. 21). Upon this appears the weakness in his character, or rather the difficulty of a man in his position—that is, of a rich man—living a saintly life. He had successfully resisted the common temptations incident to youth and to riches, but he could not rise higher than this.²

The lesson to be learnt from the conduct of this young man is not the difficulty of living uprightly amidst riches or great possessions, walking in the fear of God, and assisting those around him, but the difficulty of voluntarily parting with riches, giving up the ownership of them, for the sake of Jesus and His service. The first is the act of a Christian, the second of a saint. To live as poor in the possession of great wealth, and to distribute a share, even a full share, among the poor, was probably within this young man's reach; not more, perhaps, than he had already done, or at least could attain to: but to part from them entirely, to become actually poor for the sake of Jesus, as poor as the fishermen whom He saw already around Him, was beyond his strength, and he goes away sorrowful.

When the young man had departed sorrowful, but yet had refused the choice which was offered him, and thus had declined the only way in which he could become perfect, Jesus proceeds to impress upon His disciples the extreme difficulty that a rich man, from the very nature of the case, would always have in entering the kingdom of heaven.

JESUS POINTS OUT THE DANGER OF RICHES.

S. MATTHEW xix. 23-30.

S. MARK x. 23-31.

S. LUKE xviii. 24-30.

23	Then	23	And	24	And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, said Jesus unto His disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.		Jesus looked round about, and saith unto His disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! 24 And the disciples were astonished at His words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!		He said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!
24	And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.	25	It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.	25	For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.
25	When His disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?	26	And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?	26	And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

¹ S. Basil, Epist. Amphilochio cccxxvi. (alias 391); vol. iv. p. 876.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxi. iii.; vol. ii. p. 227.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxi. x.; vol. ii. p. 292.

S. Cyril Alex. Thesaurus, Assertio xxii.; vol. viii. p. 528.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xviii. 18; vol. ii. p. 1785.

S. Augustine, contr. Maximin. ii. 23; vol. viii. p. 800.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xix. 17; vol. vii. p. 136.

² S. Basil, Homil. in Divites; vol. iii. p. 277.

Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 20; vol. ii. p. 757.

S. Augustine, Epist. Hilario clvii. (alias 89), cap. 4; vol. ii. p. 687.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. ii. 2, quæst. 186; vol. iii. p. 1325.

S. MATTHEW xix.

S. MARK x.

S. LUKE xviii.

26 But Jesus beheld them,
and said unto them,
With men
this is impossible;
but with God
all things are possible.
27 Then answered Peter
and said unto Him,
Behold, we have forsaken all,
and followed Thee:
what shall we have therefore?
28 And Jesus said
unto them,
Verily I say unto you,
That ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.
29 And every one
that hath forsaken houses,
or brethren, or sisters, or father,
or mother, or wife,
or children, or lands,
for My name's sake,
shall receive
an hundredfold,
and shall inherit everlasting life.
30 But many that are first
shall be last;
and the last shall be first.

27 And Jesus looking upon them
saith,
With men
it is impossible,
but not with God:
for with God
all things are possible.
28 Then Peter began to say unto Him,
Lo, we have left all,
and have followed Thee.
29 And Jesus answered
and said,
Verily I say unto you,
There is no man
that hath left house,
or brethren, or sisters, or father,
or mother, or wife,
or children, or lands,
for My sake,
and the Gospel's,
but he shall receive an hundredfold
now in this time,
houses, and brethren, and sisters,
and mothers, and children, and lands,
with persecutions;
and in the world to come
eternal life.
31 But many that are first
shall be last;
and the last first.

And He
saith,
The things which are impossible with men are possible with God.
Then Peter
said,
Lo, we have left all,
and followed Thee.
And He said
unto them,
Verily I say unto you,
That there is no man
that hath left house,
or parents, or brethren,
or wife,
or children,
for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more
in this present time,
and in the world to come
life everlasting.

23. ¶ Then said Jesus unto His disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24. And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle,^a than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

S. That it is Vulg. Ut autem dico valde: Facillius est camelum per foramen acus transire, quam divitem intrare in regnum celorum.

25. When His disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

S.V. the disciples.
Vulg. Auditis autem his, discipuli mirabantur valde.

26. But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible.

It has been proposed to obviate the strangeness of the Eastern metaphor in this passage, and by reading κάμλος, a cable or rope, instead of κάμηλος, a camel, to reduce its pro-

^a A camel to go through the eye of a needle.—A phrase used in the Schools, intimating a thing very unusual and very difficult.
There, where the discourse is concerning dreams and their interpretation, these words are added (Rab. Berac. fol. 55, 2): 'They do not show a man a palm-tree of gold, nor an elephant going through the eye of a needle.' The gloss is, 'a thing which he was not wont to see, nor concerning which he ever thought.'

^b "In like manner, R. Sheshith answered R. Amram, disputing with him and asserting something that was incongruous, in these words (Bava Mezia, fol. 38, 2): 'Perhaps thou art one of those of Pumbeditha, who can make an elephant pass through the eye of a needle;' that is, as the Aruch interprets it, who speak things that are impossible."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xix. 24; vol. ii. p.
219.

portions more nearly to the limits of the Western imagination. But this proposal receives no support either from the Evangelists, or from the other manuscripts, or from the ancient commentators on the passage.¹ Lightfoot shows, from the Rabbinical writers, that for an elephant to go through the eye of a needle was a common proverb in the Jewish nation, meaning thereby that a thing was as difficult, or as impossible, as it would be for the largest animal in creation to go through the smallest known aperture. Whether Jesus had any particular meaning in substituting the camel, the common beast of burden of the country, for the elephant of the proverb, it is not easy to say; whether, for instance, He meant to imply that riches was to a man what its burden was to the camel, an oppression and a hindrance, or any additional hindrance in going through a small opening.

That which in the 23rd verse Jesus calls "hard," in the 26th He calls "impossible,"—"impossible with men," that is, by the mere strength of human nature, but "possible with God," and to man with the supernatural strength which God supplies to him. But before Jesus said this, the Evangelist adds, that He beheld or looked upon them (ἐμβλέψας), as if to impress this especially on their minds. We may form some estimate of the power of His look by the effect which it afterwards had upon Peter. "The Lord turned and looked upon (ἐμβλέψε) Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how He had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly." (Luke xxii. 61, 62.)

27. ¶ Then answered Peter and said unto Him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed Thee; what shall we have therefore?

28. And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration^a when the Son of Man shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

The word παλιγγενεσία, "regeneration," is only used twice in the New Testament, here and Titus iii. 5. In the latter place by "the washing of regeneration," or "through the font of regeneration" (διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας), S. Paul evidently means the renewal, the re-making of man's nature, by baptism into

Jesus, the God Incarnate. But by this word Jesus refers to the re-making of man's whole nature, which shall take place at the Resurrection, when even our vile bodies shall be made like unto His glorious Body, and perhaps also to the change which shall take place in all creation.²

There are several points in this passage which rather lead to the conclusion that Jesus says "they shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," not so much because they were His Apostles, as because they had left all to follow Him. One of those to whom He addresses these words would forfeit the promise here made, and also the privilege of an Apostle; and two others, to whom He did not here speak, would be added to the number. Judas, by his betrayal of the Son of Man, would forfeit the right to sit and judge and also the privilege of being an Apostle, and S. Matthew and S. Paul would be added to this number. Jesus could not therefore mean that this reward should be limited to the twelve men to whom He was then speaking, nor indeed to any number of twelve, but that it should be given to those who should leave all to follow Him. At present the twelve Apostles were the only men who as yet had left all to follow Him, and therefore He seems to confine the reward of this conduct to their number.³

Sometimes we use the term Israel of the descendants of Abraham after the flesh, and then by the twelve tribes of Israel we include the whole Jewish nation, all whose descent was from Abraham, through the sons of Jacob. Sometimes we use the term Israel of the spiritual Israel, of those who were the children of Abraham, inasmuch as they are followers of his faith. Then by the twelve tribes of Israel we should mean the whole family of God, all who in every age have believed in Him. If the twelve tribes of Israel here mean the whole family of believers, it will follow that Jesus does not say that they shall judge all mankind, both good and bad, but that they shall judge those who have believed in Him. Those who have left all to follow Jesus shall judge those who have also believed in Him, but who have followed Him with less of self-denial than themselves. How much is implied in the words that "they shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," it is impossible for man to say. They certainly indicate pre-eminence above all others, that those who have left all in this world to follow Jesus shall receive the highest reward in the world to come; that they

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xv. 20; vol. iii. p. 1309.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxi. iii.; vol. ii. p. 231.

S. Hilary Piet., in Matt. xiv. 24; vol. i. p. 1027.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xiv. 24; vol. vii. p. 138.

² S. Augustine, contr. duas Epist. Pelag. iii. 3; vol. x. p. 591.

iv. 11; vol. x. p. 635.

[S. Gregory

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. iv. 25 (alias 23); vol. i. p. 660.

Theophylact, in Matt. xix. 28; vol. i. p. 163.

Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 28; vol. ii. p. 765.

³ Origen, in Matt. tomus xv. 24; vol. iii. p. 1324.

S. Cyril Alex. in Isaiah lx. 21; vol. iii. p. 1349.

S. Augustine, de Civit. xx. 5; vol. vii. p. 663.

S. Jerome, Epist. lxxi. (alias 28) ad Lucianum; vol. i. p. 670.

^a In the regeneration.—Lightfoot understands this of a regeneration, or of a renewing of manners and doctrine; but Schleusner has well observed that the Syr. has what is equivalent to in seculo novo, which in the Oriental idioms expresses a future state of being. It is plain, therefore, that with Campbell we should join ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ with καθίσεσθε, about which there have been doubts. Kypke has a good note on this passage, which he understands as it is here explained.—BISHOP MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 174. See also note on John iii. 3.

shall occupy the place next in honour to the Son of Man, the Judge of all mankind.

Thus glorious, unspeakably glorious, shall be the reward of those who leave all to follow Jesus; and He then goes on to show that those who do not leave all, but who leave any one thing to follow Him, shall receive an ample, an abundant reward,—that they shall receive a hundredfold.

29. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life.

S^t. omits houses or: S^t. adds or houses after or lands: V. omits or wife: V. shall receive manifold.

Vulg. Et omnis qui reliquerit domum, vel fratres, aut sorores, aut patrem, aut matrem, aut uxorem, aut filios, aut agros, propter nomen meum, centuplum accipiet, et vitam eternam possidebit.

In this passage such a principle of interpretation must be adopted as will apply to all these several particulars equally, and under the same two conditions. First, they are all promised for this life; and secondly, they must all be understood in a sense in which they will bear to be multiplied indefinitely, or a hundredfold. These words cannot therefore be understood in the literal sense in which we usually understand father and mother and wife, &c.: for Jesus could not possibly promise, if in time of persecution any of them should forsake father or mother or wife on account of Him and their belief in Him, that he should receive instead of one father a hundred fathers, and instead of one wife many, or a hundred wives. What He means most probably is this, or something to this effect: If for the sake of Jesus, and in consequence of their belief in Him, they should suffer persecution, and should be compelled to relinquish father or mother or wife, &c., that they should suffer no real loss; but instead of one father, or one mother, they should find a hundred who would show them the affection of a father or mother, and instead of one wife they should find a hundred who would show them the love and devotion of a wife. If it be lands or houses that they forsake, they should receive even more than they had before: for they shall receive to the full satisfaction of all their bodily wants, and even of all their desires. The sweet consolations of love and devotion which they had forfeited for their faith in Jesus, shall be supplied to them, and in even richer abundance, by the Church, which is a family bound together by closer and more real and more lasting ties than any mere human family. History records numberless instances in which we can see how this has been fulfilled, even to the very letter, especially in times of persecution.¹

In the last thirteen verses, that is from the sixteenth, Jesus describes three different degrees of service to Him, and to all of them He promises eternal life, together with the reward appropriate to each. 1. In answer to the young ruler He shows that eternal life shall be the reward of the man who believes that He, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is God, the author and dispenser of all good, and who shall keep His commandments. 2. But if, in addition to the precepts of the Gospel, anyone add the counsels of perfection, and forsake all in order to follow Jesus, that he shall not only inherit eternal life, but he shall also receive a reward greater than language ever before expressed, and shall sit in the resurrection on a throne beside the Son of Man, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. 3. That he who, in time of persecution, stands firm in the faith, and gives up his worldly possessions and his dearest ties rather than deny his faith, shall have all these supplied to him in this world, and in the world to come shall inherit eternal life. To comfort them still more under persecution, He concludes with the assurance that many who are first in this world, and in the estimation of men, shall be last at the day of resurrection, and that many who are last now shall be first then.

30. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first.

S. last shall be first, and first last.

Vulg. Multi autem erunt primi novissimi, et novissimi primi.

The arrangement which makes the chapter end after verse 30 is unfortunate: for this verse is most intimately connected with what goes before; and it also forms the introduction of the parable which begins the next chapter.² This is evidently the view taken by those who drew up the new Table of Lessons: for they make the lesson to begin with verse 27 of chapter xix., and end with verse 16 of chapter xx.

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xv. 25; vol. iii. p. 1328.

Theophylact, in Matt. xix. 29; vol. i. p. 104.

Euthymius, in Matt. xix. 29; vol. ii. p. 769.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. c. p. 266.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xix. 29; vol. viii. p. 376.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. c. p. 267.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xx.; vol. i. p. 275.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xix. 30; vol. viii. p. 378.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XX.

Jericho.—"After traversing for six hours the almost total desolation which marks the long descent from Jerusalem to the Valley of the Jordan, over bare limestone hills, the eye is suddenly caught by the sight of a thread of verdure at the bottom of a deep glen, the most romantic in the whole of Palestine, almost recalling by its depth and narrowness the defile of the Sîk on the approach to Petra. This green thread is the course of the torrent now called Kelt, possibly the ancient Cherith, and, if so, doubtless deriving its name from the manner in which its course is 'cut' through these tremendous precipices. To any who has seen the Barada, on the approach to Damascus, the sight of the Wâdy Kelt at once suggests by anticipation the prospect which awaits him as he issues from the desert-hills. It bursts through the opening, and in the desert-plain of the Jordan far and wide extends the green circle of tangled thickets, in the midst of which are the hovels of the modern village, beside which stood, in ancient times, the great city of Jericho. It is not, however, only or chiefly to the torrent stream of the Kelt that Jericho owes its oasis. A little to the north of the issue of that stream into the plain rise, out of the foot of the same limestone range, two living springs—one now, as always, called Dûk (1 Macc. xvi. 14, 15); the other and larger, as well as more celebrated, now called the spring 'of the Sultan,' or 'of Elisha.' From these springs trickle clear rills through glades of tangled forest-shrub, which, but for their rank luxuriance and Oriental vegetation, almost recall the scenery of an English park. . . .

"The third stage in the history of Jericho is that in which its palm-groves and gardens of balsam were given by Antony to Cleopatra. They were first farmed for her, and then redeemed for himself by Herod the Great, who made this one of his princely residences, in which he was living at the time of his death. It was this Roman Jericho through which Christ passed on His final journey to Jerusalem; passed along the road beside which stood the sycamore-tree; went up into the wild dreary mountains; caught from the summit of the pass the first glimpse of the line of trees and houses on the summit of Olivet; and so went His way through the long ascent, the scene of His own parable of the Good Samaritan, till He reached the friendly home perched aloft on the mountain side—the village of Bethany. . . .

"In the time of the Crusades the sugar-cane was grown here, and near 'Ain-Sûltân the sugar-mills and their aqueducts in part remain."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 305, &c.

"According to the Bourdeaux pilgrim, A.D. 333, the Jericho of that day was at the descent of the mountains, one and a half Roman miles distant from the fountain; while he places the more ancient city at the fountain itself. I am inclined to adopt this suggestion; and to regard the remains around the opening of the Wâdy Kelt, half an hour S. of 'Ain es-Sûltân, as marking the site of the Jericho of Herod and the New Testament: while those around the fountain may have belonged to single edifices scattered among the gardens, and to the walls by which the latter were enclosed. The earliest city of all would naturally have been adjacent to the fountain; and the site of the later Jericho may have been changed in order to evade the curse. But any distinct traces of the former city are now hardly to be looked for. The site, both at the fountain and at the opening of Wâdy Kelt, accords entirely with the account of Josephus ('Antiq.' v. 1, 4), that Jericho was sixty stadia distant from the Jordan.

"Jericho is often mentioned; but its varying fortunes are not very definitely described. It was early rebuilt, notwithstanding the curse; and became a school of the prophets (Judg. iii. 13; 1 Kings xvi. 34; 2 Kings ii. 4, 5). After the exile its inhabitants returned; and it was later fortified by the Syrian Bacchides (Ezra ii. 34; Neh. iii. 2; 1 Macc. ix. 50). Pompey marched from Scythopolis along the Ghôr to Jericho, and thence to Jerusalem; and Strabo speaks of the castles Thrax and Taurus, in or near Jericho, as having been destroyed by him (Josephus, 'Antiq.' xiv. 4, 1; Strabo, xvi. 2, 40). Herod the Great in the beginning of his career captured and sacked Jericho; but afterwards adorned and strengthened it, after he had redeemed its revenues from Cleopatra ('Antiq.' xv. 4, 1, 2). He appears to have not unfrequently resided here. He built over the city the fortress Cypros; and between the castle and the former palace erected other palaces, and called them by the name of his friends (Josephus, 'Antiq.' xvi. 5, 2; 'Bell. Jud.' i. 21, 4, 9). There was also here a hippodrome or circus (Josephus, 'Antiq.' xvii. 6, 5; 'Bell. Jud.' i. 33, 6). The cruel tyrant at length closed his career and life at Jericho. It was here that, the 'ruling passion being still strong in death,' he summoned around him the nobles of the land in great numbers, and, having shut them up within the hippodrome, gave a strict charge to his sister Salome to cause them to be put to death the moment he expired; in order, as he said, that his own decease might be commemorated throughout the land by an appropriate mourning,—a worthy consummation of an atrocious life! This charge, however, his sister was wise enough to leave unfulfilled (Josephus, 'Antiq.' xvii. 6, 5, also 8, 1, 2; 'Bell. Jud.' i. 33, 6-8). The palace at Jericho was afterwards rebuilt with greater splendour by Archelaus (Josephus, 'Antiq.' xvii. 13, 1).

"It was this Jericho which our Lord visited, lodging with Zaccheus and healing the blind man (Luke xviii. 35, &c.; xix. 1-7; Matt. xx. 29, &c.; Mark x. 46, &c.). The city became the head of one of the toparchies; and was visited by Vespasian just before he left the country, who stationed here the tenth legion in garrison (Josephus, 'Bell. Jud.' iii. 3, 5; iv. 8, 1; v. 2, 3)."—ROBINSON, 'Biblical Researches,' vol. ii. p. 298, &c.

"Raha, the ancient Jericho, is situated six leagues to the north-east of Jerusalem, in a plain six or seven leagues long by three wide, around which are a number of barren mountains that render it extremely hot. Here formerly was cultivated the balm of Mecca. From the description of the Hadjes, this is a shrub similar to the pomegranate-tree, with leaves like those of rue; it bears a pulpy nut, in which is contained a kernel that yields the resinous juice which we call balm or balsam. At present there is not a plant of it remaining at Raha; but another species is to be found there, called Zakkoun, which produces a sweet oil, also celebrated for healing wounds. This Zakkoun resembles a plum-tree; it has thorns four inches long, with leaves like those of the olive-tree, but narrower and greener, and prickly at the end; its fruit is a kind of acorn, without a calyx, under the rind of which is a pulp, and then a nut, the kernel of which yields an oil that the Arabs sell very dear: this is the sole commerce of Raha, which is no more than a ruinous village."—VOLNEY, 'Travels in Egypt and Syria,' vol. ii. p. 269.

CHAPTER XX.

[1. Christ, by the similitude of the labourers in the vineyard, sheweth that God is debtor unto no man: 17. foretelleth His Passion: 20. by answering the mother of Zebedee's children teacheth His disciples to be lowly: 30. and giveth two blind men their sight.]

[Vulg. Parabolam proponit de operariis in vineam conductis, quorum ultimis idem datur denarius cum primis: Jesus discipulis Passionem ac Resurrectionem suam predicat: et occasione ambitionis filiorum Zebedee docet discipulos, quod non potestate et ostensione domini, sed officio ministerii debeant esse majores: egrediens vero Iericho duos cecos illuminat.]

S. Matthew alone records the parable of the labourers in the vineyard.

1. For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard.

Vulg. Simile est regnum celorum homini patrifamilias, qui exiit primo mane conducere operarios in vineam suam.

2. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day,^a he sent them into his vineyard.

3. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the marketplace,

4. And said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

S. into my vineyard.

Vulg. Ite et vos in vineam meam, et quod justum fuerit dabo vobis.

5. Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?

S.V. omit hour. S.V. omit idle.

Vulg. Circa undecimam vero exiit, et invenit alios stantes, et dicit illis.

7. They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

S*. omits us: S.V. omit and whatsoever . . . ye receive.

Vulg. Dicunt ei: Quia nemo nos conduxit. Dicit illis: Ite et vos in vineam meam.

8. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

S. and give the hire.

Vulg. Voca operarios, et redde illis mercedem, incipiens a novissimis usque ad primos.

9. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

V. But when.

Vulg. Cum venissent ergo.

10. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny.

V. And when.

Vulg. Venientes autem et primi.

11. And when they had received it, they murmured against the goodman of the house,

* For a penny a day.—“The denarius, a silver piece of the value originally of ten and afterwards of sixteen asses, is always in the English Authorized Version rendered a penny. Its absolute value, as so much weight in metal, is as nearly as possible the same as the French franc. Its relative value as a purchasing power, in an age and country where provisions were much cheaper, was considerably more. Now, it so happens that in almost every case where the word denarius occurs in the New Testament, it is connected with the idea of a liberal or large amount; and yet in these passages the English rendering names a sum which is absurdly small. Thus the Good Samaritan, whose generosity is intended to appear throughout, on leaving takes out ‘two pence’ and gives them to the innkeeper to supply the further wants of the wounded man. Thus again, the owner of the vineyard whose liberality is contrasted with the niggardly envious spirit, the evil eye of others, gives, as a day’s wages, a penny to each man. It is unnecessary to ask what impression the mention of this sum will leave on the minds of an uneducated peasant or shopkeeper of the present day. Even at the time when our Version was made, and when wages were lower, it must have seemed wholly inadequate. The inadequacy again appears, though not so prominently, in the two hundred pence, the sum named as insufficient to supply the bread to the five thousand.

“The rendering ‘a penny’ was probably handed down in this familiar parable (the vineyard) from the time when this sum would be no inadequate remuneration for a day’s labour; but long before the Versions of the Reformed Church were made, this had ceased to be the case. Even in Henry VIII.’s reign, a labourer earned from sixpence to eightpence a day (Froude, i. p. 29, sq.): though after the Restoration the rate of wages does not seem to have advanced much upon this amount (see Macaulay, i. p. 413).”—CANON LIGHTFOOT, ‘On the Revision of the New Testament,’ p. 166. “The labourer’s hire throughout Palestine would now be five or six pence, a little more than one shilling. In the time of the New Testament money must have been nearly as dear again; for we find a denarius (sevenpence halfpenny) paid as the established price of a day’s work.”—BURTON’S ‘Unexplored Syria,’ vol. ii. p. 234.

12. Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

Vulg. qui portavimus pondus diei et aestus.

13. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee do wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14. Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee.

15. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good?

16. So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen.^a

S.V. omit for many be called, but few chosen.

Vulg. Sic erunt novissimi primi, et primi novissimi: multi enim sunt vocati, pauci vero electi.

In the preceding chapter, in answer to the young man, what he should do to have eternal life, Jesus shows that there would be a great difference even among those who should inherit eternal life, and that this difference would depend on men themselves. He then points out three instances of this. One man should have eternal life by believing in Him the Son of God, and by keeping His commandments. Another, who, in addition to this, should forsake all that he had and follow Him, should inherit eternal life and should receive honour and glory unspeakable along with it. Another, who should forsake any one thing for Jesus, should experience His special provision and protection in this world, and in the world to come should inherit eternal life. In the parable He continues the same subject.

It may be that Jesus delivered this parable to illustrate more than one point in God's dealings with men. But that which the context brings out into the strongest relief is to this effect,¹ that men's opportunities of working for God will differ: some will have greater, and others less; some will be first and others last in this, and that the reward will vary according to the zeal of the workman under the circumstances in which he is called to work. In other words, eternal life will be given to men working under different conditions of life: some under what are considered more favourable circumstances, and others under less so; that, in estimating the value of the work done, the circumstances under which it was done will be taken into account, as well as the work itself.

What is done in a vineyard portrays, or is an outline of, God's dealings with men in the kingdom of heaven, or in His Church. The rate of wages is a penny a day. That is what those hired first agree for, and all the rest of the labourers are paid at the same rate. The husbandman says to those hired later, that he would give them whatsoever was right; that is, that the rate of wages was a penny a day, and whatever portion of that they earned they should receive.

In a vineyard the advantages which one labourer possesses over another can only be expressed in time, by the longer or shorter time a man is hired to work. In the Church this difference, or this superiority one over the other, exists under many different forms, besides the length of time which they are employed to do work.

In the evening he gives them their wages, beginning with those hired last, who receive a penny, though they had only worked one hour in the vineyard. The explanation of this doubtless is, that such had been the industry and zeal of those hired last that their work, in the eye of God, who considers the circumstances of the workman as well as the work, was equal in value to that done by those hired first. The length of life, the longer or shorter time during which each individual Christian is called to work in the Church, depends on God. The reward he will receive depends on himself, on the zeal and on the self-sacrifice he will show in the service of God.

The murmuring of those who were hired first offers no real difficulty in the explanation of the parable: for the vineyard is not the kingdom of heaven, but a parable to explain and to illustrate God's dealings with men in respect to the kingdom of heaven. But in a parable, besides the main scope of it, there are many particulars put in merely for the completion of the parable, which are not essential parts of it, and which have no counterpart in the reality. Such is the murmuring of those who were hired first. This is stated to draw out more clearly the husbandman's rule as to his mode of payment, that he rewards men in proportion to the value of the work done, and, in estimating the value of the work, that he takes into account the circumstances under which the work was done, as well as the work itself.

By translating the Roman denarius (δηνάριον), which is of the value of sevenpence halfpenny, by the English word "penny," our translators have fixed a sum too low to be the wages for a day's labour, especially when it was intended, as it was here, to be a payment on a very liberal scale.

The parable of the labourers in a vineyard furnishes one of the many instances of the way in which Jesus seized upon the modes of instruction common among the Jews, and adapted them to His own purpose. Lightfoot² quotes from the Rabbinical writers a parable of labourers in a vineyard, which differs but slightly from this.

¹ For the explanation of this parable, see

Mablonatus, in Matt. xx. 1-16; vol. i. pp. 274-281.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xx. 1-16; vol. viii. pp. 379-385.

² Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxx.: vol. i. p. 249.

^a "πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐπὶ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἐκκλησιάζονται, οὐκ ὅσοι ἐκλεκτοὶ ἐσονται." — SCRIVENER, N. T. 1877.

JESUS FORETELLS HIS DEATH AND PASSION.

S. MATTHEW xx. 17-19. And Jesus	S. MARK x. 32-34.	S. LUKE xviii. 31-34.
17 going up to Jerusalem	32 And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them; and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid.	31 Then He took unto Him the twelve,
took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,	And He took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto Him, saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem;	and said unto them,
18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem;	33	Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished.
and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn Him to death,	and the Son of Man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn Him to death,	32 For He shall be delivered unto the Gentiles,
19 and shall deliver Him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge,	34 and they shall deliver Him to the Gentiles: and they shall mock Him, and shall scourge Him, and shall spit upon Him,	and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on:
and to crucify Him: and the third day He shall rise again.	and shall kill Him: and the third day He shall rise again.	33 and they shall scourge Him, and put Him to death: and the third day He shall rise again. 34 And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

17. ¶ And Jesus going up to Jerusalem^a took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

V. But when Jesus was about to go up to Jerusalem, He took S.V. apart, and in the way He said unto them.
Vulg. Et ascendens Iesus Ierosolimam, assumpsit duodecim discipulos secreto, et ait illis.

18. Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn Him to death,

V. omits to death. Vulg. et condemnabunt eum morte.

19. And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify Him: and the third day He shall rise again.

^a S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxv.; vol. ii. p. 251.

^a And Jesus going up to Jerusalem.—“I may remark generally that there occur instances, again and again, of perturbations of the text in our oldest MSS. (corresponding sometimes with readings vouched for by the most ancient of the Fathers), which admit of no more intelligible or inoffensive solution than by referring them to the Lectionary practice of the primitive Church.

“Thus, when in-text of καὶ ἀναβαίνειν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς Ἱερουσόλυμα (S. Matt. xx. 17), Cod. B reads (and is almost unique in reading) Μέλλων δὲ ἀναβαίνειν ὁ Ἰησοῦς; and when Origen quotes the place in the same way, but sometimes is observed to transpose the Twice before had Jesus forewarned the Apostles of His approaching Death and Passion, each time foretelling His Resurrection on the third day; once on Peter's confession of Him as the Son of God (Matt. xvi. 21), and again after His Transfiguration on the Mount (Matt. xvii. 22). But on neither of these occasions had He entered so fully into the manner of His Death as now. The nearer the time the more particular He is in His account, specifying even the part which the Jews and Gentiles should respectively take in His Passion. Their own chief priests and the scribes should condemn Him to death, but the Romans should be the instruments in carrying this into execution. It would be they who should mock and scourge and spit upon Him and crucify Him. But on the third day He should rise again.¹

Of the three Evangelists S. Mark is the most minute and position of the Holy name in the sentence; when again six of Matthai's MSS. (and Origen once) are observed to put the same name after Ἱερουσόλυμα; when, lastly, two of Field's MSS. and one of Matthai's (and I daresay a great many more, if the truth were known) omit the words ὁ Ἰησοῦς entirely,—who does not see that the true disturbing force in this place, from the second century of our æra downwards, has been the Lectionary practice of the primitive Church?—the fact that there the lection for the Thursday after the eighth Sunday after Pentecost began?—BURGON, ‘The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,’ p. 223.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xx. 17; vol. vii. p. 142.

exact in his description of this journey. He alone notices that Jesus went before them (προάγων αὐτοὺς), probably to express His eagerness to suffer the indignities and death which He foretells, and that they followed Him amazed and afraid. That something unusual was about to take place they clearly saw; what that was they did not in the least understand. Reading our Saviour's words in the light that their fulfilment has thrown upon them, we are astonished at the blindness of the Apostles. That they did not understand His words S. Luke distinctly states, and the request which

James and John immediately after prefer is another proof of this. If they had understood His words, they could scarcely have asked to sit one on His right hand and the other on the left in His kingdom. It is clear that Jesus foretells His Death and Passion, not so much that His disciples might understand His words beforehand, but that they might afterwards call them to mind, and remember that He had said this to them. Thus their faith in Him would receive no shock; they could have no suspicion that these things had come upon Him unawares.

THE REQUEST OF ZEBEDEE'S SONS.

S. MATTHEW xx. 20-28.

- 20 Then came to Him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping Him, and desiring a certain thing of Him.
21 And He said unto her, What wilt thou?
She saith unto Him, Grant that these my two sons may sit,
the one on Thy right hand,
and the other on the left,
in Thy kingdom.
22 But Jesus answered and said,
Ye know not what ye ask.
Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?
They say unto Him, We are able.
23 And He saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with:
but to sit on My right hand, and on My left,
is not Mine to give, but it shall be given
to them for whom it is prepared
of My Father.
24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.
25 But Jesus called them unto Him, and said, Ye know that the princes
of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority
upon them.
26 But it shall not be so among you:
but whosoever will be great among you,
let him be your minister;
27 and whosoever will be chief among you,
let him be your servant:
28 even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister,
and to give His life a ransom for many.

S. MARK x. 35-45.

- 35 And
James and John,
the sons of Zebedee, come unto Him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire.
36 And He said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?
37 They said unto Him, Grant unto us that we may sit,
one on Thy right hand,
and the other on Thy left hand,
in Thy glory.
38 But Jesus said unto them,
Ye know not what ye ask:
can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism
that I am baptized with?
39 And they said unto Him, We can.
And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of;
and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized:
40 but to sit on My right hand and on My left hand is not Mine to give; but it shall be given
to them for whom it is prepared.
41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.
42 But Jesus called them to Him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them;
and their great ones exercise authority
upon them.
43 But so shall it not be among you;
but whosoever will be great among you,
shall be your minister:
44 and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.
45 For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister,
and to give His life a ransom for many.

20. ¶ Then came to Him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping Him, and desiring a certain thing of Him.

21. And He said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto Him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on Thy right hand, and the other on the left, in Thy kingdom.

V. but she said, Grant.

Vulg. At illi: Dic ut s'deant hi duo filii mei, unus ad dexteram tuam, et unus ad sinistram, in regno tuo.

Not content with being of the three whom Jesus had twice already selected for special honour (Mark v. 37; Matt. xvii. 1), and with being of the twelve who should sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. xix. 28), James and John are seized with a corrupt feeling of ambition.¹ As yet none had been made equal with them but Peter, but they desire to obtain and to secure for themselves for ever the first place of honour. S. Mark says that James and John make the petition, and S. Matthew that their mother makes it for them. The probability is that it was their petition, but made through their mother, whom they accompanied, and in whose request they joined; and Jesus, in his reply, addresses not the mother but her sons, as being their petition. According to all notions of human policy, no one except His Mother was so likely to obtain a favourable reply to a petition as Salome, who was their mother and the sister of the Blessed Virgin. But they knew not what they asked: for they had mistaken the nature of His kingdom, both in supposing that the first place in it could be granted on the ground of human relationship, and also in thinking that any could be first in honour who was not also first in humility, first in suffering for His sake.

22. But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?² They say unto Him, We are able.

S.V. omit and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with.
Vulg. Potestis bibere calicem, quem ego bibiturus sum? Dicunt ei: Possumus.

23. And He saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on My right hand, and on My left,³ is not Mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of My Father.

S.V. omit And: S.V. omit and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: V. or on My left.

Vulg. At illi: Calicem quidem meum bibetis: sedere autem ad dexteram meam vel sinistram non est meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est a Patre meo.

According to the common usage of Scripture, He speaks of His approaching Passion as His cup. It might also be called a baptism,² inasmuch as through it He washed and cleansed His servants from their sins. James and John soon showed that as yet they were not able to drink His cup, when at the Crucifixion they, with the rest, forsook Him and fled. They were not able to drink His cup until after the Descent of the Holy Spirit. They were able in the sense that they were willing, as far as they knew themselves, to undertake this. Unable to drink His cup as they were at His Crucifixion, after the Descent of the Holy Spirit they soon proved themselves both willing and able, and James was called upon to drink it (Acts xii. 2) first.

Jesus does not mean to say³ that it was not in His power, but that it was in His Father's power, to give this to those who were not prepared for it. Nor does He say that it was not in His power to give it at all; but that it was not His to give it to them, on the ground of their human relationship to Him, but that He could give it only to those to whom

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xx. 22, 24; vol. vii. pp. 143 and 144.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. p. 64; vol. iii. p. 1137.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. 27; vol. ii. p. 1206.

V. Bede, in Matt. xx. 22; vol. iii. p. 89.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxv; vol. ii. p. 254.

Theophylact, in Matt. xx. 22; vol. i. p. 106.

Euthymius, in Matt. xx. 22; vol. ii. p. 783.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 6; vol. iii. p. 1384.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxv; vol. ii. p. 255.

Theophylact, in Matt. xx. 22; vol. i. p. 106.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxv; vol. ii. p. 256.

S. Epiphanius, Haeres. lxxix. 58; vol. ii. p. 296.

S. Cyril Alex. Thesaurus, Assertio xxvi; vol. viii. p. 420.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 5; vol. iii. p. 662.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xx. 23; vol. vii. p. 144.

⁴ "The clause 'and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with,' in verses 22, 23, is omitted by Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles."—SCRIVENER, N. T. 1877.

For a concise statement of the evidence for the reading here, see Hammond's 'Textual Criticism,' p. 74.

⁵ But to sit on My right hand, and on My left (τὸ δὲ καθίσαι ἐκ δεξιῶν μου καὶ ἐξ ἐναντίου μου).—The non-indicative aorist is made to play a conspicuous part in the Greek of the Greek Testament, as in classical Greek, especially in marking immediateness of time or rapidity of action. Many passages, otherwise obscure, come out perfectly clear with this light thrown upon them. Take, for example, our Lord's words, S. Matthew xx. 23: 'My cup ye shall drink, and ye shall be baptized with the baptism I am baptized with; but not to sit (τὸ δὲ καθίσαι) on My right hand and on My left, I cannot give, though it shall be given to those for whom it has been prepared by My Father.' . . . In (1) S. John ii. 5, 'Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.' Here the aorist imperative ποιεῖτε is better rendered, 'do it at once, or without delay.' (2) S. Matt. xxvi. 53, which we render, 'Thinkest thou that I cannot at once call My Father to My side (παπακαλέσαι), and at once He will place at My side (παρῆσθαι) more than twelve legions of angels?' (3) In S. Matthew ix. our Lord commands the paralytic 'to take up his bed at once, and go on his way' (ἄρον σου τὴν κλίνην καὶ ὕπαγε). Elsewhere we have περιπατεῖ for the aorist imperative, marking a clear distinction between the single immediate act of taking up the bed and the continued act of walking.—'The Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 126.

it had been promised,—that is, to those who approved themselves worthy to receive it. He does not by these words refuse this to James and John, but stimulates them to strive for it.

24. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

S. they began to be much displeased with.
Vulg. Et audientes decem, indignati sunt de duobus fratribus.

25. But Jesus called them unto Him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;

S.V. omit but: V. it is not so.
Vulg. Non ita erit inter vos.

27. And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant:

28. Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many.^a

From the Evangelists' account it would appear that the two disciples and their mother had not preferred their request to Jesus openly and in the presence of the other ten,¹ but secretly and apart from them, but that Jesus, knowing that the disciples were all equally guilty of the same ambition, delivered His answer aloud, and in the presence of them all, and intended it as an answer and reproof to the thoughts of all the twelve.

As they had more than once contended which of them should be the greatest, it is probable that the indignation which the ten felt against James and John, was aroused not so much by anger or sorrow at their ambition, as by fear lest they should obtain their request, and should be preferred before the others.²

Calling the disciples unto Him, Jesus delivers them a rule of life which, faithfully carried out, would be a cure for all thoughts of ambition. Whosoever would be first among them, is to become their servant, and that not with the object of gaining his end, but to humble himself, and to mortify all desires for greatness. He then instances the Gentile rulers in their conduct to those beneath them, as an example to be avoided by all who would be His disciples, and sets forth Himself as the great Example in humility. He, who was God, became Man; He, who was the object of all worship, through the Incarnation became the servant of all, and gave His life a ransom for many. Though the ransom was offered for all, some would not accept Him as their ransom—many would, but not all.^b

JESUS HEALS TWO BLIND MEN NEAR JERICO.

S. MATTHEW xx. 29-34.

S. MARK x. 46-52.

S. LUKE xviii. 35-43.

	46	And they came to Jericho:	35	And it came to pass, that as He was come nigh unto Jericho,
29	And as they departed from Jericho,	and as He went out of Jericho with His disciples
	a great multitude followed Him.	and a great number of people,
30	And, behold, two blind men	blind Bartimæus, the son of Timeus,		a certain blind man

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xx. 24; vol. i. p. 286.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xx. 24; vol. viii. p. 389.

^a A ransom for many (λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν).—"A ransom in the stead of many," not λύτρον πολλῶν, which words would predicate the result; whereas the language employed denotes the potency of the offering, even if it found no exercise, and thus no actual result should follow. Thus the preposition is no pleonasm, but material to the conveyance of a specific idea: which is again expressed, with some variation of terms, in the words ὁ δὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀντὶ λύτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, 1 Tim. ii. 6.—GREEN'S 'Critical Notes on New Testament,' p. 25.

^b Interpretation.—"After S. Matt. xx. 28, there is found in D, in the Curetonian, and one codex of the Harclean (margin) Syriac, and in almost all the codices of the Vetus Latina, but in no other Greek MS. or early version, an extensive interpolation, which may be seen in Scrivener's Introduction, p. 425. There are numberless variations in these authorities, and S. Jerome has rejected it.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xx. 24; vol. viii. p. 390.

There is no doubt that it is an interpolation; but since it was certainly current in the second century, and rejected in the fourth, the text exhibited by any document containing it would probably be very ancient."—HAMMOND'S 'Textual Criticism,' p. 75.

The following translation of this singular interpolation is taken from Scrivener's Introduction, p. 8:—"But you, seek ye that from little things ye may become great, and not from great things may become little. Whenever ye are invited to the house of a supper, be not sitting down in the honoured place, lest should come he that is more honoured than thou, and to thee the lord of the supper should say, 'Come near below,' and thou be ashamed in the eyes of the guests. But if thou sit down in the little place, and he that is less than thee should come, and to thee the lord of the supper shall say, 'Come near, and come up and sit down,' thou also shalt have more glory in the eyes of the guests."

S. MATTHEW xx.

S. MARK x.

S. LUKE xviii.

sitting by the way side,

sat by the highway side begging.

when they heard that Jesus passed by,
cried out, saying,
Have mercy on us, O Lord,
Thou Son of David.

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth,
he began to cry out, and say,
Jesus, Thou Son of David,
have mercy on me.

31 And the multitude rebuked them,
because they should hold their peace:
but they cried the more,
saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord,
Thou Son of David.

32 And Jesus stood still, and called them,

48 And many charged him
that he should hold his peace:
but he cried the more a great deal,
Thou Son of David,
have mercy on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called.
And they call the blind man, saying unto him,
Be of good comfort, rise; He calleth thee.

50 And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?
The blind man said unto Him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus

said unto him, Go thy way;
thy faith hath made thee whole.

And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?
They say unto Him, Lord,
that our eyes may be opened.

33 So Jesus had compassion on them,
and touched their eyes:

and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed Him.

36 and hearing the multitude pass by,
he asked what it meant.

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

38 And he cried, saying,
Jesus, Thou Son of David,
have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before rebuked him,
that he should his peace:
but he cried so much the more,
Thou Son of David,
have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him:

and when he was come near,

41 He asked him, saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?

42 And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight.
And Jesus

said unto him, Receive thy sight:
thy faith hath saved thee.

43 And immediately he received his sight, and followed Him, glorifying God:

and all the people, when they saw it,
gave praise unto God.

29. And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed Him.

S.^t omits Him.

[Vulg.

Vulg. Et egredientibus illis ab Iericho, secuta est eam turba multa.

30. ¶ And, behold, two blind men^a sitting by the way side, when they heard that Jesus passed

^a And, behold, two blind men.—“Mark and Luke here speak of one blind man; Matthew of two. The case is similar to that of the demoniacs of Gadara.

“More difficult is it to harmonize the accounts as to the place where the miracle was wrought. Matthew and Mark narrate it as having occurred when Jesus was departing from Jericho (ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ Ἱερικῶς); while Luke seems to describe it as happening during His approach to the city (ἐν τῷ ἐγγίζειν αὐτὸν εἰς Ἱερικῶς). Several ways of solving this difficulty have been proposed.

“1. The language of Mark is, καὶ ἔρχονται εἰς Ἱερικῶς, ‘they came to Jericho.’ This, it is said, may be understood as implying that Jesus remained some days at least in Jericho, where He would naturally visit points of interest in the vicinity; as, for example, the fountain of Elisha, a mile or more distant. That He did actually spend the Jewish Sabbath at Jericho is evident from the fact that He arrived at Bethany on the first day of the week. The miracle therefore may have been wrought, not when He was finally leaving Jericho for Jerusalem, but when He was occasionally going out of, and returning to, Jericho. So Newcome, ‘Harm.’

“2. The verb ἐγγίζειν, it is said, may signify not only to draw near, but also to be near, e.g. ἐγγὺς εἶναι. Hence the language of Luke may include also the idea expressed by Matthew and Mark, i.e. while He was still near the city. So Grotius, Comm. on Matt. xx. 30. Passow, in his Lexicon, gives a like definition, ‘nahe seyn, nahe kommen, sich nähern,’ i.e. ‘to be near, to draw near;’ but neither he nor Grotius brings forward any references to classic authors in support of such a meaning. Indeed it is very doubtful whether this definition can be fully sustained by classic authority. Yet in the New Testament and Septuagint there are passages which go to imply such a usage. Thus, Luke xix. 29, ὅς ἤγγισεν εἰς Βηθφαγή καὶ Βηθανίαν, while we read in Matt. xxi. 1, ὅτε ἤγγισεν εἰς Ἱερουσόλυμα, καὶ ἤλθεν εἰς Βηθφαγή πρὸς τὸ ὕψος τῶν ἐλαιῶν, implying that they had already arrived at Bethphage and Bethany. So trop. Phil. ii. 3, μέχρι θανάτου ἤγγισε, he was nigh unto death. The usage of the LXX. is more definite: as they often put ἐγγίζειν for Heb. נִרְאָה near, even of place. So of Naboth’s vineyard, 1 Kings xxi. 2, ὅτι ἐγγίζειν αὐτὸς τῷ οἴκῳ μου, because it is near unto my house. Also Deut. xxi. 3, ἡ πόλις ἣ ἐγγίζουσα τῷ τραυματίᾳ, the city next [nigh] unto the slain man, v. 8, xxii. 2; and trop. Jer. xxiii. 23; Ruth ii. 20; 2 Sam. xix. 42. These instances seem sufficient to bear out the proposed interpretation in Luke; which is also adopted by Le Clerc, Doddridge, Pilkington, and others. Nor is this method of explanation made useless for the purpose of reconciling the Evangelists, by Luke xix. 1, as Newcome asserts. In connection with Jericho, Luke first of all relates this striking miracle; then goes back and mentions that Jesus ‘entered and passed through Jericho;’ and lastly records the visit to the house of Zaccheus, apparently within the city. Luke xix. 1 therefore is not more at variance with this view re-by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, Thou Son of David.

S. Have mercy on us, Jesus, Thou Son: V. O Lord, have mercy on us, Thou Son.
 Vulg. dicentes: Domine, miserere nostri, fili David.

31. And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, Thou Son of David.

S.V. O Lord, have mercy on us, Thou Son.
 Vulg. dicentes: Domine, miserere nostri, fili David.

32. And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?

33. They say unto Him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

34. So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed Him.

S.V. immediately they received.
 Vulg. Misertus autem eorum Jesus, tetigit oculos eorum. Et confestim viderunt, et secuti sunt eum.

When we compare the three Evangelists together, it appears that S. Matthew speaks of two blind men whose eyes Jesus opened in the neighbourhood of Jericho, S. Mark of one, and S. Luke of one; that S. Mark gives the name of the blind man, and that S. Luke does not; that, with one single exception, the terms in which S. Mark and S. Luke describe their respective blind men, and all the circumstantial details of their cure, agree, in a most remarkable manner, with each other, and also with the terms in which S. Matthew relates the case of the two blind men. The exception mentioned is, that S. Matthew says that Jesus opened the eyes of two blind men, and S. Mark of one blind man, as they went out of Jericho, while S. Luke's language has been thought to imply that Jesus opened the eyes of the blind man of whom he speaks, as He entered Jericho. Two solutions of this apparent difficulty have been offered, and that without any straining of the narrative.

Some¹ think that S. Luke is recording the case of a blind man whose eyes Jesus opened as He entered Jericho, and S. Mark that of another blind man whose eyes He opened as He left Jericho. For S. Matthew to put these two cases together, and to relate them as having taken place as they departed from Jericho, would not be inconsistent with his usual practice, so often pointed out, of classifying things so far as they were alike, and overlooking the points in which they differ, and of thus relating in a general way that Jesus opened the eyes of two blind men as He left Jericho, though one really and literally took place as He entered Jericho, and the other as He went out of it. Others² think that S. Matthew is exact and accurate when he says that Jesus opened the eyes of the two blind men as He left Jericho, and that the one whom S. Luke mentions began his supplication to Jesus as He entered Jericho, but did not receive an answer to his petition until He was going out of Jericho. Strictly interpreted, the narrative of S. Luke implies that the blind man was sitting begging as Jesus entered Jericho, and that He passed by him, and it may be, passed on to some distance before Jesus commanded him to be brought to Him.

It is probable, but not certain, that S. Mark and S. Luke are not speaking of the same blind man, but of two different men. Supposing they mean one and the same man, it would be absurd to argue that S. Matthew is mistaken in mentioning two blind, because the other Evangelists speak of only one: for it is the common practice of all the Evangelists at times to record only a portion of what they saw, or of what took place. We could have no better instance of this than we have in this very place, and on this very visit of Jesus to it. Reading S. Matthew and S. Mark alone, we might have concluded that Jesus had passed through Jericho on His way to Jerusalem, and that little or nothing had occurred worthy of notice, except that Jesus had opened the eyes of two blind men: for they neither of them say one word about Zaccheus; yet it was on this very visit that the incident relating to him occurred.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 65; vol. iii. p. 1137.

Quæst. Evang. ii. 48; vol. iii. p. 1361.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ev. p. 292.

² S. Ambrose, in Luc. xviii. 35; vol. ii. p. 1791.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xx. 30; vol. i. p. 288.

respecting the miracle than it is with the visit to Zaccheus. It is a passing announcement of a general fact, in connection with which other more important circumstances are related; not indeed in the order of time, but partly by anticipation.

"3. Less probable than either of the above is the solution of Lightfoot and others, who assume that Jesus healed one blind man before entering the city, and another on departing from it. See Lightfoot, 'Chron. Temp. in N. T.' app. ii. p. 42."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 206.

"Jesus healeth one blind man as He entereth into Jericho, of which Luke speaketh, and another as He goeth out, of which the other two. Matthew indeed speaketh of two healed as He came out of Jericho; comprehending, it may be, the story of him that was healed on the other side of the town, and this together in one story, for brevity sake. Or if there were two healed on this side of the town, Mark only mentions one, because he rather aimeth at showing of the manner or kind of the miracle, than at the number."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lix.; vol. i. p. 250.

"The true solution is surely patent enough. (1) As to the number of the healed. As on other occasions, S. Matthew supplies the total number, while S. Mark and S. Luke select the more prominent case, without denying the existence of any other. (2) As to the time and place of the healing. The facts stated are as follows:—According to S. Luke, one blind man sat begging at the Lord's entry; according to S. Mark, one, begging or otherwise, at the Lord's departure, when also he made supplication, was rebuked, and was healed; according to S. Matthew, it thus fared with two at the Lord's departure. . . ."—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 467.

From the expressions which these blind men apply to Jesus it would appear that they were acquainted with the prophecy of Isaiah (xxxv. 5, &c.), which was generally understood of the Messiah, and in which he promises that, as the glorious effects of His coming, the eyes of the blind shall be opened. Nor is it a matter of surprise that at a time when there was a general expectation of the coming of the Messiah, and an examination into the prophecies respecting Him, that men in their condition should fix their attention on those prophecies which promise the blessing of sight to the blind; and that thus they would be ready to welcome as the Messiah the first man who could fulfil this condition. To call Jesus the Son of David was to confess in the most unqualified terms that they acknowledged Him as the Messiah.¹

Jesus is recorded to have opened the eyes of the blind on six different occasions. The first time He opened the eyes of two blind men (Matt. ix. 27); the second, of a man possessed with a devil, blind and dumb (Matt. xii. 22); the third, of a blind man at Bethsaida (Mark viii. 24); the fourth, of a man blind from his birth in Jerusalem (John ix.); the fifth, of the two blind men here; and lastly, of those whose eyes He opened in the Temple (Matt. xxi. 14).

As already stated, it is not very easy to say what was the exact order in the course of our Lord's ministry here; for this has to be gathered from the incidental notices made by the four Evangelists, which are not given in any connected series, but which have to be fitted together, as indicated by the various expressions used by one or other of them. Under these circumstances, to speak with certainty would be presumptuous. The following appears to be the most probable order of the events embraced by this and the preceding chapter.

Jesus went up to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles (John vii. 2, &c.). He was also present at Jerusalem at the Feast of the Dedication (John x. 22).

Though no mention is made of His return, He most probably returned to Galilee after the Feast of the Dedication, if not also after the Feast of Tabernacles.

After this He made His final departure from Galilee to go up to Jerusalem with a view to His Crucifixion and Ascension (Matt. xix. 1; Mark x. 1; Luke ix. 51).

On the refusal of the Samaritans to receive Him as He was journeying southward to Jerusalem, He turned eastward and went along the borders of Galilee and Samaria, crossing over the Jordan into Peræa (Luke xvii. 11).

He then abode some time at Bethabara beyond Jordan (John x. 40). Here it most probably was that the Pharisees questioned Him on the subject of divorce (Matt. xix. 3; Mark x. 1).

On receiving a message from the sisters of Lazarus He left Bethabara, accompanied by the Twelve Apostles, and went to Bethany, where He raised Lazarus from the dead (John xi. 1, &c.). He then retires from Bethany to Ephraim (John xi. 54).

When the Passover drew near He prepared to go up to Jerusalem, and on the way instructs the disciples respecting His approaching Crucifixion (Matt. xx. 17).

As He passed through Jericho He opened the eyes of two blind men (Matt. xx. 29, &c.; Mark x. 46, &c.; Luke xviii. 35, &c.).

At Jericho He became the guest of Zacchæus (Luke xix. 1, &c.); delivers the parable of the Pounds, &c.; arrives at Bethany six days before the Passover (John xii. 1).

¹ See note p. 63.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The barren fig-tree.—"He came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only." (Matt. xxi. 19.) 'This place is not a little obscure, being compared with Mark, who seems to say, that therefore figs were not found on this tree, because it was not yet the time for figs. Why then did our Saviour expect figs, when He might certainly know that it was not yet the time of figs? And why, not finding them, did He curse the tree, being innocent, and agreeable to its own nature?'

"I. We will first consider the situation of this tree. Our Evangelist says that it was in the way, ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ. This minds me of a distinction used very often by the Talmudists, between the fruits of trees of common right, which did not belong to any peculiar master, but grew in woody places or in common fields, and the fruits of trees which grew in gardens, orchards, or fields that had a proper owner. How much difference was made between these fruits by the Canonists, as to tything and as to eating, is in many places to be met with through the whole classis entitled seeds. This fig-tree seems to have been of the former kind, a wild fig-tree, growing in a place or field not belonging to anyone in particular, but common to all. So that our Saviour did not injure any particular person when He caused this tree to wither; but it was such a tree that it could not be said of it that it was mine or thine.

"II. He found nothing thereon but leaves, because the time of figs was not yet a great while."

Lightfoot then quotes the following words of the Talmudists:—"The beginning of leaves is in the month Nisan." (Jerus. Sheviith, fol. 35, 4.) 'From the putting forth of leaves till there be green figs, is fifty days; from the green figs till the buds fall off, fifty days; and from that time till the figs be ripe, are fifty days.' If therefore the first putting out of the leaves was in the month Nisan, and that was five months' time before the figs came to be ripe, it is plain enough that the figs of that year coming on, were not expected by our Saviour, nor could be expected."

After quoting from the Talmudists a description of three different kinds of fig-trees, he gives their account of a fourth kind, which "puts forth fruit every year, but it is ripe only every third year; so that on that tree every year one might see three sorts of fruit,—namely, of the present year, of the past, and of the year before that. . . . But how may one know which is the fruit of each year? R. Jonah says, 'By the threads that hang to them.' The tradition of Samuel makes little strings hang to it.

"III. The fruit of very many trees hung upon them all the winter, by the mildness of the weather, if they were not gathered, or shaken off by the wind; nay, they ripened in winter. Hence came those cautions about tything."

Here follow many quotations from the Talmudists respecting the way in which they distinguished the fruit of each year for the purpose of tything them.

"IV. Christ therefore came to the tree, seeking fruit on it (although the ordinary time of figs was not yet), because it was very probable that some fruit might be found there. Of the present year, indeed, He neither expected nor could expect any fruit, when it was so far from being the time of figs, that it was almost five months off; and it may be doubted whether it had yet so much as any leaves of the present year. It was now the month Nisan, and that month was the time of the first putting out of leaves; so that, if the buds of the leaves had just peeped forth, they were so tender, small, and scarce worth the name of leaves (for it was but the eleventh day of the month), that to expect figs of the same year with those leaves, had not been only in vain, but ridiculous. Those words seem to denote something peculiar, ζῳοντα φύλλα, having leaves; as if the other trees thereabout had been without leaves, or at least had not such leaves as promised figs. Mark seems to give the reason why He came rather to that tree than to any other, namely, because He saw leaves on it, and thereby hoped to find figs. 'For when He saw,' saith he, 'a fig-tree afar off having leaves, He came, if haply He might find anything thereon.' From the leaves He had hopes of figs: these therefore certainly were not the leaves of the present spring, for those were hardly so much as in being yet; but they were either the leaves of the year past, that had hung upon the tree all winter; or else this tree was of that kind which had figs and leaves together hanging on it, for two or three years before the fruit grew ripe. And I rather approve of this latter sense, which both renders the matter itself more clear, and better solves the difficulties that arise from the words of Mark. This tree, it seems, had leaves which promised fruit, and others had not so; whereas had they all been of the same kind, it is likely they would all have had leaves after the same manner. But when others had lost all their leaves of the former year, by winds and the winter, and those of the present year were not as yet come out, this kept its leaves, according to its nature and kind, both summer and winter. Mark therefore in that clause which chiefly perplexes interpreters, 'for the time of figs was not yet,' doth not strictly and only give the reason why He found no figs; but gives the reason of the whole action,—namely, why, on that mountain which abounded with fig-trees, He saw but one that had such leaves, and being at a great distance when He saw it, He went to it, expecting figs only from it. The reason, saith he, was this, 'Because it was not the usual time of figs,' for, had it been so, He might have gathered figs from the trees about Him; but since it was not, all His expectation was from this, which seemed to be of the kind which never wanted leaves or figs. That tree (suppose) bore figs such a summer, which hung upon the boughs all the following winter; it bore others also next summer; and those, together with the former, hung on the boughs all this winter too: the third summer it bore a third degree; and this summer brought those of the first bearing to ripeness: and so onwards continually; so that it was no time to be found without fruit of several years. It is less therefore to be wondered at if that which promised so much fruitfulness by its looks that one might have expected from it at least the fruit of two years, did so far deceive the hopes it had raised, as not to afford one fig,—if that, I say, should suffer a just punishment from our Lord, whom it had so much in appearance disappointed, an emblem of the punishment that was to be inflicted upon the Jews for their spiritual barrenness and hypocrisy."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 19; vol. ii. p. 225.

CHAPTER XXI.

[1. Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass, 12. driveth the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, 17. curseth the fig-tree, 23. pattern to silence the priests and elders, 28. and rebuketh them by the similitude of the fig-trees, 33. and the sabbatarians, who slew such as were sent unto them.]

[Vulg. Jesus super asinum Iherosolimam cum triumpho ingressus, negotiatores de Templo eiecit, et pharisæis de triumpho indignationis respondit: discipulis autem de figulma Christi verba arripuit morantibus, declarat fidei phœnomen: interrogatumque de sua potestate retinuit quæstionem de hominis baptismo: et ex parabolis de homine duos filios habentis, et de patrefamilias, cuius conitores post alios scrias, et am plenum vinum herodem occiderunt, prædixit regnum Dei a Iudaïs ad gentes transferendum.]

With the exception of a very small number, of whom Lightfoot may be taken as a specimen,¹ it has been allowed by modern commentators generally, that S. John (xii. 1, &c.) is describing the same supper at Bethany* as S. Matthew (xxvi. 6, &c.) and S. Mark (xiv. 3, &c.). It has been pointed out by many writers that in these three records of a supper at Bethany there is the same occasion of a supper, the same peculiar kind of perfume, the same value of the perfume, the same complaint of waste, the same rebuke, the same answer of our Lord respecting His own preparation for His Burial, and the perpetual presence of the poor. In these three relations of the supper there are also several minor variations, which are easily reconciled. The only difference which presents any difficulty is the apparent discrepancy with respect to the time when the supper took place. S. John (xii. 1, &c.) seems to say that the supper which they made for Jesus at Bethany was six days before the Passover. S. Matthew (xxvi. 6, &c.) and S. Mark (xiv. 3, &c.) place their relation of it among the events that occurred two days before the Passover. Two solutions of this difficulty have been suggested.

1. One explanation is that if S. Matthew and S. Mark had observed the chronological order of events their relation of the supper at Bethany would have come in before their account of His triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and in S. Matthew's Gospel would have been placed at the beginning of chapter xxi., but that S. Matthew and S. Mark here, as in many other instances, make the chronological arrangement of facts secondary to some other classification; that they place their relation of the supper at Bethany just before their account of Judas's offer to the chief priests to deliver Jesus up to them, because it was the anointing of Jesus with precious ointment which took place at that supper, and Judas's indignation at the loss of the three hundred pence for which the ointment might have been sold, and his desire to make up that loss, which induced him to offer to the chief priests to betray Jesus unto them; that as the supper at Bethany was the occasion which gave rise to Judas's feeling of avarice, so his offer to betray Jesus was the result of it, and therefore that S. Matthew and S. Mark place them together, as being very much in the way of cause and effect. This is the explanation which is given by S. Augustine, and which has been repeated by successive commentators down to our own time.²

2. The other explanation is, that S. John's language does not really imply that they made Him a supper at Bethany six days before the Passover, but only that He arrived at Bethany six days before the Passover, at which place they made Him a supper, where the anointing of Him which the Evangelist goes on to relate occurred, leaving the time when they made Him a supper undefined; that, as S. Matthew and S. Mark relate that Jesus retired to Bethany on the evening of each day in the Passover week, and then, when it wanted two days to the Passover, insert their relation of the supper at Bethany, that is most probably the time when it really occurred. It has been pointed out that this explanation has the advantage of placing in closer proximity than the former the indignation of Judas at the loss of the price of the

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament sects. lxxi. and lxxx. vol. i. pp. 251, 258.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 78; vol. iii. p. 1152.

Venerable Bede, in Matt. xxvi. 6; vol. iii. p. 110.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cix. p. 304.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 6; vol. i. p. 368.

[Grotius,

Grotius, in Matt. xxvi. 6; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 786.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 6; vol. viii. p. 471.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 259.

Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, in Matt. xxvi. 6.

Dean Alford, Greek Testament, in Matt. xxvi. 6.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 289, &c.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evang. xlii. and llii.

* The supper at Bethany.—"The incident is inserted by S. Matthew and S. Mark; not retrospectively, but in its right chronological order;—that is, as occurring two days before the Passover. But how then does this harmonize with John xii. 1, 2, which seems to place the event six days before the Passover? In this way. In S. John, who alone of the Evangelists has recorded the Lord's raising of Lazarus at Bethany, the connection between the Lord's first ensuing return to Bethany in ver. 1, and the supper whereat Lazarus was a fellow-guest in ver. 2, and at which the Anointing was done by Lazarus's sister, is a moral and local connection, not a chronological one: 'Jesus six days before the Passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was,' &c. 'They made Him therefore a supper there;' that is, sometime during those six days. The note of time marks not the supper, but the arrival at Bethany for the six days' sojourn, Bethany being thereforeward the home of our Lord until His Crucifixion (Matt. xxi. 17; Luke xxi. 37); only the notes of cause and place refer to the supper, which, irrespective of its real date (two days before the Passover), is set before our eyes as the public thank-offering of the friends of Bethany."—McLellan, 'New Testament,' p. 475.

precious ointment with his betrayal of Jesus in order to make up for that loss, and also the Burial of Jesus with the anointing of His Body by Mary with ointment beforehand for His Burial.

It would seem that this explanation is not mentioned by any of the ancient writers. It is found in Archbishop Newcome's 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,'¹ Of late years it has been reproduced and set forth as the only true explanation by commentators who, to say the least, have shown no lack of critical acumen on other points.²

JESUS SENDS FOR AN ASS AND HER COLT ON WHICH TO ENTER JERUSALEM.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 1-6.

S. MARK xi. 1-6.

S. LUKE xix. 28-34.

S. JOHN xii. 1.

1 And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the Mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her :

loose them, and bring them unto Me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them ; and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 "Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass."

6 And the disciples went,

1 And when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the Mount of Olives, He sendeth forth two of His disciples,

2 and saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you :

and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied,

whereon never man sat : loose him, and bring him. 3 And if any man say unto you,

Why do ye this ? say ye that the Lord hath need of him ;

and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met ; and they loose him.

5 And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt ?

6 And they said unto them and did as Jesus commanded them. even as Jesus had commanded : and they let them go.

28 And when He had thus spoken, He went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

29 And it came to pass, when

He was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the Mount of Olives, He sent two of His disciples, 30 saying, Go ye into the village over against you ; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat : loose him, and bring him hither. 31 And if any man ask you,

Why do ye loose him ? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as He had said unto them.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt ?

34 And they said, The Lord hath need of him.

1 Then Jesus six days before the Passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom He raised from the dead.

¹ Archbishop Newcome, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 333 ; Bagster's ed. 1827.

² Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, pp. 137, 210 ; ed. Boston, U.S.A. 1872.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in English, R. T. S. London, pp. 153, 214.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 471.

1. And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage,^a unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2. Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto Me.

3. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

S. hath need of it.

Vulg. dicite quia Dominus his opus habet : et confestim dimittet eos.

4. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet,^b saying,

S. But this.

Vulg. Hoc autem totum factum est, ut adimpleretur quod dictum est per prophetam, dicentem.

5. "Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass; and a colt the foal of an ass."

Vulg. sedens super asinam, et pullum filium subjugalis.

¹ Rupertus, in Joan. xii. ; vol. iii. p. 655.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cx. p. 313.

[Cornelius

^a Bethphage (Βηθφαγή).—"There is very frequent mention of this place in the Talmudists; and certainly a more careful comparison of the maps with those things which are said by one of the situation of this place, is worthy to be made. When they place it in Mount Olivet, these make it contiguous to the buildings of Jerusalem."

Lightfoot then quotes many passages from the Talmudists to show that Bethphage was part within the walls of Jerusalem and part without, and that it enjoyed the same privileges as the city itself, and continues: "Now consult the maps and commentaries of Christians, and you have Bethphage seated far from the walls of the city, not very far from the top of Mount Olivet, where also the footsteps of it (even at this day) are falsely shown to travellers. So our countryman Sands, an eye-witness, writes concerning it, 'We now ascend Mount Olivet (saith he), another way bending more northwards (for before he had described the ascent to Bethany), on the right hand, nor far from the top was Bethphage seated, whose very foundations are confounded, from whence Christ sitting upon the foal of an ass went in triumph to Jerusalem.'

"They took their resolutions concerning the situation of this place not elsewhere certainly than from the Gospel history, which seems openly to delineate Bethphage at the Mount Olivet. True indeed, and yet nothing hinders, but we may believe the Jews, asserting it to be within the walls of Jerusalem, since they illustrate the thing with so many examples; nor is there any reason why they should either feign or dissemble anything in this matter.

"The word פגיו, phagi, most vulgarly, and in all men's mouths, denotes green figs, which Mount Olivet was not a little famous for. For although it took its name from Olives, yet it produced both fig-trees and palms; and according to the variety of these, growing in divers tracts of the mount, so various names were imposed upon those tracts, which we note elsewhere. That lowest part therefore of the mountain, which runs out next the city, is called from the green figs, Beth-phage, by which name also that part of Jerusalem next adjacent is called, by reason of the vicinity of that place. And from these things well regarded one may more rightly and plainly understand the story of Christ coming this way.

"He had lodged in Bethany, the town of Lazarus (John xii. 1). From thence in the morning going onward, He is said to come to

6. And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them.

God had commanded (Exod. xii. 3) that on the tenth day of this month the lamb for the Passover should be taken from the rest of the flock, and kept up until the fourteenth day of the same month, on the evening of which day it was to be killed. Jesus, as we read, had repaired to Bethany on Saturday, the ninth of this month. He had spent the night there, and in the morning, the tenth of the month, He sets out for Jerusalem. We are warranted in believing, not from any statement to that effect, but from the whole tenor of the narrative, that it was no mere accident or coincidence that Jesus, the true Lamb of God, entered Jerusalem on the same day as the lamb for the Passover was to be taken up from the rest of the flock—that He fulfilled the intimation of the Law in the day on which He entered Jerusalem, quite as much as He fulfilled the words of the prophet in the manner in which He entered it.¹

St. Mark says, when they came "unto Bethphage and Bethany," that is, when they came to the confines of these two places, to the spot where the district of Bethany ended and that of

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. viii. p. 397.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 350.

Beth-phage and Bethany (Mark xi. 1); that is, to that place where those tracts of the mountain known by those names did touch upon one another. And when He was about to ascend into heaven, He is said to lead out His disciples εως εις Βηθανιαν, 'as far as Bethany' (Luke xiv. 50), but not further than a Sabbath day's journey (Acts i. 12), whereas the town where Lazarus dwelt was almost twice as far (John xi. 18). He went therefore out of Jerusalem through Beth-phage within the walls, and Beth-phage without the walls, and, measuring a Sabbath day's journey or thereabouts, arrived to that place and tract of Olivet, where the name of Beth-phage ceased and the name of Bethany began, and there He ascended. I doubt, therefore, whether there was any town in Olivet called Beth-phage, but rather a great tract of the mountain was so called, and the outermost street of Jerusalem within the walls was called by the same name by reason of its nearness to that tract."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Chorographical Century,' vol. ii. p. 36.

"Of the village of Bethphage no trace exists."—ROBINSON, 'Researches,' ii. 103.

^b Which was spoken by the prophet (τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τοῦ προφήτου).—"Wherever the sacred writers have occasion to quote or to refer to the Old Testament, they invariably apply the preposition διὰ, as denoting instrumentality, to the lawgiver or the prophet or the psalmist, while they reserve ὅθεν as signifying the primary motive agency, to God Himself. This rule is, I believe, universal. Some few exceptions, it is true, occur in the Received Text; but all these vanish, when the readings of the older authorities are adopted; and this very fact is significant, because it points to a contrast between the persistent idea of the sacred writers themselves and the comparative indifference of their later transcribers. Sometimes διὰ occurs alone, e.g., Matt. xxi. 4, τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τοῦ προφήτου; xiv. 15, τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Δανιὴλ. &c.; sometimes in close connection with ὅθεν, e.g., Matt. i. 22, τὸ ῥηθὲν ὅθεν τοῦ Κυρίου διὰ τοῦ προφήτου (comp. ii. 15). It is used moreover not only when the word is mentioned as spoken, but also when it is mentioned as mentioned: e.g., Matt. ii. 5, οὐκ ἔστι γὰρ γέγραπται διὰ τοῦ προφήτου; Luke xviii. 31, πάντα τα γέγραμμένα διὰ τῶν προφητῶν. Yet this significant fact is wholly lost to the English reader.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 121.

Bethphage began. Lightfoot shows that Bethphage extended from within the walls of Jerusalem to the foot of Mount Olivet. It is said¹ that the priests were accustomed to keep the animals required for sacrifice at Bethphage because it was situated conveniently near to Jerusalem. Thus on the same day, from the same village, and through the same gate of Jerusalem as the lamb for the Passover was taken, did Jesus, the true Lamb of God, proceed to Jerusalem to prepare Himself for His Sacrifice. The Scriptures must be fulfilled. Whether the people then or since observed their fulfilment or not, there was a necessity, a divine law, for their fulfilment: for it was His will to fulfil them. The instances which the Evangelists mention are not all the cases of fulfilment, but merely specimens.

The names of the two disciples² whom Jesus sends are not given, but it has been conjectured that they were Peter and John, because they were the two whom, a short time after (S. Luke xxii. 8), He sent to prepare for them the Passover.

Zechariah (ix. 9) and S. Matthew speak of both an ass and her colt, and they use the same language, and must therefore be interpreted in the same sense. What the prophet foretells, the Evangelist describes as taking place. The question which arises is, does Zechariah foretell that Jesus would ride, and does S. Matthew relate that He did ride, upon both the ass and her foal, first on one and then on the other, or only upon the foal? Some³ think that he rode only on the foal, and not on the mother of the foal. Others⁴ hold that He rode first on one, and then on the other.

Those who maintain that Jesus rode only on the foal and not on the ass also, translate the καὶ of the prophecy quoted by S. Matthew, verse 5 (ἐνὶ ὄνῳ καὶ πῶλῳ), which 'is rendered in the A.V. and, by even or and even. The effect of this is to make the ass and the foal, the ὄνον and πῶλον, one and the same animal. But is it not a fatal objection to this, that καὶ unites the same ὄνον and πῶλον in the 2nd and also in the 7th verse, and that in neither of these can it possibly be translated even or and even?

The 7th verse runs, "and put on them their clothes, and set Him thereon," καὶ ἐπέθηκαν ἐπάνω αὐτῶν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπέκαθον ἐπάνω αὐτῶν. Here ἐπάνω αὐτῶν occurs twice, and is translated in the first clause "upon them" and in the second "thereon." Those who wish to avoid the interpretation that Jesus rode upon both the ass and her foal, apply ἐπάνω αὐτῶν in the first of these clauses to the two animals, and in the second to the clothes that were placed on the animals. But this does not really obviate the difficulty, it only removes it a step further back: for if Jesus sat upon the clothes, and the clothes were placed upon both the animals, He must have sat upon both the ass and her foal.

The other three Evangelists mention only the "colt" or the "young ass." This is the principal reason which they allege for concluding that Jesus rode only on the foal, and they are strengthened in this opinion by the expression "whereon never man sat," which has been explained to mean that when Jesus did ride, it was upon an ass that had never been ridden before. But if the silence of the three Evangelists is to be taken as conclusive against His riding on the ass as well as on the foal, it must also be taken as conclusive against the presence of the ass. But S. Matthew puts it beyond all question that the ass was present as well as her foal.

Nor is it a sufficient answer to say, that it was unnecessary that He should ride upon both the ass and her foal, because the distance was so short. It was unnecessary that He should ride upon either as a convenience or as a relief from fatigue, but it might not be unnecessary as a mystery or symbolic action. The whole transaction is evidently full of mystery. He who for more than three years had been preaching the kingdom of heaven, and healing the sick, in Galilee, Samaria, Judaea, and Perea; who had traversed all these regions on foot again and again,—now, when He has a journey of less than two miles, sends His disciples for an ass and her foal, on which He may ride a part of this journey, a distance of less than a mile. He who during the last three years had walked hundreds of miles to spread the knowledge of His kingdom, now chose to ride a portion of a mile, to express the future condition of His kingdom.

The ass, called here προῦνιον (verse 5), an animal inured to the yoke, was a fit emblem of the nation of the Jews, which had been for so long a time under the yoke, or under the discipline of God through the Law of Moses; and the foal, whereon never man had sat, was an emblem of the unbroken, undisciplined, and untutored Gentiles. It may be that, in this His triumphal entry into Jerusalem, to offer Himself the Sacrifice for sin, Jesus rode first upon one of these animals, and then upon the other, to show that He would triumph over both the Jews and the Gentiles.

That Jesus rode from Bethphage to Jerusalem, not because He was wearied, or to secure Himself from the pressure of the crowd, but in some way to prefigure the future of His Church, is the opinion of all the ancient commentators, both of those who think that He rode only upon the foal, and also of those who think that He rode upon both the ass and her foal, first upon one and then upon the other.⁵

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 17; vol. iii. p. 1429.

² Jerome, Epist. cxxii. (alias 27) ad Eustochium; vol. i. p. 887. Theophylact, in Luc. xix. 19; vol. i. p. 448.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xv. p. 312.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 1; vol. viii. p. 395.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xv. p. 312.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 1; vol. viii. p. 396.

⁷ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxi. 5; vol. vii. p. 147.

⁸ Euthymius, in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. ii. p. 805.

⁹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. p. 315.

¹⁰ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 5; vol. i. p. 290.

Bishop of Lincoln. Greek Test., Matt. xxi. 5.

¹¹ Theophylact, in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. i. p. 109.

¹² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. viii. p. 397.

¹³ in Zech. ix. 9; vol. vii. p. 727.

¹⁴ Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. i. p. 315.

¹⁵ McClellan, New Testament, p. 468.

¹⁶ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 14; vol. iii. p. 1417.

¹⁷ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvi. vol. ii. p. 270.

¹⁸ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 14; vol. vii. p. 80.

¹⁹ Rupert. in Joan. xii. 14; vol. iii. p. 657.

²⁰ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxi. 7; vol. i. p. 1035.

There are so many narratives in the Gospels where the Evangelists record only a part of what took place,—where, for instance, one will record the whole, and the others only a part, or where each will relate a part; and these taken together form a full and complete relation,—that a fresh example of this need excite no surprise. Here S. Matthew records the whole of what took place, and the other three Evangelists only a part.¹ One reason that has been given for the omission by three out of the four Evangelists of His riding upon the ass, is, that as they wrote for Gentile readers, they have recorded in this transaction only that which concerned the Gentiles; while S. Matthew, writing more especially for the Jews, has related what referred to them, as well as what concerned the Gentiles.

JESUS MAKES HIS PUBLIC ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 7-9, 17.

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them

their clothes,

and they set
Him thereon.

S. MARK xi. 7-11.

7 And they brought the colt
to Jesus, and cast their garments on him;

and He sat upon him.

S. LUKE xix. 35-44.

35 And they brought him
to Jesus:
and they cast their garments upon the colt,

and they set
Jesus thereon.

S. JOHN xii. 14-18.

14 And Jesus, when He had found a young ass,

sat thereon;
as it is written,

15 Fear not, daughter of Sion:
behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These things understood not His disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of Him, and that they had done these things unto Him.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments
in the way;
others cut down
branches from the trees,
and strawed them in the way.

8 And
many spread their garments
in the way;
and others cut down
branches off the trees,
and strawed them in the way.

36 And as He went,
they spread their clothes
in the way.

37 And when He was come nigh, even now at the descent of the Mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38 Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the Name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory
in the highest.

17 The people therefore that was with Him when He called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

18 For this cause the people also met Him, for that they heard that He had done this miracle.

9 And the multitudes that went before,

9 And they
that went before,

39 And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto Him, Master, rebuke Thy disciples.

40 And He answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out.

¹ S. Augustine, in Consens. Evang. ii. 66; vol. iii. p. 1138.

S. MATTHEW xxi.

and that followed,
cried, saying, "Hosanna
to the Son of David:
Blessed is He that cometh
in the Name of the Lord;
Hosanna in the highest."

S. MARK xi.

and they that followed,
cried, saying, "Hosanna:

Blessed is He that cometh
in the Name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the Name of the Lord: Hosanna
in the highest."

S. LUKE xix.

41 And when He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it,

42 Saying, If thou hadst known,
even thou, at least in this thy day,
the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44 And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

11 And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the Temple: and when He had looked round about upon all things,

and now the eventide was come,
He went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

17 And He left them, and went out of the city into Bethany,

and He lodged there.

7. And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set Him thereon.

S. V. the clothes: V. and He sat thereon.
Vulg. Et adduxerunt asinum et pullum: et imposuerunt super eos vestimenta sua, et eum desuper sedere fecerunt.

8. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way.^a

^a Strawed them (branches) in the way.—"Not that they strowed garments and boughs just in the way under the feet of the ass to be trod on (this perhaps might have thrown down the rider), but by the wayside they made little tents and tabernacles of clothes and boughs, according to the custom of the Feast of Tabernacles. John also adds, that taking branches of palm-trees in their hands they went forth to meet Him. That book of Maimonides intitled 'Tabernacles and Palm Branches,' will be an excellent comment on this place; and so will the Talmudic treatise, Succah, chap. v. art. 17. We will pick out these few things not unsuitable to the present story. 'Doth any one spread his garment on his tabernacle against the heat of the sun? it is absurd; but if he spread his garment for comeliness and ornament, it is approved.' Again, 'The boughs of palm-trees, of which the Law speaks, are the young growing sprouts of palms, before their leaves shoot out on all sides, but when they are like small staves; and these are called

S JOHN

9. And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying,

"Hosanna to the Son of David: ^b Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord;
Hosanna in the highest."

S. V. went before Him.

Vulg. Turbæ autem quæ præcedebant, et quæ sequēbantur.

לולב. And a little after, 'It is a notable precept, to gather young branches of palms, and the boughs of myrtle and willow, and to make them up into a small bundle, and to carry them in their hands,' &c.—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 8; vol. ii. p. 223.

^b Hosanna to the Son of David.—"Some are at a loss why it is said τῷ υἱῷ, to the Son, and not τῷ υἱῷ, O Son. Wherefore they fly to Caninius as to an oracle; who tells us, that those very bundles of boughs are called Hosanna, and that these words, 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' signify no more than 'boughs to the Son of David.' We will not deny that bundles are sometimes so called, as seems in these clauses (Bab. Succah, fol. 37, 2), where it is plain that a branch of palm is called לולב lulab, and boughs of myrtle and willow bound together are called הושענא Hosanna. But indeed, if 'Hosanna to the Son of David' signifies 'boughs to the Son of David;' what do these words mean, 'Hosanna in the

We learn from S. John (xii. 9), that these multitudes consisted chiefly of strangers, Jews who had come up to Jerusalem for the feast; and that the reason which induced them to act thus to Jesus was His having raised Lazarus from the dead. It was now 'probably several weeks since He had wrought this miracle, and the fame of it might have spread throughout the whole land. To see Jesus, who had wrought this miracle, and Lazarus, who had been the subject of it, might have been an additional attraction to Jerusalem, and might have increased the desire to be present at this Passover. When they hear that Jesus, and probably Lazarus too, had arrived the day before at Bethany, they came out to see them, and met Him on His way to Jerusalem.

The honours with which they greet Jesus are such as belong specially to the Feast of Tabernacles. That was the great feast of rejoicing. When therefore they would express their utmost joy and delight, they adopt the acts, the songs, and ceremonies peculiar to that feast: for the waving of palm branches, accompanied with the shouting of Hosanna, was only used at the Feast of Tabernacles. Whatever was the manner in which they spread their garments and strawed the branches, it would be such as would express their joy but not endanger the safety of His progress.

S. Matthew omits to relate what S. Luke (xix. 41, &c.)

notices, that as they approached Jerusalem Jesus wept over the city, and foretold its future siege and desolation.

S. Matthew alone contains the two following verses.

10. And when He was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?

11. And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

S.V. This is the prophet Jesus.

Vulg. Hec est Jesus propheta a Nazareth Galilee.

Reading the account of S. Matthew and S. Luke by themselves, we might have concluded that Jesus had cast out the sellers and buyers from the Temple the same day on which He had entered Jerusalem in triumph; namely, the first day of the week, or Palm Sunday. But when we compare their account with S. Mark's, it appears more probable that it was the next day on which He cast out the sellers and buyers from the Temple, the second day of the week.¹ After He had entered the Temple on Palm Sunday, He healed the sick, and then returned with the Twelve to Bethany. Thus, in the order of events, verses 12 and 13 should come after verse 22. But some commentators of great name have thought that S. Matthew has observed the right order here, and not S. Mark, and that the casting out of the sellers and buyers really took place on Palm Sunday.²

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 325.

Corneilius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. viii. p. 401.

² Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxiv.; vol. i. p. 254.

Greswell's Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 264. [Tisch.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xlv. and 122.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 359.

Robinson's Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 118.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 590.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 68; vol. iii. p. 1140.

highest? The words therefore here sung, import as much as if it were said, 'We now sing Hosanna to the Messias.'

"In the Feast of Tabernacles the great Hallel, as they call it, used to be sung; that is, the cxiii., cxiv., cxv., cxvi., cxvii., cxviii. Psalms. And while the words of the Psalms were sung, or said, by one, the whole company used sometimes to answer at certain clauses, Halleluia. Sometimes the same clauses that had been sung, or said, were again repeated by the company; sometimes the bundles of boughs were brandished or shaken. But when were the bundles shaken? The rubric of the Talmud saith, at the clause, 'Give thanks unto the Lord,' in the beginning of Ps. cxviii., and at the end, and at that clause, 'Save now, I beseech Thee, O Lord.' Ps. cxviii. 25, as saith the school of Hillel. But the school of Shammai saith also, at that clause, 'O Lord, I beseech Thee, send now prosperity.' R. Akibah said, 'I saw R. Gamaliel and R. Joshua, when all the company shook their bundles, they did not shake theirs, but only at that clause, 'Save now, I beseech Thee, O Lord' " (Succah, iii. 9).

"On every day of the feast they used to go round the altar with bundles in their hands, singing this, 'Save now, I beseech Thee, O Lord. I beseech Thee, O Lord, send now prosperity.' But on the seventh day of the feast, they went seven times round the altar. (Maimonides, on Succah vi.) 'The tossing or shaking of the bundles was on the right hand, on the left hand, upwards and downwards' (Bab. Succah, 27, 2).

"These things being premised concerning the rites and customs of that feast, we now return to our story.

"I. It is very much worth our observation, that the company receives Christ coming now to the Passover, with the solemnity of the Feast of Tabernacles. For what hath this to do with the time of the Passover? If one search into the reason of the thing more accurately, these things occur. First, the mirth of that feast above all others, concerning which there needs not much to be said, since the very name of the feast (for, by way of emphasis, it was called 17, that is, festivity or mirth) sufficiently proves it. Secondly, that prophecy of Zechariah (xiv. 16), which, however it be not to be understood according to the letter, yet from thence may sufficiently be gathered the singular solemnity and joy of that feast above all others; and perhaps from that same prophecy, the occasion of the present action was taken. For being willing to receive the Messias with all joyfulness, triumph, and affection of mind (for by calling Him the Son of David, it is plain they took Him for the Messias), they had no way to express a more ardent zeal and joy at His coming, than by the solemn procession of that feast. They have the Messias before their eyes; they expect great things from Him; and are therefore transported with excess of joy at His coming.

"II. But whereas the great Hallel, according to the custom, was not now sung, by reason of the suddenness of the present action, the whole solemnity of that song was, as it were, swallowed up in the frequent crying out and echoing back of Hosanna; as they used to do in the Temple while they went round the altar. And one while they sing 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' another while, 'Hosanna in the highest,' as if they had said, 'Now we sing Hosanna to the Son of David, Save us, we beseech Thee, O Thou (who dwellest) in the highest, save us by the Messias.'—LIGHT-FOOT on Matt. xxi. 9; vol. ii. p. 225.

JESUS DRIVES OUT THE SELLERS AND BUYERS, &c., FROM THE TEMPLE.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 12, 13.

S. MARK xi. 15-19.

S. LUKE xix. 45-48.

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| 12 And Jesus went into the Temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the Temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves, 13 and said unto them, It is written, "My house shall be called the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves." | 15 And they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the Temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the Temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the Temple. 16 And He taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, "My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves." 17 And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy Him: for they feared Him, because all the people was astonished at His doctrine. 18 And when even was come, He went out of the city. | 45 And He went into the Temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought; 46 saying unto them, It is written, "My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves." 47 And He taught daily in the Temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy Him, and could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear Him. |
|---|--|---|

12. ¶ And Jesus went into the Temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the Temple,^a and overthrew the tables of the money-changers,^b and the seats of them that sold doves,^c

S.V. omit of God.

Vulg. Et intravit Iesus in templum Dei.

^a All them that sold and bought in the Temple.—See Introductory Note to S. John ii. of this Commentary.

^b There was always a constant market in the Temple in that place, which was called מִנְיִית, the shops; where every day was sold wine, salt, oil, and other requisites to sacrifices; as also oxen and sheep in the spacious Court of the Gentiles. The nearness of the Passover had made the market greater; for innumerable beasts being requisite to this solemnity, they were brought hither to be sold.—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 12; vol. ii. p. 224.

^c Overthrew the tables of the money-changers.—"Who those money-changers were, may be learned from the Talmud and Maimonides, in the treatise Shekalim.

"(Maimon. Shekal. chap. i.) 'It is an affirmative precept of the Law, that every Israelite should give half a shekel yearly; even the poor, who live by alms, are obliged to this, and must either beg the money of others, or sell their clothes, to pay half a shekel,' as it is said, 'The rich shall give no more, and the poor shall give no less' (Exod. xxx. 15).

"(Ibid. and Talm. Shekal. chap. i.) 'In the first day of the month Adar, they made a proclamation concerning these shekels, that every one should provide his half-shekel, and be ready to pay it. Therefore on the fifteenth day of the same month, the ex-changers sat in every city, civilly requiring this money: they received it of those that gave it, and compelled those that did not. On the five-and-twentieth day of the same month, they sat in the Temple, and then compelled them to give; and from him that did not give, they forced a pledge, even his very coat.'

"(Ibid. chap. iii.) 'It is necessary that every one should have half a shekel to pay for himself. Therefore when he comes to the exchanger, to change a shekel for two half-shekels, he is obliged to allow him some gain, which is called קִרְבָּן (κόλλυβος), Kolbon. And when two pay one shekel between them, each of them is obliged to allow the same gain or fee.'

"A kolbon was half a mea, that is, the twelfth part of a penny, and never less. But the kolbons were not like the half-shekel, but the exchangers laid them by themselves, till the holy treasury were paid out of them. You see what these money-changers were, and whence they had their name. You see that Christ did not overturn the chests in which the holy money was laid up, but the tables on which they trafficked for this unholy gain."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 12; vol. ii. p. 225.

^d Of them that sold doves.—"In the history of the cleansing of the Temple, the reference to the seats of them that sold the doves (τὰς πεισιτεράς) in two Evangelists (Matt. xxi. 12; Mark xi. 15) indicates the pen of a narrator who was accustomed to the sight of the doves which might be purchased within the sacred precincts

13. And said unto them, It is written,

"My house shall be called the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves."

S.V. but ye make it.

Vulg. vos autem fecistis illam speluncam latronum.

This is the second time¹ that Jesus cast out the sellers and buyers from the Temple. The first time was at the first Passover, after He had begun His ministry (John ii. 13, &c.). Then He accused them of making His Father's house a house of merchandise. To this He now adds an additional charge, that of making it a den of thieves. In order that they might pay for the animals required for sacrifice, or that they might pay the half-shekel, or two drachmes, which was the tribute that each individual had to pay to the Temple, it was convenient for the people, especially for the strangers who had come up for the Feast, to have their money changed into smaller coin; as, for instance, the shekel into four drachmes. But instead of doing this gladly and gratuitously, as promoting the worship of God, the priests, through their agents, extorted a charge for it. Thus the priests made a profit out of the people's desire to comply with the Law of God. Hence Jesus charges them with making His Father's house a den of thieves.

Some² have supposed that "the seats" are an indication of the presence of women, and that the doves were sold by the women.

He does not find fault with the sale of the doves, for these must be sold, because they are required for sacrifice, but for selling them where they did. Nor does He find fault with the exchange of the money—for this was a necessity, and a great convenience—but for exchanging it there, and as a matter of profit. This market was not really held in the Temple proper (ἐν τῷ ναῷ), but in one of its sacred enclosures (ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ), most probably in the Court of the Gentiles. So jealous is God of the honour due to Himself, His house must be free from all trafficking for this world's goods, whether regulated by what are called the rules of fair and honest dealing or not. It is for prayer to God, for prayer free from all care about the things of this world. Desire for gain, even for gain by fair and lawful means, is not to be associated with the worship of God, and with the sacrifices offered to Him.

S. Matthew alone contains the three following verses.

14. And the blind and the lame came to Him in the Temple; and He healed them.

15. And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that He did, and the children crying in the Temple, and saying,

"Hosanna^a to the Son of David;"

they were sore displeased,

16. And said unto Him, Hearest Thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read,

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise?"

So hardened against all conviction are the chief priests and scribes that no miracle or number of miracles can make any impression on them. They hear the multitude proclaim with one voice that Jesus the Prophet of Galilee is the Messiah: they see Him heal the lame and open the eyes of the blind, the very miracles that Isaiah (xxxv. 5) had foretold the Messiah would work: they hear the children in the Temple, who were incapacitated by their age, if they were infants, as some³ believe, from uttering the words at all; and if they were children, as others⁴ hold, from understanding the meaning of the words, or from applying them in a proper sense—they hear them, by a divine power, singing forth His praises, and they are reminded that this is but the fulfilment of the Psalmist's prophetic words (Ps. vii. 2), and the effect of all this on the chief priests and scribes is to determine them more than ever to put Him to death.

It was sometime during this week, and, as many⁵ have

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 67; vol. iii. p. 1140.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxvii.; vol. ii. p. 280.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. i. p. 110.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. ii. p. 809.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 325.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. i. p. 294.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. viii. p. 401.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. viii. p. 401.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxvii.; vol. ii. p. 278.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxi. 16; vol. i. p. 111. [Euthymius,

Euthymius, in Matt. xxi. 16; vol. ii. p. 813.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 16; vol. i. p. 294.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 16; vol. viii. p. 402.

⁴ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxi. 16; vol. i. p. 1037.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 327.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 12; vol. viii. p. 401.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxiii. vol. i. p. 253.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 591.

by worshippers intending to offer the purificatory offerings enjoined by the Mosaic law (Luke ii. 24).—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 109.

"Particular doves are alluded to, viz. the accustomed offering of the poor."—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 174.

^a The children crying in the Temple, and saying, "Hosanna."

—"Children from their first infancy were taught to manage the bundles, to shake them, and, in shaking, to sing Hosanna. 'A child, so soon as he knows how to wave the bundle, is bound to carry a bundle' (Succub. chap. iii. hatac lasti)."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 15; vol. ii. p. 225.

thought, on this day, that certain Greeks who had come up to worship at the Feast, and who desired to see Jesus, were brought to Him by Andrew and Philip, as related by S. John (xii. 20).

Having looked round about on all things in the Temple, and eventide being now come, Jesus retires with the Twelve to Bethany.

Such are probably the principal events of the first day of this Passover week, or of Palm-Sunday the 10th of Nisan = April 2nd.

JESUS CURSES THE BARREN FIG-TREE.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 18-22.

S. MARK xi. 12-14, 20-26.

18 Now in the morning
as He returned into the city
He hungered.
19 And when He saw a fig tree in the way,

He came to it,
and found nothing thereon, but leaves only,

and said unto it,
Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever.

And presently the fig tree withered away.

20 And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled,
saying,
How soon is the fig tree withered away!
21 Jesus answered and said unto them,
Verily I say unto you,
If ye have faith, and doubt not,

ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain,
Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea;

it shall be done.

22 And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing,
ye shall receive.

12 And on the morrow,
when they were come from Bethany,
He was hungry:
13 and seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves,
He came, if haply He might find anything thereon:
and when He came to it,
He found nothing but leaves;
for the time of figs was not yet.
—14 And Jesus answered and said unto it,
No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever.
And His disciples heard it.

20 And in the morning, as they passed by,
they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots.
21 And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto Him, Master, behold,
the fig tree which Thou cursedst is withered away.
22 And Jesus answering saith unto them,

Have faith in God.
For verily I say unto you,

That whosoever shall say unto this mountain,
Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea;
and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass;
he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you,
What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them,
and ye shall have them.

25 And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26 But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

17. ¶ And He left them, and went out of the city unto Bethany; and He lodged there.

S^a omits of the city.
Vulg. Et relictis illis, abiit foras extra civitatem in Bethaniam.

18. Now in the morning as He returned into the city, He hungered.

19. And when He saw a fig tree in the way,
He came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away.

Margin, one fig-tree.

S^a, and nothing was thereon . . . and He said.
Vulg. Et videns fici arborum unam secus viam, venit ad eam; et nihil invenit in ea nisi folia tantum, et ait illi.

20. And when the disciples saw it, they mar-velled, saying, How soon is the fig tree withered away!

21. Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily
I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain,
Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea;
it shall be done.^a

^a If ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, &c.— “Christ in this expression speaks the Jews’ own language, and by the very phrase that they ordinarily used to magnify their own abilities by, He magnifieth Faith. When they would speak of the

22. And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer,^a believing, ye shall receive.

Among the different kinds of fig-trees in Palestine, there was one which bore fruit every year, but which did not ripen its fruit until the third year. On this fig-tree, unless shaken by an unusually high wind, there would generally be found the fruit of three different years. When Jesus therefore saw a fig-tree abounding with leaves, reasoning as a mere man would, and acting as other men would in a similar case, as He often appears to have done, He comes to the conclusion that this fig-tree was one of those which retained its fruit from year to year, and was in fact never without fruit. Though of the kind of fig-tree which generally retained its fruit from year to year, this particular tree had on it none of the fruit of preceding years; and as this was the month of March, it wanted several months to the time of the new figs.

After many years' residence in the Holy Land, Dr. Thomson¹ had never met with a fig-tree of this kind, and he seems to question the existence of such a tree. But the notices of this fig-tree in the Rabbinical writings are too many, and too minute, to leave any doubt as to the existence of such a tree in the time of our Saviour. Among other points, they allude to the common practice of hanging threads of different colours on this kind of fig-tree, to distinguish the fruit of one year from that of another, with a view to prevent the same fruit from being tithed more than once.

The incident of the fig-tree is another instance of the way in which S. Matthew often puts together in one single narration, what took place at different times or in different places, and without any indication of this, while the other Evangelists relate the several parts of the same transaction separately. If we had S. Matthew's account only, we should suppose that the disciples drew the attention of Jesus to the withering of the fig-tree, at the time when He cursed it. But we learn from S. Mark that this occurred on a different day—that Jesus had cursed the fig-tree on His way from Bethany to Jerusalem, on the morning of the second day in the Passover week, that is, on Monday morning; that after driving out the sellers and buyers from the Temple, He had returned again to Bethany in the evening; and that it was as He returned to Jerusalem from Bethany on the Tuesday morning that they made their remarks on the withering of the fig-tree, and that Peter was one of those who observed it.

In comparing faith to a grain of mustard-seed, it may be that Jesus refers not only to the smallness of the seed, but also to the nature of it,—to its strong, powerful qualities, the smallest particle of which produces the most striking effect. If they had faith even as small as a grain of mustard-seed, but as powerful and efficacious in its nature as that, they would be able to remove all opposing obstacles, and to withstand all the power of Satan.² The mountain which would furnish the occasion for His metaphorical language would in all probability be Mount Olivet, which lay between Bethany and Jerusalem; and which they might be passing at the very moment when He uttered these words.

¹ The Land and the Book, p. 349.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 26; vol. iii. p. 1461. [S. Hilary

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxi. 18; vol. i. p. 1038.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxi. 18; vol. vii. p. 154.

high parts and qualities of their great ones, they used to say, 'He is a remover of mountains,' Tal. Bab. Beracoth, fol. 64, fac. 1. 'Sinai and the remover of mountains, whether of them sent first,' &c. 'Now Rabb Joseph was Sinai, and Rabbah was the remover of mountains.' Why so named? The gloss upon the place resolves as thus, 'They called Rabb Joseph Sinai, because he was most expert in deep explications. And they called Rabbah bar Nachmani a remover of mountains, because he was most acutely learned,' &c. The same Talmud also, in Erubim, fol. 29, saith thus, 'Rabbah saith, Behold I am like Ben Azzai in the streets of Tiberias.' The gloss thereupon saith thus, 'Ben Azzai taught profoundly in the streets of Tiberias, and there was no man in his days that was a remover of mountains like him.' By removing mountains they meant how able men they were, and how they could overcome the greatest difficulties in divinity. Which common phrase Christ useth to face that wretched boasting of theirs of their own parts and worth, and to set up Faith in its proper dignity, as that is only able for all things.—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lxxiv.; vol. i. p. 254.

^a Whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer (ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ).—'Why, we ask, is not its definite and distinctive force given to "the prayer" which our blessed Lord taught, and commanded to be used, and to which He promised His blessing? "Whatsoever ye ask in the prayer (τῇ προσευχῇ), believing, ye shall receive." This uniform use of the definite article touching matters of public worship (in the Acts of the Apostles and in the Epistles) to our mind points to the fact that the Church had, from the very first, certain fixed forms of prayer and of supplication, a certain fixed creed, a definite body of doctrine, as well as fixed rites and ceremonies; for thus only can we account for such current and recurrent terms as ἡ δεξιὰς, ἡ προσευχὴ, ἡ ὁμολογία, ἡ ἐκτολή, ἡ πίστις, ὁ λόγος, ἡ διδασκαλία, ἡ διδαχὴ. In Rom. xii. 12, and in Acts i. 14, we find the same language, προσκαρτεροῦντες τῇ προσευχῇ, used by the inspired writer, of what the saints did in the latter passage, and of what the saints should do in the former. Now this S. Chrysostom takes as applying to the 'Lord's Prayer,' and his interpretation is strengthened by Acts iii. 1, where we are told S. Peter and S. John went up 'to the hour of the prayer'—the ninth hour, which is confirmed by the language of the Apostle to the Colossians (iv. 2), τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτερεῖτε, which shows that in the Acts of the Apostles the reference is not made, as some tell us, to a definite place of prayer, but to a definite form of prayer. Again, in 1 Corinthians vii. 5, the Apostle enjoins the duty of finding leisure for 'the fast and the prayer' (τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ). . . . Acts ii. 42 may be rendered: (these converted and baptized members—preceding verse) 'continued to attend upon' (ἵσαν προσκαρτεροῦντες, the periphrastic imperfect, to mark continuance) 'the doctrine of the Apostles, and to the community' (of the saints), 'and the breaking of the bread' (evidently the Holy Eucharist) 'and the prayers.' It is quite possible that τῇ κοινωνίᾳ here may refer (1) to their having all things in common, for at verse 45 we are expressly told, not 'they had all things in common' ('for this would require ἔσχατον), but 'it was their custom (εἶθος) to have all things in common.' Or (2) it may refer to the collection of the congregation for the poor (see Rom. xv. 26; 2 Cor. ix. 13; Heb. xiii. 16), or (3) to the Holy Communion of the breaking of the bread, by handiads.'—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 129.

The lesson¹ which the cursing of the fig-tree was intended to convey might be to convince His disciples that He had the power to take vengeance, to inflict punishment, as well as to show mercy; and that, though in a few days He should suffer death at the hands of the chief priests, the scribes, and Pharisees, it would be because He willingly gave Himself up a ransom for many, and not because He wanted the power to resist.

Some² look upon the cursing of the fig-tree as a prophetic action; namely, that the fig-tree represented the Jewish nation, the hunger of Jesus His desire for their salvation, and that the cursing and withering of the tree foretold the misery which should shortly befall the Jews, as a punishment for their continued unfruitfulness and rejection of Him.

THE PHARISEES DEMAND OF JESUS BY WHAT AUTHORITY HE DID THOSE THINGS.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 23-27.

S. MARK xi. 27-33.

S. LUKE xx. 1-8.

27 And they come again to Jerusalem :

23 And when He was come into the Temple,

the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto Him as He was teaching, and said,

By what authority doest Thou these things? and who gave Thee this authority?

24 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell Me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

25 The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?

And they reasoned with themselves, saying,

If we shall say, From heaven; He will say unto us,

Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell.

And He said unto them,

Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

and as He was walking in the Temple,

there came to Him the chief priests, and the scribes,

and the elders,

28 and say unto Him, By what authority doest Thou these things?

and who gave Thee this authority to do these things?

29 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer Me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

answer Me.

31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying,

If we shall say, From heaven; He will say,

Why then did ye not believe him?

32 But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell.

And Jesus answering saith unto them,

Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

1

And it came to pass, that on one of those days, as He taught the people in the Temple, and preached the Gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon Him with the elders, and spake unto Him, saying, Tell us, by what authority doest Thou these things? or who is he that gave Thee this authority?

2

3 And He answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and answer Me:

4

The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5

And they reasoned with themselves, saying,

If we shall say, From heaven; He will say,

Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men; all the people will stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7

And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8

And Jesus said unto them,

Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

23. ¶ And when He was come into the Temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people^a

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvii.; vol. ii. p. 279.

² Origen, in Matt. tomus xvi. 26; vol. iii. p. 1460.

[S. Hilary

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxi. 18; vol. i. p. 1038.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxi. 18; vol. vii. p. 153.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxi. 18; vol. iii. p. 93.

^a The chief priests and elders of the people.—“In S. Mark xi. 27 and S. Luke xx. 1, it is ‘the chief priests and the scribes with the elders.’ Now the question is, who these elders should be, as they are distinguished from the chief priests and the scribes. The Sanhedrin consisted chiefly of Priests, Levites, and Israelites, although the original precept was for the Priests and Levites only. Maimonides (in Sanhedr. cap. 2) says, ‘The command is, that the Priests and Levites should be of the great council, as it is said, came unto Him as He was teaching, and said, By what authority doest Thou these things? and who gave Thee this authority?

24. And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell Me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

Vulg. Interrogabo vos et ego unum sermonem.

25. The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?^a And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; He will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

Vulg. Baptismus Iohannis unde erat? e caelo, an ex hominibus?

26. But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet.

Vulg. timemus turbam: omnes enim habebant Iohannem sicut prophetam.

27. And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell. And He said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

S. Jesus said unto them.

Vulg. Et respondentes Iesu, dixerunt: Nescimus. Ait illis et ipse: Nec ego dico vobis in qua potestate hæc facio.

By "these things," the chief priests and elders of the people refer especially to His triumphal entry into the city,

Thou shalt go unto the Priests and Levites; but if such be not found, although they were all Israelites, behold it is allowed.^b

"None will imagine that there ever was a Sanhedrin wherein there were Israelites only, and no Priests or Levites; nor, on the other hand, that there ever was a Sanhedrin wherein there were only Priests and Levites, and no Israelites. The γραμματεῖς therefore, or the Scribes, seem in this place to denote either the Levites, or else, together with the Levites, those inferior ranks of Priests who were not the ἀρχιερεῖς, or chief priests; and then the πρεσβύτεροι, elders, may be the Israelites, or those elders of the laity that were not of the Levitical tribe. Such an one was Gamaliel, the present President of the Sanhedrin, and Simeon his son, of the tribe of Judah."—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xi. 1; vol. ii. p. 469.

^a The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?—When our Saviour doth ask concerning the baptism, that it is to say, the whole spiritual function, of John, whether it were from heaven or of men, He giveth clear to understand that men give authority unto some, and some God Himself from heaven doth authorize. Nor is it said, or in any sort signified, that none have lawful authority which have it not in such manner as John, from heaven. Again, when the priests and elders were loth to say that John had his calling from men, the reason was not because they thought that so John should not have had any good or lawful calling, but because they saw that by this means they should somewhat embase the calling of John; whom all men knew to have been sent from God, according to the manner of prophets, by a mere celestial vocation."—HOOKER, "Eccles. Polit." vii. 11, 9; vol. iii. p. 211.

^b The similitude of the two sons.—The difficulty with respect to the reading here, ver. 28-31, is well known to students. The following appears to be as clear a statement of the variations in the text, and of the evidence for each, as the case will admit of.

"The difficulties in connection with this passage do not admit of being stated very shortly. There is a question of words in verse 31, viz. whether υἱοτερος or ἐσχατος, the meaning of which would attended by the multitude crying "Hosanna" to Him as the Son of David, His teaching the people and healing the sick, and His casting out the sellers and buyers from the Temple; all of which He had done within the last three days.

"The baptism of John" here evidently includes the whole of John's ministration—his preaching of repentance, his baptism unto repentance, as a preparation for the kingdom of heaven; as well as the testimony which he bore to Jesus, as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. For them, therefore, to confess that John's baptism was from heaven, or of God, was to confess that John was sent by God to bear witness that Jesus was the Lamb of God, and thus to convict themselves of sin in rejecting Him.

To put before these chief priests and scribes the real character of their conduct with respect to John the Baptist and his ministration, Jesus delivers the following similitude or parable.

St. Matthew alone records the parable of a father and his two sons (vv. 28-32).

28. ¶ But what think ye? A certain man had two sons;^b and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to day in my vineyard.

S^a. two sons. He came: S. in the vineyard.

Vulg. Homo quidam habebat duos filios, et accedens ad primum, dixit: Fili, vade hodie, operare in vinea mea.

be nearly the same, is to be substituted for πρῶτος in the answer of the chief priests. But this is complicated by a question of the order of the narrative; for some of the authorities transpose the answers of the two sons in the parable, placing first the answer of the son who professed to do his father's bidding but went not, and the answer of the other second. Thus we really have three questions to consider—

"(a) The order in which the sons are mentioned.

"(b) Which of the two sons did the chief priests intend to assert had done his father's bidding?

"(c) The choice between the three words πρῶτος, υἱοτερος, or ἐσχατος.

"And we must take the evidence in the order here indicated.

"(a) To decide, then, the order in which the two sons are mentioned, we have the following data:—

"1. For the order of the Textus Receptus—

"1. Ν, C, D, L, X, Z, &c., and most of the cursives.

"2. Vet. Lat., Vulg., Syrr. C, P, and H.

"3. Origen, Eusebius, Cyril, Chrysostom, Irenæus (int.), Hilary.

"11. For the converse order, which would make the elder son promise to go and then fail:—

"1. B, and seven cursives.

"2. One MS. of the Vulg. (sec. man.); Memph. Syr. J. Arm.; Eth. (two codices).

"3. Isidore, John of Damascus, the Pseudo-Athanasius.

"(b) As to the second question, which of the two sons the chief priests meant to say had done the father's bidding, we have to notice that all the MSS. and Versions enumerated above, which reverse the order in which the sons are mentioned, also substitute υἱοτερος or δευτερος, or some equivalent word, for the πρῶτος of the Textus Receptus. Thus the reply of the chief priests to our Lord is represented as virtually the same in either case. But D, and a good many codices both of the Vetus Latina and the Vulgate, which agree with the Textus Receptus in the order of the sons, have respectively ἐσχατος and υἱοτερος for πρῶτος; thus trans-

29. He answered and said, I will not : but afterward he repented, and went.

V. I go, sir, and went not : S^c. omits but.
 Vulg. ille autem respondens, ait: Nolo. Postea autem, penitentia motus, abiit.

30. And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir : and went not.

S^c. to the other : V. said, I will not : afterward he repented, and went.
 Vulg. At ille respondens, ait: Eo, domine, et non iit.

31. Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto Him, The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

S.V. omit unto Him : V. the last.
 Vulg. Dicunt ei: Primus.

32. For John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not : but the publicans and the harlots believed him : and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

V. neither repented afterward.
 Vulg. vos autem videntes nec penitentiam habuistis postea.

The scribes and Pharisees,¹ though secretly convinced of the holiness of John and of the truth of his mission, rejected his call to repentance, and the testimony which he bore to Jesus as the Lamb of God. All these they rejected, while at the same time they made great professions of being the sons of God, anxious to discover the least intimations of His will, and above all things jealous for His honour. The publicans and harlots made no such profession. They lived in the open violation of God's laws. But at the preaching of John they repented of their sins, and were baptized with the baptism of repentance, as a preparation for the kingdom of heaven. The scribes and Pharisees saw this, but they did not afterwards repent. Instead of being a motive to induce them to repent, the baptism of the publicans and harlots was an occasion of hardening their hearts still more. The chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees said, "I go, sir," and went not. The publicans and harlots said, "I will not," but afterwards repented and went.

This, like most of our Saviour's parables, has most probably an application beyond the circumstances in which it was delivered. It may be also an outline of God's dealings toward the Jews and Gentiles. Applied to men individually, it may portray the special dangers of insincerity and hypocrisy towards God.

THE PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD LET OUT TO HUSBANDMEN.

S. MATTHEW xxi. 33-46.

S. MARK xii. 1-12.

S. LUKE xx. 9-19.

33 Hear another parable :

1

And He began to speak unto them by parables.

9

Then began He to speak to the people this parable ;

There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard,
 and hedged it round about,
 and digged
 a winepress in it,
 and built a tower,
 and let it out to husbandmen,
 and went into a far country :

A certain man
 planted a vineyard,
 and set an hedge about it,
 and digged
 a place for the winefat,
 and built a tower,
 and let it out to husbandmen,
 and went into a far country.

A certain man
 planted a vineyard,
 and let it forth to husbandmen,
 and went into a far country
 for a long time.
 And at the season

34 and when the time of the fruit drew near,
 he sent his servants
 to the husbandmen,

2

And at the season

10 he sent to the husbandmen a servant,

he sent a servant to the husbandmen,

¹ For this parable see—
 Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 4 ; vol. iii. p. 1484.
 S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvii. ; vol. ii. p. 281.
 Euthymius, in Matt. xxi. 28 ; vol. ii. p. 823.
 S. Jerome, in Matt. xxi. 28 ; vol. vii. p. 155. [V. Bede,

V. Bede, in Matt. xxi. 28 ; vol. iii. p. 94.
 Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 345.
 Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 28 ; vol. i. p. 297.
 Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 28 ; vol. viii. p. 405.

posing the connection. S. Jerome interprets this answer on the hypothesis that the chief priests knew what answer our Lord intended them to give, but purposely gave a wrong one; at the same time, however, he asserts that 'vera exemplaria' had primum and not novissimum for their reading. There is only then the witness of D, backed by the partial testimony of the Latin versions, in favour of this answer of the chief priests.

"On the whole, then, the evidence for the order of the Textus

Receptus is conclusive; and the evidence for making the chief priests recognize the obedience of the son, who at first refused but afterwards repented, is overwhelming.

"(γ) And thus we are helped to an easy solution of the third question, namely, that we must adopt the reading πάρως of the Textus Receptus,"—HAMMOND'S 'Textual Criticism,' p. 104.

See also Scrivener's Introduction, p. 83.

S. MATTHEW xxi.

S. MARK xii.

S. LUKE xx.

- that they might receive the fruits of it.
35 And the husbandmen took his servants,
and beat one,
and killed another,
and stoned another.
- 36 Again, he sent other servants
more than the first:
and they did unto them
likewise.
- 37 But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying,
They will
reverence my son.
- 38 But when the husbandmen
saw the son,
they said among themselves,
This is the heir;
come, let us kill him,
and let us seize on his inheritance.
39 And they caught him,
and cast him out of the vineyard,
and slew him.
- 40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh,
what will he do
unto those husbandmen?
41 They say unto Him,
He will miserably destroy those wicked men,
and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him
the fruits in their seasons.
- 42 Jesus saith unto them,
Did ye never read in the scriptures, "The stone which the builders rejected,
the same is become
the head of the corner:
this is the Lord's doing,
and it is marvellous in our eyes?"
43 Therefore say I unto you,
The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.
- that he might receive from the husbandmen
of the fruit of the vineyard.
3 And they caught him,
and beat him,
and sent him away empty.
4 And again he sent unto them
another servant;
and at him they cast stones,
and wounded him in the head,
and sent him away shamefully handled.
5 And again he sent another;
and him they killed,
and many others;
beating some, and killing some.
6 Having yet therefore one son,
his well-beloved,
he sent him also last unto them, saying,
They will
reverence my son.
- 7 But those husbandmen
said among themselves,
This is the heir;
come, let us kill him,
and the inheritance shall be ours.
8 And they took him,
and killed him,
and cast him out of the vineyard.
- 9 What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do?
he will come and destroy the husbandmen,
and will give the vineyard unto others.
- 10 And have ye not read this scripture; "The stone which the builders rejected is become
the head of the corner:
This was the Lord's doing,
and it is marvellous in our eyes?"
- that they should give him
of the fruit of the vineyard:
but the husbandmen
beat him,
and sent him away empty.
11 And again he sent another servant:
and they beat him also,
and entreated him shamefully,
and sent him away empty.
12 And again he sent a third:
and they wounded him also,
and cast him out.
- 13 Then said the lord of the vineyard,
What shall I do?
I will send my beloved son:
it may be they will reverence him
when they see him.
- 14 But when the husbandmen
saw him,
they reasoned among themselves, saying,
This is the heir:
come, let us kill him,
that the inheritance may be ours.
15 So they cast him out of the vineyard,
and killed him.
- 16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others.
- 17 And when they heard it,
they said, God forbid.
And He beheld them,
and said,
What is this then that is written, "The stone
which the builders rejected,
the same is become
the head of the corner?"

S. MATTHEW xxi.

44 And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken :
but on whomsoever it shall fall,
it will grind him to powder.

45 And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard His parables, they perceived that He spake of them.

46 But when they sought to lay hands on Him,
they feared the multitude,
because they took Him for a prophet.

12

S. MARK xii.

And they sought to lay hold on Him,
but feared the people :

for they knew that He had spoken
the parable against them :
and they left Him,
and went their way.

S. LUKE xx.

18 Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken ;
but on whomsoever it shall fall,
it will grind him to powder.

19 And the chief priests and the scribes
the same hour
sought to lay hands on Him ;
and they feared the people :

for they perceived that He had spoken
this parable against them.

33. ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country :

S.V. There was a householder.

Vulg. Homo erat paterfamilias.

34. And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.

35. And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.

36. Again, he sent other servants more than the first : and they did unto them likewise.

S*. And again he sent.

Vulg. Iterum misit alios servos plures prioribus.

37. But last of all he sent unto them his son,* saying, They will reverence my son.

38. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir ; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.

Vulg. Hic est heres, venite, occidamus eum, et habebimus hereditatem ejus.

¹ For this parable see—

Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 6 ; vol. iii. p. 1488.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxi. 33 ; vol. i. p. 114.

[S. Hilary

* The Son.—"That title, besides its direct signification of His true and representative humanity, is itself the 'product of a self-consciousness, for which the being human is not a matter of course, but something secondary and superinduced.' In other words, this title implies an original nature to which Christ's humanity was a subsequent accretion, and in which His true and deepest consciousness, if we may dare so to speak, was at home. Thus, often in the synoptic Gospels He is called simply the Son. He is the true Son of Man, but He is also the true Son of God. In Him Sonship attains its archetypal form ; in Him it is seen in its unsullied perfection. Accordingly He never calls the Father our Father, as if He shared His Sonship with His followers. He always speaks of My Father. To this Divine Sonship He received witness from

39. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

Vulg. Et apprehensum eum eiecerunt extra vineam, et occiderunt.

40. When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen ?

41. They say unto Him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

This parable would be well known to the chief priests and scribes to whom Jesus is speaking ; for it had been already delivered by Isaiah, who, in the introduction to the parable, seems to foretell that the Messiah would afterward make use of it. The prophet says (v. 1), "Now will I sing, or dictate, or prelude, to My Well-beloved a song of My Well-beloved touching His vineyard."

It may be impossible to assign to all the terms used in the parable of the vineyard¹ their several meanings in that which the vineyard signifies, namely, the Jewish nation. But it is easy to see that the parable as a whole is the delineation of God's dealings with His chosen people in the future, as well as in the past. As a history, under the terms "a hedge," "a tower," and "a winepress," the parable contains a

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxi. 33 ; vol. i. p. 1041.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xx. 9, &c. ; vol. ii. p. 1799.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxi. 33 ; vol. vii. p. 158.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxi. 33 ; vol. iii. p. 94.

heaven both at His Baptism and at His Transfiguration. In the parable of the vineyard, the prophets of the old theocracy are contrasted with the Son, not as His predecessors or rivals, but as His slaves. Thus He lives among men as the One True Son of His Father's home. He is alone free by birthright among a race of born slaves. Yet, instead of guarding His solitary dignity with jealous exclusiveness, He vouchsafes to raise the slaves around Him to an adopted sonship ; He will buy them out of bondage by pouring forth His Blood ; He will lay down His Life, that He may prove the generosity of His measureless love towards them." (See also note on the Son of Man, p. 160.)—CANON LIDDON, 'Bampton Lectures,' v. p. 249.

description of the way in which God had sought to protect the Jewish nation from evil, and to render them fruitful in good. The servants, of whom they beat one, killed another, and stoned another, may be the prophets, such as Isaiah, Jeremiah, and John the Baptist. As a prophecy, the parable foretells the way in which in a few days they would put to death the Heir, the Son of God Himself, in order, as they think, that they may possess His inheritance. Last of all, it contains a prophecy of the utter destruction of their nation as a punishment for the Death of the Son of God, the rejection of the Jews, and the substitution of the Gentiles in their place.

S. Matthew says that, when Jesus asked the question, what the lord of the vineyard would do unto the husbandmen, they (the chief priests and the elders) say unto Him, "He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen." But S. Mark and S. Luke say that Jesus uttered these words in answer to His own question, and S. Luke says that the Jews then replied, "God forbid." The explanation which has been offered of this is, that at first the Jews did not see the application of the parable to themselves, and answered, "He will miserably destroy those wicked men," and that Jesus then repeats their answer, and in such a way as to show His application of it to them, and that they then replied, "God forbid."¹

But He proceeds to bring home to them the application of the parable still more forcibly and unmistakably.

42. Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the Scriptures,

"The Stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?"

43. Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

44. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall,^b it will grind him to powder.

In these two parables Jesus foretells His own Death by the Jewish nation, their rejection in consequence of this, and the substitution of the Gentiles in their place. In the first of these parables, the kingdom of God is represented by a vineyard to be cultivated; the Jews are the husbandmen; Jesus Himself is the Son of the Lord of the vineyard, whom they will in a few days put to death; the time when the Lord of the vineyard will come to destroy those husbandmen is the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

In the second of these parables, which is expressed partly in the words of the Psalmist (cxviii. 22), the kingdom of God is represented by a building to be built; the Jews are the builders, and Jesus is the corner stone, whom they will shortly reject. Those² who fall upon Him, that is, in the way of persecution, shall receive nothing but damage to themselves; but such, on their repentance, may recover from it. But those on whom He shall fall—that is, in the way of punishment—shall be ground to powder; shall be utterly destroyed. It may be that the destruction here foretold is, first that of the Jewish nation by the Romans, and secondly that of all sinners at the Day of Judgment.

45. And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard His parables, they perceived that He spake of them.

S. But when.

46. But when they sought to lay hands on Him, they feared the multitude, because they took Him for a prophet.

Vulg. Et querentes eum tenere, timerunt turbas.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxviii. i. vol. ii. p. 292.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxi. 41; vol. ii. p. 831.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxiv. p. 349.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 41; vol. i. p. 300.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 41; vol. viii. p. 406.

^a Is become the head of the corner.—Our translation has 'the headstone of the corner,' but it is not very plain what this headstone was. It may be inferred, however, first, to have been such that it might be added when the building was otherwise complete; as appears from the present verse. Secondly, that it was so placed that the passenger might fall against it, and also that it might fall upon him, as is evident from v. 44. Now nothing which otherwise corresponds with the term can be conceived to answer these conditions, except an upright stone or column added to a building to strengthen and protect it at the corner, which was most exposed to external violence. The Greek expression is equivalent to the Hebrew אבן פינה or אבן פינה; but every rectangular building would have necessarily four אבני פינה, and we find these four spoken of, Job i. 19: but such a protection placed at each of the four corners could hardly be the subject of allusion in this place; for Christ, who is the sole bulwark of the Christian fabric, could not aptly be compared with any thing which admits plurality, and in which, indeed, plurality is necessarily implied. Besides, the κεφαλὴ γωνίας is allowed to be the same with the λίθος ἀκρογωνιαίος

² S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. i. 30; vol. iii. p. 1329.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxiv. p. 351.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxi. 44; vol. i. p. 302.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxi. 44; vol. viii. p. 407.

(Ephes. ii. 20), 'chief corner-stone,' where the Apostles and prophets are said to be the foundation stone, but Christ the λίθος ἀκρογωνιαίος, which must therefore be something pre-eminent, for else it would not be a fit illustration; and indeed we find אבן פינה, Job xxxviii. 6, spoken of as being single in a building, though nothing can thence be inferred with respect to its form or height. The common interpretations appear to be objectionable in not answering the conditions mentioned at the beginning of this note."
—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 175.

^b On whomsoever it shall fall, &c.—"Here is a plain allusion to the manner of stoning, concerning which thus (Sanhedr. ch. vi., hal. 4). The place of stoning was twice as high as a man. From the top of this, one of the witnesses striking him on his loins, fell him to the ground: if he died of this, well; if not, the other witness threw a stone upon his heart, &c. R. Simeon ben Eleazar saith (Bab. Gemara), 'there was a stone there as much as two could carry: this they threw upon his heart.'"—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxi. 44; vol. ii. p. 229.

CHAPTER XXII.

[1. The parable of the marriage of the king's son. 9. The vocation of the Gentiles. 12. The punishment of him that wanted the wedding garment. 15. Tribute ought to be paid to Caesar. 23. Christ confuteth the Sadducees for the resurrection: 34. answereth the lawyer, which is the first and great commandment: 41. and poseth the Pharisees about the Messias.]

[Vulg. Parabola de rege qui fecit nuptias filio suo, in quibus discumbens absque veste nuptiali, in tenebras ejicitur exteriores: tentatur Jesus a pharisaïs super censu dando Cesari, et a sadduceis super resurrectione: quorum redarguit inscitiam, mortuorum evincens resurrectionem: rursusque a legis doctore tentatur super magno legis mandato: vicissim quoque interrogat pharisaïs, cujus filius sit Christus.]

It is quite possible to believe that in some cases Jesus delivered the same parable, or the same truth, more than once, and perhaps not in exactly the same words. For instance, the parable of a certain man who made a great supper, as related by S. Luke (xiv. 16), in many points bears such a strong resemblance to the parable of the king who made a marriage for his son, as recorded by S. Matthew, that some¹ have held they were the same, with only the amount of difference between them that would naturally exist from being recorded by different writers. Others,² again, see so many points of difference between them as in their minds to preclude all idea that the two Evangelists are recording one and the same delivery of the same parable. The parable which is related by S. Luke, from the order in which he places it, would seem to have been delivered about three months before His Crucifixion; while that by S. Matthew, judging from the order in which he places it, was on the Tuesday before His Crucifixion; S. Luke's while He was a guest in the house of a Pharisee, while S. Matthew places his among other parables which Jesus delivered in the Temple. Those who hold that the two Evangelists are recording the same delivery of the same parable believe that S. Luke's order is the chronological one, and that S. Matthew placed his relation of the parable where he does because it is akin to other things which he was then relating; a practice not uncommon with him.

In S. Matthew's parable it is a king who makes a marriage for his son; in S. Luke's it is a certain man who makes a great supper. In S. Matthew's it is called a dinner (ἀριστον);

in S. Luke's, a supper (δείπνον). In S. Matthew's many servants are sent to call those who were invited, and at different times. In S. Luke's only one servant is sent, and only once. In S. Matthew's they offer no excuse in words, but neglect to come; in S. Luke's each gives an excuse, and each a different one. In S. Matthew's the servants that are sent are slain; in S. Luke's, not. In S. Matthew's the king sends an army to destroy the murderers; in S. Luke's no mention is made of this. In S. Matthew's the king comes in to see the guests, &c.; in S. Luke's, not. Many as these differences are, it is urged that they are not more or greater than often occur when two or more of the Evangelists relate the same historical event: for they seldom each relate the whole of it, and more seldom still in exactly the same words, contenting themselves with conveying the same general impression.

1. And Jesus answered and spake unto them again by parables, and said, Vulg. Et respondens Jesus, dixit iterum in parabolis eis, dicens.

2. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son, Vulg. Simile factum est regnum celorum homini regi.

3. And sent forth his servants^a to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have pre-

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxii. 2; vol. i. p. 303.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 71; vol. iii. p. 1145.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxviii. 1; vol. ii. p. 1282.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxv. p. 352.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxii. 1; vol. viii. p. 409.

[Lightfoot,

^a Servants (οἱ δούλοι, in verses 3, 4, 6, 8, 10—οἱ δίδονοι, in verse 13).—"In the parable of the wedding-feast, both δούλοι and δίδονοι are rendered by 'servants,' though they have different functions assigned to them, and though they represent two distinct classes of beings—the one human, the other angelic ministers. . . .

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxvi. vol. i. p. 255.

Greswell's Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 276.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelicæ, pp. 101, 126.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 123.

Dean Alford, Greek Test. in Matt. xxii. 1, &c.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 592.

"The older Versions generally preserve the distinction, translating δούλοι, δίδονοι, by 'servants,' 'ministers' respectively. The Rheims Version has 'waiters' for δίδονοι. In this case the Geneva Bible was the first to obliterate the distinction, which was preserved even in the Bishops'."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 71.

pared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

Vulg. tauri mei et altitia occisa sunt.

5. But they made light of it, and went their ways, to his farm, another to his merchandise:

Vulg. Illi autem neglexerunt: et abierunt, alius in villam suam, alius vero ad negotiationem suam.

6. And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.

Vulg. Reliqui vero tenuerunt servos ejus, et contumeliosis affectis occiderunt.

7. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

S.V. But the king was wroth.
Vulg. Rex autem, cum audisset, iratus est.

8. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy.

9. Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10. So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests.

S.V. the bridechamber.
Vulg. et implete sunt nuptie di-cumbentium.

S. Matthew alone contains verses 11-14.

11. ¶ And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment:

S.V. omits there.
Vulg. et vidit ibi hominem non vestitum veste nuptiali.

12. And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless.

13. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

S.V. omit and take him away: S.V. and cast him.
Vulg. ligatis manibus et pedibus ejus, mittite eum in tenebras exteriores.

14. For many are called, but few are chosen.

The general object of this parable is much the same as that of the parables in the preceding chapter, namely, to show the rejection by the Jews of Jesus as their Saviour, their punishment for this, and the destruction of their city; the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles throughout the world, and the condition required for a profitable acceptance of this, namely, a wedding garment or a robe of righteousness, in keeping with the occasion and with all the other arrangements of the feast, with the presence of the king, and with the good things provided for the guests.

The King is God the Father, and the Son is Jesus Christ, whose union with the Church through the Incarnation is celebrated in this parable. The invitation is first given to the Jews by the prophets; and they are next bidden when the dinner is prepared and all things are now ready, that is, during the ministry of Jesus Himself on earth.

The oxen and fatlings¹ that are killed are the various means of grace, the sacramental blessings so richly provided for the soul under the Gospel. The word here translated "killed" (ῥεθυμένα) is a term used specially of animals killed and offered in sacrifice. Hence some have supposed that there was here a reference to the connection which these means of grace have with the Sacrifice of Christ, and to the efficacy which they derive therefrom. The oxen and the fatlings that are killed may include the ordinary and the sacramental means of grace, and especially the Eucharistic Sacrifice.

The farm and the merchandise are the different objects and pursuits which prevented the Jews from accepting the Gospel.

After the refusal of the Jews to come, after their punishment and the destruction of their city, others are invited, and from all parts of the world, who accept the invitation. The Jews reject the invitation, but the Gentiles, as a rule, accept it, and have so far faith in Jesus, that they are willing to become guests at the Gospel feast. But something more is required of the guests besides the invitation of the king, and besides the absence of any objection to come. They must have faith to come, and they must appear adorned with the wedding garment; that is, with the fruits of faith, with holiness of life, and with the works of love and self-denial. To show this in a manner not to be forgotten, one man is singled out for punishment because he had neglected this. He is speechless, his own conscience being the accuser. He is bound hand and foot, for no resistance can be offered to the sentence of the king.

"Many are called, but few are chosen." The Jews, who refuse the invitation, are rejected, and so are the Gentiles who accept the invitation but who do not make the necessary preparation for it.

The Pharisees, embittered more than ever against Jesus by the parables which He had delivered the last two days, strain every thought to accomplish His death. If they could only convict Him of sympathy in His teaching with the

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 15; vol. iii. p. 1525.
Theophylact, in Matt. xxii. 2, &c.; vol. i. p. 117.
Euthymius, in Matt. xxii. 2, &c.; vol. ii. p. 835.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxii. 2; vol. i. p. 1042.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxii. 2; vol. vii. p. 159.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 1282.

band of fanatics who, led by Judas of Galilee, opposed the payment of tribute to the Romans, they might accuse Him of actually abetting them; and thus they might secure His condemnation as a disturber of the peace of the nation. Pretending to great admiration for His sincerity, and even professing, by their use of the term "Master," to be His disciples in heart at least, they bring before Him the question of tribute,—a question not as to the necessity, but as to the lawfulness of paying tribute to Tiberius Caesar, the heathen Emperor of Rome, as to the lawfulness of it in the eyes of God. Their object is to induce Him to forbid this, and their belief is that He will.

JESUS ANSWERS THE QUESTION ABOUT TRIBUTE TO CÆSAR.

S. MATTHEW xxii. 15-22.

S. MARK xii. 13-17.

S. LUKE xx. 20-26.

15 Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle Him in His talk.

16 And they sent out unto Him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that Thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest Thou for any man: for Thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell us therefore, What thinkest Thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye Me, ye hypocrites?

19 Shew Me the tribute money.

And they brought unto Him a penny.

20 And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?

21 They say unto Him, Cæsar's.

Then saith He unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left Him, and went their way.

13 And they send unto Him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch Him in His words.

14 And when they were come, they say unto Him, Master, we know that Thou art true, and carest for no man: for Thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth:

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But He, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them,

Why tempt ye Me? bring Me a penny, that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto Him, Cæsar's.

17 And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's.

And they marvelled at Him.

20 And they watched Him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of His words, that so they might deliver Him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked Him, saying, Master, we know that Thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest Thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God truly:

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23 But He perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye Me?

24 Shew Me a penny.

Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cæsar's.

25 And He said unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of His words before the people:

and they marvelled at His answer, and held their peace.

15. ¶ Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle Him in His talk.

S*, omits in His talk. Vulg; ut caperent eum in sermone.

16. And they sent out unto Him their disciples with the Herodians,^a saying, Master, we know that Thou art true, and teachest the way

^a The Herodians.—Many things are conjectured concerning the Herodians. I make a judgment of them from that history which is produced by the author Juchasin. Speaking of Hillel and Shammai. 'Heretofore,' saith he, 'Hillel and Menahem were of God in truth, neither carest Thou for any man: for Thou regardest not the person of men.

17. Tell us therefore, What thinkest Thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?*

18. But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye Me, ye hypocrites?

19. Shew Me the tribute money. And they brought unto Him a penny.

Vulg. Ostendite mihi numisma census. At illi obtulerunt ei denarium.

20. And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?^b Margm. inscription.

Vulg. Et ait illis lesus.

21. They say unto Him, Cæsar's. Then saith He unto them, Render therefore under Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

S.V. omit unto Him.
Vulg. Dicunt ei: Cæsaris. Tunc ait illis: Reddite ergo que sunt Cæsaris, Cæsari: et que sunt Dei, Deo.

22. When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left Him, and went their way.

Vulg. Et audientes mirati sunt, et relicto eo abierunt.

A common object to accomplish the death of Jesus unites together those who are naturally opposed to each other, the Pharisees and the Herodians. The latter of these favoured the payment of the tribute, while the former opposed it. The Pharisees maintained that the holy nation ought not to pay tribute to the heathen. Ever ready to join in any movement that promised deliverance from the Roman yoke, they were at the present moment anxiously looking forward to the coming of the Messiah, as of one who should deliver them from this hated thralldom. Josephus shows that the Pharisees were the secret fomenters of nearly all the seditious movements that distracted Judæa. The Herodians¹ were the supporters of the family of Herod. Some have thought that they went so far as to declare that the promise of the Messiah was fulfilled in Herod. Their object was the exaltation of Herod through the favour of the Romans. Two parties could scarcely be more opposed to each other than these; but they sink all their differences for the time to unite against Jesus. If, in reply to their question, He should answer that it was right to pay tribute to Cæsar, the Pharisees would at once represent Him to the people as taking the part of the Romans against His own nation. If He should forbid the tribute to be paid, both the Pharisees and Herodians would join in denouncing Him to the Romans as a teacher of seditious principles, and as dangerous to the well-being of the State.

The Romans demanded tribute of the Jews, and they had the power to enforce this demand, and the Jews had no power to resist it. In asking, therefore, whether it were lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar or not, they were stating the case as if they had scruples of conscience against paying it, on the ground that to put God's own people to tribute was an infringement of His rights. They had doubts on this matter, and they wished to have it determined by a competent authority, and Jesus, as they craftily pretended, was that authority.

Before answering their question, He first unmasks their hypocrisy, and shows that He is aware that the whole matter is a pretence, and got up with a view to entrap Him. Then in His answer He lays down a principle which would serve as a rule of action in similar cases for all time to come. He tacitly acknowledges that he who has the power to issue money as a representative of himself and of his authority has

* Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 26; vol. iii. p. 1553.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xx.; vol. i. p. 269.

[Tertullian,

Tertullian, de Præscript. 45; vol. ii. p. 61.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxii. 16; vol. vii. p. 162.

heads of the Council, but Menahem withdrew into the family of Herod, together with eighty men bravely clad.¹ These and such as these I suppose were called Herodians, who partly got into the Court, and partly were of the faction both of the father and son. With how great opposition of the generality of the Jewish people, Herod ascended and kept the throne, we have observed before. There were some that obstinately resisted him; others, that as much defended him: to those was deservedly given the title of Herodians, as endeavouring with all their might to settle the kingdom in his family: and they, it seems, were of the Sadducean faith and doctrine; and it is likely had leavened Herod, who was now Tetrarch, with the same principles. For, as we noted before, 'the leaven of the Sadducees' in Matthew (xvi. 6) is in Mark (viii. 15) 'the leaven of Herod.' And it was craftily contrived on both sides; that they might be a mutual establishment to one another—their to his kingdom, and he to their doctrine."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xvi. 16; vol. ii. p. 229.

* Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?—"And now Archelaus's part of Judæa was reduced into a province, and Coponius, one of the equestrian order among the Romans, was sent as a procurator, having the power of [life and] death put into his hands by Cæsar. Under his administration it was that a certain Galilee, whose name was Judas, prevailed with his countrymen to revolt; and said they were cowards if they would endure to pay a tax to the Romans, and would, after God, submit to mortal men as their lords. This man was a teacher of a peculiar sect of his own, and was not at all like the rest of those their leaders."—JOSEPHUS, Wars, ii. viii. 1; Whiston's Trans., p. 614.

^b Whose is this image and superscription?—"They enquire by a pernicious subtilty to find out whether Christ were of the same opinion with Judas of Galilee. Which opinion those lewd disturbers of all things, whom Josephus brands everywhere under the name of Zealots, had taken up; stiffly denying obedience and tribute to a Roman prince, because they persuaded themselves and their followers that it was a sin to submit to a heathen government. . . .

"Christ answers the treachery of the question propounded, out of the very determinations of the schools where this was taught (Maimon, on Gezealah, ch. v. fol. 20, 2): 'Whosoever the money of any king is current, there the inhabitants acknowledge that king for their Lord.'—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xvii. 20; vol. i. p. 230.

also the right to impose tribute. If there is anything wrong or unjust in the tribute, the wrong is in him who imposes it, and not in him who pays it. In the paying of tribute the rights of civil government can never come into collision with the honour due to God. Hence they are to pay to Caesar the tribute which he imposes, and to give to God His offerings, His tithes and oblations. But more than that, as they are to give back to Caesar that which was stamped with his image and superscription because it was his, so they are to give back to God that which was stamped with His own image, namely, themselves. The rendering up of themselves, stamped, as they were, with God's image, is as much due to God as the tribute is to Caesar.¹

It would seem as if on this the last day of His public teaching all the various parties of the Jews were gathered together to try their utmost strength against Jesus. No sooner had He silenced the Pharisees and Herodians on the subject of tribute, than the Sadducees come to Him, full of confidence that they can convict Him of absurdity in teaching the doctrine of the resurrection.

THE QUESTION RESPECTING THE WOMAN MARRIED TO SEVEN BRETHREN IN SUCCESSION.

S. MATTHEW xxii. 23-33.

- 23 The same day came to Him the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked Him, saying, Master, Moses said, "If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother."
- 24 Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:
- 25 likewise the second also,
- and the third,
- unto the seventh.
- 27 And last of all the woman died also.
- 28 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.
- 29 Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.
- 30 For in the resurrection

S. MARK xii. 18-27.

- 18 Then come unto Him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked Him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.
- 19 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.
- 20 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.
- 21 And the seven had her, and left no seed:
- 22 last of all the woman died also.
- 23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.
- 24 And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?
- 25 For when they shall rise from the dead,

S. LUKE xx. 27-40.

- 27 Then came to Him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked Him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.
- 28 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.
- 29 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.
- 30 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.
- 31 Last of all the woman died also.
- 32 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.
- 33 And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:
- 35 but they which shall be accounted

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 27; vol. iii. p. 1557.
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxx.; vol. ii. p. 319.
Tertullian, de Idolatria, 15; vol. i. p. 683.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xvii. 21; vol. i. p. 1045.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xvii. 21; vol. vii. p. 163.

S. MATTHEW xxii.

they neither marry,
nor are given in marriage;

but are as the angels
of God in heaven.

31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read
that which was spoken unto you by God,

saying,

32 "I am
the God of Abraham,
and the God of Isaac,
and the God of Jacob?"
God is not
the God of the dead,
but of the living.

33 And when the multitude heard this,
they were astonished at His doctrine.

S. MARK xii.

they neither marry,
nor are given in marriage;

but are as the angels
which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead,
that they rise:
have ye not read
in the book of Moses,
how in the bush
God spake unto him,

saying,

"I am
the God of Abraham,
and the God of Isaac,
and the God of Jacob?"
He is not
the God of the dead,
but the God of the living:

ye therefore do greatly err.

S. LUKE xx.

worthy to obtain that world,
and the resurrection from the dead,
neither marry,
nor are given in marriage:
36 neither can they die any more:
for they are equal unto the angels;

and are the children of God,
being the children of the resurrection.
37 Now that the dead are raised,

even Moses shewed
at the bush,

when he calleth the Lord

the God of Abraham,
and the God of Isaac,
and the God of Jacob.
For He is not a God of the dead,
but of the living:
for all live unto Him.

39 Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, Thou hast well said.

40 And after that they durst not ask Him any question more.

23. ¶ The same day came to Him the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked Him,

S. And the same day came Sadducees.
Vulg. In illo die accesserunt ad eum Sadducei.

24. Saying, Master, Moses said, "If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother."

25. Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:

26. Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the seventh.

Margen, the seven.
Vulg. Similiter secundus, et tertius, usque ad septimum.

27. And last of all the woman died also.

S. V. enest also.
Vulg. Novissime autem omnium et mulier defuncta est.

28. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29. Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.

S. And Jesus answered.
Vulg. Respondit autem in Jesus, ait illis.

30. For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.

V. omnis of God.
Vulg. sed erunt sicut angeli Dei in celo.

31. But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying,

Vulg. non legistis quod dictum est a Deo dicens vobis.

32. "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob!"

God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

S. V. He is not the God.
Vulg. Non est Deus mortuorum, sed viventium.

33. And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at His doctrine.

Vulg. Et audientes turbæ, mirabantur in doctrina ejus.

Jesus first distinctly states that the Sadducees are in error in their disbelief in a resurrection; and then points out the two sources of their error. The first was their ignorance of the Scriptures, which frequently affirm the doctrine of the resurrection—not their ignorance of the letter of Scripture, but their misapprehension of its meaning. The second was their ignorance of the power of God, with whom it is as easy to raise the body from the grave and to reunite it to the soul as it was to create soul and body at first.

He then describes the condition of glorified beings after the resurrection. Human passion being all removed, there will be no necessity for marriage. But they will live the same pure, spiritual life that angels live, free from all corruption, and from all diminution of their happiness. S. Luke calls them "the children of the resurrection," probably because through the resurrection they are ushered into a new and more glorious state of being.

Not content with refuting the error of the Sadducees from the very nature of the case, Jesus goes on to prove the doctrine of the resurrection from the words of Scripture. Some¹ have supposed that He quotes Moses because the books of Moses were the only part of the Old Testament which the Sadducees received. Others² have thought that He did this because Moses was held in greater repute than any other of the prophets, and because the Sadducees had themselves referred to Moses, and would therefore acknowledge him as an unexceptionable witness; and that what the Sadducees rejected was not the later writings of the Old Testament, but all doctrines and practices that were supported only by tradition.

He reasons that as God, in His communication to His servants, speaks of Himself as the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, this implied that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were living, and were living in order to be raised up again; otherwise God would not have called Himself their God, for He was God not of the dead, but of the living.

The Pharisees, hearing that the Sadducees had been silenced by Jesus through their ignorance or misinterpretation of Scripture, and perhaps concluding that this had happened chiefly through their rejection of all the traditional explanation of Scripture, instigate one of their number to tempt Him with a question of a purely traditional nature.

WHICH IS THE FIRST AND GREAT COMMANDMENT.

S. MATTHEW xxii. 34-40.

34 But when the Pharisees had heard that He had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them,
which was a lawyer,

asked Him a question,

36 tempting Him, and saying, Master, which is the great commandment
in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him,

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God
with all thy heart, and with all thy soul,
and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

39 And the second is like unto it,

Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

S. MARK xii. 28-34.

28 And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that He had answered them well,

asked Him,

Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him,

The first of all the commandments is, Hear,
O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God
with all thy heart, and with all thy soul,
and with all thy mind,
and with all thy strength:

this is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this,
Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribe said unto Him, Well, Master, Thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but He:

33 And to love Him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, He said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask Him any question.

¹ Origen, in Matt. tomus xvii. 35; vol. iii. p. 1593.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxii. 32; vol. vii. p. 165.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxii. 32; vol. iii. p. 98.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxvii. p. 361.

² Francisus Lucas, in Matt. xxii. 32; vol. i. p. 349.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxii. 32; vol. viii. p. 417.

34. ¶ But when the Pharisees had heard that He had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35. Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked Him a question, tempting Him, and saying,

S.V. omit and saying.

Vulg. Et interrogavit eum unus ex eis legis doctor, tentans eum.

36. Master, which is the great commandment in the law ?^a

37. Jesus said unto him,

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God
with all thy heart,
and with all thy soul,
and with all thy mind."

S.V. But He said.

Vulg. At illi Jesus: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, et in tota anima tua, et in tota mente tua.

38. This is the first and great commandment.

S.V. the great and first.

Vulg. Hoc est maximum et primum mandatum.

39. And the second is like unto it,^b

"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

S.V. omit. And: V. The second is likewise, Thou.

40. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

S.V. omits all.

Vulg. In his duobus mandatis universa lex pendet, et prophetae.

It would appear from the whole tenor of S. Mark's narrative, and especially from our Saviour's concluding remark, that this lawyer, though he was one of their number, was not actuated by the same spirit of malice as the other Pharisees. Skilled in the questions of the Jewish schools, he may have been also an honest and anxious inquirer after the truth. It was probably from his well-known skill in such subjects that he was put up by them to speak, as one who was not unlikely to prove a match for Jesus.

The question which he proposes has special reference to the comparative importance of moral and ceremonial duties, a subject which at that time was a constant source of discussion.¹ In reply Jesus shows that our first duty is love to God, and that our second is like to this; like to it partly because it calls forth the same affection of love, and partly because love to God is the ground of love to our neighbour. Our love to God should be co-extensive with the powers of our heart, and soul, and mind. Our love to ourselves is to be the measure of our love to our neighbour. On these two duties hang all the law and the prophets, as embracing the whole range of man's duty.

When the Pharisees, Herodians, and Sadducees had exhausted all their questions, it became the right of Jesus to ask questions in return; and He uses this privilege to draw their attention to the twofold nature of the Messiah or Christ. There is a slight variation in the form in which the Evangelists relate this, but no real opposition. As is often the case, S. Matthew gives one account, while S. Mark and S. Luke agree in giving the other. S. Matthew represents Jesus as appealing to the Pharisees personally as to their opinion of Christ, while S. Mark and S. Luke represent Him as asking them respecting the opinion of the scribes.

It may be, as some² have conjectured, that Jesus first asked the Pharisees whose Son Christ was, as related by S. Matthew, and that they replied that the scribes said He was the Son of David, and that He then asked how, or in what sense, did the scribes say that He was the Son of David, as related by S. Mark and S. Luke.

¹ V. Bede, in Marc. xii. 28; vol. iii. p. 255.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 74; vol. iii. p. 1147.

[Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxix. p. 367.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xii. 41; vol. i. p. 313.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xii. 41; vol. viii. p. 419.

* Which is the great commandment in the law?—It is not seldom that this distinction occurs in the Rabbins, between ה'יהוה, the law, and מצוות, the precept. By the latter they understand some special or greater rite (themselves being judges), such as circumcision, the repeating of the Phylacteries, keeping the Sabbath, &c. This question propounded by the scribe seems to respect the same, namely, whether those great precepts (as they were esteemed) and other ceremonial precepts of that nature—such as sacrifices, purifications, keeping festivals—were the greatest precepts of the law, or no; and if it were so, which among them were the first.

"By his answer he seems to incline to the negative, and to prefer the moral law. Whence Christ saith, that he was 'not far from the kingdom of heaven.' And while He suits an answer to him from that very passage which was the first in the reciting of the Phylacteries, 'Hear, O Israel,' He directs the eyes and the minds of those that repeated them to the sense and the marrow of the thing repeated, and that they rest not in the bare work of repeating them."—LIGHTFOOT on Mark xii. 28; vol. ii. p. 350.

^b And the second is like unto it.—"He meaneth in amplitude and largeness, inasmuch as it is the root out of which all laws of duty to manward have grown, as out of the former all offices of religion towards God."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' i. 8, 7; vol. i. p. 231.

HOW CHRIST IS DAVID'S SON.

S. MATTHEW xxii. 41-46.

41 While the Pharisees were gathered together,
 42 Jesus asked them, saying,
 What think ye of Christ? whose Son is He?
 They say unto Him, The Son of David.

43 He saith unto them,
 How then doth David in spirit
 call Him Lord, saying,
 44 "The LORD said unto my Lord,
 Sit Thou on My right hand,
 till I make Thine enemies
 Thy footstool?"
 45 If David then
 call Him Lord,
 how is He his Son?
 46 And no man was able to answer Him a word, neither durst any man

 from that day forth ask Him any more questions.

S. MARK xii. 35-37.

35 And Jesus answered and said, while He taught in the Temple,

How say the scribes that Christ is the Son of David?

36 For David himself said
 by the Holy Ghost,

"The LORD said to my Lord,
 Sit Thou on My right hand,
 till I make Thine enemies
 Thy footstool."

37 David therefore himself
 calleth ~~Him~~ Lord;
 and whence is He then his Son?

And the common people heard Him gladly.

S. LUKE xx. 41-44.

41 And He said unto them,

How say they
 that Christ is David's Son?

42 And David himself saith in the book of Psalms,

"The LORD said unto my Lord,
 Sit Thou on My right hand,
 till I make Thine enemies
 Thy footstool."

43 David therefore
 calleth Him Lord,
 how is He then his Son?

41. ¶ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them,
 42. Saying, What think ye of Christ? whose Son is He? They say unto Him, The Son of David.

43. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call Him Lord, saying, 44.

 "The Lord said unto my Lord,
 Sit Thou on My right hand,
 till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool."

S.V. till I put Thine enemies under Thy feet.
 Vulg. donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum.

45. If David then call Him Lord, how is He his Son?

46. And no man was able to answer Him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask Him any more questions.

It is clear from their answer that neither the Pharisees nor the scribes had any conception that the Messiah should be God as well as Man. The object of Jesus by His question is gradually to lead their thoughts to see that this was the meaning of the prophecies respecting the Messiah. That the Christ should be David's Son was true, but it was not all the truth; nor was it a full answer to the question, Whose Son is He? Quoting Psalm cx. 1, He shows them that their interpretation is inadequate, and fails to explain David's use of the word "Lord" to his own son. He thus suggests the difficulty, the insufficiency of their answer, that Christ was David's Son; but He does not explain to them that the Messiah should be both God and Man, and that He should be David's Son inasmuch as He was Man, and David's Lord inasmuch as He was God. After a second time suggesting this difficulty, He leaves it for their thoughts to ponder over.

The words which Jesus quotes from the Psalmist, "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool," are a prophecy of Christ's victory over His enemies; and David, inspired by the Holy Ghost, has so expressed his prophecy as to represent God the Father declaring to His Son, the Messiah, that He shall rise from the dead and ascend into heaven, and triumph over all His enemies.

We have here the testimony of Jesus Himself that Psalm cx. and the Book of Psalms, whatever that may include, was written by David, under the direction and inspiration of the Holy Ghost.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Zacharias son of Barachias.—"That the discourse here is concerning Zacharias the son of Jehoiada, killed by King Joash (2 Chron. xxiv. 20, &c.), we make appear by these arguments:—

"I. Because no other Zacharias is said to have been slain before these words were spoken by Christ. Those things that are spoke of Zacharias, the father of the Baptist, are dreams; and those of Zacharias, one of the twelve prophets, are not much better. The killing of our Zacharias in the Temple is related in express words: and why, neglecting this, should we seek for another, which in truth we shall nowhere find with any author of good credit?

"II. The Jews observe that the death of this Zacharias, the son of Jehoiada, was made memorable by a signal character and revenge. Of the martyrdom of the other Zacharias, they say nothing at all.

"Here both the Talmuds (Jerusol. in Taanith, lxi. 1, 2; Bab in Sanhed., xvi. 2): R. Jochanan said, eighty thousand priests were killed for the blood of Zacharias. R. Judah asked R. Acha, whereabouts they killed Zacharias? whether in the Court of the women, or in the Court of Israel? He answered, neither in the Court of Israel, nor in the Court of the women, but in the Court of the priests. And that was not done to his blood which useth to be done to the blood of a ram or a kid. Concerning these it is written, 'And he shall pour out his blood and cover it with dust.' But here it is written, 'Her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock, she poured it not upon the ground,' Ezek. xxiv. 7, 8. And why this? That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance. 'I have set her blood upon a rock that it should not be covered.' They committed seven wickednesses in that day. They killed a priest, a prophet, and a judge: they shed the blood of an innocent man: they polluted the Court. And that day was the Sabbath day, and the day of Expiation. When therefore Nebuzaradan went up thither, he saw the blood bubbling; so he said to them, 'What meaneth this?' 'It is the blood,' said they, 'of calves, lambs, and rams, which we have offered on the altar.' 'Bring, then,' said he, 'calves, lambs, and rams, that I may try whether this be their blood.' They brought them and slew them, and that blood still bubbled, but their blood did not bubble. 'Discover the matter to me,' said he, 'or I will tear your flesh with iron rakes.' Then they said to him, 'This was a priest, a prophet, and a judge, who foretold to Israel all these evils which we have suffered from you, and we rose up against him, and slew him.' 'But I,' saith he, 'will appease him.' He brought the Rabbins, and slew them upon that blood, and yet it was not pacified. He brought the children out of the school, and slew them upon it, and yet it was not quiet. He brought the young priests, and slew them upon it, and yet it was not quiet. So that he slew upon it ninety-four thousand, and yet it was not quiet. He drew near to it himself and said, 'O Zacharias, Zacharias! Thou hast destroyed the best of thy people, that is, they have been killed for your sake: would you have me destroy all?' Then it was quiet, and did not bubble any more, &c.

"The truth of this story we leave to the relators: that which makes to our present purpose we observe. That it was very improbable, nay, next to impossible, that those that heard the words of Christ concerning Zacharias slain between the Temple and the altar, could understand it of any other but of this: concerning whom and whose blood they had such famous and signal memory; and of any other Zacharias slain in the Temple, there was a profound silence. In Josephus indeed we meet with the mention of one Zacharias the son of Baruch, which is the same thing with Barachias, killed in the Temple, not long before the destruction of it; whom some conjecture to be prophetically marked out here by our Saviour. But this is somewhat hard, when Christ expressly speaks of time past ('ye slew'), and when by no art nor arguments it can be proved that this Zacharias ought to be reckoned into the number of prophets and martyrs.

"There are two things here that stick with interpreters, so that they cannot so freely subscribe to our Zacharias. 1. That he lived and died long before the first Temple was destroyed, when the example would have seemed more home and proper to be taken under the second Temple, and that now near expiring. 2. That he was plainly and notoriously the son of Jehoiada, but this is called by Christ the son of Barachias.

"To which we, after others who have discoursed at large upon this matter, return only thus much:—

"I. That Christ plainly intended to bring examples out of the Old Testament; and He brought two, which how much the further off they seemed to be from deriving any guilt to this generation, so much heavier the guilt is if they do derive it. For a Jew would argue, what hath a Jew to do with the blood of Abel, killed almost two thousand years before Abraham, the father of the Jews, was born? And what hath this generation to do with the blood of Zacharias, which was expiated by cruel plagues and calamities many ages since? Nay, saith Christ, this generation hath arrived to that degree of impiety, wickedness, and guilt, that even these remote examples of guilt relate and are to be applied to it. And while you think that the blood of Abel and the following martyrs doth nothing concern you, and believe that the blood of Zacharias hath been long ago expiated with a signal punishment, I say unto you that the blood both of the one and the other, and of all the righteous men killed in the interval of time between them, shall be required of this generation. 1. Because you kill Him who is of more value than they all. 2. Because by your wickedness you so much kindle the anger of God, that He is driven to cut off His old Church, namely, the people that hath been of a long time in covenant with Him. For when Christ saith, 'That on you may come all the righteous blood,' &c., it is not so much to be understood of their personal guilt as to that blood, as of their guilt for the killing of Christ, in whose Death the guilt of the murder of all those His types and members is in some measure included; and it is to be understood of the horrible destruction of that generation, than which no former ages have ever seen any more woful or amazing, nor shall any future, before the funeral of the world itself: as if all the guilt of the blood of righteous men that had been shed from the beginning of the world had flowed together upon that generation.

"II. The second, which has more difficulty, namely, that Zacharias is here called the son of Barachias, when he was the son of Jehoiada."

Lightfoot answers by a long and somewhat intricate argument to prove that Zacharias the son of Jehoiada and Zacharias the son of Barachias are one and the same person, partly on the ground that it was a very common thing for the Jews to have several names, and then he concludes:—

"It may be objected: But since our Saviour took examples from the Old Testament, why did He not rather say, From the blood of Abel to the blood of Uriah the priest? that is, from the beginning of the world to the end of the first Temple? I answer:

"1. The killing of Zacharias was more horrible, as he was more high in dignity, and as the place wherein he was killed was more holy.

"2. The consent of the whole people was more universal to his death.

"3. He was a more proper and apparent type of Christ.

"4. The requiring of vengeance is mentioned only concerning Abel and Zachariah. 'Behold, the voice of thy brother's blood crieth out to Me' (Gen. iv. 10); and 'Let the Lord look upon it, and require it' (2 Chron. xxiv. 22).

"5. In this the death of Christ agrees exactly with the death of Zachariah: that, although the city and nation of the Jews did not perish till about forty years after the death of Christ, yet they gave themselves their death's wound in wounding Christ. So it was also in the case of Zachariah. Jerusalem and the people of the Jews stood indeed many years after the death of Zachariah, but from that time began to sink, and draw towards ruin. Consult the story narrowly, and you will plainly find that all the affairs of the Jews began to decline and grow worse and worse from that time when blood touched blood (Hos. iv. 2), the blood of the sacrificer mingled with the blood of the sacrifice, and when the people became contentious and rebellious against the priest (verse 4)."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. ii. p. 237.

"Many of the Greek Fathers have maintained that the father of John the Baptist is the person to whom our Lord alludes; but there can be little or no doubt that the allusion is to Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada (2 Chron. xxiv. 20). The name of the father of Zacharias is not mentioned by S. Luke; and we may suppose that the name of Barachias crept into the text of S. Matthew from a marginal gloss, a confusion having been made between Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, and Zacharias the son of Barachias (Berechiah) the prophet."—SMITH's 'Bibl. Dict.'

"Eusebius (silentio) is literally the only authority among the Fathers for the omission of Barachias in S. Matt. xxiii. 35, Irenaeus and even Origen retaining the words, in spite of their obvious difficulty."—SCRIVENER's Introduction, p. 388.

CHAPTER XXIII.

[1. Christ admonisheth the people to follow the good doctrine, not the evil examples, of the scribes and Pharisees. 5. His disciples must beware of their ambition. 13. He denounceth evil wages against their hypocrisy and blindness: 31, and prophesieth of the destruction of Jerusalem.]

[Vulg. Scribæ et pharisæi super cathedram Moysi sedentibus præcepit Iesus o'dire, ipsorum autem opera non imitari, retegens ipsorum hypoërisim et ambitionem, discipulos vero contrarium docens humilitatem: deinde multiplex ve illis ob hypoërisim ac reliquas suas iniquitates interminatur, prædicans eos patrum suorum mensuram in iustorum persecutionibus impleturos, ac Jerusalem deserendam.]

WHEN Jesus had answered all the questions of the scribes and Pharisees, and had abundantly disproved all their errors, and yet had not succeeded in convincing them either by His miracles or by His reasoning, He turns to the people and to His disciples to warn them against similar conduct.

The Evangelists (Matt. xxi. 23) relate that in the morning of this day—Tuesday in the Passover week—when Jesus first came into the Temple, the chief priests and elders came to Him with an inquiry as to the authority with which He acted. He then showed them how unprincipled had been their conduct with respect to John the Baptist and his mission. In the denunciations which He proceeds to deliver against these very men for their pride, ambition, and avarice, He speaks of them as scribes and Pharisees. Under their official term of priests, He does not utter a single word of rebuke to them, probably lest He should bring their priestly functions into contempt with the people.

S. Matthew relates His warnings against the scribes and Pharisees at much greater length than the other two Evangelists. S. Mark and S. Luke agree in their relation of these warnings, but they give but a very small part of that which S. Matthew records. Of the thirty-eight verses over which S. Matthew's account extends, S. Mark and S. Luke give only three.

JESUS WARNS HIS DISCIPLES AGAINST THE SCRIBES AND PHARISEES.

S. MATTHEW xxiii. 1, &c.

1 Then spake Jesus to the multitude,
2 and to His disciples, saying,
The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:
3 all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe,
that observe and do;
but do not ye after their works:
for they say, and do not.

4 For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

5 But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments,

6 and love the uppermost rooms at feasts,
and the chief seats in the synagogues,
7 and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

8 But be not ye called Rabbi: for One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: for One is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters: for One is your Master, even Christ.

S. MARK xii. 38-40.

38 And He said unto them in His doctrine,

Beware of the scribes,
which love to go in long clothing,

S. LUKE xx. 45-47.

45 Then in the audience of all the people
He said unto His disciples,

46 Beware of the scribes,
which desire to walk in long robes,

and love salutations in the market-places, 39 and the chief seats in the synagogues,
and the uppermost rooms at feasts:

and love greetings in the markets,
and the highest seats in the synagogues,
and the chief rooms at feasts;

S. MATTHEW xxiii.

S. MARK xii.

S. LUKE xx.

11 But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.

12 And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

13 But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

14 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!
for ye devour widows' houses,
and for a pretence make long prayer:
therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

40 which devour widows' houses,
and for a pretence make long prayers:
these shall receive greater damnation.

47 which devour widows' houses,
and for a shew make long prayers:
the same shall receive greater damnation.

1. Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to His disciples,

Vulg. Tunc Iesus locutus est ad turbas et ad discipulos suos.

2. Saying, The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:^a

3. All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not.

S.V. omit observe after bid you; that observe and do: S*. that do: S*.V. that do observe.

Vulg. Omnia ergo quaecunque dixerint vobis, servate, et facite.

4. For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders;

but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

S.V. But they bind: S. great heavy burdens, and lay them: S.V. but they themselves will not.

Vulg. Alligant enim onera gravia, et importabilia . . . digito autem suo nolunt ea movere.

5. But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries,^b and enlarge the borders of their garments,

S.V. for they make: S.V. omit of their garments.

Vulg. dilatant enim phylacteria sua, et magnificent fimbrias.

6. And love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, Vulg. Amant autem primos recubitus in cenis, et primas cathedras in synagogis.

^a Sit (ἐκθίσαι) in Moses' seat.—"This is to be understood rather of the legislative seat or chair than of the merely doctrinal; and Christ here asserts the authority of the magistrate, and persuadeth to obey him in lawful things. . . He teacheth that they were not to be esteemed as oracles, but as magistrates.

"What is here observed by Galatinus from the signification of the aorist ἐκθίσαι, sat, is too light and airy. He saith, 'they sat, and not they sit, that He might plainly demonstrate that their power was then ceased.' But if we would be so curious to gather anything from this aorist, we might very well transfer it to this sense rather. The scribes and Pharisees, the worst of men, have long usurped Moses' seat; nevertheless, we ought to obey them, because, by the dispensation of the Divine Providence, they bear the chief magistracy."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 2; vol. ii. p. 231.

^b They make broad their phylacteries.—"These four places of the Law—

Exod. xiii. ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10;

Exod. xiii. ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16;

Deut. vi. ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9;

Deut. xi. ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21—

being writ upon two parchment-labels (which they called תפלין, Tephillin), were carried about with them constantly with great devotion, being fastened to their forehead and their left arm—to the forehead in that place where the pulse of an infant's brain is. This of the forehead was most conspicuous and made broad: hence came that, 'Let no body pass by the synagogue while prayers are saying there. . . But if he hath Phylacteries upon his head he may pass by, because they show that he is studious of the Law.' . . .

"They are called in Greek Phylacteries (φυλακτήρια, from φυλάσσω), that is, Observatories; because they were to put them in mind of the Law; and perhaps they were also called Preservatories, because they were supposed to have some virtue in them to drive away devils.

"Concerning the curious writing of the Phylacteries, see Maimon. on Tephillin: concerning their strings, marked with certain small letters, see Tosaphoth on Megillah: concerning the repeating of them, see both the Talmuds in Berachoth. How the Jews did swear, touching their Phylacteries, see Maimon. in Shevuoth. . . .

"Our Saviour does not so much condemn the bare wearing of them, as the doing it out of pride and hypocrisy. It is not unlikely that He wore them Himself, according to the custom of the country; for the children of the Jews were to be brought up from their infancy in saying the Phylacteries; that is, as soon as they were capable of being catechized. The scribes and Pharisees made them very broad and visible, that they might obtain a proportional fame and esteem for their devotion with the people; these things being looked upon as arguments of the study of the Law, and signs of devotion."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 5; vol. ii. p. 232.

7. And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi,^a Rabbi.

S.V. Rabbi, instead of Rabbi, Rabbi.
Vulg. et vocari ab hominibus Rabbi.

8. But be not ye called Rabbi: for One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

S.V. omit even Christ.
Vulg. Unus est enim magister vester; omnes autem vos fratres estis.

9. And call no man your father upon the earth: for One is your Father, which is in heaven.

S.V. your heavenly Father.
Vulg. Unus est enim Pater vester, qui in caelis est.

10. Neither be ye called masters: for One is your Master, even Christ.

V. because your Master is one.
Vulg. Nec vocemini magistri: quia magister vester unus est, Christus.

11. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.

12. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

Vulg. Qui autem se exaltaverit, humiliabitur: et qui se humiliaverit, exaltabitur.

Jesus first of all affirms the undoubted authority of the scribes and Pharisees to explain and to enforce the Law. He then draws attention to the marked distinction between their commands and their own practice. He bids the people observe the former and avoid the latter. He then points out the chief source of their errors, namely, their eagerness for the applause of men; and He instances in several things this their love of distinction: in their dress; in their social gatherings; in their religious assemblies; and in their titles of honour. He forbids them to desire the title of Teacher, Father, or Master, and for the same reason, namely, that He is their Teacher, Father, and Master, and all they are brethren; and prescribes a voluntary humbling of themselves, as a cure for this love of distinction over each other.

If one man excels another in any branch of knowledge, or in his skill in communicating knowledge to others, our Saviour's words would not prohibit him from receiving an appropriate name to indicate this. What He forbids, as appears from the context, are titles of distinction for the mere love of distinction and superiority over others; and such titles as are incompatible with their looking to Him as the Teacher, the Father and the Master of all, and with their regarding all His disciples as brethren.

In the early part of His ministry Jesus had pronounced eight beatitudes or blessings on the righteous, and now but a few days before His Crucifixion He pronounces eight woes on the scribes and Pharisees, or woes on the scribes and Pharisees for eight different kinds of conduct; and seven times He calls them "hypocrites." None of the other Evangelists record either the beatitudes or the woes so fully as S. Matthew.

The first woe which Jesus pronounced on the scribes and Pharisees is because they shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for they neither go in themselves, nor suffer them that are entering to go in. The first Adam, by his disobedience, had shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. Jesus Christ, the second Adam, had become Man that He might re-open heaven for men, that after His Ascension others might ascend to Him; and He went about teaching men that they should repent and make preparation for this. But the scribes and Pharisees refused to enter themselves, they declined to believe in Jesus and in His doctrine; and others who would have entered they prevented. He calls them "hypocrites," because under the mask of zeal for God and for His honour they indulged in every degree of malice and lawlessness. They had been one great cause of the death of John the Baptist, and they are even now plotting the death of Jesus Himself, and all under the cloak of zeal for God's honour.

S. Luke recording a similar woe of Jesus, though probably uttered at a different time, represents Him as accusing them, not with having "shut up the kingdom of heaven against men," but with having "taken away the key of knowledge." His words as related by the two Evangelists are different, but His meaning is the same.¹

The second woe is pronounced on them for making the piety and devotion of widows a mere handle to rob them of their worldly goods. By their pretended devotion they mock God, and succeed in defrauding those whose piety and whose want of protection should have recommended them to their especial care. Therefore they shall receive greater damnation; their punishment shall be great in proportion to their guilt.

The third woe was, because through pretended anxiety for the welfare of the heathen, the scribes and Pharisees induced them to become proselytes. But when once they had secured

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xi. 52; vol. v. p. 722.
Theophylact, in Luc. xi. 52; vol. i. p. 364.
Tertullian, IV. adv. Marc. 27; vol. ii. p. 429.

[S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 23; vol. iii. p. 1342.

649. ————— Cont. adv. Legis et Proph. ii. v.; vol. viii. p.

V. Beke, in Luc. xi. 52; vol. iii. p. 487.

^a To be called of men, Rabbi.—Lightfoot, quoting the Rabbinist writers, says, "We have heard that this had its beginning only in the Presidents (of the Council) from Rabban Gamaliel the old man, and Rabban Simeon his son, who perished in the destruction of the second Temple; and from Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, who were all Presidents. And the title also of Rabbi began from those that were promoted (to be Elders) from that time: Rabbi Zadok and R. Eliezer ben Jacob; and the thing went forth from the disciples of Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai and onwards. Now the order, as all men use it, is this: Rabbi is greater than Rabb, and Rabban is greater than Rabbi; and he is greater who is called by his own (single) name, than he who is called Rabban."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 7; vol. ii. p. 232.

their offerings and tithes, they neglected them. Thus they either lived on proselytes in name only, but heathens in ignorance and sin, or, disgusted at the rapacious conduct of the Pharisees, they relapsed into their former state of heathenism, with an increased prejudice against the worship of the One True God.

The fourth woe was pronounced on them because, through ignorance and avarice, they misled the people as to the binding nature of an oath, and always with an eye to their own profit.

13. ¶ But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in your-selves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

S. omits But.
Vulg. Vae vobis scribæ et pharisei hypocritæ, quia comeditis domos viduarum, orationes longas orantes; propter hoc amplius accipietis iudicium.

14. Woe^a unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer:^b therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

S. V. omit this verse.
Vulg. Vae vobis scribæ et pharisei hypocritæ, quia comeditis domos viduarum, orationes longas orantes; propter hoc amplius accipietis iudicium.

15. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.

16. Woe unto you, ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the Temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the Temple, he is a debtor!^c

17. Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the Temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18. And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty.

Margin, debor or bound.

^a S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiii. 16; vol. vii. p. 170.
^b V. Bede, in Matt. xxiii. 16; vol. iii. p. 99.

[Jansenius,

^a "V. 14. omittunt Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles."—SCRIVENER, N. T., 1847.

^b And for a pretence make long prayer.—"Concerning the length of their prayers it may suffice to produce the words of the Babylon Gemara in Berachoth: 'The religious anciently used to tarry an hour,' meditating before they began their prayers . . . 'He that prays ought to tarry an hour after prayers.' . . . It is necessary therefore that he should stay (meditating) an hour before prayers, and an hour after; and the religious anciently used to stay an hour before prayers, an hour they prayed, and an hour they stayed after prayers. Since therefore they spent nine hours every day about their prayers, how did they perform the rest of the Law?"—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 14; vol. ii. p. 234.

^c Whosoever shall swear by the gold of the Temple, he is a debtor.—"These words agree in the same sense with those of the

19. Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?

S. Ye blind without fools and.
Vulg. Cæci, quid enim majus est, donum, an altare quod sanctificat donum?

20. Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

Vulg. Qui ergo jurat in altari, jurat in eo, et in omnibus quæ super illud sunt.

21. And whoso shall swear by the Temple, sweareth by it, and by Him that dwelleth therein.

22. And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by Him that sitteth thereon.

Vulg. Et qui jurat in cælo, jurat in throno Dei, et in eo qui sedet super eum.

The scribes and Pharisees overlooked the fact that an oath was binding on the conscience of the swearer, whatever he swore by, whether by a more holy or by a less holy thing; and they proportioned the binding nature of an oath to the degree of sanctity which the thing by which they swore was supposed to possess. Thus an oath by God the Creator was said to be more binding than an oath by any created thing; and the more removed from God anything was supposed to be, the less binding was an oath by it.

Jesus shows them that, even on their own principles, they reasoned falsely. God consecrated the Temple by the manifestation of His presence in it. The Temple conveyed to the altar whatever degree of sanctity it possessed; and the altar imparted to what was offered on it whatever sanctity belonged to it. On their own reasoning, then, the offering was the last thing that should render an oath binding. But because it was profitable to them they made it the first.¹

The fifth woe was pronounced on them because they showed their pretended zeal for the Law in scrupulously exacting tithes from others, rather than in themselves fulfilling the moral duties which the Law prescribed.

23. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxx. p. 376.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiii. 16; vol. i. p. 318.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiii. 16; vol. viii. p. 426.

Corban, ch. xv. 5. We must not understand 'the gold of the Temple' here, of that gold which shined all about in the walls and ceilings; but the gold here meant is that which was offered up in the Corban. It was a common thing with them, and esteemed as nothing, to swear by the Temple, and by the altar, and therefore they thought themselves not much obliged by it. But if they swore Corban, they supposed they were bound by an indispensable tie. For example, if anyone should swear thus, 'By the Temple, or, by the altar, my money, my cattle, my goods shall not profit you,' it was lawful nevertheless for the swearer, if he pleased, to suffer them to be profited by these; but if he should swear thus, 'Corban, my gold is for the Temple; Corban, my cattle are for the altar,' this could noways be dispensed with."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 16; vol. ii. p. 234.

and cummin,^a and have omitted the weightier matters of the Law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

Margin, anethon, dill.

^a but these might ye.

Vulg. judicium et misericordiam, et fidem; hæc oportuit facere, et illa non omittere.

24. Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat,^b and swallow a camel.

Vulg. Duces cæci, excolantes culicem, camelum autem glutientes.

The prophets remind the people again and again that God's object in the Law was to teach them right judgment; fair dealing between man and man; mercy to the poor and oppressed; and good faith in all their words and agreements. These the scribes and Pharisees shamelessly neglected, and busied themselves in enforcing the payment of trifling tithes; tithes that were not expressly commanded, though included under the general provisions of the Law.

The Pharisees' account of themselves was, that they were so accurate and minute in their observance of the Law that they went even beyond the letter, and enforced the payment of tithes which otherwise the people would have neglected. Our Saviour's account of them was that they neglected the chief duties for which the Law was ordained, and centred their attention on trifling points that might have been observed after the fulfilment of these duties. In their scrupulous attention to little things, which might have been neglected to the injury of no one, and in their neglect of the most important matters, which neglect brought death and destruction to themselves, their conduct was well expressed in their own proverb, "They strained out a gnat, and they swallowed down a camel."¹

The sixth woe is because they made purity before God to consist in purity of the body, and of external things, rather than in purity of the conscience. The meaning is the same, whether we explain the cup and platter metaphorically of man himself, or literally of the objects and utensils which he makes use of.²

The seventh woe is because they professed to be exceedingly anxious to avoid everything which, according to the Law, caused pollution before God. But they disregarded the pollution of the heart, which is the only real pollution, and spent all their anxiety to avoid the pollution of the body, which is only emblematic of the soul's pollution. They failed to see that the precautions in the Law against the pollution of the body were intended to teach them the enormity of the soul's pollution, and to lead them to avoid that.

25. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

Vulg. intus autem pleni estis rapina et immunditia.

26. Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

^a i. e. the outside of it.

Vulg. ut fiat id quod deforis est, mundum.

27. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres,³

¹ S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xliii. 24; vol. i. p. 1050.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xliii. 25; vol. viii. p. 427.

^a Ye pay tithe of mint, &c.—"This is the general rule about tithes: whatsoever serves for food, whatsoever is kept (that is, which is not of common right), and whatsoever grows out of the earth, shall be tithed.

"According to the Law, cattle, corn, and fruit were to be tithed. The way and measure of which, as the scribes teach, was this, 'Of bread-corn that is threshed and winnowed: 1. A fifth part is taken out for the priest: this was called the great offering. 2. A tenth part of the remainder belonged to the Levite: this was called the first tenth or tithe. 3. A tenth part again was to be taken out of the remainder, and was to be eaten at Jerusalem, or else redeemed: this was called the second tithe. 4. The Levite gives a tenth part out of his to the priest: this was called the title of the tithe.' These are handled at large in Peah, Demai, Maasereth, &c.

"The tithing of herbs is from the Rabbins. This tithing was aided by the scribes, and yet approved of by our Saviour, when He saith, 'Ye ought not to have left these undone.' Hear this, O thou who opposeth tithes. The tithing of herbs was only of ecclesiastical institution, and yet it hath the authority of our Saviour to confirm it, 'Ye ought not to have left these things undone,' and that partly on account of the justice of the thing itself and the agreeableness of it to law and reason, partly that it was commanded by the Council sitting in Moses' chair."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xliii. 23; vol. ii. p. 235.

^b Which strain at (οἱ δολιχοὶτες τὴν κάμηναν) a gnat. "What misconception may arise from a mere error of the press, appears from the oft-discussed phrase, 'Strain at a gnat,' where unquestionably our translators intended to retain the rendering of the earlier versions, 'Strain out a gnat,' and the existing text can only be explained as a misprint . . . It is strange that the obvious misprint 'strained at' should have survived the successive recensions of two centuries and a half."—CASON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' pp. 183-185.

"In proverbial allusions like this, it is usual in most languages to make the subject of the remark definite, and this is perfectly natural; for allusions suppose the thing alluded to to be known; and no allusions are more readily apprehended than those which are made to proverbs and fables. Perhaps, therefore, the spirit of the original would have been best preserved by translating τὸν κάμηναν, 'the gnat,' τὴν κάμηναν, 'the camel.'"—MIDDLETON, 'On the Greek Article,' p. 177.

^c Ye are like whited sepulchres—"Sepulchres are distinguished by the masters of the Jews into a deep sepulchre, which cannot be known to be a sepulchre, μνημεῖον ἄδηλον, graves that appear not (Luke xi. 44), and a painted sepulchre, such as were all those that were known to be seen. Our Saviour compares the scribes and Pharisees to both; to those in the place of Luke last mentioned, to these in the place before us, each upon a different reason.

"Concerning the whiting of sepulchres there are these traditions: 'In the fifteenth day of the month Adar they mend the ways, and the streets, and the common sewers, and perform those things which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

S*. indeed they appear.

Vulg. quæ aforis parent hominibus speciosa.

28. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

Vulg. Sic et vos aforis quidem parentis hominibus justi.

By the Law of Moses, he who touched a dead body was unclean for seven days (Numb. xix. 11). But the Jews did not gather from this that, if the touch of a dead body defiled a man and debarred him for seven days from rendering service unto God, that sin would also render them equally unclean in His sight. They did not draw this conclusion, but indulged in all kinds of sin and corruption of heart without remorse, at the very time they were showing such anxiety to avoid defilement from the touch of the dead. On the 15th of the month Adar (part of February and March), that is, before any one of the three festivals at which they were to present themselves before God at Jerusalem, men were sent out to whitewash the sepulchres that were scattered throughout Palestine; so that none might be defiled in their journey to Jerusalem by unwittingly passing over them. They use all these precautions to avoid defilement of the body from the dead, while they take no care to avoid the defilement of the heart through sin.

The eighth woe is pronounced on them because, while they profess to honour the prophets, they imitate those who slew them.

29. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

30. And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

31. Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets.

32. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers.

V*. And ye shall fill up the measure.

Vulg. Et vos implete mensuram patrum vestrorum.

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxiii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1630.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiii. 29; vol. ii. p. 889.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiii. 29; vol. vii. p. 172.

that concern the public, and they paint or mark the sepulchres.' The manner is described in Maasar Shenai, 'they paint the sepulchres with chalk, tempered and infused in water.' The Jerusalem Gemarists give the reason of it in abundance of places... The Glosses deliver both the reason and the manner of it thus, 'From the fifteenth day of the month Adar they began their search, and whosoever they found a sepulchre, whose whitening was washed off with the rain, they renewed it, that the unclean place might

33. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

Vulg. Serpentes genimina viperarum, quomodo fugietis a iudicio gehenne?

Those who pay honour to the righteous, and because they are righteous, themselves lay claim to the same character, and generally have this claim allowed. But in this the scribes and Pharisees are guilty of gross hypocrisy; and the proof of it was this. They are not imitating the deeds of the men whom they profess to honour, and whose tombs they garnish, but of the men who slew them. They are thus showing themselves, in every sense, the sons of murderers. They are the sons of murderers by natural descent, as they themselves confess; and they are the sons of murderers by imitation, as their conduct shows. Their fathers slew the prophets, and at this very time they are plotting how to bring about the death of Jesus, the Lord of the prophets.¹

The measure of iniquity which was required to draw down punishment upon the Jews, in the destruction of their city and the dispersion of their nation, was the death of Jesus Himself. This He foretells they will shortly accomplish. He foretells it in remarkable language, almost as if He were urging them to it. After that their punishment will not be long delayed.²

In putting Him to death they will prove themselves murderers, and the sons of murderers; vipers, and sprung from vipers (γεννηματα ἑχιδνῶν). They are still what the Baptist had at first called them (ch. iii. 7). His mission, and the teaching of Jesus, had failed to change them.

God's ways are not as man's. When man perceives that his benefits will be abused, he withholds them, not so God. Jesus had just described the natural malignity of the scribes and Pharisees, and had foretold that they will fill up the measure of their sins by putting Him and His disciples to death. Yet in spite of this, or perhaps rather in consequence of this (ὅτι τοῦτο), He declares that He will give them further proofs of His love, and will send them additional messengers, to instruct them in His laws, prophets and wise men and scribes. A few will listen to them, and the rest, by rejecting their counsel and by compassing their death, will convict themselves of utter impenitence, and prove themselves ripe for the judgment that will then overtake them.

34. ¶ Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of ² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxiv.; vol. ii. p. 360.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiii. 29; vol. i. p. 127.

be discerned, and the priests who were to eat the Truma might avoid it.' They marked the sepulchres with chalk in the likeness of bones, and mixing it with water, they washed the sepulchre all about with it, that thereby all might know that that place was unclean, and therefore to be avoided... They made marks like bones on the sepulchres with white chalk."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiii. 27; vol. ii. p. 235.

them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city :

S. V. scribas, some of them.

Vulg. prophetas, et sapientes, et scribas, et ex illis.

35. That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the Temple and the altar.*

S. omits son of Barachias.

Vulg. a sanguine Abel usque ad sanguinem Zacharie filii Barachiae.

36. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

In a passage of S. Luke (xi. 49), where he records a similar denunciation of punishment against the Jews by our Saviour, but not delivered at the same time, instead of the words "I will send," it is expressed, "The Wisdom of God hath said, I will send."

Scripture relates the death of two of those whom Jesus includes under the terms "prophets, wise men, and scribes," or, according to S. Luke, "prophets and Apostles," namely, that of Stephen (Acts vii.) and James (Acts xii. 2), and early ecclesiastical history records the death of many others.

Great difference of opinion has existed as to who Zacharias son of Barachias was. Because the prophet Zechariah was the son of Berechiah (Zech. i. 1), some have concluded that he was meant. But his death by violence, and in the Temple, is nowhere related. Many have held that Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, was meant, and a tradition is alluded to by several of the early writers¹ to the effect that he was put to death by the people in the Temple. But no historical account of the event is extant. Others have held that Jesus was not referring to an event which had already taken place, but was foretelling one still to come, and which happened more than thirty years after this, when, according to Josephus,² the people rose up against Zacharias the son of Baruch, and slew him in the middle of the Temple (ἐν μέσῳ ἱερῶς), under the plea that he was betraying them to the Romans. But the most probable opinion, and that supported by the best authority,³ is that Zacharias the son of Jehoiada is the person here referred to, and whose death is thus related: "And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, He hath also forsaken you. And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord. Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, 'The Lord look upon it, and require it'" (2 Chron. xxiv. 20-22).

In terms of the utmost tenderness and compassion, Jesus pours forth His sorrow for Jerusalem, for her rejection of His offers of succour, and for the punishment that would in a short time overtake them. By the affection of a parent bird for her brood, and by her power to shield them from approaching danger, He illustrates, but does not thereby limit, His love for the Jews, and His willingness to protect them from evil.

37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

Vulg. quoties volui congregare filios tuos.

38. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

V. omits desolate.

Vulg. Ecce relinquitur vobis domus vestra deserta.

39. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord.

By their "house" some⁴ have thought that He meant the Temple itself, others⁵ the city of Jerusalem, or their country

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. iii. p. 1631.

S. Epiphanius, Haeresis (de Gnosticis), xxvi. 12; vol. i. p. 349.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. i. p. 128.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. ii. p. 893.

² Josephus, Bell. Jud. iv. 5, 4; vol. ii. p. 1184.

——— Whiston's Trans. Wars, iv. 5, 4; p. 394.

³ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. vii. p. 175.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. iii. p. 101.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxiv. p. 170.

[Maldonatus,

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. i. p. 322.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiii. 35; vol. viii. p. 430.

See also Lardner, 'Credibility of the Gospel History,' vol. i.

p. 421.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiii. 38; vol. vii. p. 175.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiii. 38; vol. i. p. 128.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiii. 38; vol. ii. p. 895.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiii. 38; vol. i. p. 323.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xc. p. 198.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiii. 38; vol. viii. p. 432.

that sold and bought in the Temple' (ἐν τῷ ἱερῶς). In the first case, for τῷ ναῷ S. Luke (xi. 51) uses τῷ οἴκῳ, 'the house,' the building which is, as it were, the abode of the Divine Presence; but our English translators have boldly rendered even τῷ οἴκῳ by the Temple.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 79.

* Between the Temple and the altar. "The word Temple in the A. V. represents both ναὸς, the inner shrine or sanctuary, and ἱερὸς, the whole of the sacred precincts. Thus in the English Version an utter confusion of localities results from a construction of two such passages as Matt. xxiii. 35, 'Whom ye slew between the Temple (τῷ ναῷ) and the altar,' and Matt. xxv. 12, 'Them in general, which in a short time would be laid waste by the Romans.

Considerable uncertainty exists as to the time to which Jesus alludes in the words "Ye shall not see Me," and the least probable explanation appears to be that which refers it to the time when they would eat the Paschal Lamb, and when, in the Psalms of the Hallel, they would say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord" (Ps. cxviii. 26). In this sense these words would merely account for His absence from the Temple and from Jerusalem on the day that intervened between the time when He spake these words and the time when they would eat the Paschal supper; that is, from Tuesday evening until Thursday evening.

Others,¹ and with greater probability, explain these words of His second coming, when He, the Son of Man, shall appear as their Judge, and when those who now despise and reject

Him shall be compelled to acknowledge Him as the Messiah, the Son of God. By the way in which the Evangelist connects these words, "For I say unto you," &c., he represents Jesus as declaring that the withdrawal of His presence from them was the cause of the desolation of their house.

S. Matthew omits the incident of the widow casting in two mites into the treasury, recorded by S. Mark and S. Luke, and which took place this afternoon before He left the Temple.

The Temple in which for so many hundreds of years God had revealed His presence to His people—which, for the last thirty years, God Incarnate had frequented, year by year, for the purpose of fulfilling all the Law—and which, for the last three years, had been the constant scene of His teaching, Jesus now leaves for ever.* This was on the Tuesday before the Crucifixion.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 75; vol. iii. p. 1149.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxiv.; vol. ii. p. 365.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiii. 39; vol. i. p. 128.

[Euthymius,

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiii. 39; vol. ii. p. 897.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xc. p. 199.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiii. 39; vol. i. p. 323.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiii. 39; vol. viii. p. 432.

* Jesus withdraws from the Temple.—"We can scarcely doubt that the words of renunciation of Matt. xxiii. 37-39, were the last uttered by our Lord within the Temple-courts. Accordingly the incident of the widow's mites must be placed before the voes. We seem to be able to trace our Lord's retiring footsteps from the Women's Court to the Court of the Gentiles, to the Cloisters, to the Gate, and to Olivet."—M'CLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 592.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

The Temple.—"1. Now this Temple, as I have already said, was built upon a strong hill. At first the plain at the top was hardly sufficient for the holy house and the altar, for the ground about it was very uneven, and like a precipice: but when King Solomon, who was the person that built the Temple, had built a wall to it on its east side, there was then added one cloister founded on a bank cast up for it, and on the other parts the holy house stood naked: but in future ages the people added new banks, and the hill became a larger plain. They then broke down the wall on the north side, and took in as much as sufficed afterward for the compass of the entire Temple: and when they had built walls on three sides of the Temple round about, from the bottom of the hill, and had performed a work that was greater than could be hoped for (in which work long ages were spent by them, as well as all their sacred treasures were exhausted, which were still replenished by those tributes which were sent to God from the whole habitable earth), they then encompassed their upper courts with cloisters, as well as they [afterward] did the lowest [court of the] Temple. The lowest part of this was erected to the height of three hundred cubits, and in some places more; yet did not the entire depth of the foundations appear, for they brought earth and filled up the valleys, as being desirous to make them on a level with the narrow streets of the city; wherein they made use of stones of forty cubits in magnitude: for the great plenty of money they then had, and the liberality of the people, made this attempt of theirs to succeed to an incredible degree; and what could not be so much as hoped for as ever to be accomplished, was by perseverance and length of time brought to perfection.

"2. Now, for the works that were above these foundations, these were not unworthy of such foundations; for all the cloisters were double, and the pillars to them belonging were twenty-five cubits in height, and supported the cloisters. These pillars were of one entire stone, each of them, and that stone was white marble; and the roofs were adorned with cedar, curiously graven. The natural magnificence and excellent polish, and the harmony of the joints in these cloisters, afforded a prospect that was very remarkable; nor was it on the outside adorned with any work of the painter or engraver. The cloisters [of the outmost court] were in breadth thirty cubits, while the entire compass of it was, by measure, six furlongs, including the tower of Antania; those entire courts that were exposed to the air were laid with stones of all sorts. When you go through these [first] cloisters unto the second [court of the] Temple, there was a partition made of stone all round, whose height was three cubits: its construction was very elegant; upon it stood pillars, at equal distances from one another, declaring the law of purity, some in Greek and some in Roman letters, that 'no foreigner should go within that sanctuary,' for that second [court of the] Temple was called the Sanctuary, and was ascended to by fourteen steps from the first court. This court was four-square, and had a wall about it peculiar to itself; the height of its buildings, although it was on the outside forty cubits, was hidden by the steps, and on the inside that height was but twenty-five cubits; for it being built over against a higher part of the hill with steps, it was no farther to be entirely discerned within, being covered by the hill itself. Beyond these fourteen steps there was the distance of ten cubits: this was all plain, whence there were other steps, each of five cubits apiece, that led to the gates, which gates on the north and south sides were eight, on each of those sides four, and of necessity two on the east; for since there was a partition built for the women on that side, as the proper place wherein they were to worship, there was a necessity of a second gate for them: this gate was cut out of its wall, over against the first gate. There was also on the other sides one southern and one northern gate, through which was a passage into the Court of the Women; for as to the other gates, the women were not allowed to pass through them, nor when they went through their own gate could they go beyond their own wall. This place was allotted to the women of our own country, and of other countries, provided they were of the same nation, and that equally: the western part of this court had no gate at all, but the wall was built entire on that side; but then the cloisters which were betwixt the gates, extended from the wall inward, before the chambers, for they were supported by very fine and large pillars. These cloisters were single, and, excepting their magnitude, were no way inferior to those of the lower court.

"3. Now nine of these gates were on every side covered over with gold and silver, as were the jambs of their doors and their lintels; but there was one gate that was without [the inward court of] the holy house, which was of Corinthian brass, and greatly excelled those that were only covered over with silver and gold. Each gate had two doors, whose height was severally thirty cubits, and their breadth fifteen. However, they had large spaces within of thirty cubits, and had on each side rooms, and those, both in breadth and in length, built like towers, and their height was above forty cubits. Two pillars did also support these rooms, and were in circumference twelve cubits. Now the magnitudes of the other gates were equal one to another; but that over the Corinthian gate, which opened on the east over against the gate of the holy house itself, was much larger: for its height was fifty cubits, and its doors were forty cubits; and it was adorned after a most costly manner, as having much richer and thicker plates of silver and gold upon them than the other. These nine gates had that silver and gold poured upon them by Alexander, the father of Tiberius. Now there were fifteen steps, which led away from the wall of the Court of the Women to this greater gate; whereas those that led thither from the other gates were five steps shorter.

"4. As to the holy house itself, which was placed in the midst [of the inmost court], that most sacred part of the Temple, it was ascended to by twelve steps; and in front its height and its breadth were equal, and each a hundred cubits, though it was behind forty cubits narrower: for on its front it had what may be styled 'shoulders' on each side, that passed twenty cubits farther. Its first gate was seventy cubits high, and twenty-five cubits broad; but this gate had no doors, for it represented the universal visibility of heaven, and that it cannot be excluded from any place. Its front was covered with gold all over, and through it the first part of the house, that was more inward, did all of it appear; which, as it was very large, so did all the parts about the more inward gate appear to shine to those that saw them: but then, as the entire house was divided into two parts within, it was only the first part of it that was open to our view. Its height extended all along to ninety cubits in height, and its length was fifty cubits, and its breadth twenty; but that gate which was at this end of the first part of the house was, as we have already observed, all over covered with gold, as was its whole wall about it: it had also golden vines above it, from which clusters of grapes hung as tall as a man's height: but then this house, as it was divided into two parts, the inner part was lower than the appearance of the outer, and had golden doors of fifty-five cubits' altitude, and sixteen in breadth; but before these doors there was a veil of equal largeness with the doors. It was a Babylonian curtain, embroidered with blue, and fine linen, and scarlet, and purple, and of a contexture that was truly wonderful. Nor was this mixture of colours without its mystical interpretation, but was a kind of image of the universe: for by the scarlet there seemed to be enigmatically signified fire; by the fine flax the earth; by the blue the air; and by the purple the sea; two of them having their colours the foundation of this resemblance; but the fine flax and the purple have their own origin for that foundation, the earth producing the one, and the sea the other. This curtain had also embroidered upon it all that was mystical in the heavens, excepting that of the [twelve] signs, representing living creatures.

"5. When any person entered into the Temple, its floor received them. This part of the Temple therefore was in height sixty cubits, and its length the same; whereas its breadth was but twenty cubits: but still that sixty cubits in length was divided again, and the first part of it cut off at forty cubits, and had in it three things that were very wonderful and famous among all mankind—the candlestick, the table [of shewbread], and the altar of incense. Now, the seven lamps signified the seven planets; for so many there were springing out of the candlestick. Now, the twelve loaves that were upon the table signified the circle of the zodiac and the year; but the altar of incense, by its thirteen kinds of sweet-smelling spices with which the sea replenished it, signified that God is the possessor of all things that are both in the uninhabitable and habitable parts of the earth, and that they are all to be dedicated to His use. But the inmost part of the Temple of all was of twenty cubits. This was also separated from the outer part by a veil. In this there was nothing at all. It was inaccessible and inviolable, and not to be seen by any; and was called the Holy of Holies. Now, about the sides of the lower part of the Temple there were little houses, with passages out of one into another; there were a great many of them, and they were of three stories high; there were also entrances on each side into them from the gate of the Temple. But the superior part of the Temple had no such little houses any farther, because the Temple was there narrower and forty cubits higher, and of a smaller body than the lower parts of it. Thus we collect that the whole height, including the sixty cubits from the floor, amounted to a hundred cubits.

"6. Now the outward face of the Temple in its front wanted nothing that was likely to surprise either men's minds or their eyes; for it was covered all over with plates of gold of great weight, and, at the first rising of the sun, reflected back a very fiery splendour, and made those who forced themselves to look upon it to turn their eyes away, just as they would have done at the sun's own rays. But this Temple appeared to strangers, when they were at a distance, like a mountain covered with snow; for as to those parts of it that were not gilt, they were exceeding white. On its top it had spikes with sharp points to prevent any pollution of it by birds sitting upon it. Of its stones, some of them were forty-five cubits in length, five in height, and six in breadth. Before this Temple stood the altar, fifteen cubits high, and equal both in length and breadth; each of which dimensions was fifty cubits. The figure it was built in was a square, and it had corners like horns; and the passage up to it was by an insensible acclivity. It was formed without any iron tool, nor did any such iron tool so much as touch it at any time. There was a wall of partition, about a cubit in height, made of fine stones, and so as to be grateful to the sight; this encompassed the holy house and the altar, and kept the people that were on the outside off from the priests."—Josephus, Bell. Jud. v. 5, 1; Whiston's Transl., p. 716, &c.

"Let us take the opportunity of stating our opinion that Josephus's testimony may generally be relied upon. It was for a long time the fashion to hold up his exaggerations to ridicule. Thus, when he spoke of the height of the wall as being such as to make the head reel, travellers remembered the fifty feet of wall or so at the present day and laughed. But Captain Warren has found that the wall was in parts as much as 20 feet high. Surely a man may be excused for feeling giddy at looking down a depth of 200 feet. Whenever Josephus speaks from personal knowledge he appears to us to be accurate and trustworthy."—BESANT and PALMER'S 'History of Jerusalem,' p. 19.

"The skill, the art, the mighty toil, that have been devoted to the adornment and to the desecration of this most ancient place of worship, have been of extraordinary magnitude. The grandest legacy of Egyptian antiquity, the Great Pyramid, demanded, indeed, a larger amount of naked human labour; but in Moriah there is a compulsion of the features of nature itself to the service of the builder. In actual bulk, the Great Pyramid is to the Temple rock as five to nine, if we descend but as far as the sills of the five double gates of the Mountain of the House. If we carry the comparison down to the level at which the lowest foundation of the walls is inlaid in the rock at the angles of the enclosure, the bulk is three times that of the Great Pyramid. The cubic contents of the masons' work may not amount to a tenth part of that piled up by Soudhis. But the hill has been honeycombed with chambers and galleries; and the declining part to the south covered with vaults and arches, to which Gizeh can show no parallel. No merely artificial structure could have so successfully resisted the resolute efforts of the two greatest military nations of the ancient world to destroy its existence and to obliterate its memory. No other monument, long surviving the era of the Asiatic and Italian power, can ever, like the Noble Sanctuary, mark by its very ruins the successive periods of its glory and its fall.

"If we regard not so much the evidence of the labour devoted to the work of the Temple as the effect produced on the mind by its apparent magnitude, we may suggest the following comparisons. The length of the eastern wall of the Sanctuary is rather more than double that of one side of the Great Pyramid. Its height, from the foundation on the rock at the south, and near the northern angles, was nearly a third of that of the Egyptian structure. If to this great height of 152 feet of solid wall be added the descent of 114 feet to the bed of the Kedron, and the further elevation of 160 feet attained by the pinnacle of the Temple porch, we have a total height of 426 feet, which is only fifty-nine feet less than that of the Great Pyramid. The area of the face of the eastern wall is more than double that of one side of the pyramid. Thus the magnitude of the Noble Sanctuary of Jerusalem far exceeded that of any other temple in the world. Two amphitheatres of the size of the Coliseum would have stood within its colossal girdle, and left room to spare. The Coliseum is said to have seated 87,000 spectators, and accommodated 22,000 more in its arena and passages. For such a number to have been crammed within its circle, the space for each person must have been limited to seventeen inches by twenty inches. Allowing two cubits each way, or four square cubits for each worshipper in the Temple, the Sanctuary would have contained 30,000; the Chel, excluding the Priest's Court, 26,000 more; and there would yet have been room in the Great Court and the cloisters to make the total reach to more than 210,000."—'Edinburgh Review,' January 1873, p. 17.

"A saying from the Rabbinical writings is, 'He that never saw the Temple of Herod never saw a fine building.'"—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. ii. p. 240.

Julian's attempt to rebuild the Temple.—"The vain and ambitious mind of Julian might aspire to restore the ancient glory of the Temple of Jerusalem. As the Christians were firmly persuaded that a sentence of everlasting destruction had been pronounced against the whole fabric of the Mosaic law, the Imperial sophist would have converted the success of his undertaking into a specious argument against the faith of prophecy and the truth of revelation. He was displeased with the spiritual worship of the synagogue; but he approved the institutions of Moses, who had not disdained to adopt many of the rites and ceremonies of Egypt. The local and national deity of the Jews was sincerely adored by a polytheist who desired only to multiply the number of the gods; and such was the appetite of Julian for bloody sacrifice, that his emulation might be excited by the piety of Solomon, who had offered at the feast of the dedication twenty-two thousand oxen and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep. These considerations might influence his designs; but the prospect of an immediate and important advantage would not suffer the impatient monarch to expect the remote and uncertain event of the Persian war. He resolved to erect, without delay, on the commanding eminence of Moriah, a stately temple, which might eclipse the splendour of the Church of the Resurrection on the adjacent hill of Calvary; to establish an order of priests, whose interested zeal would detect the arts and resist the ambition of their Christian rivals; and to invite a numerous colony of Jews, whose stern fanaticism would be always prepared to second, and even to anticipate, the hostile measures of the Pagan Government. Among the friends of the Emperor (if the names of emperor and friend are not incompatible) the first place was assigned, by Julian himself, to the virtuous and learned Alypius. The humanity of Alypius was tempered by severe justice and manly fortitude; and while he exercised his abilities in the civil administration of Britain, he imitated, in his poetical compositions, the harmony and softness of the odes of Sappho. This minister, to whom Julian communicated, without reserve, his most careless levities and his most serious counsels, received an extraordinary commission to restore, in its pristine beauty, the Temple of Jerusalem; and the diligence of Alypius required and obtained the strenuous support of the governor of Palestine. At the call of their great deliverer, the Jews from all the provinces of the empire assembled on the holy mountain of their fathers; and their insolent triumph alarmed and exasperated the Christian inhabitants of Jerusalem. The desire of rebuilding the Temple has in every age been the ruling passion of the children of Israel. In this propitious moment the men forgot their avarice, and the women their delicacy; spades and pickaxes of silver were provided by the vanity of the rich, and the rubbish was transported in mantles of silk and purple. Every purse was opened in liberal contributions, every hand claimed a share in the pious labour; and the commands of a great monarch were executed by the enthusiasm of a whole people. Yet, on this occasion, the joint efforts of power and enthusiasm were unsuccessful; and the ground of the Jewish Temple, which is now covered by a Mahometan mosque, still continued to exhibit the same edifying spectacle of ruin and desolation. Perhaps the absence and death of the Emperor, and the new maxims of a Christian reign, might explain the interruption of an arduous work, which was attempted only in the last six months of the life of Julian. But the Christians entertained a natural and pious expectation that in this memorable contest the honour of religion would be vindicated by some signal miracle. An earthquake, a whirlwind, and a fiery eruption, which overturned and scattered the new foundations of the Temple, are attested, with some variations, by contemporary and respectable evidence. This public event is described by Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, in an epistle to the Emperor Theodosius, which must provoke the severe animadversion of the Jews; by the eloquent Chrysostom, who might appeal to the memory of the elder part of his congregation at Antioch; and by Gregory Nazianzen, who published his account of the miracle before the expiration of the same year. The last of these writers has boldly declared that this preternatural event was not disputed by the infidels; and his assertion, strange as it may seem, is confirmed by the unexceptionable testimony of Ammianus Marcellinus. The philosophic soldier, who loved the virtues without adopting the prejudices of his master, has recorded, in his judicious and candid history of his own times, the extraordinary obstacles which interrupted the restoration of the Temple of Jerusalem. 'Whilst Alypius, assisted by the governor of the province, urged with vigour and diligence the execution of the work, horrible balls of fire, breaking out near the foundations, with frequent and reiterated attacks, rendered the place, from time to time, inaccessible to the scorched and blasted workmen; and the victorious element continuing in this manner, obstinately and resolutely bent, as it were, to drive them to a distance, the undertaking was abandoned.' Such authority should satisfy a believing, and must astonish an incredulous mind. Yet a philosopher may still require the original evidence of impartial and intelligent spectators. At this important crisis any singular accident of nature would assume the appearance, and produce the effects, of a real prodigy. This glorious deliverance would be speedily improved and magnified by the pious art of the clergy of Jerusalem, and the active credulity of the Christian world; and, at the distance of twenty years, a Roman historian, careless of theological disputes, might adorn his work with the specious and splendid miracle."—GIBBON, 'Decline and Fall,' ch. xxiii. vol. iii. p. 158.

See also Williams, 'Holy City,' vol. i. p. 254.

CHAPTER XXIV.

[1. Christ foretelleth the destruction of the Temple: 3. what and how great calamities shall be before it: 29. the signs of His coming to judgment. 36. And because that day and hour is unknown, 42. we ought to watch like good servants, expecting every moment our master's coming.]

[Vulg. Produnt Templi eversionem, monentque ut cavent a venturis sollicitudinibus, futura prænuntians bella ac persecutiones: surgunt pseudochristi et pseudopropheta: de adventu Filii hominis præcedentibus signis in sole, luna et stellis: omnibus ignitum dicit Christus diem judicii: et de fidei ac malo sermo: propter quod docet semper esse vigilandum.]

As was His custom, Jesus went out of Jerusalem towards evening, to spend the night either on Mount Olivet or in Bethany.

JESUS FORETELLS THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE.

S. MATTHEW xxiv. 1, 2.

S. MARK xiii. 1, 2.

S. LUKE xxi. 5, 6.

1 And Jesus went out,
and departed from the Temple:
and His disciples came to Him
for to shew Him the buildings
of the Temple.

1 And as He went out of the Temple,
one of His disciples saith unto Him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

5 And as some spake
of the Temple,
how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts,
He said,

2 And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things?

2 And Jesus answering said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings?

6 As for these things which ye behold,
the days will come, in the which

verily I say unto you,
There shall not be left here
one stone upon another,
that shall not be thrown down.

there shall not be left
one stone upon another,
that shall not be thrown down.

there shall not be left
one stone upon another,
that shall not be thrown down.

1. And Jesus went out, and departed from the Temple: and His disciples came to Him for to shew Him the buildings of the Temple.

these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.^a

S.V. went out from the Temple and departed.
Vulg. Et egressus Jesus de Templo, ibat.

S.V. But He answered and said unto them,
Vulg. Ipse autem respondens, dixit illis: Videtis hæc omnia?

2. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all

It is plain from the question which the disciples ask in the

^a There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that, &c.—The following is a convenient summary of the account which Josephus (Bell. Jud. v. 7, 3, &c.) gives of the capture of Jerusalem. 'To the forces of Titus, advancing, as military reasons rendered advisable, from the north, three walls were opposed. They protected Antonia, the Temple, and the upper city. The first of these, the wall of Agrippa, was taken on the fifteenth day of the siege, and was then levelled with the ground; as were the buildings yet standing in the north quarter of the city. The second wall, corresponding to that erected in the third and fourth centuries of the Jewish occupation of the site, was taken on the twentieth day. The third wall was turned, and ceased to be a line of defence when, on the ninety-second day, Titus became master of the courts of the Temple. On the ninety-seventh day, the Romans burnt the lower city, as far as Siloam. On the 102nd day they erected banks against the west side of the upper city, by the royal palace; and on the 7th of Elul, the 119th day of the siege, this western wall was overthrown, and resistance was at an end.'—'Edinburgh Review,' January 1873, p. 11.

"The picture which Josephus (B. J. vi. 9, 3) has given us of the siege and overthrow of Jerusalem by Titus, is drawn in gloomy colours; and presents a fearful succession of disease, famine, suffering, and slaughter. The Romans had besieged the city at a time when multitudes of the Jews were collected in it to celebrate the Passover. First came pestilence, and then famine, and the sword; so that, according to the same historian, there perished during the siege not less than eleven hundred thousand persons; while ninety-seven thousand more were made captives. The devastation of the Temple and city was terrific; and in a sense complete. The former was burned with fire; and the walls of both, with the exceptions hereafter to be mentioned, were levelled to the ground; so that a passer-by would not have supposed that the place had ever been inhabited. . . .

"For half a century after its destruction, there is no mention of Jerusalem in history.

"The Emperor's (Adrian's) removal from the East, apparently about A.D. 132, was the signal for the Jews to break out into open revolt. The long-smothered embers of hatred and discontent now third verse, that it was their conviction that the Temple would last as long as the world, and that these would come to an end at the same time. What therefore would their dismay and astonishment when they heard Jesus say, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate" (xxiii. 38). For by their "house" they would most probably understand the Temple itself; but if they understood Jerusalem, this would include the Temple. As if then to enlist His sympathy and commiseration in behalf of the Temple, the dearest object of their national pride and affection, and thus to avert or delay its destruction, they point out to Him the buildings of the Temple.¹ They make no attempt to restrain their own feelings of admiration for it. S. Mark represents them as saying to Him, "See what manner of stones and what buildings (ποταπὸι λίθοι καὶ ποταπὸι οἰκοδομαὶ) are here!" and S. Luke as showing Him how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts.

Glowing and enthusiastic as are the various descriptions of the Temple which Josephus has left, recent excavations amongst its ruins seem to have impressed men with an idea of its grandeur, size, general magnificence, and skill in the adaptation of its various parts to each other, which even the descriptions of Josephus had failed to impart. It is now generally admitted that the world has never seen a building that can be compared with the Temple at Jerusalem in the days of the Herods, either in point of size, cost, or splendour. The buildings of modern times shrink into insignificance when compared with those of ancient Rome. But ancient Rome had no building to be compared with the Temple; it had none that would even contain half as many people.

But holy and grand as the Temple was in the eyes of the Jews, God had, on the very day of its dedication, threatened destruction to it in case they should be rebellious against Him, saying, "Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them: and this house, which I have hallowed for My name, will I cast out of My sight" (1 Kings ix. 7). And later, through the prophet Micah He had foretold its utter destruction, "Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest" (iii. 12).

In forty years after our Saviour's prediction of the destruction of the Temple it was literally fulfilled, and within a hundred years so complete was the ruin that the ploughshare passed over the spot to obliterate all traces of its existence.

The Jewish historian Josephus² carefully notes that the day on which the sacrifice called the Daily Sacrifice failed,

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. iii. p. 1639.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxv.; vol. ii. p. 370.

The phylact, in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. i. p. 129.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. ii. p. 897.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. i. p. 1052. [Jansenius, Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxiii. p. 381.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. i. p. 324.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 1; vol. viii. p. 434.

² Josephus, Bell. Jud. vi. 2, 1; vol. ii. p. 1266.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, vi. 2, 1; p. 743.

burst forth into a flame, which overran and consumed both the land and the people with terrible desolation. The leader of this war was the celebrated though mysterious Barcochba, 'Son of a Star.' His success at first was great; the Jews of Palestine all flocked to his standard; the Christians also were tampered with, but refusing to join him were afterwards treated with horrid cruelty. He appears to have soon got possession of Jerusalem. This is evident from the fact of the subsequent recapture of the city by the Romans; and it would seem also, that coins (some of which are still extant) were struck by him in the Holy City. The Romans at first made light of the rebellion, and disregarded the efforts of this despised people; and it was not until the spirit of revolt had spread among the Jews throughout the empire, and the whole world (as Dio Cassius expresses it) was moved, that Adrian awoke from his apathy. The rebel Jews had already got possession of fifty fortified places and nine hundred and eighty-five important villages. The Emperor now collected troops from various quarters, and took measures to prosecute the war in earnest. He despatched his best officers into the revolted country; and recalling his most distinguished general, Julius Severus, from Britain, sent him to take charge of the war in the East. The struggle was long and desperate. The Jews were numerous, and fought with the bravery of despair. Julius attacked their smaller parties; cut off their supplies of provisions; and thus was able, more slowly indeed, but also with less danger, to wear out their strength, and finally to destroy them.

"It is singular that the siege and capture of Jerusalem by the Romans during this war is nowhere described, and only once mentioned, by a contemporary writer. The historian Appian in the same century gives it a passing notice; but all we know further is from the slight mention of it by Eusebius and later authors, the earliest of whom wrote two centuries after the event. The writings of the Rabbins, the repositories of Jewish tradition, are silent as to the siege, though they speak as to the desecration of the site of the Temple. Yet the various testimonies, although scattered, are too numerous and definite to admit of doubt as to the fact. Jerusalem must naturally have been one of the chief points of Jewish defence, and the possession of it one of the main objects of the Roman policy. Of the circumstances of the siege and capture we have no account. It was not now, as under Titus, the scene of the last great struggle of the war; for this took place in the siege of the strong but now unknown city of Bethor, described as situated not far from Jerusalem. Here the bloody tragedy was brought to a close, in the eighteenth year of Adrian, A.D. 135. Thousands and thousands of the captive Jews were sold as slaves: first at the terebith near Hebron, where of old the tent of their forefather Abraham had stood, and where there had long been a frequented market; afterwards at Gaza; and then the remainder were transported in ships as slaves to Egypt. By a decree of Adrian, the Jews were henceforth forbidden even to approach their Holy City; and guards were stationed to prevent them from making the attempt."—ROBINSON'S 'Bibl. Researches,' ii. 1-7.

"After the final destruction of the Temple by the arms of Titus and Adrian, a ploughshare was drawn over the consecrated ground, as a sign of perpetual interdiction. Sion was deserted, and the vacant space of the lower city was filled with the public and private edifices of the Elia colony, which spread themselves over the adjacent hill of Calvary."—GIBBON'S 'Decline and Fall,' ch. xxiii. vol. iii. p. 155.

"Frequent as were the sieges of the city in the olden days, they have been more frequent since. Titus took Jerusalem; Barcochbas took it; Julius Severus took it; Chosroes, Heraclius, Omar, the Chazermians, Godfrey, Saladin, Frederick, all took it by turns—all after hard fighting, and with much slaughter."—BESANT and PALMER'S 'History of Jerusalem,' p. 2.

and was not offered to God for want of men to offer it, was the 17th of the month Panemus (July), A.D. 70, and that within a month from this time the Temple was destroyed. It is probable that by His words in the second verse, and elsewhere in this chapter, Jesus intended to foretell not only that the Temple should be utterly destroyed, but also that it should never be rebuilt. Nor is any fact in history better attested than that the only attempt to rebuild the Temple after its destruction by Titus, namely the attempt by Julian the Apostate, A.D. 363, proved an ignominious failure.¹

The Jews of our Saviour's time were exceedingly tender on this subject. The slightest hint of the destruction of their Temple brought down their anger. One of the accusations brought against S. Stephen was that he had said that Jesus would destroy the Temple (Acts vi. 14). When, therefore, some of the disciples wished to inquire of Him more minutely respecting this, they do so secretly, apart from the people, and perhaps even from the rest of the Apostles. We learn from S. Mark that it was Peter, James and John, and Andrew, who made this inquiry.

The disciples ask Jesus two things—the time when Jerusalem shall be destroyed, and the time when the world shall end and He shall come to judgment. They also ask Him what will be the signs that shall go before these two events, indiscriminately: as though the end of Jerusalem and the end of the world should take place at the same time. Jesus answers their question much in the way in which they ask it. He first gives the signs that will precede both these events—signs that will alike go before the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world (verses 5–14). He then gives signs that would precede the destruction of Jerusalem only (verses 15–28), and He then gives signs which will precede the end of the world only (verses 28–51).²

Such is the general classification of this chapter as held by some of the early writers. Lightfoot, forming an independent opinion, chiefly from his intimate acquaintance with the Rabbinical writings, has come to a different conclusion. He looks upon the whole of this chapter, with the exception of the last few verses, as relating to the destruction of the Temple and the city of Jerusalem, and as referring to the end of the world only so far as the destruction of Jerusalem is a type of the end of the world. That the destruction of Jerusalem is here represented as the destruction of the whole world, and the Messiah's coming in judgment upon her as His coming in judgment upon the whole world, he considers no objection to this view; partly because the Jews were so accustomed to this that they would at once recognize His meaning, and partly because the use of such language in such sense is also warranted by the usage of Scripture in other places. But the former is the interpretation that is most generally given to this chapter.

THE PROPHECY WHICH HE DELIVERED ON MOUNT OLIVET TO FOUR OF HIS DISCIPLES.

S. MATTHEW xxiv. 3–14.

S. MARK xiii. 3–13.

S. LUKE xxi. 7–19.

3 And as He sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto Him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?

4 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

5 For many shall come in My Name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

6 And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled:

3 And as He sat upon the Mount of Olives over against the Temple, Peter and James and John and Andrew asked Him privately,

4 Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5 And Jesus answering them began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you:

6 for many shall come in My Name, saying, I am Christ;

and shall deceive many.

7 And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled:

7 And they asked Him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?

8 And He said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in My Name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near:

9 go ye not therefore after them. But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified:

¹ S. Chrysostom, de S. Babyla, &c.
S. Gregory Nazian. Orat. ii. 4, Contra Julianum; vol. i. p. 668.
Theodoret, Ecclesiast. Hist. iii. 20; vol. iii. p. 464.

Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. xxiii.; vol. iii. p. 160.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 7: vol. viii. p. 435.

S. MATTHEW xxiv.

for all these things must come to pass,
but the end is not yet.

- 7 For nation shall rise against nation,
and kingdom against kingdom :
and there shall be
famines, and pestilences,
and earthquakes,
in divers places.

- 8 All these are
the beginning of sorrows.

- 9 Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted,

and shall kill you :
and ye shall be hated of all nations
for My Name's sake.

10 And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11 And many false prophets shall rise,
and shall deceive many.

12 And because iniquity shall abound,
the love of many shall wax cold.

13 But he that shall endure
unto the end,
the same shall be saved.

14 And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations ; and then shall the end come.

S. MARK xiii.

for such things must needs be :
but the end shall not be yet.

- 8 For nation shall rise against nation,
and kingdom against kingdom :
and there shall be earthquakes

in divers places,
and there shall be
famines and troubles :

- 9 these are
the beginnings of sorrows.
But take heed to yourselves :

for they shall deliver you up to councils :
and in the synagogues
ye shall be beaten :
and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings
for My sake,
for a testimony against them.

- 10 And the Gospel must first be published among all nations.

- 11 But when they shall lead you,
and deliver you up,
take no thought beforehand
what ye shall speak,
neither do ye premeditate :
but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye : for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost.

- 12 Now the brother shall betray the brother to death,
and the father the son ;
and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

- 13 And ye shall be hated
of all men for My Name's sake :

but he that shall endure
unto the end,
the same shall be saved.

S. LUKE xxi.

for these things must first come to pass ;
but the end is not by and by.

- 10 Then said He unto them, Nation shall rise against nation,
and kingdom against kingdom :

- 11 and great earthquakes shall be in divers places,
and
famines, and pestilences ;
and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

- 12 But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues,
and into prisons,

being brought before kings and rulers
for My Name's sake.

- 13 And it shall turn to you for a testimony.

- 14 Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before
what ye shall answer :

15 For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

- 16 And ye shall be betrayed
both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends ;

and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

- 17 And ye shall be hated
of all men for My Name's sake.

18 But there shall not an hair of your head perish.

19 In your patience possess ye your souls.

3. ¶ And as He sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto Him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?

4. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

5. For many shall come in My Name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

6. And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet.

S.V. for it must come.
Vulg. oportet enim sic fieri.

7. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.^a

S. shall be earthquakes and famines in: V. shall be famines and earthquakes in.

8. All these are the beginning of sorrows.

Vulg. Hæc autem omnia initia sunt dolorum.

9. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for My Name's sake.

S. of the nations.

Vulg. Tunc tradent vos in tribulationem, et occident vos; et eritis odio omnibus gentibus propter nomen meum.

10. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

S. and shall deliver up one another to tribulation: S. omits and shall hate one another.

Vulg. Et invicem tradent, et odio habebunt invicem.

11. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many.

12. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.^b

^a S. Augustine, Epist. ad Hesychium, cxcix. (alias 80) 9; vol. ii. p. 144.

^b There shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, &c.—Josephus ('Bell. Jud.' vi. 5. 3) relates at great length many supernatural signs that appeared before the siege began. These are more briefly expressed in the following passage:—"As in all times of general excitement, signs were reported to have been seen in the heavens, and portents, which however might be read both ways, were observed. A star shaped like a sword, and a comet, stood over the city for a whole year. A great light had shone on the altar at the ninth hour of the night. A heifer, led up to be sacrificed, brought forth a lamb in the midst of the Temple. The eastern gate of the inner court, so heavy that it required twenty men to move it, flew open of its own accord in the night. Chariots and troops of soldiers in armour were seen running about in the clouds, and surrounding cities. When the

13. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14. And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

In answer to their request, Jesus specifies the signs that shall precede His coming, sufficiently to put them on their guard against surprise and deception, but not sufficiently to satisfy any feeling of curiosity. There will be convulsions of all civil society, and convulsions of nature, false Christs, wars civil and external, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes.

Even a moderately careful reader of Josephus cannot fail to see that these very verses are a faithful description of the state of things which existed at Jerusalem some time before its destruction. Anarchy, treachery, bloodshed, are terms too weak to describe the thorough loosening of all the bonds, moral and social, which usually bind men together.

Severe as were the trials which were common to all the Jews, special trials awaited the Christians, of which these were but the beginning—throes (ᾠδίνων) awaited them, under which many would sink, but which, to those who could survive them, would be the initiation into a new life. There would be persecution for the faith, division amongst the brethren, false brethren, lukewarmness among the faithful, and, to crown all, false prophets, who should succeed in deceiving many.

The short history of the Acts of the Apostles contains sufficient incidental allusions to several of the points here mentioned to show what was the general condition of things. There are references to persecutions of the Christians numberless, twice unto death (vii. 59; xii. 2), to famine (xi. 27), to deceivers (viii. 9).

It could not be meant that the Gospel should be preached among all nations as fully, or among many nations, before the destruction of Jerusalem, as it would before the end of the world. In each case, before the end came, the Gospel would be sufficiently disseminated to be a testimony unto them of God's mercy through Christ, and of man's rejection of Him.

In answer to the inquiry of His disciples, Jesus first predicts certain signs of a mixed character, part of which priests were one night busy in their sacred offices, they felt the earth quaking beneath them, and heard a cry, as of a great multitude, "Let us remove hence!" And always up and down the city wandered Jesus, the son of Ananias, crying, "Woe, woe to Jerusalem!" until the siege began in earnest, when he ceased; for being on the wall, he cried, "Woe, woe to the city again! and to the people, and to the holy house!" and then, as he added, "Woe, woe to myself also," a stone from one of the engines smote him, and he died."—BESANT and PALMER'S 'History of Jerusalem,' p. 25.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxiv. 9; vol. iii. p. 102.

^b The love of many shall wax cold.—"The picture in the original is much darker, τῶν πολλῶν, 'the many,' the vast majority of the disciples."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 98.

should precede the destruction of Jerusalem, and part the end of the world; or, it may be, all of them should precede the destruction of Jerusalem, only in a modified degree, and the end of the world in a more fully developed form. Having finished these signs (verses 5-14), He then goes on to specify certain others which should go before the destruction of Jerusalem (verses 15-28).

A CONTINUATION OF THE PROPHECY ON MOUNT OLIVET.

S. MATTHEW xxiv. 15-28.

S. MARK xiii. 14-23.

S. LUKE xxi. 20-24.

15 When ye therefore shall see
the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet,
stand
in the holy place,

14 But when ye shall see
the abomination of desolation,
spoken of by Daniel the prophet,
standing
where it ought not,

20 And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies,

(whoso readeth, let him understand:)

(let him that readeth understand,)

16 then let them
which be in Judæa
flee into the mountains:

then let them
that be in Judæa
flee to the mountains:

then know
that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them
which are in Judæa
flee to the mountains;
and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

17 let him which is on the house-top not come down

15 and let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein
to take any thing out

to take any thing out
of his house:
neither let him
which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

16 and let him
that is in the field not turn back again
for to take up his garment.

22 For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

19 And woe unto them
that are with child,
and to them that give suck
in those days!

17 But woe to them
that are with child,
and to them that give suck
in those days!

20 But pray ye that your flight
be not in the winter,
neither on the sabbath day:
for then shall be great tribulation,
such as was not
since the beginning of the world

18 And pray ye that your flight
be not in the winter.

to this time,
no, nor ever shall be.
22 And except

19 For in those days shall be affliction,
such as was not
from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time,
neither shall be.
And except

20 had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved:
but for the elect's sake,
whom He hath chosen,
He hath shortened the days.

those days should be shortened,
there should no flesh be saved:
but for the elect's sake
those days shall be shortened.

for there shall be great distress in the land,
and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

23 Then if any man shall say unto you,
Lo, here is Christ, or there;
believe it not.

21 And then if any man shall say to you,
Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, He is there;
believe him not:

S. MATTHEW xxiv.

S. MARK xiii.

S. LUKE xxi.

24 For there shall arise false
Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew
great signs and wonders:
inasmuch that,
if it were possible,
they shall deceive
the very elect.

22 for false Christs and false prophets shall rise,
and shall shew
signs and wonders, to seduce,
if it were possible,

23 even the elect.
But take ye heed:
behold, I have foretold
you all things.

25 Behold, I have told you before.

26 Wherefore if they shall say unto you,
Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth:
behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not.

27 For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

28 For whosoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

15. When ye therefore shall see

"the abomination of desolation," spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand:*)

Vulg. Cum ergo videritis abominationem desolationis, que data est a Danielle propheta, stantem in loco sancto.

16. Then let them which be in Judæa flee into the mountains:

17. Let him which is on the house-top^b not come down to take any thing out of his house:

S.V. to take the things.

Vulg. Et qui in tecto, non descendat tollere aliquid de domo sua.

* Whoso readeth, let him understand. — "This is not spoken so much for the obscurity as for the certainty of the prophecy, as if He should say, 'He that reads those words in Daniel, let him mind well that, when the army of the prince which is to come, that army of abominations, shall compass round Jerusalem with a siege, then most certain destruction hangs over it. . . . Flatter not yourselves therefore with vain hopes, either of future victory, or of the retreating of that army; but provide for yourselves, and he that is in Judæa let him fly to the hills and places of most difficult access: not into the city.'"—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxiv.
15; vol. ii. p. 242.

Josephus records their flight in the following words: ἔσθ' ὅτε παλαὶ διεδόρασκον ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως, ὡς ἀλωσομένης αὐτήν. ('Bell.
Jud.' ii. 19, 6.)

"Cestius pitched his camp on Scopus, seven furlongs from the city, and waited three days in the hope that his appearance might awe the rebels. Then he entered the city; for the Jews had abandoned the outer and second wall, and retired into the inner parts of the fortifications. Having fired the new and part of the lower city, he advanced against the upper city, occupied by the rebels, and encamped before the royal palace of Herod, where was a space unoccupied by buildings, between the outer and the second wall. A well-sustained attempt to carry the upper city, at this time, would probably have been successful; but Providence had ordered it otherwise. After five days he relinquished the endeavour, and turned his exertions to the northern part of the Temple, whence he was several times repulsed by the Jews, fighting, as usual, from the roof of the cloisters. At length the front division of the Romans succeeded in reaching the wall, which, under cover of their shields, they undermined, and made preparations for firing the gate of the Temple.

"And now it was that a strange and unaccountable panic seized upon the seditious; they abandoned the defence, and fled from the city. The peace party, reassured, would have set open the gates, and received Cestius as their benefactor; and had he continued the siege a little longer, he must have made himself master of the city. 'But God,' the historian suggests, 'by reason of their wickedness, already so abhorred even His sacred things, that He would not permit the war to be thus brought to a termination.' Despairing of success, and ignorant of the friendly disposition of the people towards him, the prefect, without any apparent cause, raised the siege and retired to the Scopus, from whence he commenced a disastrous retreat along the road by which he had come, which was followed by the Jews, and ended in a complete rout."— WILLIAMS, 'Holy City,' vol. i. p. 165.

"The extraordinary retreat of Cestius, so perplexing to the Jewish historian, was no doubt divinely ordered, to allow the elect an opportunity of escape; and in obedience to our Lord's words, they availed themselves of it, and sought safety beyond the Jordan.
And Josephus informs us, that many of the principal Jews also took this opportunity of escaping as from a ship on the point of sinking—a remarkable simile, reminding us of the ark of safety provided in and for the Church!

"And if it should be thought that the interval of three years between the raising of the siege of Cestius and the forming it again by Titus allowed ample space for a deliberate departure instead of such a hasty flight as is implied in our Lord's prediction, it should be considered that we have the repeated testimony of Josephus to the jealous precautions adopted by those in power at Jerusalem to prevent escape or desertion; so that the time while the Zealots were engaged in the pursuit of Cestius may only have allowed time for such a hair-breadth escape from the city."—Ibid.
p. 199.

^b Stairs from the roof.—"Most of the houses (at Lubiab) have a place for sleeping on the roof, as at Tiberias, and we observed here one of the most interesting examples of the stair from the roof down to the street."—'Mission to the Jews from Scotland,'
p. 297.

18. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

S.V. his garment.

Vulg. tollere tunicam suam.

19. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

Vulg. Væ autem.

20. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day:

21. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

22. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.

S.V. were shortened instead of shall be shortened.

Vulg. sed propter electos breviantur dies illi.

In these words Jesus commands His disciples to leave Jerusalem before the destruction of the city begins, and He gives them two signs¹ by which they should judge when it was the proper time to leave Judæa. S. Matthew and S. Mark give only one of these signs, and S. Luke gives the other, unless these two be one and the same sign differently expressed, or different parts of the same sign.

"The abomination of desolation" (τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως) is a Hebrew phrase for "the abomination of the desolators," or of those who caused desolation. The "holy place" is but the common designation of the Temple, and of the most holy part of the Temple. One sign, therefore, which should warn the disciples of Christ that it was time to depart out of Jerusalem, should be when they should see the abomination or profanation of the desolators in the Temple, or when they should see certain in the Temple causing profanation and desolation; the other, when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies.

No less than eight different explanations² have been offered of the words "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." Of these the best explanation is that supplied by the account which Josephus³ gives of the conduct of the Zealots during the siege of Jerusalem. He says these impious fanatics took refuge in the Temple (τὸν ναόν), and made the sanctuary (τὸ ἅγιον) the scene of unlimited bloodshed, with all the horrors and excesses that usually accompany unchecked, maddened licentiousness.

These then were the two contemporaneous signs by which they should judge when it was time to leave Jerusalem and flee into the mountains—when they should see the Zealots inside, with their horrible profanations, in the Temple; and the army of the Romans outside, encompassing the city.

Cestius Gallus was the first to begin the siege of Jerusalem, and, by his incompetent management of it, afforded to the Christians the opportunity they desired of departing out of the city. He thus unconsciously made himself the instrument in enabling them to fulfil their Saviour's command. Josephus notices this departure of many from the city, but, being himself a Jew, and having no sympathy with the Christians, he did not understand that they acted as they did on the command which Jesus had given them more than thirty years before.⁴

Retiring from the city during the interval that succeeded the repulse of Cestius and the renewal of the attack by Titus, the Christians withdrew to Pella beyond the Jordan. Had they waited until Titus had taken the command, there would have been less, or probably no, chance of escaping honourably from the city.

The hazard of their situation, and the severity of the crisis generally, Jesus foretells in several appropriate forms. Their safety could be secured only by seizing the right moment and by using the utmost speed. No delay must be attempted for even the most necessary articles. Even then they would not succeed unless the various circumstances of the case co-operated favourably for them. If, for instance, the right moment offered itself when they were hindered by the suckling of children, or by the inclemency of the year, or by the inaction to which the Jewish Sabbath condemned them, their danger would be increased, and their escape might even be rendered impossible. Hence He bids them pray that none of these things may happen.

Jesus declares that there had never been at any time such suffering as there would be in this siege, nor should ever be such again. No nation had ever been guilty of such a crime, of such impiety as this, and He declares that no nation should ever suffer such signal, such condign punishment as this. The very severity of their punishment might have led them, and might be intended to lead them, to suspect the horrible nature of their sin, and to conclude that in the Crucifixion of Jesus they had put to death the Messiah, the Son of God.

Among other proofs of the straits to which they were reduced in this siege, Josephus says that women were driven to such a degree of frenzy by the pangs of hunger that they devoured their own infants. He relates with much circumstantiality one case—that of a lady of noble birth from the village of Bethzab beyond Jordan.⁵ Some have supposed that in His words, "Woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!" Jesus had reference

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 77; vol. iii. p. 1150.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiv. 15; vol. ii. p. 913.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxiii. p. 388.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Dan. ix. 27; vol. vi. p. 1462.

³ Josephus, Bell. Jud. iv. 3, 9, &c.; vol. ii. p. 1171.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, iv. 3, 9, &c. p. 682.

⁴ Josephus, Bell. Jud. ii. 19, 6; vol. ii. p. 1103.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, ii. 19, 6, p. 641.

⁵ Eusebius, Hist. Ecclesiast. iii. 5; vol. ii. p. 221.

S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xxix. 7; vol. i. p. 401.

⁵ Josephus, Bell. Jud. vi. 3, 4; vol. ii. p. 1274.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, vi. 3, 4, p. 748.

to the temptations to which such would be exposed in their sojourn in the city, as well as to the hindrance which children would cause them in their attempts to escape from it.

So sharp would this trial be that, if unduly prolonged, none would survive it. If the siege of Jerusalem should last until the guilt of the Jewish nation should be atoned for, or until the rage of the Roman soldiery should exhaust itself, none, not even the elect, would have escaped; neither would the Christians have been able to escape out of the city, nor would those Jews have been spared who afterwards became Christians, or the elect—sharers in God's grace through the Incarnation here, and sharers in His glory hereafter. The instrument that God made use of to shorten this trial was most probably Titus. Severe as he was himself, and determined as he was to take the city at any cost, he at the same time showed himself anxious to moderate the fury of his soldiers and to assuage the sufferings of the besieged.

S. Luke represents Jesus as going on to describe the punishment of the Jewish nation, with greater particularity than either S. Matthew or S. Mark. He foretells this punishment in three different forms: 1. They shall fall by the edge of the sword. 2. They shall be led away captive into all nations. 3. Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

¹ Josephus, Bell. Jud. ii. 14, 3; vol. ii. p. 1078.

——— Whiston's Trans., Wars, ii. 14, 3, p. 625.

² Josephus, Bell. Jud. v. 3, 1; vol. ii. p. 1219.

[Josephus,

* Number of those who perished.—"Now the number of those that were carried captive during this whole war was collected to be ninety-seven thousand; as was the number of those that perished during the whole siege eleven hundred thousand, the greater part of whom were indeed of the same nation [with the citizens of Jerusalem], but not belonging to the city itself; for they were come up from all the country to the feast of unleavened bread, and were on a sudden shut up by an army which, at the very first, occasioned so great a straitness among them that there came a pestilential destruction upon them, and soon afterward such a famine as destroyed them more suddenly. And that this city could contain so many people in it, is manifest by that number of them which was taken under Cestius, who being desirous of informing Nero of the power of the city, who otherwise was disposed to condemn that nation, entreated the high-priests, if the thing were possible, to take the number of their whole multitude. So these high-priests upon the coming of their feast which is called the Passover, when they slay their sacrifices, from the ninth hour till the eleventh, but so that a company not less than ten belong to every sacrifice (for it is not lawful for them to feast singly by themselves, and many of us are twenty in a company), found the number of sacrifices was two hundred and fifty-six thousand five hundred; which, upon the allowance of no more than ten that feast together, amounts to two millions seven hundred thousand and two hundred persons that were pure and holy. . . . Now this vast multitude is indeed collected out of remote places, but the entire nation was now shut up by fate as in a prison, and the Roman army encompassed the city when it was crowded with inhabitants."—JOSEPHUS, Wars, vi. 9, 3; Whiston's Transl. p. 760.

"With reference to the density of the population and the large numbers congregated at the great annual festivals, we may draw an instructive comparison from the statistics of the city of London. The city proper covers 631 acres. In 1806 its resident day population was 244,865. This was increased by a daily influx of 509,111 clients and customers, raising the day population to 753,976. In the case of any extraordinary attraction, such as the visit of the Queen to St. Paul's, the density of the crowd is enormously increased. And London has no building capable, like the Temple, of containing 200,000 persons."—"Edinburgh Review," January 1873, p. 9.

But large as is the destruction which, as His words clearly foretell, should take place in this siege, Josephus records an ample fulfilment of them. He states both what was the probable number of people in Jerusalem at the commencement of the siege, and also what proportion of that number perished by the sword or by famine, and how many were taken captive. He says¹ that at the Passover, A.D. 66, there were 3,000,000 collected within the city, and that there were 2,700,000 at the time when this siege commenced, which, as he says, was at the Passover.² This number was ascertained from the number of paschal lambs slain, which was 256,000. The lowest number that partook of one paschal lamb was ten, and the highest twenty. At our Saviour's last Passover there were thirteen. If we take the lowest number, this would give 2,560,000 as the smallest possible number of persons in the city at the Passover. But, besides these, there would be many in the city who would be disqualified by uncleanness, and some who would not partake of the paschal lamb for other reasons. From this it would appear that 3,000,000 would be a very fair estimate of the number in the city at the commencement of the siege. Of this number Josephus says 1,100,000 perished by the sword or by famine and pestilence, and 97,000 were taken prisoners at the capture of the city, and sold for slaves.*

The best proof of the truth of our Saviour's prophecy, that Josephus, Whiston's Trans., Wars, v. 3, 1, p. 712.

——— Bell. Jud. v. 13, 7; vol. ii. p. 1256.

——— Whiston's Trans., Wars, v. 13, 7, p. 737.

"The numbers given by Josephus may not be correct within a great many thousands; there is reason enough, however, to believe that, within limits very much narrower than some of his readers are disposed to believe, his numbers may be fairly depended on."—BESANT and PALMER'S 'History of Jerusalem,' p. 24.

"One of those who kept the register of burials and paid the bearers of the dead, told Josephus (Bell. Jud. v. 13, 7) that out of his gate alone 115,880 bodies had been thrown since the siege began, and many citizens, whose word could be depended on, estimated the number who died at 600,000."—Ibid., p. 36.

"Taking the shape of the city to be circular and 33 stadia in circumference (it was more nearly circular than square), we find its area to have been rather more than 3,500,000 square yards. This, at 30 square yards to one person, gives about 120,000 for the ordinary population. And there were extensive gardens and numerous villas to the north and east, which contained another population altogether quite impossible to estimate. And it must not be forgotten that Cestius (Joseph. Bell. Jud. vi. ix. 3) caused an estimate to be made, a very few years before the siege, of the numbers actually present at the Passover, and that the official return was 2,560,500 persons. The whole question is clearly stated by Mr. Williams ('Holy City,' vol. i. p. 481). And, as he points out very justly, it is not a question how many would be comfortably accommodated in Jerusalem, but how many were actually crammed into it."—Ibid., p. 23.

"Suffice it here to say that not one of all the terrible curses on

Jerusalem should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, is its history during the 1800 years that have passed since His words were uttered. Since that time Jerusalem has sustained seven or eight different sieges; and, with the exception of the first under Titus, and the second under Hadrian, the Jews have never borne either a principal or a prominent part in the siege. The conflict has always been carried on by Gentiles against Gentiles. An edict was passed¹ that no Jew should enter Jerusalem, and for two hundred years no Jew was permitted to enter Jerusalem, and only to behold it from a distance on a certain day once a year.

Jesus now turns to another kind of trial that would await them before the destruction of Jerusalem, to the number of deceivers that would arise, and would succeed in seducing many.

23. Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

24. For there shall arise false Christs,^a and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

S. that, if it were possible, even the elect would be deceived.
Vulg. ita ut in errorem inducantur (si fieri potest) etiam electi.

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv. 6; vol. ii. p. 312.

disobedience denounced in the Law—no, not the worst of all—was spared; that 1,100,000 are calculated to have perished by famine or the chances of war during the siege; and besides 40,000 of the population of this city whom Titus allowed to go free, 97,000 were carried captive during the war. The whole number of those who were killed or taken in the city itself can scarcely be computed at less than 2,000,000. And if this number should appear excessive and incredible, it must be considered that the historian himself declares the greater part of these were not citizens of Jerusalem, but those who had come up from all the country to the feast of unleavened bread, and were suddenly shut up by the army; which further accounts for the famine, which from the first made frightful ravages among them. And it further deserves to be noted, that this is not a random guess of the historian, but a calculation founded on an official return of the numbers who were usually present on such occasions, compared with actual observations during the course of the siege.”—WILLIAMS, ‘Holy City,’ vol. i. p. 187.

“At the time of its siege by Titus, the city not only contained its ordinary population; every part of the Holy Land had been in turn the theatre of the war under Vespasian, during several campaigns. Fugitives from all parts—from Samaria, Galilee, Pæra, and Idumæa—had fled for security to Jerusalem. Hence the number of the stated inhabitants of Jerusalem was much larger than before; and I could well believe that Tacitus’s statement of 600,000 is intended to express the population of that time. The figure employed by our Lord in predicting these events is wonderfully illustrated by the history: ‘As a snare (παγίς) shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.’ (Luke xvi. 35.) The whole land had been dragged as with a draw-net, whither contracting folds at length encircled Jerusalem.

“Again, it was not only the re-idents at Jerusalem at that time who were involved in the horrors of the siege. The investment surprised multitudes of Jews from all parts of the world congregated at Jerusalem for the celebration of the Passover. (Bell. Jud. v. iii.; xiii. 7; vi. ix. 2.) Only a few years previously an official return had been made to Government of the numbers present at that festival; and a low average calculation had given the result as upwards of two millions and a half; and on another

25. Behold, I have told you before.

26. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, He is in the desert; go not forth: behold, He is in the secret chambers; believe it not.

S. omits Wherefore.
Vulg. Si ergo dixerint vobis.

27. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

S.V. omits also.
Vulg. ita erit et adventus Filii hominis.

28. For whosoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

S.V. omits For.
Vulg. Ubiunque fuerit corpus, illic congregabuntur et aquile.

Some have supposed that Jesus delivers this as warning of the many antichrists and deceivers that shall arise before the end of the world. The note of time with which He connects this verse to the former, “Then” (τότε), renders it more probable that He is still speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of those Jewish Zealots who, by falsely pretending to be Christ, shall seduce multitudes to their ruin, and not occasion we have on a rough estimate 3,000,000 present at that solemnity.”—Ibid., p. 382.

“For there shall arise false Christs, &c.”—“The fatal revolt of the Jews, which ended in the fall of their city and the destruction of their Temple, was due, among many other causes, to the teaching of Judas the Galilaean acting on minds inflated with pride in the exaggerated glories of the past, looking to national independence as the one thing needful, and wholly ignorant of the power and resources of the mighty empire which held them in subjection. . . . The followers of Judas became the Zealots and the Sicarii of later times: they were those who looked daily for the Messiah; whom false Christs led astray by thousands; who thought no act too daring to be attempted in this sacred cause, no life too valuable to be sacrificed: they were those who let their countrymen die of starvation by thousands while they maintained a hopeless struggle with Titus. . . .

“Under Fadus, one Theudas, whom Josephus calls a magician, persuaded multitudes of the Jews to go with him to the Jordan, which he pretended would open its waters to let him pass. Cupsius Fadus sent out a troop of cavalry, who took Theudas alive, cut off his head, and brought it to Jerusalem. Under Cupsius, too, occurred a great famine in Judæa, which was relieved by the generosity of Queen Helena of Adiabene, the proselyte. . . .

“The country was full of robbers and impostors. These sprung up every day, and were every day caught and destroyed; no doubt most of them men whose wits were utterly gone in looking for the Messiah, until they ended in believing themselves to be the Messiah. These poor creatures, followed by a rabble more ignorant and more mad than themselves, went up and down the distracted country, raising hopes which were doomed to disappointment, and leading out the wild countrymen to meet death and torture when they looked for glory and victory. One of the impostors, an Egyptian, probably an Egyptian Jew, brought a multitude up to the Mount of Olives, promising that at his word the walls of the city should fall down, and they themselves march in triumphant. He came, but instead of seeing the walls fall down, he met the troops of Felix, who dispersed his people, slaying four hundred of them.”—BESANT and PALMER’S ‘History of Jerusalem,’ pp. 2-6.

of the apostates from the faith, of whom S. John (1 John ii. 18) and S. Paul (2 Thess. ii. 3) speak.

At this time the whole Jewish nation were in eager expectation of the coming of the Christ. They saw that the time specified by Jacob had arrived, and that the sceptre had already departed from Judah (Gen. xlix. 10). Those of them who did not believe that Jesus was the Christ were in a frame of mind to become an easy prey to any skillful deceiver. Such too would be the natural talents of these deceivers, or such would be the supernatural powers that they would be permitted to exercise, as severely to try the faith, and to deceive, if it were possible, even the elect. Hence, whatever their pretensions were, or wherever they appeared, He commands His disciples to believe them not. Their safety lay in giving no heed whatever to such rumours.

There are not wanting, either in Josephus or in the Rabbinical writers, sufficient incidental notices to show that these words, uttered nearly forty years before, were fully verified in the events of the siege. Josephus¹ relates that there were three principal factions in Jerusalem, headed by their respective leaders. It is not actually said that these claimed to be the Christ as promised in the Old Testament, but they each professed to be the deliverer of the Jewish nation, the only meaning which the generality of the Jews attached to the word Messiah. It was for this reason also that they were so eagerly longing for the Messiah, that He might deliver them from the yoke of the Romans. These three leaders and their followers caused as much "tribulation" to the people, suffering by famine, bloodshed, and by excesses of every kind, as they suffered from the army of the Romans.

There was a common belief among the disciples that the Son of Man would come to judgment immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem. That this belief might not be made use of to deceive them, He forewarns them that His coming to judgment would not be in secret, manifested in one part of the earth and not in another, any more than the lightning, which shines in one part of the heaven, is not visible in another. It may be that, by the use of this metaphor, Jesus implies that His coming would be not only as conspicuous, but as sudden and unexpected, and as glorious as is the lightning.² Sooner, too, would the eagle, with its strong instinctive power of scent, be unable to discover its food, than the elect would fail to discover Christ: for the scent of flesh has not more attraction for the eagle than the Body of Christ has for His saints.

For some³ of the Fathers saw in the term "eagles" an allusion to the saints, and in the term "carcase" an allusion to the Passion of the Son of Man. Some⁴ also drew from these words the conclusion, that as eagles could scent their prey from the greatest distance, and were sure to be found where flesh was abundant, so the saints of God, the most exalted and the most spiritual-minded of men, were as surely to be found wherever the Body of Christ was provided for them in the Eucharist.

Many modern commentators hold that these words contain no symbolical meaning whatever, and that the context here and in S. Luke (xvii. 37) requires them to be understood in their plain literal sense. Amongst these it may be sufficient to refer to Lightfoot.⁵

If an objection be raised to this interpretation, on the ground that πῶμα, here rendered "carcase," cannot be applied to the Body of the Son of God, it is replied that in this same metaphor, which S. Luke (xvii. 37) represents Jesus as repeating on another occasion, the word σῶμα, "body," is used. If there be any real difference between these two words, σῶμα and πῶμα, the former (from σῴζω, to save) may bring more prominently into view the life-giving virtue of Christ's Body, and the latter (from πίπτω, to fall) the way in which He procured that life for man, by His own Death.

Having forewarned them of the signs which should go before the destruction of their city, Jesus next turns to those which should go before the end of the world.

A CONTINUATION OF THE PROPHECY ON MOUNT OLIVET.

S. MATTHEW xxiv. 29-44.

29 Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun

be darkened,
and the moon
shall not give her light,
and the stars

24

S. MARK xiii. 24-37.

But in those days,
after that tribulation,

the sun
shall be darkened,
and the moon
shall not give her light,
and the stars

25

S. LUKE xxi. 25-38.

25 And there shall be signs in the sun,
and in the moon,
and in the stars;

¹ Josephus, Bell. Jud. v. 1. 4; vol. ii. p. 1214.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, v. 1. 4, p. 708.

² S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxiv. 27; vol. i. p. 1055.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiv. 27; vol. vii. p. 179.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvi.; vol. ii. p. 390.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiv. 27; vol. ii. p. 927.

³ Origen, in Matt. xxiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 1670.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxiv. 28; vol. i. p. 1056.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiv. 28; vol. vii. p. 179.

⁴ S. Ambrose, in Sacramentis, i. 2; vol. iii. p. 419.

in Luc. xvii. 37; vol. ii. p. 1782.

⁵ Lightfoot on Matt. xxiv. 28; vol. ii. p. 245.

S. MATTHEW xxiv.

shall fall from heaven,

and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken :
30 and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven :
and then shall all the tribes
of the earth mourn, and they shall see
the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven
with power and great glory.
31 And He shall send His angels
with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect
from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

32 Now learn a parable
of the fig-tree ;
When his branch is yet tender,
and putteth forth leaves,
ye know
that summer is nigh :
33 so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near,
even at the doors.
34 Verily I say unto you,
This generation
shall not pass,
till all these things
be fulfilled.
35 Heaven and earth
shall pass away,
but My words
shall not pass away.

S. MARK xiii.

of heaven shall fall,

and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.
26 And then shall they see
the Son of Man coming in the clouds
with great power and glory.
27 And then shall He
send His angels,
and shall gather together His elect
from the four winds,
from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven.

28 Now learn a parable
of the fig-tree ;
When her branch is yet tender,
and putteth forth leaves,
ye know
that summer is near :
29 so ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things
come to pass,
know that it is nigh, even at the doors.
30 Verily I say unto you,
that this generation
shall not pass,
till all these things
be done.
31 Heaven and earth
shall pass away :
but My words
shall not pass away.

S. LUKE xxi.

and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity ; the sea and the waves roaring ;
26 men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth :
for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27 And then shall they see
the Son of Man coming in a cloud
with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads ;
for your redemption draweth nigh.

29 And He spake to them
a parable ;
Behold the fig-tree,
and all the trees ;
when they now shoot forth, ye see and know
of your own selves
that summer
is now nigh at hand.
30 So likewise ye, when ye see these things
come to pass, know ye that
the kingdom of God
is nigh at hand.

31 Verily I say unto you,
This generation
shall not pass away,
till all
be fulfilled.
32 Heaven and earth
shall pass away :
but My words
shall not pass away.

33 And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

34 For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

35 Watch ye therefore, and pray always,
that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.

36 But of that day and hour
knoweth no man,

32 But of that day and that hour
knoweth no man,

S. MATTHEW xxiv.

no, not the angels
of heaven,

but My Father only.

37 But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark,

39 And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

40 Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

42 Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

43 But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

44 Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.

S. MARK xiii.

no, not the angels
which are in heaven,
neither the Son,
but the Father.

33 Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning:

36 Lest coming suddenly He find you sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.

37 And in the day-time He was teaching in the Temple; and at night He went out, and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to Him in the Temple, for to hear Him.

29. ¶ Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken:

Vulg. statim autem.

30. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds^a of heaven with power and great glory.

^a And all the tribes of the earth shall mourn.
Vulg. et tunc plangent omnes tribus terre.

31. And He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather

* The Son of Man coming in the clouds.—ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν is rendered 'in the clouds,' though the imagery is marred thereby, and though the mention of 'Him that sat on the cloud' (ἐπὶ τῆς νεφέ-

λης) in the Apocalypse (xiv. 15, 16) ought to have ensured the correct translation.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of New Testament,' p. 125.

together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

Marc. with a trumpet and a great voice.
S. with a great trumpet: S. and He.
Vulg. Et mittet angelus suos cum tuba et voce magna: et congregabunt electos ejus a quatuor ventis, a summis coelorum usque ad terminos eorum.

Before the destruction of Jerusalem there were "wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." Of these there are historical records that are unquestionable. But there were no convulsions of nature such as are here described. At no time could it be said that the sun was darkened and the moon did not give her light, and the stars fell from heaven, and the powers of the heavens were shaken. Those commentators, therefore, who understand these as signs that should precede the destruction of Jerusalem are unable to explain them in a literal sense of the economy of nature, and are driven to interpret them of God's dealings with mankind in His Church, the kingdom of grace.

Those who believe that Jesus is here speaking of the time immediately preceding the destruction of the world, and His coming to judgment, interpret these as the changes that will take place in the material world before the great day of Resurrection. It may be that these changes are expressed rather as they will appear to men than as they will be in reality, and in the nature of things.

From the most ancient times¹ it has been held that the sign of the Son of Man is the Cross, the instrument of His Crucifixion, and of man's salvation; that the Son of Man will appear in the heavens, and with Him the Cross,—to some the sign of joy and of salvation, and to others of terror and condemnation; that, though He will appear in the same Body in which He was born of the Blessed Virgin, and in which He endured hunger and thirst and fatigue—the same Body in which He was despised and rejected of men, in which He was crucified, and in which He rose again and ascended into heaven—the glory of His Body, and the glory of His Cross, will be so great as to overpower the light of the sun, and of the moon, and of the stars.

The coming of the Son of Man will be a cause of mourning to all the Jews who rejected Him as their Saviour and were the cause of His Crucifixion, and to all in every other nation who by their sins have, as it were, crucified Him afresh. By the ministration of angels, He will summon to judgment all the dead from every quarter.

All these things He says will take place immediately after (εὐθὺς μετὰ) the tribulation of those days, or, in other words, that the end of the world—the Day of Judgment would immediately succeed the desolation and destruction of Jerusalem. Eighteen hundred years have passed, and none of the changes here foretold have taken place. This naturally suggests the inquiry whether we rightly understand this note of time; whether "immediately after," from our point of view, be the meaning which Jesus intended when He uttered these words. We know from other passages in Scripture that man's estimate of the duration of time and God's estimate of it, so to speak, are very different, "that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (2 Pet. iii. 8). Nor is it uncommon, in His revelation of the future to man through the prophets, for God to speak of things as close at hand which were not to happen for many years. The prophet Haggai (ii. 6), for instance, when foretelling the Incarnation, speaks of it as "a little while," though it was more than five hundred years. It is even possible that this expression "immediately after," in our Saviour's mouth, may contain other elements besides that of duration, and may include in it, for instance, succession in the order, or similarity in the fearfulness, of events.² That Jesus did not mean by these words, "immediately after," according to man's reckoning, is proved by the circumstances of the case.

He then shows by the parable of the fig-tree how closely the Day of Judgment will follow on the signs which, He here declares, shall precede it.

32. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

33. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors.

Margin, He.

34. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled.

35. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away.

S*. omits this verse.

Vulg. Caelum et terra transibunt, verba autem mea non prateribunt.

The Jews were bound to offer to God the first-fruit sheaf of corn, and the first-fruits of certain trees: the first-fruit sheaf they offered at the Passover; the first-fruits of trees they must offer properly at the feast of Pentecost, but not before, and not after the feast of Dedication. If the season was unusually backward, so that the corn would not be ripe at the Passover, nor the fruit of the trees ripe before the feast of Dedication, they were accustomed to intercalate the year by a month.³ This rendered the Jews especially observant of the first shooting forth of their fruit trees. They knew to a day when, as a rule, each tree would put forth its leaves and its fruits. It was a common saying among them that from the putting forth of leaves till there be green figs is fifty days;

¹ S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, xv. 22, p. 900.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvi.; vol. ii. p. 391.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. i. p. 132.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. ii. p. 929.

S. Hilary Pict., in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. i. p. 1056.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. vii. p. 180.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. iii. p. 104.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. exxiii. p. 399.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. i. p. 334.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 30; vol. viii. p. 445.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 29; vol. viii. p. 444.

³ Lightfoot on Matt. xxi. 19; vol. i. p. 226.

from the green figs till the bud falls off, fifty days; and from that time till the figs are ripe, fifty days. So tender was the fig-tree that, if the cold of winter continued longer than usual, it remained dry and lifeless, and put forth its buds only on the approach of summer. Jesus teaches them that the bursting forth of the fig-tree is not a more sure indication of the presence of summer, than the signs which He has mentioned would be of the destruction of the world and of the judgment of mankind.

He then gives two assurances of the certainty of the things which He had foretold, of their certainty rather than of their nearness. The first of these is expressed thus, "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled."

The expression "this generation" (ἡ γενεὰ αὐτῆς) may be taken in several different senses. It may mean the living generation, or the Jewish nation, or the human race, or it may have other meanings. The difficulty is to ascertain in which of its several senses Jesus here uses this expression. If by "this generation" He meant the generation of men then living, we can understand how that generation did not pass away before all the things which He had foretold respecting the destruction of the city of Jerusalem were fulfilled, but not the things respecting the destruction of the world. If by "this generation" He meant the Jewish nation, then there is every appearance that all the things which He spake of the destruction of the world, will be fulfilled before the nation of the Jews pass away. It would seem that, unlike other nations, the Jews cannot be rendered extinct by oppression or be absorbed by mixing with other nations. Neither length of time, nor severity of persecution, nor dispersion over the world, has the slightest power to destroy their existence as a nation, as a distinct people (γενεά). Eighteen hundred years have passed since these words were first uttered, and the Jewish nation, to all appearance, is as likely to survive to the end of the world as it was then.

The second assurance of the certainty of what He had foretold is, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away." Some by these words understand Jesus to declare that heaven and earth shall really pass away, but that His words shall not. But others conclude that He merely uses this mode of speaking to convince His hearers of the impossibility of the failure of His words; that, firmly fixed and surely founded as they saw heaven and earth to be, yet that even they should pass away rather than His words should fail of their fulfilment.¹

But, anxious as they were to know when the Day of Judgment will be, He represses all attempts to learn this by saying in effect, that this is known to no created being, but to God alone, and that it does not come within the scope of His office, as the Son of Man, to reveal it to mankind.

36. ¶ But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but My Father only.^a

S.V. not the angels of heaven, nor the Son.
 Vulg. De die autem illa, et hora nemo scit, neque angeli cœlorum, nisi solus Pater.

¹ Euthymius, in Matt. xxiv. 35; vol. ii. p. 935.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxiii. p. 403. [Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 35; vol. viii. p. 448.

* But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but My Father only (Matt. xxiv. 36). Neither the Son, but the Father (Mark xiii. 32).—"Because our Lord is a Son, therefore it is that He made Himself less than a Son; and, unless He had become less than a Son, we should not have learned that He was a Son, for His economical descent to the creature is the channel of our knowledge. This is what I have been insisting on; also, that, since His original Personality thus led on to His Temporal Procession, therefore it is not easy to determine when He acts as the Son, and when merely as the Minister of the Father and the Mediating Power of the Universe. For instance, in treating of the doctrine of the Incarnation, we find it a question in controversy to determine whether our Lord's ignorance of the Day of Judgment (Mark xiii. 32) is to be predicated of His Divine Person, or of His human nature, or of the Mediator, as such."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN, 'Theological Tracts,' p. 153.

"Neither the angels nor the Son; that is, nor the Messias. For in that sense the word Son is to be taken in this place, and elsewhere very often; as in that passage, John v. 19, 'The Son (that is, the Messias) can do nothing of Himself, but what He sees the Father do;' also in verses 20 and 26. And that the word Son is to be rendered in this sense, appears from verse 27: 'He hath given Him authority also to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man.' Observe that, because He is the Son of Man."

"I. It is one thing to understand the Son of God barely and abstractly for the Second Person in the Holy Trinity, another to understand Him for the Messias, or that Second Person Incarnate. To say that the Second Person in the Trinity knows not something, is blasphemous; to say so of the Messias, is not so, who nevertheless was the same with the Second Person in the Trinity.

For although the Second Person, abstractly considered according to His mere Deity, was co-equal with the Father, co-omnipotent, co-omniscient, co-eternal with Him, yet Messias, who was God-Man, considered as Messias, was a servant and a messenger of the Father, and received commands and authority from the Father. And those expressions, 'The Son can do nothing of Himself,' &c., will not in the least serve the Arian's turn, if you take them in this sense, which you must necessarily do; Messias can do nothing of Himself, because He is a servant and a deputy.

"II. We must distinguish between the excellencies and perfections of Christ, which flowed from the Hypostatical Union of the two Natures, and those which flowed from the donation and anointing of the Holy Spirit. From the Hypostatical Union of the Natures flowed the infinite dignity of His Person, His impeccability, His infinite self-sufficiency to perform the Law, and to satisfy the Divine justice. From the anointing of the Spirit flowed His power of miracles, His foreknowledge of things to come, and all kind of knowledge of Evangelic mysteries. Those rendered Him a fit and perfect Redeemer; these a fit and perfect Minister of the Gospel.

"Now, therefore, the foreknowledge of things to come, of which the discourse here is, is to be numbered among those things which flowed from the anointing of the Holy Spirit and from immediate revelation, not from the Hypostatic Union of the Natures. So that those things which were revealed by Christ to His Church, He had them from the revelation of the Spirit, not from that Union. Nor is it any derogation or detracting from the dignity of His Person, that He saith He knew not that day and hour of the destruction of Jerusalem; yea, it excellently agrees with His office and deputation, who, being the Father's servant, messenger,

S. Mark represents Jesus as saying that neither did the Son know when the Day of Judgment will be. But these words must be taken along with His other statements on this subject; they must be limited by His other expressions, and interpreted consistently with His whole teaching. Jesus does not mean to say that He did not know the Day of Judgment and minister, followed the orders of the Father, and obeyed Him in all things. 'The Son knoweth not'; that is, it is not revealed to Him from the Father to reveal to the Church. Revelat. i. 1: 'The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave Him.'—LIGHT-FOOT on Mark xiii. 32; vol. ii. p. 351.

'S. Basil takes the words οὐδ' ὁ υἱὸς, εἰ μὴ ὁ πατὴρ to mean, 'Nor does the Son know, except the Father knows'; or, 'Nor would the Son, but for, &c.; or, 'Nor does the Son know, except as the Father knows.' 'The cause of the Son's knowing is from the Father.' (Ep. 236. 2.) S. Gregory alludes to the same interpretation, οὐδ' ὁ υἱὸς ἢ ὡς θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, 'Since the Father knows, therefore the Son.' (Naz. Orat. 30, 16.) S. Irenæus seems to adopt the same when he says, 'The Son was not ashamed to refer the knowledge of that day to the Father' (Hær. ii. 28, n. 6); as Naz. supr. uses the words ἐπὶ τὴν αἰρίαν ἀναφέρειν. And so Photius distinctly, εἰς ἀρχὴν ἀναφέρειται, 'Not the Son, but the Father, that is, whence knowledge comes to the Son, as from a fountain.' (Epp. p. 342, el. 1651).—Dr. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius, 'Library of the Fathers,' vol. viii. p. 459.

'Though our Lord, as having two natures, had a human as well as a Divine knowledge, and though that human knowledge was not only limited because human, but liable to ignorance in matters in which greater knowledge was possible; yet it is the doctrine of the Church that in fact He was not ignorant even in His human nature, according to its capacity, since it was from the first taken out of its original and natural condition, and 'deified' by its union with the Word. As, then, His manhood was created, yet He may not be called a creature even in His manhood; and as His flesh was in its abstract nature a servant, yet He is not a servant in fact, even as regards the flesh; so, though He took on Him a soul which left to itself had been partially ignorant, as other human souls, yet as ever enjoying the beatific vision from its oneness with the Word, it never was ignorant really, but knew all things which human soul can know (vide Eulog. ap. Phot. 230, p. 884). As Pope Gregory expresses it, 'Novit in natura, non ex natura humanitatis' (Epp. x. 39).

'However, this view of the sacred subject was received by the Church after S. Athanasius's day, and it cannot be denied that he and others of the most eminent Fathers use language which prima facie is inconsistent with it. They certainly seem to impute ignorance to our Lord as man, as Athan. in this passage. Of course, it is not meant that our Lord's soul has the same perfect knowledge as He has as God. This was the assertion of a General of the Hermits of S. Austin, at the time of the Council of Basil, when the proposition was formally condemned, 'animum Christi Deum videre tam clare et intense quam clare et intense Deus videt seipsum' (vide Berli, opp. lib. iii. p. 42). Yet Fulgentius had said, 'I think that in no respect was full knowledge of the Godhead wanting to that Soul whose Person is one with the Word: whom Wisdom so assumed that it is itself that same Wisdom' (ad Ferrand. iii. p. 223, el. 1639). Yet (ad Trasimund. i. 7) he speaks of ignorance attaching to our Lord's human nature.'—Ibid. p. 461; vide also pp. 462 and 464.

'The difficulty of the passage lies in its signifying that there is a sense in which the Father knows what the Son knows not. Petavius, after S. Augustine, meets this by explaining it to mean that our Lord, as sent from the Father on a mission, was not to reveal all things, but observed a silence and professed an ignorance on those points which it was not good for His brethren to know. As Mediator and Prophet, He was ignorant. He refers, in illustration of this view, to such texts as, 'I have not spoken of Myself, but the Father which sent Me, He gave Me commandment what I should say, and what I should speak. . . . Whosoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto Me, so I speak.' (John xii. 49, &c.)—Ibid. p. 471.

'It is the doctrine of the Church that Christ, as man, was perfect in knowledge from the first, as if ignorance were hardly separable from sin, and were the direct consequence or accompaniment of original sin. 'That ignorance,' says S. Austin, 'I in no wise can suppose existed in that Infant in whom the Word was made flesh to dwell among us; nor can I suppose that that infirmity of the mind belonged to Christ as a babe, which we see in babes. For in consequence of it, when they are troubled with irrational emotions, no reason, no command, but pain sometimes, and the alarm of pain, restrains them,' &c. (de Pecc. Mer. ii. 48). As to the limits of Christ's perfect knowledge as man, Petavius observes, that we must consider 'that the soul of Christ knew all things that are, or ever will be, or ever have been, but not what are only in posse, but in fact.' (Incarn. xi. 3, 6.)—Ibid. p. 473.

The following passage can scarcely be surpassed, either in its admirable summary of the Patristic explanations of our Lord's declared ignorance of the Day of Judgment, or in the conclusions which are so skillfully drawn from these:—'There are not wanting expressions in the writings of the earlier Fathers which would imply that a belief of the actual ignorance of our Lord, regarded as man, if not positively received, was yet not always distinctly rejected. Thus S. Athanasius (Oratio contr. Arian. iii. 43; vol. ii. p. 413, Migne) tells us that our Lord shows that He knew the end of all things as the Word, but as man was ignorant of it: for it belongs to man to be ignorant, especially of such things as these. So that this expression arises from His goodness towards man's nature, inasmuch as becoming man He is not ashamed, so far as His ignorant flesh goes, to say, 'I know not.' And again (Oratio contr. Arian. iii. 45; vol. ii. p. 417), 'We who reverence Christ are assured that He did not say He was ignorant, in that He was the Word, for in that relation He knew well; but showing His human nature, because it belongs to humanity to be ignorant, and He had put on ignorant flesh—speaking in reference to this, He said, that as a man He was ignorant.' A similar statement occurs in S. Ambrose (De Incarnatione, vii. sect. 72; vol. iii. p. 837, Migne) in reference to our Lord's increase in wisdom. 'There was increase,' he says, 'of age, and increase of wisdom, but it was of human wisdom.' 'If He advanced as a man in age, He must have advanced as a man in wisdom; the advance in wisdom must have been proportionate to that in perception, from which it is derived.' And in like manner, says S. Irenæus (Contr. Hæreses, ii. 6; p. 808, Migne), that 'the Son of God assigned a knowledge of the day and hour of the Day of Judgment to the Father only, saying plainly, Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the Son, but the Father.'

'On a closer examination, however, these passages—at least those in both the later writers—appear to mean nothing but that, by virtue of His Humanity, our Lord was not conversant with that which, as matter of fact, was never hidden even from His human mind. The expressions of S. Athanasius allow ignorance in Christ, not so much in that He was a man, but in so far as knowledge came through His manhood. When he proceeds to treat of our Lord's increase in knowledge, though he allows His Humanity to have admitted of accessions, yet he explains it (Oratio contr. Arian. iii. 52; vol. ii. p. 433) mainly by 'an inward revelation or unveiling of the Deity to those who beheld Him.' And S. Ambrose (De Fide, v. 18, sects. 221, 222; vol. iii. p. 694) declares still more positively his dissent from those (of whom he says there were many) 'who say confidently that our Lord could not be ignorant so far as His Deity was concerned, but that, so far as He shared our nature, He was ignorant before His crucifixion.' 'He took our affections,' replies S. Ambrose, 'that He might speak of Himself as sharing in our ignorance; He was not positively ignorant. And the same seems to have been the feeling of S. Ambrose's greater disciple: 'I would by no means suppose,' says S. Augustin absolutely, but in some modified sense. It cannot be that He did not know in any sense, which implied that He was inferior to the Father: ¹ for He was One with the Father, and equal to the Father. He most probably means that He did not know in His character as sent by the Father, as sent to reveal to man the things that concern his salvation; that He

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxiv. 36; vol. iii. p. 1686.

S. Athanasius, Oratio iii. contra Arianos; vol. ii. p. 411.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvii.; vol. ii. p. 399.

S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio Theolog. iv. 15; vol. ii. p. 123.

S. Cyril Alex. Thesaurus, Assertio xii.; vol. viii. p. 368.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxiv. 36; vol. i. p. 133. [S. Jerome,

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxiv. 36; vol. vii. p. 181.

S. Augustine, de 83 Questionibus, lx.; vol. vi. p. 48.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 16; vol. iii. p. 687.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxiv. 36; vol. iii. p. 104.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxiii. p. 404.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxiv. 36; vol. viii. p. 448.

(De Pecc. Mer. ii. sect. 48; vol. x. p. 180), 'that there was the ignorance of infancy in that Infant, in whom the Word was made flesh to dwell in us, nor would I attribute the weakness of the mind of children to the childhood of Christ.' And the same thing was still more strongly stated by S. John Damascene (De Fide Orthodox. iii. 22), when the Nestorian controversy had opened men's eyes to the possible consequences of the opposite alternative: 'Those who maintain that Christ advanced in wisdom and grace, as though there was a positive addition of them, cannot maintain the conjunction between Godhead and His flesh to have commenced from its first existence, and therefore do not really hold the hypostatical union; but, inclining to the teaching of the vain Nestorians, they are deceived by the notion of a mere union of relations, and a bare indwelling.' 'For if the flesh was truly united to God the Word from its first origin, or rather if it had its origin in Him, and belonged to the same person with Him, how could it but be filled full with all knowledge and grace?' And this, accordingly, has since been the received opinion in the Church. 'As there was no sinful concupiscence in Christ through the fulness of grace, so through the perfection of wisdom, which was in Him, was there no ignorance.' 'For the nature which Christ assumed may be considered in two ways: one, as it is in itself, and in this respect it is ignorant and slavish—for man is his Maker's servant, and has no knowledge of the future; the other, as it is united to the person of Him who, as S. John witnesses, was full of grace and truth.' This statement of the Apostle is the more important, since it indicates the condition of our Lord's being, even when He was manifest among men. The assertion that in Him 'are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge' (Coloss. ii. 3, 9), may be assigned to the period since the Godhead has dwelt in His glorified body. But S. John's words refer to what the disciples beheld (John i. 14); and they speak of Him as having upon earth that fulness of truth which excludes ignorance.

'And therefore, since it would be impious to suppose that our Lord had pretended an ignorance which He did not experience, we are led to the conclusion that what He partook, as man, was not actual ignorance, but such deficiency in the means of arriving at truth as belongs to mankind. Without asserting that the man, Christ Jesus, was ignorant, it may be said that He was ignorant, as man, of that which by His other nature, was known to Him. His growth, then, was no delusion, but a real one; but the advance was in those means of intercourse by which the human mind communicates with the external world. He made trial of those channels of communication whereby the children of men are furnished with knowledge; He tested their uncertainty; He is able to pity those who are in like manner 'compassed with infirmity.' And so much seems distinctly asserted in that remarkable text which tells us that 'though He was a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered' (Heb. v. 8). Learning is plainly relevant to knowledge, and the especial difficulties which are incident to man may, for what we know, have been inappreciable, save by experience. Therefore, He who was above the angels, even as man, in His knowledge itself, consented to stoop below them in His manner of acquiring it. Not, of course, that His human soul can be partaker in itself of that Omniscience which belongs only to Godhead. Of this Christ partakes in that He is God; but in that He is man, He can receive it only so far as His human nature is its fit recipient. His knowledge, says S. Thomas (Sum. iii. x. 3; vol. iv. p. 119, Migne), extends 'to all things which are in the power of a creature.' And this, according to Bishop Bull (Defen. Fid. Nic. 2, 5, sect. 8), is the reason why S. Irenæus supposes our Lord, as man, to have been ignorant of the Day of Judgment: 'The Divine Wisdom produced its impression on our Lord's human soul according to the occasion, and therefore there is no absurdity in supposing that our Lord, during the time of His mission on earth, when such knowledge was needless for Him, was ignorant of the Day of Judgment.'

'Now, by what means our Lord should on the one hand have partaken of all creaturely knowledge, and, on the other, have trodden the tedious path of observation and inference, is beyond our comprehension. Not but that we can discern how a thing which is already known can be subsequently demonstrated. A man might determine, by admeasurement of parts, that the square of the hypothenuse was equal in area to the squares of the sides, and yet afterwards come to the same conclusion by reasoning. But in our Lord there is something far beyond this: for every step which He gained by those means which acquaint us with the external world must have been long before familiar to Him by way of intuition. But as He saw by outward light, as well as by the inward glory of the Godhead, and was sustained by food as well as by Omnipotence, so He condescended to reason on things outward, as well as to guide Himself by inward inspiration. Therefore S. Augustin refers the statement that the riches of Damascus shall be taken before the child shall have knowledge to cry 'My Father and My Mother' (Isaiah viii. 4), to the offering by the Magi of the wealth of the East to our infant Lord. The two kinds of knowledge are brought together when our Lord 'lifted up His eyes, and saw Nathanael coming to Him,' yet told him afterwards that 'before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee' (John i. 47, 51).

'The increase, then, of our Lord's 'wisdom' was but the further development of those human powers which are the means whereby we acquire knowledge. There may probably have been stages in their growth, and His entrance into the Temple in His twelfth year may have been a crisis in the capacity which was gained by His human faculties. They may have been so far opened as to correspond to the largeness of those truths which by direct intuition had already flowed into His mind. And if these statements seem to border on a contradiction, let it be remembered how often we ourselves can scarcely tell whether we know a thing or are ignorant of it: what has been told may be stored up in our mind and forgotten, till some new occasion calls it to light. Much of our knowledge consists of deductions from principles, which we either possess by the constitution of our nature, or have received so early that we never noted their approach; and yet these things, which we learn afterwards to be conclusions furnished from within ourselves, address themselves to us at first as unexpected communications. Why do we allow things, save from discerning them to be true? How do we know them to be true, save that the elements of judgment are laid up within us? Whence were these originally derived? Such thoughts may prepare us for receiving what is stated concerning our Lord with the less difficulty. He truly 'increased in wisdom as in stature;' and yet, looked at according to the actual attainments of His mind, He was full of truth.'—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Incarnation,' p. 100, &c.

did not know in the sense that He was not sent to reveal this to them.

The remainder of this chapter and the whole of the next is taken up with the various illustrations which He gives of His coming to judgment. He warns them to watch, and to live in constant preparation for it, and illustrates the suddenness and uncertainty of His coming, the reward of preparing for it, and the danger of neglecting it, 1, by the example of the Flood in the days of Noah; 2, by the parable of the master who watches against the coming of the thief; 3, by the parable of the servant left in charge of the household; 4, by the parable of the Ten Virgins; 5, by the parable of the Talents; and 6, by the parable of the shepherd dividing his sheep from the goats.

37. But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

V. For as the days.

Vulg. Sicut autem in diebus Noe, ita erit et adventus Filii hominis.

38. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark,

V. in those days that were.

Vulg. Sicut enim erant in diebus ante diluvium comedentes, &c.

39. And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

V. omits also.

Vulg. ita erit et adventus Filii hominis.

40. Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; ^a the one shall be taken, and the other left.

42. ¶ Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

S.V. what day.

Vulg. quia nescitis qua hora Dominus vester venturus sit.

As it was in the days that were before the Flood, they neglected the warnings that Noah gave them; but their neglect of the warnings did not prevent the flood from coming: so it will be in the end of the world, so it will be in each man's own life. Many will disregard the signs that shall be sent, and will go on living their usual self-indulgent life; but their neglect of the signs will have no power to prevent the coming of the Son of Man. Neither will the closest intimacy or association with those who observe and act on the warnings, avail those who neglect them. The judgment will be most discriminating. It will separate a man from his fellow, whether their occupation be in the field or in the house, a father from his child, the husband from his wife. Nothing will avail, but watching for the coming of the Son of Man, as of one who will come unexpectedly.

43. But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

Vulg. Quoniam si sciret paterfamilias qua hora fur venturus esset, vigileret utique, et non sineret perfodi domum suam.

44. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.

Vulg. quia qua nescitis hora, Filius hominis venturus est.

The men in the days of Noah were an example of those who despised the warnings that were sent them altogether, and gave themselves up to riot and sensual pleasures. The master of the house is an example of one who watches, but does not watch always, and therefore does not watch when watching would be effectual. Jesus suppresses part of the parable, as supplied by the mind of the hearer. If the master of the house had known in what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken into, but he did not know and did not watch, and therefore his house was broken into. Man does not know when the Son of Man will come, either to the general judgment, or to the judgment of himself by death, and therefore he must watch always.

S. Matthew alone contains His description of the faithful and wise, and of the evil, servant.

45. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?

S.V. the lord: S. shall make ruler.

Vulg. Quis, putas, est fidelis servus, et prudens, quem constituit dominus suus super familiam suam, ut det illis cibum in tempore?

46. Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

47. Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

48. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming;

S. If the evil servant: S.V. omits his coming.

Vulg. Si autem dixerit malus servus ille in corde suo: Moram facit dominus meus venire.

* Two women shall be grinding at the mill (δύο ἀλέθουσαι ἐν τῷ μύλῳ).—You observe that two women sit at the mill facing each other; both have hold of the handle by which the upper is turned round on the 'nether' mill-stone. The one whose right hand is disengaged throws in the grain as occasion requires through the hole in the upper stone, which is called the rekhab (rider) in Arabic, as it was long ago in Hebrew. It is not correct to say that one pushes it half round, and then the other seizes the handle. This would be slow work, and would give a spasmodic motion to the stone. Both retain their hold, and pull to, or push from, as men do with the whip or cross-cut saw. The proverb of our Saviour is true to life, for women only grind. I cannot recall an instance in which men were at the mill. It is tedious, fatiguing work, and slaves, or lowest servants, are set at it. From the king to the maid-servant behind the mill (Exod. xi. 5) therefore embraced all, from the very highest to the very lowest inhabitants of Egypt."—THOMSON'S 'The Land and the Book,' p. 526.

49. And shall begin to smite his fellowservants, and to eat and drink with the drunken ;

S V. and eateth and drinketh.
Vulg. Et coepit percutere conseruos suos, manducet autem et bibit cum ebriosis.

50. The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of,

51. And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites : there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Marg. cut him off. Vulg. dividet eum.

To render them watchful against His coming, He puts before them the example of two servants left in charge of a household—the one “faithful and wise,” and the other “evil.”

He describes the conduct of each, and the reception which they meet with from their lord. Jesus delivered these warnings to His four Apostles, Peter and James and John and Andrew ; and some have supposed that, in describing these two servants, He had a special reference to the office which these Apostles should fill in His Church. They would fill their office as faithful and wise servants, if they fed the flock and fed them with food such as they were appointed to give, spiritual and sacramental. They would be evil servants and abuse their office, if they made it an opportunity to indulge their love of power, or their love of carnal pleasures. He points out the two abuses to which irresponsible power is always a temptation—oppression and self-indulgence. The interrogative form which He uses may also imply that few will be found to resist this, and to prove themselves, in this office of pastor, faithful and wise servants.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XXV.

Eternal damnation.—The following extracts will show what is the meaning implied in these words, how the doctrine was held by the early Church, and in what sense it is used when applied to unbaptized infants, &c.

“What is meant by the dogma of eternal damnation? It means, in one word, leaving the sinner to himself. ‘Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone.’ It is no arbitrary infliction of ‘a vengeful Deity,’ as scoffers, and others who should know better, are fond of phrasing it; it is simply that God has at length withdrawn from His rebellious creature the care and gracious aid it had pertinaciously despised. The blessing comes from God, the curse from the sinner himself. Hence to οἱ ἐδολογημένοι τοῦ πατρὸς μου in Matt. xxv. 34 corresponds οἱ καταραμένοι simply in ver. 41. Man is neither a self-existent nor a self-dependent being; he is not αὐτάρκης. His being depends on the will of his Creator, his happiness or well-being on union with Him and with those creatures who are given to be his fellows, and on whom he is constrained to lean for support. But man was created a moral and an immortal being, placed in a state of probation, and endowed with excellent gifts both of nature and of grace; and on his use of those gifts depends the favour of his Maker. There is no injustice in withdrawing it from those who deliberately abuse their graces and opportunities; and when this abuse becomes final and complete, the isolation from God and from all good must be complete and final also. The soul has missed the final end of its creation through its own fault; it has chosen self instead of God, and it remains for ever miserable. The worm of remorse that dieth not, the flame of burning thirst that is not quenched, the great gulf or chasm firmly fixed, express different aspects of the same hopeless, irremediable woe—the conscious loss of God, and all which that loss involves (S. Jerome in Isaiam, lxi. 24; vol. iv. p. 678, Migne). It is the idea shadowed out in the words of the Roman satirist, who most nearly of heathen writers touched on the Christian conception of sin:

‘Virtutem videant, intabescantque relictæ.’

PERSIUS, Sat. iii. 38.

That is the perfect misery of the creature which has failed of its proper destiny, and can no longer console itself with the illusory solace of other creatures for the loss of the Creator, but is compelled henceforth to realize its ‘eternal damnation;’ that is, the eternal loss of goodness and of God. It is the misery of which the beginnings are witnessed here on earth, as when Cain was driven forth an outcast from the face of God and man, and complained in the bitterness of his heart that his punishment was greater than he could bear; only that here the curse is never irremediable, though it is constantly tending to become so.”—H. N. OXENHAM, ‘On Catholic Eschatology,’ p. 58.

“The essence of the suffering of the lost consists in this—as the word ‘damnation’ (pœna damni) indicates—that they will be for ever excluded from the Beatific Vision of God; whatever mental or bodily pains (pœna sensûs) they may have to endure besides—and there are no doubt manifold gradations of suffering, as of glory—is subsidiary to this, and may be liable to diminution or relief (S. Jerome in Isaiam, lxi. 24; vol. iv. p. 678, Migne). This was the general teaching of theologians before Peter Lombard, and has been revived in recent times. The pœna damni, which is common to all, will be differently realized by individuals according to the measure of their guilt.”—Ibid., p. 15.

“The dogma which we have to consider is this, that there is a degree of hardness and impenitence of heart which is fraught with everlasting evil to those who wilfully persist in it; and that such obdurate sinners will ultimately be banished from the presence of God, and condemned to a state of misery that knows no end.

“Upon the details of this fearful condition, neither the Church of England nor the Church Universal has presumed to utter any formal or authoritative decision. The reality and the eternity of the misery is affirmed authoritatively; the precise nature and qualities of the sufferings, and the nature and locality of the place where they are to be endured, are open questions—matters of opinion, not of faith. . . .

“There is an extraordinary amount of agreement on this head between those who, in many respects, are most strongly opposed to each other. . . .

“1. It is almost a law of testimony, that difference on some points strengthens the weight of authority upon others. Such difference, of course, emerges most strongly since the Reformation. Well, let us take up the ‘Catechism of the Council of Trent,’ the English Prayer Book and Homilies, the Westminster Confession, the Confession of Augsburg; we have then before us the conclusions of Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Calvinists, Lutherans. They are herein all agreed. Turn to individual commentators. The Dutch Protestant Vitringa, and the learned Jesuit Cornelius a Lapide, speak in the same way on the concluding verses of Isaiah. Calvin and Maldonatus may wrangle fiercely over many passages in the Holy Gospels, but they have no contest over the meaning of such verses as we have just been quoting. In a word, it may be said that, with a very few and rare exceptions, we find on this solemn and mysterious dogma a perfect consensus of Anglicans, Orientalists, Roman Catholics, Lutherans, Calvinists, Schoolmen, Fathers, and Councils.

"2. Subject to the correction of more profound and laborious students, we avow that, in our own examination of this matter, we have not been able to discover a single inquirer of the dogma of eternal punishment who is consistent in his denial and at the same time orthodox.

"Grant that we light upon a few words expressive of hope in Universalism uttered by S. Ambrose, by S. Gregory Nazianzen, and still more plainly by S. Gregory of Nyssa: still these great doctors, in other parts of their works, most expressly coincide with the general teaching of the Church. And when we consider how great and inexplicable a mystery it is, and how opposed to all the hopes and wishes of the natural man, the marvel really is, not that here and there a single voice falters, but that such hesitation should have been so rare, and that, in almost every case, it was silenced on some other occasion.

"Most of those who thus faltered for a moment, did so under the influence of one great and resplendent name, namely Origen. . . .

"With all our affection for his memory, the truth must be said, that we are compelled to consider him in some degree untrustworthy, on some other points besides this. The general sentiment of the Church is shown by the strength of feeling exhibited against him in this matter: In cujus rei tractatione, says the learned Huet, tantum sibi permisit Origines, ut non alium ob causam notioris in se quibus concitaretur. He founded his doctrine on a wild dream of the pre-existence of souls, and their merits in a previous state; a doctrine which, however favoured by Plato (and possibly by our own Wordsworth and some few others), has never found a home in the Christian Church. The wondrous powers of Origen, no doubt, imbued some others with a slight tinge of the same sentiment. Moments there are, probably, in the lives of most men, when they would gladly disbelieve this doctrine, if they dared. The eminent teachers above named have (seldom more than once and away) yielded to such sentiments; but they are not herein consistent with each other or with themselves. Not with each other, for the pre-existence of souls, asserted by Origen, is distinctly denied by S. Gregory of Nyssa; the restitution of the evil angels, as well as of wicked men, is asserted by some and denied by others; and, lastly, as has been already mentioned, they all (including Origen himself), in some passages of their writings, assert that Eternity of Misery which they elsewhere contravene. In their assertions of a finality of woe, they seem to build either on private theories or obscure texts, or else to be trusting to the great but erratic genius of a single Father; in their avowals of its endlessness, they build up no theory, but simply accept the plain and obvious meaning of our Lord's words, the teaching of Christ Himself and of His Church. And after the condemnation of this error of Origen, which is generally assigned to the Fifth General Council (held at Constantinople in A.D. 553), the unanimity of teaching remained unbroken, save here and there by some pantheizing mystic, until the outburst of those Anabaptists whose lawless excesses made them the terror of Christendom and, for a brief season, the scandal of the Reformation."—DR. CAZENOVE, 'Christian Rememb.,' April 1863, pp. 434, 456, &c.

"The testimony of the early martyrs does not directly prove the truth of the doctrines for which they suffered, although—considering their numbers, their unanimity, their heroic patience, and the long period over which the persecutions extend—it is usually, and reasonably, cited by apologists as one among the many concurrent evidences of Revealed Religion. But it is not used in the present connection for the purpose of proving per se the truth of their convictions, but as illustrating, beyond possibility of cavil, the universal and profoundly realized belief of the contemporary Church in the solemn doctrines to which they bear such unmistakable and consentient witness. Dr. Bright does not at all overstate the facts of the case, when he says that the Church of the Martyrs believed in hell as intensely as in the Divinity of Christ. ('Faith and Life,' by Dr. Bright, p. 233.) And to those who attach any value to the Vincentian rule, this fact would of itself go far towards proving the truth of the doctrine; on the Catholic principle of Church authority, it is pretty well conclusive.

"The author of 'Ancient Christianity' will hardly be accused of an overweening reverence for ecclesiastical tradition. Let me then sum up the evidence on this point in his very emphatic words in a later work ('Restoration of Belief,' p. 285). After citing the warning of our Lord (Luke xii. 5), to 'fear Him who, after He hath killed, hath power to cast into Gehenna,' he thus proceeds to comment on its unmistakable sense: 'Now we of this age may expound as we think fit these appalling words, or may extenuate these phrases; or, if we please, let us cast away the whole doctrine as intolerable and incredible. Let us do so; but it is a matter of history, out of question, that the Apostolic Church, and the Church of later times, took it word for word, in the whole of its apparent value. It is true that several attempts were made to substitute a mitigated sense; but it is certain that the language of Christ, in regard to the future life, was constantly on the lips of martyrs throughout the suffering centuries. Often and often was it heard issuing from out of the midst of the fire, and was lisped by the quivering lips of women and children while writhing on the rack.'”—H. N. OXENHAM, 'On Catholic Eschatology,' p. 84.

“S. Bernard, who is quoted by Jeremy Taylor, says, Nihil ardet in inferno nisi propria voluntas. Unbaptized infants who have been raised by no sacrament from the condition of original sin, and who, dying before the use of reason, have had no opportunity of corresponding with grace, are indeed ‘damned’ in the sense that they cannot attain to the Beatific Vision, for which their natural capacities do not qualify them. As they had not been raised on earth to the state of supernatural grace, they have no aptitude for the life of supernatural glory. And this is of course, in itself, a most momentous ‘loss’ (or ‘damnation’) as compared with the future state of the glorified. But it is no conscious loss to them. Still less does it imply any suffering of body or soul. On the contrary, it is consistent with the highest enjoyment of natural beatitude and with a natural knowledge and love of God. They are in what would have been Adam’s condition if he had neither fallen into sin nor been endowed with original justice. Balmez and other Catholic authorities hold that this principle may be extended to the case of adults, especially in heathen nations, who die with their moral and intellectual faculties so imperfectly developed that they may be regarded as, in responsibility, children.”—Ibid., p. 16.

CHAPTER XXV.

[1. The parable of the ten virgins, 14, and of the talents. 31. Also the description of the last judgment.]

[Vulg. Parabolæ proponit de decem virginibus, ac talentis distributis servis; quorum dominus peregre rediens singulos præmiat aut punit juxta ipsorum merita: extremum judicium punit ob oculos, et causas præmiationis bonorum ac punitionis malorum.]

S. MATTHEW alone records the contents of this chapter, which form the remainder of the teaching which Jesus delivered to His four disciples on Mount Olivet; namely, the parable of the Ten Virgins, of the Talents, and His description of the last Judgment.

1. Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

Vulg. que accipientes lampades suas exierunt obviam sponso et sponsæ.

2. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

S.V. were foolish, and five were wise.

Vulg. Quinque autem ex eis erant fatuæ, et quinque prudentes.

3. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

4. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

S.V. in the vessels.

Vulg. Prudentes vero acceperunt oleum in vasis suis cum lampadibus.

5. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

6. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

S.V. omit cometh: S.V. omit him.

Vulg. Eccæ sponsus venit, exite obviam ei.

7. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out.

Margin, are going out.

A. out of your oil.

Vulg. date nobis de oleo vestro: quia lampades nostre extinguuntur.

9. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

St. for you and us: S.V. omit but before go ye.

Vulg. Ne forte non sufficiat nobis et vobis, ite potius ad vendentes, et emite vobis.

10. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.

11. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

12. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.

13. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.

S.V. A. omit wherein the Son of Man cometh.

Vulg. omits wherein the Son of Man cometh.

In the East it is the custom for the bridegroom to conduct the bride from the house of her father to her future home in the evening, attended by a procession of sympathising friends, generally young men and maidens, carrying torches and lamps, partly for the purpose of giving light in the dark streets, and partly, by their presence and rejoicing, to add to the joy of the bridegroom and his bride.

As applied to the kingdom of heaven, there are probably some points in this parable, as in all the parables, which will not bear to have any distinct meaning put upon them, which belong rather to the custom, to the illustration, than to that which the custom is intended to illustrate. There are many things in a parable which are necessary to it, merely as its framework, to add to the completion of the parable, and are not intended to be pressed in the illustration. It is often sufficient if the main scope, or a few leading points in the parable, can be distinctly ascertained.

The bridegroom here is Jesus Christ Himself; the bride is the Church; the cry at midnight is the voice of the Archangel at the end of the world; the Ten Virgins are believers in Christ. Several explanations have been given of the word "virgins." Some¹ think that by this word are implied those

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 414.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. i. p. 136.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. ii. p. 949.

S. Augustine, Epist. cxi. (alias 120) 33; vol. ii. p. 572.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xii.; vol. ii. p. 1119.

who had devoted themselves to a life of virginity for Christ's sake. Others¹ look upon this meaning as too narrow, and suppose that, by comparing the kingdom of heaven to ten virgins, Jesus intended to express the purity of soul which God in His rich mercy bestows in the Sacrament of Baptism upon all those who are admitted into His kingdom. If the number ten, and its division into two equal parts, has a meaning, it does not appear on the surface.

Five of these Virgins are proved by their conduct to be foolish. They knew that the bridegroom would come—they are here for the purpose of conducting him and his bride, and of giving them light: oil is required for this purpose—sufficient time is given them to provide it, and they neglect.

The very fact that these Ten Virgins are in the kingdom of heaven implies that both the foolish and the wise have faith in Jesus as the God Incarnate, and that He will come to judge them at the end of the world, but both did not bring forth the fruits of this faith. By oil which the one has, and which the other has not, is meant active works of love and mercy. The foolish Virgins did not use the long interval during which the bridegroom tarried, to provide themselves with this, to spend their lives in works of love.²

